LISTENERS could not have heard, for instance the "Stars and Stripes Forever" encore, for which Dr. Koussevitzky had earlier received the keys to the city from Mayor John L. Bohn. The conductor does not believe in encores and rarely accedes to prolonged applause, but after unexpectedly delighting Milwaukee last year with the composition, the mayor requested him to repeat it. . . . He got it, with everything that the already-perspiring conductor could get out of his 110-man "team" (featured in this week's Life).

★ ★ ★

Not wishing to be disrespectful, but having heard those associated with the revered conductor calling him by a nickname for the better part of two days, it takes a bit of discipline on my part not to refer to him as "Koussy." . . . He does a complete change of clothes at intermission, and always takes a nap for a few hours before a concert.

★ ★ ★

KOU . . . DR. KOUSSEVITZKY last saw Sibelius 10 years ago. "I went to Finland to conduct a festival in honor of his 70th birthday," the conductor said. . . . "He was so unlike other composers. . . . refused to attend rehearsals of his own music. He would sit in his hotel room until I got back there."

Dr. Koussevitzky plans to surprise Sibelius by returning to him an original manuscript which the Finnish composer believes lost. Sibelius had sent his "Origin by Fire" to Leipsig for orchestration. but an Allied bombing destroyed the plant. . . . However, portions of the work had been telephotoed to the United States, and a complete score has been put together.

also This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
POST-STANDARD
DEC 10 1945

This Clipping From
KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL
also
DEC 16 1945

Boston Orchestra Introduces New Symphony by Prokofieff

By William Leonard

Reprinted from Saturday's final edition

THE proficiency of the Boston Symphony Orchestra occasioned less surprise at Orchestra Hall last night than when Serge Koussevitzky and his men rode into the Middle West in triumph last year after an absence of many seasons, but their concert again was one of the exciting high spots of the Chicago music calendar.

This time the rapt listeners had not only the lush tone and flawless discipline of the Boston orchestra to glow about, but the first Chicago performance of a Prokofieff symphony that sounds better than anything that has come from the Russian composer's pen in years.

His new Symphony No. 5 teems with material, moves with magnificent freedom, strikes with impact and possesses throughout a feeling of power under leash that makes it electrifying listening. It is a zesty, headstrong work, with suggestions of martial uproar as well as of the perturbation in man's soul, but it isn't making noise just for the sake of filling four movements, as some of Prokofieff's symphonies might be suspected of doing.

It is many sided and without letdown—or if there is sag in its orchestration Mr. Koussevitzky's meticulously loving direction prevented it from seeming dull.

The new composition followed Prokofieff's early and still popular "Classical" symphony, the juxtaposition highlighting admirably both the resourcefulness of the man and the maturity he has attained in 30 years.

The windy Symphony No. 2 of Jan Sibelius, (who, incidentally, celebrates his 80th birthday today) brought the concert to a bombastic close. The Bostonians gave this work just as dilligent treatment as they had the Prokofieff items, but it proved anticlimactic.

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
~~DAILY CALUMET~~
10
Jou. of Com.

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
DEC 10 1945

Prokofieff Wades Out Beyond His Depth

BY C. J. BULLIET.

WITH a beautifully enameled, jewel-studded performance of Mozart's sparkling "Symphony in E-Flat Major," Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra entered yesterday afternoon upon the second and final performance of their December visit to Orchestra Hall.

They played a classic program of Mozart, Beethoven and Brahms in distinction from the first concert Friday night of the living Prokofieff and Sibelius.

Mr. Koussevitzky's impeccable "classic" style, unsurpassed for smooth perfect in any art since the old Paris Salon nudes of Bouguereau, was in notable contrast to his playing of the trying new Fifth Symphony of Prokofieff, which it has fallen to his lot to introduce to audiences this side the Atlantic.

* * *

PROKOFIEFF'S Fifth is uneven, nervous and considerably short of satisfactory.

Before performing it, Mr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra gave a sample of the Russian at his best, the "Classical" Symphony, light, concise, charming and witty.

In the new symphony, Prokofieff, maybe feeling too much the burden of the war, gets not only woefully serious but soggy and water-logged.

He is a reminder of the lyric poets who go epic and dramatic—poets like Tennyson, Swinburne and Browning. There isn't a faulty iambic line in any of Tennyson's plays—likewise there is scarcely a line worth the efforts of a Booth or an Irving, who tried them.

* * *

KOUSSEVITZKY did valiant service in behalf of Prokofieff, but only in occasional and fitfull passages did the new symphony seem worthy of the master of the "Three Oranges."

In the opening movement there was some impassioned oratory, excited probably by military happenings in Moscow, but it seemed the oratory of the spellbinder rather than the statesman.

In the slow movement near the finish, there was a strain of mournful melody that lost too soon its grip.

There is nothing cheap or musically incompetent in the new symphony — just as Tennyson, Browning and Swinburne, in their dullest moments, always are competent poets.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
DEC 1

Berkshire Music Center Will Reopen

Aaron Copland Named Assistant Director

The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., will be resumed next summer with Serge Koussevitzky as director, according to announcement by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Aaron Copland has been appointed assistant director.

The school was instituted in 1940 for those who wished to profit by the experience of "an opportunity for a summer of living and working in music." Because of war conditions, it was suspended for two years but it will be resumed next summer on the original plan with principals of the orchestra and other notable musicians as faculty.

One section of the school will be for qualified music students and will consist of an orchestra, an opera department, a class in conducting classes in musical composition and a department of chamber music.

The other section will be for students with less specific qualifications who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation. This department will include a chorus preparing for festival concerts and a second orchestra.

The term will consist of six weeks from July 1 to Aug. 10, the last three coinciding with the Berkshire Music Festival, which will also be resumed next summer.

Boston Globe Dec. 10, 1945

WIRE A.P. PHOTO

SERGE KOUSSEVITSKY HUMS SCORE of "lost" cantata of Jan Sibelius, pieced together here and sent to the composer in Finland on his 80th birthday. The conductor led the Boston Symphony, Saturday in Milwaukee, in an all-Sibelius program.

[49]

MUSIC

MICHIGAN DAILY DEC. 11, 45

THE STIFFEST PROBLEM confronting any critic of the Boston Symphony is that of describing and applauding a flawless performance in unhackneyed superlatives. Being unsure of my own exclamation point style and aware of the superior observations of the melancholy Dane, which read, pertinently, "How infinite in faculty! in form and moving how express and admirable! in action how like an angel, in apprehension how like a god!" I make bold to apply them to the performers at last night's concert.

The audience was immediately captivated by the opening performance of Prokofieff's Classical Symphony, which displayed the merits of the strings to full advantage, and to which Koussevitsky gave an original and unconventional interpretation, noticable particularly in the tempos.

The program continued with Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony, marking the third performance of this recently comosed work. As a piece of music it is highly melodic, intensely absorbing, intricate in thematic treatment, and given the Boston's superb performance it actually obliterated the discomfort of the Hill Auditorium seats and made the audience dread instead of pray for the intermission.

Sibelius' Second Symphony was presented in an unsurpassable rendition which fittingly climaxed a concert of unchallangeable quality. The entire performance was distinguished by an absence of all the small technical imperfections which usually mar orchestral programs: unwieldy brasses, imperfect balance among the sections, disunified strings, lack of coordination. As always the string section played powerfully, accurately, and with incredible unanimity. The brasses were sure, unfaltering, and remarkably precise. Woodwinds were smooth and produced excellent tone quality.

On the whole it was a rare treat and a joy to hear an orchestra rehearsed beyond the possibility of a flaw play with such surety and absolute precision. Under Serge Koussevitsky's graceful, seemingly effortless conducting the Boston Symphony lived up to all expectations, and probably surpassed many.

—Paula Brower

ANN ARBOR NEWS DEC. 11, 45

Koussevitzky Leads Boston Orchestra In Fine Concert

By Carl Gehring

It has become almost axiomatic to report on the excellence of any concert performed in Ann Arbor by the Boston Symphony orchestra, and Monday evening's offering at Hill auditorium was no exception. Annually since 1931 this organization has come here and played from the finest and representative scores with such perfection in orchestral expression and such fidelity to different kinds of music as to make difficult the inclusion of new superlatives into any summary of its work. Yet the concert under consideration had several features which set it apart from its predecessors and added certain new links of interest to a long chain of rewarding musical events.

For one thing, the program was confined to the music of the Russian Prokofieff and the Finnish Sibelius, and this emphasis on the compositions of two living men made for novelty. How well the orchestra has played in the past from more diversified programs, sustaining the particular address of various schools of music, is a matter of record and a tribute to the breadth and guiding genius of Serge Koussevitzky. The success of this concert, moreover, only added further stature to a conductor and musicians who showed that they could sustain the interest in programs of more or less variety with equal success.

Program Is Interesting

Of particular interest on this interesting program was a new symphony by Prokofieff, his No. 5, Op. 100, which he wrote in the summer of 1944 after gathering themes for it for years, as he says. Although not designated as to key by the composer, it begins and ends in B-Flat. Other works heard at this time were the same composer's "Classical" Symphony, Op. 25, with D Major as the prevailing key, and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2 in D Major, Op. 43. It was especially fitting for us to hear a Sibelius composition on this occasion inasmuch as the composer was 80 years old on Saturday and his birthday anniversary was observed with a celebration in Finland.

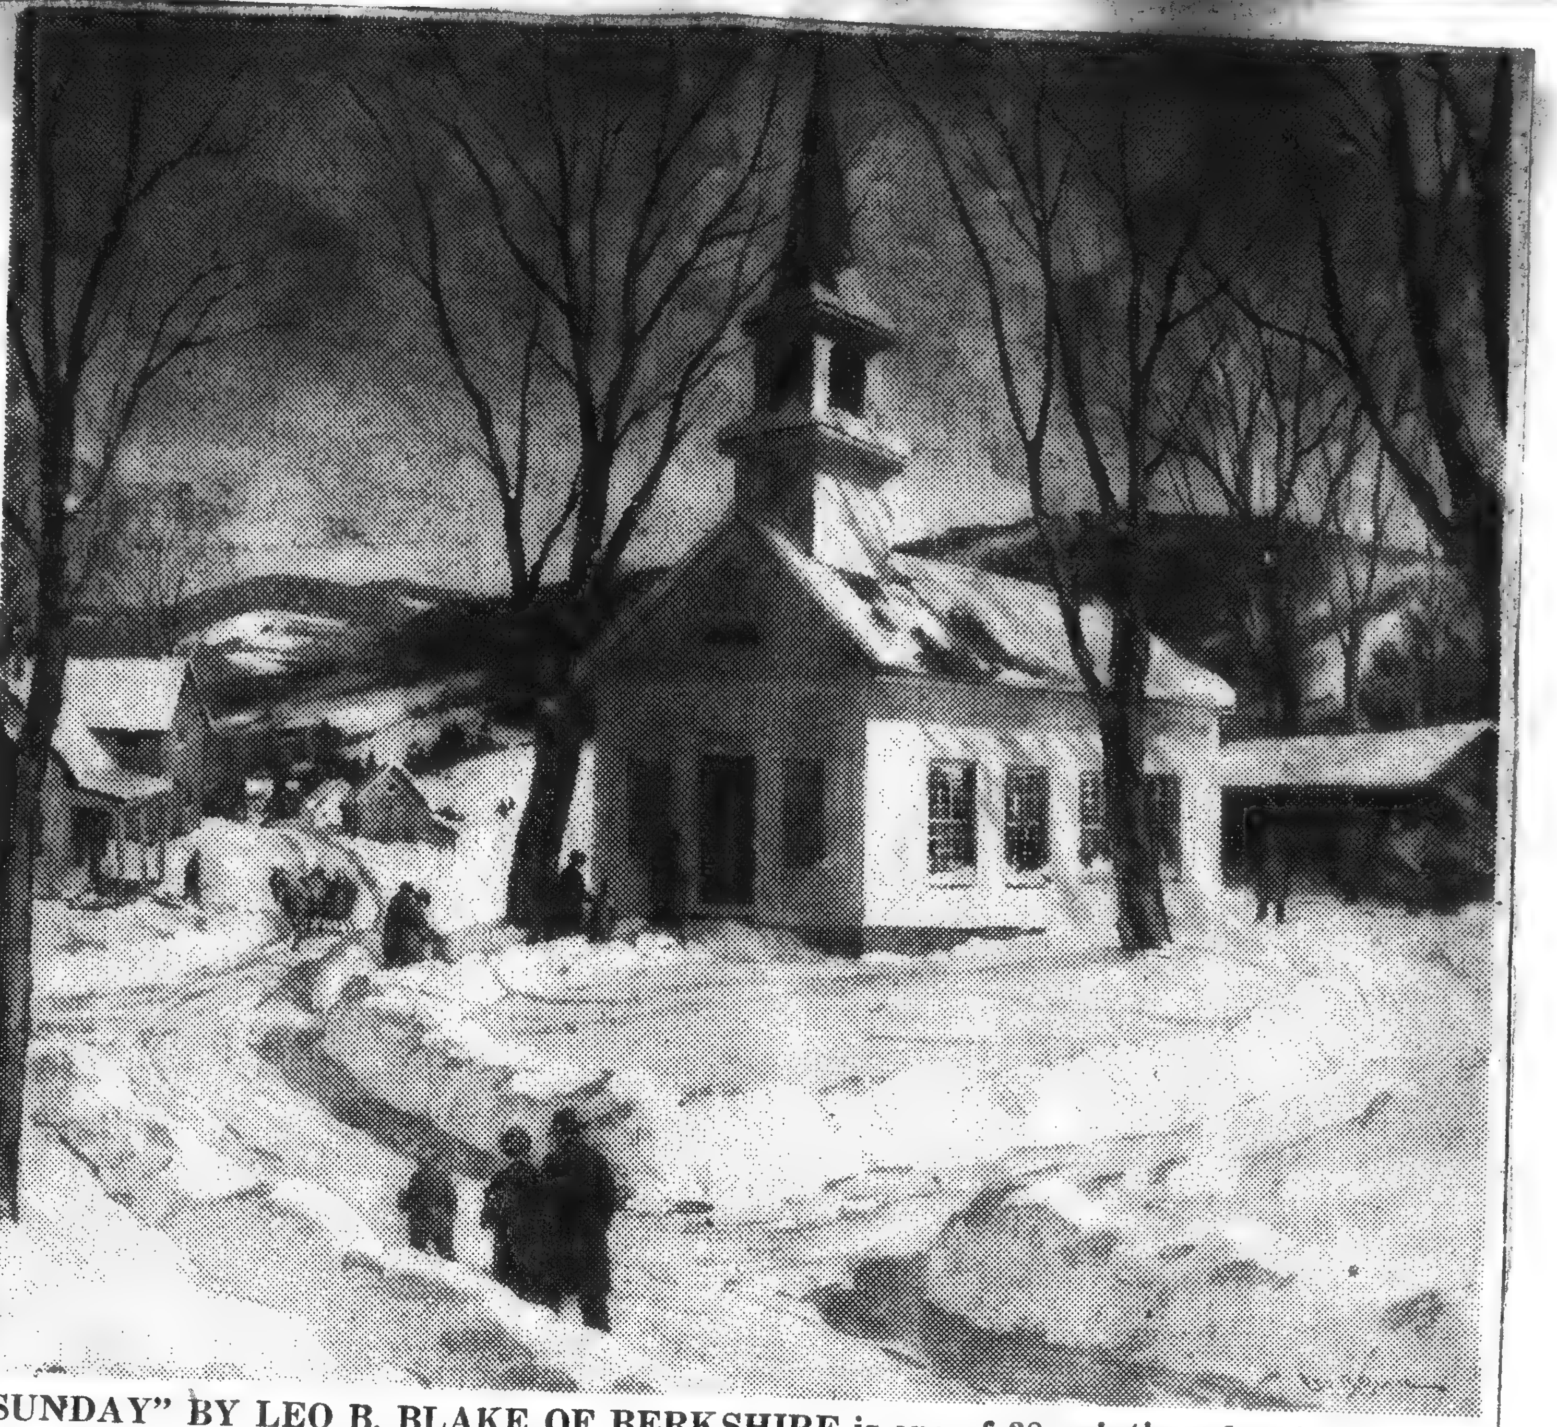
Chief interest in the Prokofieff "Classical" and Sibelius Second Symphonies centered largely in their performances, inasmuch as both have been played here before and each is recorded by the Boston orchestra. The former was run through with the utmost charm and grace, and with even more ping than is apparent in the fine recording of this work. The Sibelius, on the other hand, while monumental in its delineation, was not quite so well articulated as it is in the recording and differed markedly from the authoritative reading of Robert Kajanus, the late interpreter of Sibelius. However, the writer never has heard the Symphony summed up with so much conviction as it was at the end of the finale, nor a finer statement of the concluding measures of the second movement wherein the strings intone a noble theme against counter material in the woodwinds.

Reminder On Prokofieff

The hearing of Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony provided a new reminder of the stature which this modern Russian composer has achieved in recent years, offering a suitable follow-up on Ann Arbor performances by Vladimir Horowitz and Alexander Uninsky last year and this, respectively, of his Seventh Piano Sonata. The Symphony, fitful at times, tranquil at others, telling in its address and altogether a mighty effusion of a powerful creative spirit, was a most welcome adjunct on the program and revealed Koussevitzky as wholly at one with its modern idiom.

The playing of the orchestra was completely tops throughout as usual. Certain climaxes in the Prokofieff Fifth and Sibelius Symphonies projected magnificent passages for full orchestra wherein large effects were realized with no injection whatsoever of the strident. Quieter sections also were beautifully wrought, the statement of a sublime theme for oboe solo in the trio of the third movement of Sibelius' Symphony being one of the best of these examples. Bringing all of the forces under his control into such striking focus was Koussevitzky, who added one more monumental success to his long record of Ann Arbor triumphs at this sixth concert of the Choral Union series.

BERKSHIRE EVENING EAGLE DECEMBER 11, 1945



"SUNDAY" BY LEO B. BLAKE OF BERKSHIRE is one of 38 paintings by eight Berkshire County artists to be shown in a special exhibition at Symphony Hall, tomorrow through Dec. 26. The show was arranged by Stuart Henry, Berkshire Museum director, for the Boston Symphony Orchestra and consists largely of local scenes. Other artists are Mr. Henry, Thomas Curtin and Robert Francis of Pittsfield; Mrs. John C. Johansen and her son, John MacLane Johansen, both of Stockbridge; George L. K. Morris of Lenox, and George Picken of Tyringham.

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
JOUR. OF COMM.

DEC 11 1945

Boston Symphony Again Is Superb; Ruth Draper at Peak

By William Leonard

(Reprinted from yesterday's final edition)

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra concluded its two-concert Chicago season at Orchestra Hall yesterday afternoon before a sold-out house reluctant to see Serge Koussevitzky and his men depart. Friday night's concert had been memorable for the introduction of an excellent new symphony by Serge Prokofieff; yesterday afternoon's was memorable for the radiant texture and nobility of inspiration which marked the only Mozart the Bostonians have included in their four concerts here in the last two seasons; both events were memorable for the consistency with which this magnificent organization maintained a silkiness of tone, tautness of ensemble and sharpness of attack that might be expected to waver under the rigors of a long, busy tour.

No better orchestra has been heard at Orchestra Hall in years, and no orchestra to match it will be heard there for many moons to come. Yesterday's concert, like its predecessor of last week, is to be described in terms of perfection.

Mozart's E flat major symphony (Koechel 543) received a performance with richness and resourcefulness to match the degree in which those qualities are present in its own construction. Its andante was treated with infinite delicacy, its more spirited movements were forceful but unlabored, the whole thing crystalline in tone.

Beethoven's well worn "Leonore" overture was warmly read, its foreboding hovering almost visibly in the string section until the trumpet shattered the darker orchestral colors and all divisions of the orchestra poured their hearts into a finale pulsing with exaltation.

Brahms' Symphony No. 4, sonorously philosophical, was unfolded with glorious variety but great subtlety of tonal investiture, and with greater coherence than it has received in these parts in some time. The first movement was capped by a stirring climax, the slow section exquisite of hue, the scherzo perfectly paced and the finale, especially the trombone and flute variations, delightfully maneuvered.

His two most recent appearances here have increased Chicagoans' respect for Mr. Koussevitzky's conductorial prowess and for the men who perform so ably under his baton. May the Boston Symphony Orchestra be back!

* * *

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

DEC 11 1945

Prokofieff, Sibelius On Boston Program

Two of the most eminent of living composers—Jan Sibelius and Serge Prokofieff—will share honors in this evening's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Eastman Theater.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the compact Prokofieff Classical Symphony to open the program and will then proceed to the Fifth Symphony by the same composer and end the evening with the Sibelius Second Symphony.

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

DEC 11 1945

Symphony Due From Boston

WITH the "Standing Room Only" sign out for more than a month, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play tonight before the largest audience in the long history of its visits to the Eastman.

The concert, which will be given under direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, will feature the second symphony of Jan Sibelius, in commemoration of that famous Finnish composer's 80th birthday, a few days ago.

Completing this evening's concert will be the brief and witty Classical Symphony by Serge Prokofieff, and the latest work by that same Russian composer, his Fifth Symphony.

[51]

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

DEC 12 1945

Boston Symphony Magnificent

By A. J. WARNER

The matchless Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the guiding hand of the conductor who has brought it to new heights of achievement, success and prestige, Serge Koussevitzky, returned to the Eastman Theater last night and gave a memorable concert before an immense throng. Triumphs are the harvest of Dr. Koussevitzky and his musicians, but for us, who only have the opportunity of hearing them occasionally, it was an evening of great privilege—the climax of our music season.

The audience provided a sight calculated to cheer the most despondent concert-goer. An unmistakable air of festival was on every side, and well-bred eagerness hummed through the auditorium. Responsiveness, intelligent listening, and restrained excitement were diffused in exhilerating fashion. Everybody was determined to be made musically happy, and everybody was, as the evening progressed. For this, indeed, was an Event, long anticipated, cherished in expectation, and savored in reality.

Program Perfectly Constructed

Dr. Koussevitzky is a deft maker of programs and he devised a list of works perfectly constructed for his appearance. First came the delicious "Classical" Symphony of Prokofieff, which, written some 30 years ago, has long been popular among both musicians and laymen, with its fraceful reminicence of the Morzartean idiom couched in more modern musical terms. Gay and fresh, superbly played with all elegance and finesse of which its interpreters were so enchantingly capable, it was a source of infinite delight, bringing with it, one must confess, no suggestion of the tragedy of the first World War during which it was composed.

A keen sense of public psychology prompted the choice of Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony, in juxtaposition, a work which had its first New York hearing, at the hands of Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony, a few weeks ago.

The product of one of the two major composers of contemporary Russia — Shostakovitch, of course, being the other — this symphony, written in 1944, while Russia was still in the midst of her terrible struggle against the Nazis, is in a completely different vein from the beguiling refinements of the "Classical." The Fifth is a savage and powerful score that speaks symphonic language in the grand manner, deeply impressive which depicts, objectively, the tremendous struggle of humanity and manages, always, to keep in sight complete confidence in ultimate victory. The symphony is filled with a feeling of strength and of faith in the mightly forces of the composer's country.

It is harsh music, but strong and masterly in its energy and its exuberance, and Dr. Koussevitzky, ever a champion of Prokofieff, gave it a gloriously eloquent reading.

Noble Tones, Thrilling Harmony

Following the intermission came the superb Symphony, No. 2, by Sibelius, greatest of living symphonists, whose 80th birthday was celebrated in his native Finland and throughout the musical world on Dec. 8. In the heroic pages of this work, with the mighty song of the music sweeping to its apex, it is easy to over-drive an orchestra, but Dr. Koussevitzky avoided the temptation, even in the uplifted and uplifting moments when the glorious cantilena of the strings in the Finale spans the skies. In these inspired moments the orchestral tone remained noble and ineffably beautiful in quality, in thrilling harmony with the poet-composer's epic speech.

At the risk of gilding the lily, one cannot let this unforgettable visit of Dr. Koussevitzky, and the orchestra for which he has done so much, pass into the gallery of recollections without paying tribute once again to an organization which, from its beginning, has held, as its watch-word, the ideal of musical integrity and dignity, and that has gone on its way dispensing beauty and showing what music can mean to all of us when one's orchestral wagon is hitched to a star.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

DEC 16 1945

EVENTS IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC

VLADIMIR HOROWITZ, Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear together for the first time in New York on Feb. 12 in a benefit concert for the Rachmaninoff Fund, Inc. The fund recently initiated a nation-wide contest to discover America's most talented young pianist, and the present concert is first of a series designed for its benefit.

In tribute to the eminent Russian musician whose life is memorialized by the fund, Mr. Horowitz will play one of the Rachmaninoff piano concertos, and a special committee, of which Mrs. William C. Breed is chairman, will sell tickets at benefit prices of from $2.10 to $20. The fund has headquarters in Steinway Hall, 113 West Fifty-seventh Street.

Both Mr. Horowitz and Dr. Koussevitzky took a leading part in the founding of the fund a year and a half ago, and are active in its program. Mr. Horowitz is president of the organization and Dr. Koussevitzky is serving as chairman of the artists' advisory committee.

SYMPHONY CONCERT

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

With Dr. Koussevitzky back, yesterday's Symphony Concert offered an afternoon of great orchestral playing. Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto, in which Alexander Borovsky was the pianist, has now weathered 136 years. Not everyone, seemingly, is unfavorably affected by its degree of repetitiousness, its rather elementary harmonic structure. Unquestionably great is Beethoven's Overture to "Coriolanus," which proved the most gripping music of the concert.

But how about Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony, which had its American premiere here last month and was very properly repeated? Not many will go as far as Dr. Koussevitzky in proclaiming it the most important symphony since those of Brahms and Tchaikovsky, though it may well be the finest work of its kind to come out of Russia in that period. Less startling than Shostakovitch who, up to date, has eclipsed him as symphonist, Prokofieff in this work evinces a greater mastery of the form (and of the orchestra) and writes in a more consistent, a better integrated style. At that, there are occasional lapses into commonplace, especially in the finale. Indeed, if the Symphony ended with the Adagio it would give the impression of greater dignity, notwithstanding the bounce of the Scherzo, which would make a nice piece for the Pop Concerts. There is much that is affecting in the first and third movements, and whatever its ultimate fate, we may be sure that the Symphony will be with us for some time to come.

As for Mr. Borovsky, he played the solo part of the Concerto most musically and also with due strength and authority. It was not quite the transfiguring performance of which the work, in the opinion of some, now stands in need.

STRICKEN DURING BOSTON CONCERT

Miss Mary E. Bancroft, 72, of 98½ Main st., Andover, for more than a score of years a season ticket holder at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, died suddenly of a heart attack yesterday in Symphony Hall.

Police say the Miss Bancroft left her seat and collapsed in a corridor in the rear of the balcony. Dr. Irving Kamberg of 91 Westland ave., Back Bay, who was summoned to treat her, pronounced her dead.

This Clipping From
DAYTON, O.
HERALD

DEC 15 1945

Koussevitzky To Reopen Berkshire Music Center

NEW YORK, Dec. 15.—The Boston Symphony orchestra has announced that the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be reopened next July at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. The school was started in 1940 but was closed for two years because of the war. The faculty will consist of principals of the Boston Symphony and other notable musicians.

The term will consist of six weeks (July 1 to Aug. 10), the last three coinciding with the Berkshire festival under Dr. Koussevitzky, which also will be reinstated next summer.

Community Concert Service o: Columbia Concerts has announced that 103 new towns and cities have been added to its list this year, making a total of 410 localities enjoying music by important artists without financial risk.

An average of four concerts a year is assured members, whose dues of $5, collected in advance annually, make it possible to present first-class music without guarantors or monetary losses. The system already has been extended to Latin America and plans are being made to try it in Europe and South Africa.

Huberman Plays

Bruno Walter, who is conducting four weeks with the New York Philharmonic Symphony orchestra, is now doing his first fortnight at Carnegie Hall. He will return for another two weeks during the first half of March, when he will repeat his annual performance of the uncut Bach St. Matthew Passion.

Walter will have as soloist at the Sunday afternoon concert of March 16, Bronislaw Huberman, Polish violinist, just returned from France, Switzerland, Holland, Belgium and Italy. Huberman will play the Mozart D major concerto.

Three top-ranking artists have agreed to contribute their services as soloists to the New York City Symphony at forthcoming concerts under the direction of Leonard Bernstein, who also donates his talent as conductor. They are Jennie Tourel, mezzo-soprano of the Metropolitan Opera; Claudio Arrau, pianist, and Joseph Szigeti, violinist.

Miss Tourel, the first to appear, will be heard at the Dec. 17 and 18 concerts in Ravel's seldom-heard "Three Poems for Voice and Orchestra," "Scheherezade," in their entirety. Arrau will play in February and Szigeti in March.

Abrams Tours Again

Jacques Abrams, pianist, has returned to the concert world after three years in the Army. One of his first public appearances as a civilian will be for officers, enlisted men and their families Dec. 17 at Fort Jay, N. Y., where Abrams started his Army life. He will be heard by the general public at Carnegie Hall on Jan. 7.

At both recitals, Abrams will include "Three Preludes," written by his friend Warrant Officer Kent W. Kennan, now stationed on Iwo Jima.

MEADVILLE, PA.
REPUBLICAN

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

DEC 12 1945

Ovation Greets Koussevitzky, Bostonians

By NORMAN NAIRN

SUPERB orchestral playing that pulsed with life brought a thrill to a great audience at the Eastman last night, when a long lasting ovation greeted Serge Koussevitzky, that magnificent conductor, and his Boston Symphony Orchestra. The theater was again packed, as it is whenever their coming is announced, and the number of standees was all the law would permit.

As a matter of fact, the mere announcement that the Boston was to play here brought an immediate sellout two months ago. And at that, without having any idea of what the program was to be.

Performances of Koussevitzky and the Boston always are a treat, for there is nothing quite like the sparkle and glow, the brilliant tone, the beautiful balance, the full splendor of all sections of the orchestra.

Everything last night was a brilliant accomplishment, with the utmost precision and orchestral cunning that one is accustomed to ascribe to Koussevitzky. And the fervent applause was commensurate with the quality of performance.

The program comprised the Russian composer Prokofieff's witty "Classical" Symphony, written in 1916-17, his new monumental Fifth Symphony, composed last year (an interval of 28 years), and the Sibelius popular Symphony No. 2.

In order of performance came first the "Classical," one of the most popular of modern symphonic works. Prokofieff's impishness offended the conservatives in wartime Petrograd, so he decided to write a symphony to prove he could do it, and, in his own words, "to catch the spirit of Mozart and put down that which, if he were living today, Mozart might put into his scores."

Koussevitzky captured ideally the humor and satire of Prokofieff's intention, with the lightness and delicacy for which the Boston is famous, the freshness, vivacity and zest.

In his new Fifth Symphony, Prokofieff has written much of it in unabashed melodic vein, with a deal of pungency. While the composer insists the work is without a program, he say: "It is a symphony about the spirit of man." He conducted its first performance last January, and last night's was its premier performance in Rochester.

Your humble reviewer found it full of interest, drama and drive, and believes it will stand repeated hearings. The first movement is a majestic andante, passing on to the second, which Prokofieff says depicts the horrors of war, music that is incisive in its persistent figures.

Then the adagio's somber quality is built around a funeral march, reflective, serious and deep in expression. The whole thing ends up joyously, brimming with life.

Time alone will tell, of course, whether the new work will become as popular as the "Classical." But there is no doubt of its stirring moments, its harmonic and rhythmic dynamism. We doubt not but that Koussevitzky gave the new work his utmost.

Jan Sibelius, Finnish composer, was 80 years of age last Saturday, and conductors are playing his symphonies currently as a tribute to the grand old man whose seven symphonies give him musical immortality. It is not hard to see why the Second, heard last night, is so popular, by turns pastoral, introspective, somber and exultant.

It was a dramatic performance. Koussevitzky's men revealed every little theme of Sibelius' genius, with mighty sonorities to impart sheer weightiness. The effect of the finale, with its superb smooth brass was well-nigh breathtaking.

Visits of the Boston Symphony always are exciting for there is only one other orchestra in the country, the Philadelphia, which matches it in flowing beauty. And why should it not be so? Koussevitzky, now 71 years of age, has been at the helm in Boston since 1924.

Incidentally, five former members of the Rochester orchestra are included in the Boston's personnel; V. Resnikoff, violin; Henry Freeman and Willis Page, string basses, Harold Meek and Osborne McConathy, horns.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO
TIMES

This Clipping From ERIE, PA.
DISPATCH-HERALD

DEC 14 1945

RECENTLY Koussevitzky commented upon ~~somebody~~ else's recording of a new work they had both played.

"It is ze nuts!" he purportedly said, and friends were happy about his enthusiasm for the recording. Then he added, "Where is the spirit of the music? You just hear—ze nuts!"

Ze nuts means ze notes.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

This Clipping From DANVILLE, VA.
REGISTER

DEC 16 1945

The Berkshire Music Center, Serge Koussevitzky, director, will resume operations next July at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass., the Boston Symphony announces. Aaron Copland has been appointed assistant director.

URDAY, DECEMBER 15,

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting, gave the ninth program of its 65th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. Alexander Borovsky, pianist, was the soloist. The program:

Symphony No. 5, Op. 100 . . . . Prokofieff
Overture to "Coriolanus," Op. 62 . . . . Beethoven
Concerto for Piano and Orchestra in E flat, Op. 73 ("Emperor") . . . . Beethoven

By RUDOLPH ELIE, Jr.

It is fairly clear now that Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony is not quite the masterwork it seemed to be on first hearing a month ago. It remains a good, skilfully upholstered and very presentable work well worth a second hearing, but the substance is just not there.

The difficulty all along in discussing or assessing the quality of this symphony has been the question of Prokofieff's artistic about-face, not in the complexity of his musical textures or idioms. Few recent symphonies, in fact, have ever been so easy to hear a first time as this. The trouble was—and still is—what is Prokofieff getting at by presenting us with music hall tunes fitted out with a tragic harmonic tension, melancholy pace and an unquestionably earnest style?

I seem to have said a month ago that this is a "war" symphony; that there is a profound feeling of sadness pervading it. But now I find myself in the embarrassing position of realizing that the composer has achieved these ends through well-planned and often meretricious musical devices which do not bear too close a scrutiny. There is form, and proportion, and dimension, and to some extent the old-time Prokofieff wit, irony and confident self-assertion. But taste is almost wholly lacking, and what is Prokofieff without taste?

For example, could the opening theme of the slow movement with its Moonlight Sonata-like accompaniment survive a piano reduction? Could the violin repartee to the viola melody in the scherzo (which is by far the best thing in the symphony) compare with the same figures used by Kostelanetz on the radio? And is the tune of the finale any more distinguished than a conventionally harmonized tune by Sigmund Romberg? The fact appears to be that Prokofieff has allowed himself to fall in line behind Shostakovitch and this, for a man of his enormous musical stature, is disconcerting to say the least. And it must be said that Shostakovitch sounds better trying to imitate Prokofieff than Prokofieff does imitating Shostakovitch.

Perhaps another factor in the less favorable impression the Symphony made was a less effective performance. Both the orchestra and the conductor gave me the notion they were tired after junketing around the past ten days; tired, I might add also, of Prokofieff's Fifth. In any case there was less luster, verve and conviction than there was a month ago and it may well have lessened the seeming importance of the work.

Regrettably enough, the "Emperor" Concerto didn't go too well, either. It was a somewhat pallid and technically uneven performance by Mr. Borovsky, who was by no means in his top form, and hardly displayed either the soloist or the orchestra in their company dress. Next week Fritz Reiner will be the guest conductor in a program including Mozart's "Haffner" Symphony, Strauss' Symphonia Domestica, and Debussy's "Iberia."

This Clipping From COLUMBUS, GA.
LEDGER

DEC 16 1945

Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be reopened next July at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. The school was started in 1940 but was closed for two years because of the war. The faculty will consist of principals of the Boston Symphony and other notable musicians.

The term will consist of six weeks (July 1 to Aug. 10), the last three coinciding with the Berkshire Festival under Dr. Koussevitzky, which also will be reinstated next summer.

This Clipping From
CUERO, TEXAS
RECORD

This Clipping From
FINDLAY, OHIO
REPUBLICAN COURIER

This Clipping From
BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

This Clipping From SAVANNAH, GA.
NEWS

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

on the Aisle

by Claudia Cassidy

HAVE you heard about Serge Koussevitzky's plan to give a tremendous, nation-wide impetus to music in America? He simply proposes to tax every one 25 cents a year and use the money to give each state an orchestra, an opera company, and a string quartet which would tour that state in what you might call alternating currents of continuous melody.

Koussevitzky's Subsidy Plan for Music in America

This is about as plain a statement of national subsidy as could be made, and as Mr. Koussevitzky suggests it, I need not explain that he is talking about music of quality, unhampered by political or social pressure. The distinguished Russian from Boston has the great gifts of enthusiasm and faith in the talented young, but he is primarily an idealist and a perfectionist. It would no more occur to him to sponsor makeshift music than to perform it.

Serge Koussevitzky

His plan goes deeper than the mere spread of music, vital as that may be. He wants to give music its freedom. For he believes, as so many musicians have come to believe, that the chief trouble with music in America today is that it belongs not to the people as a whole, but to the few now chiefly responsible for its support. Somehow, over the years, we have come to depend on what we call civic leaders to subsidize our music. Certain key figures in each city take charge of music, decide its destinies, and dig down in their pockets to pay off its deficits. This is doubly dangerous, since it places music at the mercy of private pocketbooks and individual, sometimes unreliable, tastes. If you have a Maecenas like the late Harold McCormick or Louis' Eckstein, you get fabulous opera, and if you are lucky enough to get similar patrons of highly cultivated tastes, you may build up a great orchestra. The trouble is that many of those who get control of music, or perhaps have it thrust upon them, have no particular knowledge of it or liking for it, but accept the onus of its support as another civic duty, without realizing that a dutiful gesture in the wrong direction does more harm than good. The danger in any case is that instead of remaining trustees of the community's music, these people become its arbiters. If their judgment is indifferent or inferior we find ourselves with symphony orchestras on the toboggan of second rate direction, and opera companies hurtling in blissful ignorance to destruction.

When an orchestra or an opera company declines in prestige, far more is hurt than a disappointed audience accustomed to better things. If a new audience accepts that music, its taste is corrupted at the source, and the same is true of the developing performer who is denied the very opportunity every talent should take for granted. The musician already established in his community suffers even more. He has made the greatest possible investment in his organization, for he has invested his career. He may not have an opportunity to leave for another post, or he may not want to accept such opportunity because of home, friends, pension, or perhaps some lingering loyalty to better days. Yet a decline in prestige over which he has no control is bitter penalty for service that deserved richer reward.

The More Roots It Strikes, the Better

Mr. Koussevitzky's 25 cent plan, like Bruno Walter's dream of subsidized training centers of the arts, would not free music overnight, but it would knock a hole in the blank wall against which so much music is struggling and thru that hole would trickle light and air and the hope of freedom to come. Mr. Koussevitzky says Gov. Tobin of Massachusetts is interested. Perhaps Gov. Green will be. Perhaps all governors will be. Perhaps the President will be. The more roots it strikes, the better. It's another case of our old friend, "The roots must be more splendid than the foliage," which so many of us hope to see carved over the Auditorium doors if, when its war time service is done, that friendly old theater becomes a true center of the arts, a living memorial where the gifted young develop in the freedom others just as young and perhaps more gifted gave their lives to defend.

No doubt any but the Russians and the Irish would finish one project before starting another, but it is impossible to talk to Mr. Koussevitzky without talking about Tanglewood, and it is impossible to talk about Tanglewood without getting ideas about some place near Chicago, perhaps Ravinia, where something similar might be developed. Tanglewood, as you know, is both school and festival, furnishing what Mr. Koussevitzky calls "an opportunity for a summer of living and working in music." After two years of war time suspension it reopens next July 1 with Aaron Copland as Koussevitzky's assistant director. There will be six weeks of school, with principals of the Boston orchestra and other musicians as faculty, and the last three weeks coincide with the Berkshire festival. You attend that school as a qualified music student with an orchestra, an opera department, classes in conducting, composition, chamber music and so on, or as a student with less specific qualifications who wants to know more about music, in which case you form a festival chorus and a second orchestra.

Memorial Fun Aids Young Musicians

Nor is this yet all of the indefatigable Koussevitzky's scope in music. In memory of his wife he has created a fund to help finance promising young musicians. His first commission went to Benjamin Britten, who needed $1,000 to work on an opera. That opera is "Peter Grimes," the sensation of London, which Koussevitzky will do at Tanglewood this summer in advance of Eddie Dowling's Broadway production. His second commission went to Samuel Barber.

For Koussevitzky has the faith that not only moves mountains but musicians, which is sometimes more difficult. He says watch Leonard Bernstein, not only for the best of his "Jeremiah" symphony but for the remarkable performance of the Schumann Second he recently conducted in New York. He thinks "Oklahoma!" and "Carousel" delightful shows and hopes "Peter Grimes" will help them lift the level of the Broadway music stage. He has great patience with the gifted and outspoken scorn for the pretentious. And best of all, he gets things done in music. When you consider how much, in addition to his great work with the Boston orchestra, you may decide that what every state really needs, in addition to that orchestra, that opera company, and that string quartet, is a Koussevitzky to stimulate them to perfection. But if you got that for your 25 cents, you would have topped a blessing with a miracle.

JEWISH WEEKLY TIMES Page Five

MUSIC: Moses Smith

By MOSES SMITH

The release of the expected announcement that Serge Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center as well as Symphonic Festival will be reopened next summer makes the coming of peace official. (Don't believe what you read in other columns of this paper and elsewhere about warlike troubles in the Near East, Middle East, Far East and everywhere else; it's all propaganda.) Koussevitzky has had many big moments in his life but probably none to yield him a bigger thrill than he will experience when the Center opens its term of six weeks next July 1.

Certainly few things in his life caused him greater anguish than having to close the Center for the duration after the session in the summer of 1942. After Pearl Harbor, the preceding December, the Directors of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., and the Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, joint entrepreneurs of the Festival, had quickly cancelled all plans for operating it during the war. This was natural and inevitable, although Koussevitzky swallowed hard before accepting it. He could not, however, agree that the Center, his fondest dream, must be given up. And when the two sponsoring organizations withdrew their support, he ran it on his own initiative that summer of 1942. But the jig was up, as even Koussevitzky was forced to realize. Meanwhile, his bitterness toward the Trustees, aggravated by other matters, was so great that he came perilously close to leaving the Boston Orchestra for good.

I have referred to the Festival and Center projects as Koussevitzky's designedly. The Festival was, it is true, originated on an extremely modest scale by the local group of Berkshireites calling themselves the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc. And when they later joined forces with the Boston Symphon Orchestra the formal operation and responsibility for the project rested in these two boards. But the real driving-power, shaping and expanding the Festival so that it became what it did become was Koussevitzky. As to the Center, that was his baby from the start. In it he realized a dream he had nursed for almost 30 years. Perhaps the happiest moments of his life have been during those three summers, 1940-42, when he was working with and for young America at Tanglewood.

One important change in the resumed set-up is that, for the most part, Koussevitzky will hereafter have to deal with only one board of directors instead of two. This is the result of the Berkshire Trustees' recent cession of their rights in the Shed at Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Otherwise, it is indicated, the Festival and Center will pick up next summer from where they left off in 1941 and 1942. The Festival is to be of three weeks' duration, with three programs being offered each week over a prolonged week-end. The Center session will run for six weeks, the last three coinciding with the period of the Festival. The student body will consist of two parts, one of advanced students contemplating musical careers, the other of students, whether elementary or advanced, who are pursuing a summer course for cultural reasons. As before, there will be a student orchestra and chorus. The students will give their own concerts and operatic performances as well as taking part in the main Festival.

There's going to be a lot of activity once more at Tanglewood next summer. And the busiest person around the place will be Serge Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From
LAMAR, COLO.
NEWS

DEC 17 1945

—o—

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced that the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be reopened next July at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. The school was started in 1940 but was closed for two years because of the war. The faculty will consist of principals of the Botson Symphony and other notable musicians.

The term will consist of six weeks (July 1 to Aug. 10), the last three coinciding with the Berkshire Festival under Dr. Koussevitzky, which also will be reinstated next summer.

—o—

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

By CYRUS DURGIN

Serge Koussevitzky returned to the conductor's stand at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, following two of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's out-of-town tours and a fortnight of Paul Paray as guest conductor.

Mr. Koussevitzky commendably repeated the Fifth Symphony by Serge Prokofieff, whose first American performances he had given here four weeks ago. Beethoven's "Coriolan" Overture and "Emperor" Piano Concerto, with Alexander Borovsky as soloist, were heard after intermission.

Yet again the vast and powerful Fifth Symphony of Prokofieff impressed one as some of the finest music written in this century, especially the heroic first movement and remarkable scherzo.

Another hearnig stressed the length of the melodious adagio and the bouncy, march-like nature of the finale, which makes you think of Shostakovich.

All in all this is a great symphony, extremely clever in facture, imaginative and forceful, away up and beyond most symphonic works composed over the last 25 years. It ought to wear well.

It was interesting to hear Mr. Borovsky, who plays Bach so nobly and clearly, perform the "Emperor" Concerto here for the first time. Broadly speaking, Mr. Borovsky makes the "Emperor" lyrical. Others have made it more dramatic and portentous.

Mr. Borovsky keeps the work within a relatively small framework, articulating notes clearly and making them "sing." That is entirely legitimate. The Beethoven Fourth Concerto may be more his dish, but his "Emperor" is musicianly and consistent.

Together with the "Egmont" and "Leonore" No. 3 overtures, the "Coriolan" forms a Beethoven trilogy which for structural symmetry and dramatic expression, are just about perfect.

I cannot visualize Beethoven laboring over their composition; it seems they must have come into being entire, without a note needing to be changed or a nuance added.

A performance more taut or clear, more rich in tone or appropriate in style than Mr. Koussevitzky's yesterday is hardly imaginable. Once again it was a case of great art being greatly set forth. When that occurs, it cannot be forgotten.

Christian Science Monitor

DECEMBER 15, 1945

Beethoven, Koussevitzky, And Borovsky

By L. A. Sloper

Dr. Koussevitzky, returning yesterday afternoon from the Western trip of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which had been a triumphal progress, was welcomed warmly by the Friday audience. For this ninth program of the season he chose to repeat Prokofiev's Fifth Symphony, which he had directed in its first American performance in November. The other numbers were Beethoven's Overture to "Coriolan" and the "Emperor" Concerto with Alexander Borovsky as soloist.

The symphony was well worth an early rehearing. One of the main complaints of contemporary composers is that their works are usually heard but once, if at all, and hence have no chance of becoming popular. Prokofiev is the last composer who needs to make such a complaint, and Dr. Koussevitzky is the last conductor against whom it can be made; and the success of this work on its first hearing ensured its repetition.

A second hearing of it confirmed first impressions. It is an ingratiating work, melodious, rhythmically alive, with brilliant instrumentation and just enough dissonance to give it relish. The Scherzo again struck me as the best of the four movements, and the most characteristic of its composer; the slow movement, which originally seemed the poorest, seemed even weaker this time. Its themes are banal, and its shivery effects suggest that it might have been written to accompany a screen version of "The Hound of the Baskervilles."

The performance was of the marvelous virtuosity and expressiveness which we tend to take for granted from our orchestra, but which amazes less fortunate communities.

Mr. Borovsky gave a very thoughtful and very interesting account of the concerto. He is capable of all the bravura that the work calls for, and of the purity of tone and poetic quality which it also demands. He does not attempt to carry the audience and the concerto by storm, but, while providing plenty of power where it is needed, turns to reflection and contemplation at appropriate moments. Thus he does not yield to the temptation to stun us by turning one of the world's greatest musical creations into a sort of anvil chorus. Dr. Koussevitzky supplied an understanding accompaniment—although there was a slight disagreement at one point—and all concerned were showered with plaudits.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

DEC 17 1945

Music Center Plans Program

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces the resumption in July of the Berkshire Music Center, Serge Koussevitzky, director, at Tanglewood in Lenox. Aaron Copland has been appointed assistant director. The school, which had long been a cherished plan of Dr. Koussevitzky, was instituted in 1940 for those who wished to profit by the experience of "an opportunity for a summer of living and working in music." It has been suspended for two years on account of war conditions, and will be resumed on the original plan, with the principals of the orchestra and other notable musicians as faculty.

One section of the school will be for qualified music students, and will consist of an orchestra, an opera department, a class in conducting, classes in musical composition and a department of chamber music. The other section, as before, will consist of students with less specific qualifications who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation. This department will include a chorus preparing for festival concerts and second orchestra. All students will have access to concerts, lectures and other activities as well as the Festival itself.

The term will consist of six weeks (July 1, Aug. 10), the last three coinciding with the Berkshire Festival, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, which will also be reinstated next Summer. Applications for auditions for the school departments should be made to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Symphony Hall, Boston. The detailed curriculum and faculty will be announced next month. Those who wish the festival program announcement should apply to the same address.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

DEC 19 1945

MUSIC

Boston Symphony, Directed by Fritz Reiner, Attracts Capacity Audience.

BY RUTH TRIPP

The enthusiasm of Providence music lovers for Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts attracted a capacity audience to Metropolitan Theater again last evening. Fritz Reiner was guest conducter. At the November concert, with Serge Koussevitsky conducting, there was not even standing room. Last night, however, there were a few square feet of space which might have been sold to standees.

Any guest conductor is fortunate to have the chance to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra. We had a feeling that Mr. Reiner was enjoying himself. Providence heard his debut with this orchestra. He will play the Friday-Saturday pair of concerts in Boston this week. His program:

Mozart............Symphony in D major ("Haffner"), No. 35 (Koechel No. 385)
I. Allegro con spirito
II. Andante
III. Menuetto
IV. Finale: Presto
Debussy ....“Iberia” (“Images for Orchestra No. 2)
I. In the streets and byways.
II. The fragrance of the night.
III. The morning of a festival day.
Wagner......Prelude and Love-death from “Tristan und Isolde”
Wagner.........Excerpts from Act III, “Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg”
Introduction—Dance of the Apprentices—Procession of the Mastersingers

Mozart was a safe starter. It gave the listeners a chance to appraise Mr. Reiner's manner of conducting with not too much complexity of tone to distract. It was not long before he had made things clear that all the delicacy and charm of the “Haffner” would be delivered intact from his capable baton. He is active and spry in his delineation of phrases. After one became accustomed to his beat, the clarity of the reading gained in its effect. The Menuetto was delightful and the Presto was fairly brilliant.

Somehow the Debussy lacked the finesse we associate with the playing of French music by the Boston Symphony. We thought the tempos were too deliberate and the players too cautious. There was no subtle fusion of ideas, which usually come out of the orchestra with beauty. The spark of inspiration was lacking. The kind of inspiration we mean comes from Paris.

The players really got down to the business in hand with the Wagner numbers. Fritz Reiner's name is a synonym for superb interpretation of Wagner. We had reason to learn at first hand that this reputation is deserved. In the “Prelude and Love-Death” from “Tristan and Isolde,” great heights were reached. It will be many a day before a more delicate pianissimo is produced by a cello section. The double quartet of horns played as it controlled by a single diaphragm. Trumpets and trombones were superb and the strings sang eloquently with the reeds in the beautiful close of the scene. Wagner's writing is truly great in this opera and the orchestra gave it to us in full measure.

The introduction to Act III of “The Masteringers” was delightful. The jollity of the “Dance” and the importance of the “Procession” were portrayed vividly.

We missed the concert master, Mr. Burgin, and his deskmate, Mr. Theodorowicz. It was not that the fiddlers present did not do well, but rather that there were two too few. It was good to see Miss DeGuichard in the bassoon section. She often has played in Providence and we long have suspected that she merited the place she now fills. It is a far cry from the early days of our introduction to this orchestra. In the old Infantry Hall days there never would have been a woman in the orchestra or for that matter, a guest conductor at every other concert. Times have changed indeed.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

DEC 23 1945

Vladmir Dukelsky's 'cello concerto will receive its première performances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist, Jan. 4 and 5 in Boston, and Jan. 12 in New York.

BOSTON HERALD, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Fritz Reiner conducting, gave the 10th concert of the 65th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The program:

Symphony in D major (“Haffner”) (K. 385) ....Mozart
Iberia (Images No. 2)..........Debussy
Dance of the Seven Veils from “Salome”; Symphonia Domestica, Op. 53 ....Strauss

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

Fritz Reiner, conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony orchestra, made his first appearance as guest conductor of the Boston orchestra yesterday afternoon and received a very cordial welcome from his many Boston friends and admirers.

Not a virtuoso conductor in the sense that his personality proves to be as interesting as the music he performs, Mr. Reiner probably gives about the most literal readings of the works on his program you are likely to run across. He does everything the directions on the score indicate, no more and no less, and thus the orchestra becomes an instrument that exactly reproduces the letter of the law as it is set down on the musical parts it plays. If there is a fortissimo in, say, the first violin section, the first violins make that fortissimo without any special pleading by Mr. Reiner. If the composer has indicated a phrase, that phrase is played but not especially at the conductor's behest. In short, Mr. Reiner seems to convey the impression he is conducting from a score although he actually doesn't, and is content to let the orchestra do the work while he merely controls the mechanics of entrance, release, balance, overall sonority and so on.

This, of course, is a very different thing from what we are accustomed, and it is, all things considered, the soundest possible musical practise. You can't go wrong, ever, but on the other hand, you can't always be sure of achieving a sort of radiance, or glow, or excitement, or extra-spirituality, or whatever it is that a great conductor has which liberates the spirits of the musicians and makes them play better than they can play, so to speak.

However, it must be said that Mr. Reiner, approaching the problem as he did from a wholly different point of view, was very successful yesterday. True, the performances never did take fire, but they were very fine and interesting and beautiful. The “Haffner” Symphony, an exquisite work from start to finish, had strength and substance in place of its usual over-refinement. Debussy's “Iberia,” a virtually incomparable example of impressionistic subtlety, was also quite different in conception, yet the middle section, the fragrance of the night, was exceedingly poetic in feeling and perhaps the best thing Mr. Reiner did the entire afternoon.

Everybody knows that Strauss' “Symphonia Domestica” is one of his weakest pieces, and there are, of course, pages of dull and tedious fabrication, but there are certainly less amusing musical narratives than this day in the family of Papa, Mama and Baby Strauss. What it wacks more than anything is the organizational compactness necessary to give it urgency. You feel there are so many amusing ideas jostling one another around nothing ever quite comes of it. However, heard at proper intervals of say once in five years, it is reasonably interesting and since it ends on a boisterous note it makes you feel you've had a better time than you thought you were having during the ups and downs of the middle part. Much the same could be said of “The Dance of the Seven Veils,” a piece that doesn't make too much sense out of its context, but which is a thriller in its proper place. As always, the orchestra performed in its Sunday best for its guest conductor and the audience mustered a good deal of enthusiasm for him, too. Next week's program offers Bartok's Violin Concerto and Mendelssohn's E minor Concerto with Yehudi Menuhin as soloist and pieces by Brahms and Milhaud.

Symphony Orchestra

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

The Boston Symphony Orchestra hasn't had such a workout in some time as it received yesterday afternoon when Fritz Reiner, making his first local appearance as conductor, put it through the “Dance of the Seven Veils,” from Strauss' “Salome,” and that composer's “Symphonia Domestica.”

This was partly due to Strauss, who knew how to get more out of the full modern orchestra than anyone before or since, and partly to Mr. Reiner, a conductor of quite exceptional powers. Rehearsing the “Domestica” from memory he discovered two errors in the orchestral parts, and conducting it and the other numbers on the program the same way, he saw absolute master of every musical and instrumental situation.

Beginning was made yesterday with Mozart's “Haffner” Symphony. With the strings reduced in numbers and partially reseated, Mr. Reiner brought to pass a performance beautifully balanced, of crystalline quality, rhythmically alive and all in the true Mozart spirit.

He was, perhaps, a trifle matter of fact with Debussy's “Iberia,” which followed, making somewhat more of the rhythmic first and third divisions than of the wholly impressionistic second, “The Fragrance of the Night.”

Even in the Mozart you were made aware of Mr. Reiner's operatic experi-

---

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

By CYRUS DURGIN

Fritz Reiner, conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, made his first appearance in Boston at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. His program assembled the “Haffner” Symphony (K. 385) of Mozart, “Iberia” by Debussy and two compositions by Richard Strauss: the Dance of the Seven Veils from the opera “Salome” and the “Domestic” Symphony.

In general and in details Mr. Reiner proved himself to be the finest, most seasoned and well-equipped guest conductor the Boston Symphony has had in at least 15 years. That is a considered opinion, set down in realization that Boston's orchestra has been directed by some very able guests over that period of time.

As a technician Mr. Reiner is meticulous and demanding. Under the firm beat of his long stick the orchestra played precisely. There were no loose ends, no tentative moments through the whole course of an exacting program. Mr. Reiner, who conducted from memory, had these scores in his head and he knew just what he wished to achieve. Consequently there was, between conductor and orchestra, that resulted in extremely good music making.

Unlike certain other of our guests, Mr. Reiner did not alter the tone of the Boston Symphony. Strings, wood and brass sounded under him as they do from week to week, which means a rich, deep, clear and luminous tone. That, in itself, is the mark of a discerning conductor.

As interpreter, Mr. Reiner is a man who knows the styles of Mozart, Debussy and Strauss. He is also an emotional conductor within the limits of good taste. The “Haffner” Symphony went beautifully, with all desirable clearness, with an extraordinary grace of phrasing and an appropriate light touch.

“Iberia,” composed after “La Mer,” represents the beginning of Debussy's decadence. Something of the old magic and all of the old elegance are there, but “Iberia” is more brain than visceral music. Here, too, Mr. Reiner was right in his approach, and not one detail in the fussy orchestral writing was neglected.

On the basis of the dance from “Salome” and the “Domestic” Symphony, it would seem that the gentleman from Pittsburgh is an ideal interpreter of Strauss. It was not only a matter of Strauss' involved polyphony being made plain as day. There were, too, as demanded, warmth and understanding; charm and humor and sensuous vitality. The dance from “Salome” is not good concert music; in the absence of stage action the fragmentary nature of the score is all the more apparent. Yet to this, and to that very long, exhausting day in the Strauss family, the “Domestic” Symphony, Mr. Reiner brought continuity and a long structural line. He is plainly in the first rank of present-day conductors. It is a pity that he will not be with us for two weeks.

Monitor, Dec. 24, 1945

Music Notes

Gregor Piatigorsky will be soloist at the twelfth pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Jan. 4-5. He will present for the first time anywhere a Cello Concerto by Vladimir Dukelsky. Dr. Koussevitzky will present two works by Bach: the Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 in F major (in which the soloists will be Richard Burgin, violin; Georges Laurent, flute; Fernand Gillet, oboe; and Roger Voisin, trumpet), and the Suite No. 3 in D major. The closing number will be the Fifth Symphony by Sibelius.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

DEC 23 1945

Boston Symphony

Yehudi Menuhin will introduce the ~~late Bela~~ Bartok's violin concerto to Boston in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts next Friday night and Saturday afternoon, with Richard Burgin conducting. He will also play the Mendelssohn concerto. Milhaud's “Saudades do Brazil” will have its first performances in these series. Vladimir Dukelsky's cello concerto will have its first performances by the Boston Symphony in Boston on Jan. 4 and 5 and in New York on Saturday afternoon, Jan. 12. Gregor Piatigorsky, who commissioned the work, will be the soloist.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

DEC 23 1945

CHORAL EFFECTIVES

By VIRGIL THOMSON

CHORAL music almost never sounds well in performance. Chamber music, orchestral music, even the opera can be produced efficiently and satisfactorily, given experienced workmen and enough rehearsal. That is because everybody involved knows the purpose of the enterprise, which is to produce the music in hand efficiently and satisfactorily. In choruses this purpose is only a part of the business, the other part, probably the more exigent one, being to provide musical exercise for the participants.

Amateurism, in other words, is inherent to the set-up. There are professional choruses, of course, though not many. And they perform less well, for the most part, than the amateur ones. In the instrumental field, in recital repertory, in the theater, though there is much good amateur music-making, the standards of execution that prevail are those established by professionals. And by professionals I mean exactly what is meant by professionals in any activity; I mean they receive money. But in choral singing, and this is true all over the world, the highest standards of efficiency are those set by amateurs, by societies in which the members pay for the privilege of participating.

The advantages of amateurism in the choral field are well known. Nothing is so lifeless as a professional chorus. Amateurs put passion into their work; they will rehearse indefinitely; they adore their conductor. They love the whole business. And, indeed, there are few greater sources of lasting satisfaction than the practice of communal singing. It is the very richness of the experience that produces both the virtues and the defects of our great choral organizations.

* * *

Numbers Can Only Make Noise

THE chief trouble with these is that they have no standard size. The modern world has never arrived at any agreement about what number of choral executants makes for maximum musical efficiency, for the very simple reason that in our best choral societies, all of which are amateur, the privilege of participation is recognized as of such great value, culturally and humanly, that it is not considered loyal to refuse it to any one who can meet the technical requirements. Since these do not need, for the best execution, to be very high, all our societies tend toward hypertrophy; they get too big for efficiency. They begin small; and as long as they have only fifty or sixty members, they do beautiful work in a rich and varied repertory. Then they start growing, overflowing on every stage; and nothing stops that growth but the architecture of Carnegie Hall, the limits of how many can be crowded on the platform behind a symphony orchestra.

By this time they have lost their flexibility and most of their effective repertory. They look very impressive in their robes as they sit there waiting through three movements of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony just to stand up in the last and force their voices. Gone by now are the days when they could sing the great choral literature of pre-Baroque and modern times. They go through a certain amount of it, even reducing their number for an occasional work that just won't let itself be sung by 250 people. But once they have become 250 people, their chief work is serving as an adjunct to symphony orchestras. They cannot deflate. And since at that size nothing sounds well but shouting and whispering, they lose first their beauty of tone, next their variety of tone, next their diction, with which goes all rhythm and preciseness of attack, and finally their ability to sing on pitch, leaving to the orchestral musicians the responsibility of making clear to the audience the basic harmony of any piece. They just shout and whisper and stand there looking impressive in cassocks or gowns or in dark suits and maidenly white dresses.

* * *

Numbers Limit the Repertory

THESE thoughts occurred to me the other evening at a concert in Carnegie Hall of The Collegiate Chorale. This excellent organization is just beginning its downward path. All it has lost so far is tonal beauty. Our next best outfit, the Westminster Choir, a semi-professional organization made up from students of the Westminster Choir School in Princeton, has gone one step farther; it has had no diction for five years. The New York Oratorio Society, once musically high class, I am told, has nothing left but a medium pitch average. The Harvard Glee Club, twenty-five years ago a virtuoso group in its own right, is now, so far as musical values are concerned, only an occasional tail to the Boston Symphony Orchestra's kite. The Dessoff Choirs have gone symphonic too. They have not much tone left; but their pitch, rhythm and diction are still good.

The truth is that almost none of the great choral literature, ancient or modern, will stand blowing up. It is chamber music of personalized expression and high coloristic refinement. This applies to all liturgical music and also to the choral works of J. S. Bach, though we have become so accustomed to hearing these sung by depersonalized armies, like the Schola Cantorum and the Bach Choir of Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, that few living musicians know the brilliance and real power they can have when produced with limited effectives. The only part of great choral literature, as something over and beyond orchestral works with choral interpolations, that can stand numbers is the oratorio. Handel can be blown up both chorally and orchestrally and still sound well. It doesn't have to be, but it can. That is because it is broadly dramatic in conception. It is theater music, the theater's only first-class contribution to choral art.

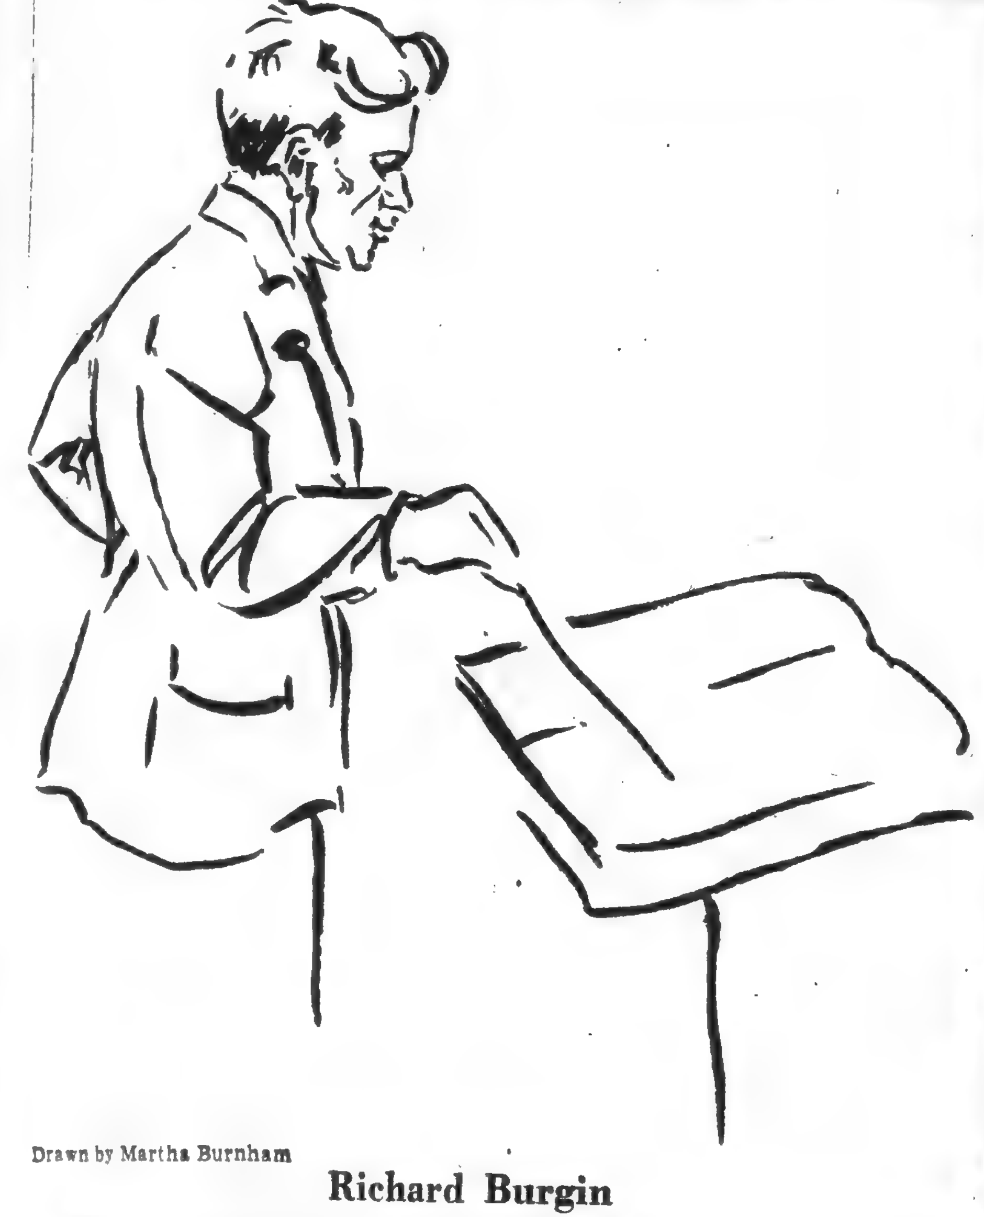
* * *

Numbers Cannot Be Reduced

IF MUSIC were the only aim in choral singing, we could standardize the procedures and improve the sound of it. Unfortunately the social, the religious, the cultural purposes served are no less valuable. And so we have a whole literature of the most sensitive music in the world shouted at us by a football cheering section. There is nothing to be done about it. One cannot argue with a social custom. Nor would one wish to hamper the functioning of one so rich. But as a reviewer attending concerts regularly and listening, as George Antheil used to say, not so much to music as for it, I am more often than not, at choral ceremonies, reminded of one of the season's classical sentiments. I salute you with it, choral devotees, even as I wish that we critics might perhaps, just for Christmas, occasionally be greeted so. “God rest you, merry gentlemen! Let nothing you dismay!”

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR DEC 27 1945

Music and Musicians — Fil



Drawn by Martha Burnham

Richard Burgin

Who is conducting this week's concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Morton Gould

Guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Sunday afternoon.

NO MORE RADICALS

Older Composers Seem to Be Mellowing, Younger Aim to Entertain, Not Startle

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

ALTHOUGH more picturesquely alliterative than strictly accurate, the remark of a New York reviewer that Prokofieff's new Fifth Symphony "burst more like a bon-bon than a bombshell" upon the musical horizon of that city was suggestive not only of the nature of this particular composition but of the present-day musical situation in general. It is some time now since a new piece has either shocked or startled us, intentionally or otherwise. The Concerto for Orchestra, by Ellis B. Kohs that Malcolm Holmes and his valiant Conservatory players introduced here the other evening had a little of the old irresponsibility, but the other novelty on the program, David Diamond's Rounds for Strings, while abundantly vital, was anything but alarming.

So far as we can see from this particular vantage point, the elder composers have mellowed and the younger ones aim less to surprise than to entertain. Schoenberg's latest, the Variations for Orchestra, is as far removed from the latter's Five Orchestral Pieces as Stravinsky's Four Norwegian Moods are from "The Rite of Spring." That tonal missile, which fell on Paris in 1913, was the true atomic bomb of 20th century music, though in their day the "Salome" and "Elektra" of Strauss had been considered fairly destructive. Schoenberg and his school never got any further than the block-buster. And today the skies seem clear.

The period from which we seem to have emerged, most of it lying between the two wars, was a stormy one in the arts. It was a period of experimentation and of new-fangled notions. Piano keys were depressed by fists, forearms and footrules. Orchestras were made up of percussion instruments only. These were the days of -alities and -isms: atonality, polytonality, microtonality, dadaism, futurism, expressionism, infantalism, primitivism, cubism and, finally, surrealism, a rash from which we have not wholly recovered. This was the era that produced Joyce and Picasso, Gertrude Stein, Epstein, and the already forgotten Leo Ornstein, an era both of charlatans and masters; of true pioneers and of bad little boys exploding paper bags.

* * *

All this couldn't last indefinitely and we are now having a needed respite, experiencing a welcome lull. In the '20s and '30s concert-going and, in the right place, opera-going was inclined to be a rather nerve-racking experience. You had to steel your ears against the assault upon them, to abandon more or less completely your carefully acquired notions of musical right and wrong, sense and nonsense. There are no operatic novelties just now, but consider such orchestral ones as the symphonies and the Two Piano Concerto of Martinu, Shostakovitch's Symphonies, Nos. 5-8, Copland's delightful "Appalachian Spring" and the new Prokofieff opus.

It is all very well to say that the Russian composers are under orders from their Kremlin bosses not to disturb the musical peace—all totalitarian regimes aim to counterbalance political radicalism with artistic conservatism—but that does not tell the whole story. A change of heart all around was clearly due. As far as Prokofieff is concerned, he may have made in this score a special effort to win official favor, for he was long regarded with suspicion, as one brought up in the old regime. However, save for a fling or two at musical savagery in his earlier days (the "Scythian Suite" and "Seven We are Seven") he has in the main steered a middle course, finding favor with both the proponents and the opponents of musical modernism, a truly remarkable achievement.

* * *

Anyway, Shostakovitch, since they clamped down upon him; Prokofieff, in his new symphony; Khatchaturian and Kabalevsky, in the works we have heard, are re-discovering melody and forswearing the extremes of cacophony. And many composers of other countries, who do not labor under any outward compulsion, are exhibiting, as suggested above, a similar tendency. Music, as Ernest Newman pointed out not long ago, has always progressed in alternating phases of equilibrium and disequilibrium. If we are on the threshold of one of the former we may be in for some more great music and we will have a chance to catch our breaths before being asked once again to adjust ourselves to the unfamiliar and the unexpected.

* * *

Yehudi Menuhin will be solo violinist at this week's Symphony concerts, conducted by Richard Burgin, playing the concertos of Bartok and Mendelssohn. Brahms' "Academic Festival" Overture and Milhaud's "Saudades de Brasil" complete the program. Next Sunday afternoon Morton Gould will be guest conductor in music by himself, William Schuman and Gershwin.

SYMPHONY HALL—COM. 1492
FRI. DEC. 28 at 2:30
SAT. DEC. 29 at 8:30
Boston Symphony
ORCHESTRA
SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, Conductor
RICHARD BURGIN—Conducting
Soloist—YEHUDI MENUHIN—Violin
SUNDAY, DEC. 30, at 3:30
Morton Gould — Conducting Program includes works by WILLIAM SCHUMAN—GEORGE GERSHWIN AND MORTON GOULD

[54]

HERALD DEC 29

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Richard Burgin conducting, gave the 11th concert of its 65th season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. Yehudi Menuhin, violinist, was the soloist. The program:

Concerto for Violin and Orchestra . . Bartok
Academic Festival Overture, Op. 80 . . . . Brahms
"Saudades do Brasil" . . . . Milhaud
Concerto in E minor, Op. 64 . . Mendelssohn

By RUDOLPH ELIE, Jr.

It is not likely that anyone really fell in love with Bartok's Violin Concerto as Yehudi Menuhin gave it its first Boston performance yesterday afternoon, yet it is certainly one of the most approachable of his late works and almost as certainly one of the greater essays in the field in recent years.

The trouble, for the unpractised listener, is that it is very hard to see the connection between the music spoken by the solo violin (which is so attractive of itself no one should have much trouble with it) and the accompaniment played by the orchestra. Technically the connection is so theoretically skilled it could well be the subject of an essay on organic unity, but that connection, through the very nature of the atonal harmonies employed, is not too apparent on a first hearing. On the contrary, it seems so aimless, so incomplete, so random, so lacking in substance, that you sometimes wonder why the composer ever took the trouble to employ 110 men when a pianist would have done as well.

Yet Bartok never did anything without good reason (as witness Mikrokosmos), and he certainly wasn't concerned with keeping 110 men busy just because they were available . . . which is the notion of many contemporary composers. And the reason, or so it appears to me, is that the composer conceived the violin as the protagonist, not in conflict with the orchestra as in the traditional concerto, but as a solitary musical wanderer, now rhapsodic, now contemplative, in high relief against nature itself.

This is not to say there's a scenario; this is absolute music if there ever was any. But the marvelous subtleties and colors and nuances of the orchestral accompaniment cannot be assimilated, until we get to know it a good deal better at any rate, unless it is accepted for what it is: atmosphere, scene of action, dimension, enclosure, or what you will. The rest, which is to say the solo violin, is easy enough, for surely Bartok has seldom created such fine and distinguished melodies, catchy rhythmic devices and violinistic embellishments. And he certainly couldn't have wished for a more sympathetic or a more technically assured soloist in his music than Yehudi Menuhin, who has done a great service to music to prepare this terribly difficult score. He was well received in it, of course but had to wait for the Mendelssohn to achieve the proper public acclaim.

Great credit belongs also to Richard Burgin for his part in the performance of the Bartok. He conducted it with great authority, catching its peculiarly atmospheric texture and conveying it admirably. It is very easy, in view of his unassuming platform manner, to underrate Mr. Burgin, but the fact is he's one of the most secure and authoritative conductors of the day, as witness the vitality of Brahms' oft-heard Academic Festival Overture, or the piquancy of Milhaud's humerous and exotic dance pieces "Souvenirs of Brazil." Only five of these frivolous but enchanting dances were done, and while it's possible the whole set of 12 might prove tiresome, I wish they'd give them a try some day. It is pretty hard to go wrong on Milhaud.

Morton Gould conducts the Sunday concert tomorrow afternoon, and next Friday Dr. Koussevitzky returns to do Bach's marvelous Second Brandenburg Concerto and Third Suite (the one with the Air for the G string in it); Sibelius's Symphony No. 5, and Dukelsky's new Cello Concerto with Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist.

This Clipping From
ABILENE, TEXAS
MORNING REPORTER NEWS

DEC 29 1945

On the podium will be Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, substituting for Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who is taking a brief rest. Burgin this year is in his 26th season as concert-master of the ensemble. He has appeared on numerous occasions as violin soloist as well as conductor. Shortly after coming to this country, Burgin organized his own string quartet, which has been heard in many chamber music programs.

Burgin will open tonight's program with Brahm's "Academic Festival" overture. This will be followed by Milhaud's "Saudados do Brazil," composed after the contemporary composer had visited that South American country some years ago.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

DEC 18 1945

CONCERT WILL ASSIST RACHMANINOFF FUND

A musical event of the late winter which already is receiving the interest and support of members of society and musical circles is a benefit concert to be given on Feb. 12 at Carnegie Hall by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra—with Vladimir Horowitz, pianist, as soloist—to augment the Rachmaninoff Fund, Inc.

The fund was established a year and a half ago as a living memorial to Sergei Rachmaninoff, the noted pianist, conductor and composer. Mr. Horowitz, who was a close personal friend, is president of the organization and Dr. Koussevitzky is chairman of the artists' advisory committee. The benefit is under the direction of a committee headed by Mrs. William C. Breed and including Mrs. Myron Taylor, Mme. Arturo Toscanini, Mrs. Frederick Steinway, Mrs. Walter Naumburg, Mrs. Otto H. Kahn, Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, Mrs. N. Penrose Hallowell, Mrs. Horowitz, Mrs. Charles E. Mitchell, Mme. Natalie Rachmaninoff, Mrs. John T. Pratt, chairman of the fund's board of directors, and Edward Taft of Boston, chairman of the regional committee for the New England area. National headquarters of the fund are in Steinway Hall.

Boxes and seats for the concert may be obtained from the Burden Littell Bureau at Bonwit Teller's.

---

6 Post Dec 29

SYMPHONY CONCERT

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

To Associate Conductor Richard Burgin and Violinist Yehudi Menuhin a load of gratitude for bringing us at this week's Symphony Concerts the Violin Concerto of Bela Bartok.

No doubt many found the concerto hard going—it also lays a considerable burden on soloist, conductor and orchestra—and were soothed and refreshed by the second half of the program, which offered such old favorites as Brahms' Academic Festival Overture, the Violin Concerto of Mendelssohn and such an easily comprehended item as Milhaud's "Saudades do Brazil," also new to Symphony Hall. It was likewise possible after the heady music of Bartok to experience, particularly in Brahms and Milhaud, a distinct letdown. The performance alone would have made the Mendelssohn worthwhile.

Bartok's 8-year-old concerto is fairly toothsome, if it is complicated in both texture and structure and by no means free from the astringence with which its composer's name has long been associated. The first movement opens in winning fashion with soft chords for harp and plucked strings. It would not be too much to call both the first and second subjects tuneful and there is a great deal both in this movement and in the waltz-like finale that is technically brilliant and hence exciting to hear. In spirit, and even in a couple of brief quotations. this finale recalls to mind Bartok's early enthusiasm for Strauss' "Zarathustra." The slow movement might be more lyrical but it is full of charming tonal effects. In spite of the things that have been said about him, Bartok disdains neither melody nor euphony. The performance, a labor of love on the part of Mr. Menuhin, was in the highest degree masterly. And this goes also for Mr. Burgin and the orchestra.

Globe Dec 29

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

By CYRUS DURGIN

Yehudi Menuhin and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Richard Burgin conducting, introduced to the town yesterday afternoon the much-discussed Violin Concerto of Bela Bartok. Mr. Menuhin also played the solo part in the Mendelssohn E minor Concerto. The program otherwise consisted of Brahms' "Academic Festival" Overture and five of the orchestrated piano pieces which Darius Milhaud called "Saudades do Brazil."

It may be, now that he is dead, the music of Bela Bartok will receive more attention than it did while the frail but fiercely high-principled little Hungarian was alive. Among musicians he has a reputation for the bold innovations he wrought in his work. But to the casual public Bartok is a name loosely associated with "modern" music, which to that casual public means music that does not go down easily at one hearing.

I doubt that the Concerto as a whole went down easily at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, although it has quite a flow of melody. Indeed, the beginning, with subdued string and harp chords just before the solo violin makes its folk-tunish entrance, is conservative. But soon the orchestra is off on an independent sort of accompaniment, and the texture of the score gets close to that dissonant weave which results when all 12 tones are considered equal.

The Concerto is very rhythmic. It has substance and it has beauty. The solo part is set off from the orchestra with strong contrast. There are reminiscences of Strauss and also of Debussy. Where the Concerto is weakest is in its length. It could be shortened by a third, I suspect, without dimming its positive qualities.

Mr. Menuhin played Bartok with devotion and an unassuming mastery of its difficulties. He played the comfortable old Mendelssohn Concerto with consistent beauty of tone, phrasing and style. In each work, he was ably seconded by Mr. Burgin and the orchestra. For all there was polite recognition after Bartok and enthusiastic approval after Mendelssohn.

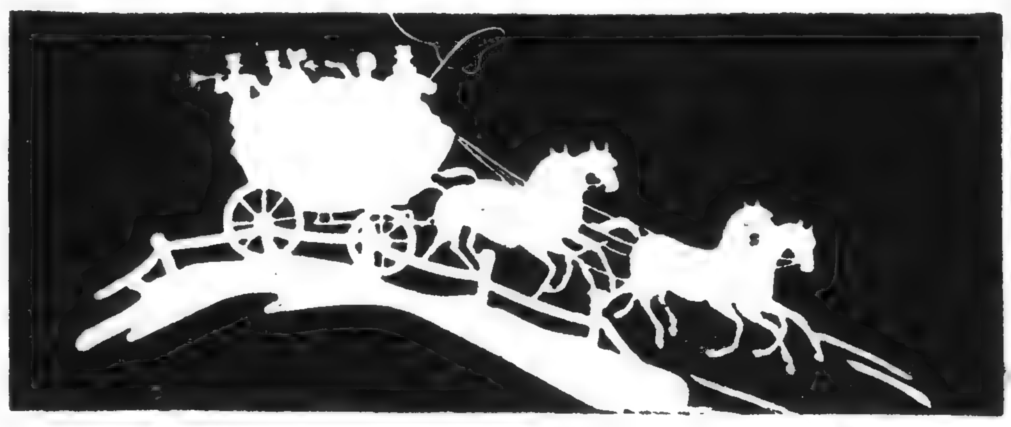
The five spicy and exotic dances from "Saudades do Brazil," ("Memories of Brazil") were new to the Boston Symphony concerts. They brought an interlude of pleasant variety between Mr. Burgin's hearty if not brilliant performance of the "Academic Festival," Overture and the Mendelssohn Concerto. Milhaud is another underatted composer of whom we do not hear enough.

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD AMERICAN

DEC 30 1945

Tanglewood Music in '46; Rachmaninoff Memorial; News of Musicians

By E. V. W.



"Every day is a fresh beginning
Listen, my soul, to the glad refrain
And spite of old sorrow, and older sinning,
And troubles forecasted, and possible pain,
Take heart with the day, and begin again."

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA announces resumption next July of the Berkshire Music Center, Serge Koussevitzky, director, at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. Aaron Copland has been appointed assistant director. The school, long been a cherished plan of Dr. Koussevitzky, was instituted in 1940 for those who wished to profit by the experience of "an opportunity for a summer of living and working in music." Suspended for two years on account of war conditions, it will be resumed on the original plan, with principals of the orchestra and other notable musicians as faculty.

Koussevitzky

ONE SECTION of the school will be for qualified music students, and will consist of an orchestra, an opera department, a class in conducting classes in musical composition and a department of chamber music. The other section, will, as before, consist of students with less specific qualifications who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation. This department will include a chorus preparing for festival concerts and a second orchestra. All students will have access to concerts, lectures and other activities as well as the festival itself.

THE TERM WILL consist of six weeks (July 1-Aug. 10), the last three coinciding with the Berkshire Festival, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, which will also be reinstated next summer. Applications for auditions for the school departments should be made to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Symphony Hall, Boston. The detailed curriculum and faculty will be announced next month. Those who wish the Festival program announcement should apply to the same address.

Boston Herald
December 31, '45

THE

MUSIC

Sunday Symphony

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Morton Gould conducting, gave the second program of the Sunday series in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, performing the following program:
American Festival Overture.....Schuman
"Porgy and Bess".....Gershwin-Bennett
"Harvest," Concerto for Orchestra, Cowboy Rhapsody..........Morton Gould

By RUDOLPH ELIE, Jr.

As much as we all admire Morton Gould and enjoy his music, it is fairly clear we had just a little bit too much of the latter yesterday afternoon to feel that his concert was as successful as it should have been.

This is not to say that Mr. Gould's music is neither good nor entertaining, for it is unquestionably both and very bright (I hate to use the word but it fits) moreover. But we might as well face the fact that its basic creative idea is not substantial enough to sustain three fifths of a symphony program especially when the other two fifths offer no striking contrast of mood, texture or pattern.

Best of all, surely, was "Harvest," a lyric, rhapsodical essay for strings, vibraphone and harp. Few composers today can write so capably for strings, achieve a more striking effect, or attain a richer, more beautiful texture. The nearest thing to it that comes to mind (and of course they have no other points of contact) is Schoenberg's "Verklaerte Nacht." Neither the harp nor the vibraphone are overdone; they are employed merely as atmosphere, and the whole is a most admirable addition to the repertoire.

The Concerto for Orchestra, whose last movement is almost identical with the last section of Mr. Gould's really splendid "Spirituals," is much less distinguished. Its idiom is completely popular, and the Boston orchestra is just not able to perform this music without sounding corney. The legitimate popular practise of "faking" is simply not in its ken, nor are any of the soloists able to "bend" notes or achieve a "hot" intonation. It is just not fair to ask them to play this music—and I refer to "Porgy" and the "Cowboy" Rhapsody as well—because they always come out of it looking a little silly. They know the notes and they can play them, but they do not know the music and cannot be asked to learn at this stage of the game.

As a conductor Mr. Gould was very impressive. He doesn't use a stick, yet he can handle fast tempos with complicated cross rhythms and syncopations as well as difficult entrances marvelously, cleanly and well. The orchestra did its best for him, but I rather fancy it didn't enjoy itself very much. The same may more or less be said of the audience, which never wholly enjoys itself unless it is getting what it wants most of all, which is to say Serge Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
NEWS

DEC 30 1945

Yehudi Menuhin, playing Mendelssohn's "Concerto in E Minor," was the highlight of the Boston Symphony concert last night (WJZ-9:30 to 10:30). One of our greatest violinist in one of his most dazzling exhibitions .

Boston Globe December 31, 1945

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

By CYRUS DURGIN

Morton Gould, the young American composer and conductor especially associated with radio, made his first appearance as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall, yesterday afternoon. He played three of his own compositions: "Harvest," Concerto for Orchestra, and Cowboy Rhapsody, the first two of which were new to Boston. In addition there were William Schuman's American Festival Overture and the Symphonic Picture made by Robert Russell Bennett from Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess."

The total effect of the afternoon was as if you had been invited out to dinner and then had been fed nothing but cocktails. The logical result would be to make you very nervous and craving for solid food. But anyway, it was interesting to hear Mr. Gould's new pieces, and he had the pleasure of conducting them himself with a first-rank orchestra.

"Harvest" contains interesting string writing—which seems to be Mr. Gould's longest suit—with a lot of modal effects. The Concerto for Orchestra is prevailingly noisy and businesslike. Both these pieces are abstract and both are inclined to be dry and tuneless. Mr. Gould is technically well equipped, but evidently doesn't care a hang about a tune. Of course, there are melodies in Cowboy Rhapsody (which he had conducted at the Pops last June), but they're not his melodies.

By contrast, Mr. Bennett's expertly garish arrangement of interludes from "Porgy and Bess" was to these tune-starved ears like manna from heaven—in a manner of speaking. The orchestra responded briskly to Mr. Gould's demands and his conducting was satisfactory, although not by any means preoccupied with beautiful tone. But, again, it was nice to hear his new pieces.

Boston Post
December 31, '46

6

MORTON GOULD AS CONDUCTOR

Directs Symphony in Program

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

From the first half of yesterday's Sunday Symphony, as conducted by Morton Gould and containing pieces by William Schuman and Mr. Gould himself, a total stranger might have received the impression that contemporary American music tended variously to be brash and raucous, liberally dissonant, restless, uncertain of its direction, rhythmically alive in a jumpy, jitter-bugging sort of way and about as soulless as a skyscraper, as sentimental as a stock market report.

The numbers heard up to this point were Mr. Schuman's American Festival Overture, which somehow sounded distinctly more agreeable when Dr. Koussevitzky introduced it to us, Mr. Gould's amorphous "Harvest," for harp, vibraphone and strings and his three-movement Concerto for full (very full) orchestra, both of them new here. As conductor and composer, Mr. Gould has little feeling for the symphony orchestra as we have known it. In his hands it sounds like a small team or, in some cases, like a dance band blown up. An expert in such matters volunteered the opinion during the interval that the Symphony men couldn't play the stuff, anyway, that they phrased it ineptly and had no proper conception of the rhythm. Perhaps it means that you can't mix oil and water.

After intermission came the Gershwin-Bennett Symphonic Picture, "Porgy and Bess," that Richard Burgin once offered at a pair of regular concerts, and Mr. Gould's "Cowboy Rhapsody," which he conducted at the Pops last June. The music of "Porgy" in its rightful place and frame is not vulgar, but that is exactly what it becomes in Mr. Bennett's tasteless and inflated potpourri. As for the Rhapsody, the term potpourri is also applicable here, but in this case the tunes are so ingenuous, so naive that they have no place at a symphony concert, in this or any other arrangement. A Pop concert is another matter.

The large audience, distinctly cold to the Schuman Overture, warmed up gradually as the afternoon progressed. It might be added that as conductor Mr. Gould is a live wire and that, like so many others today, he dispenses with the customary baton.

SYMPHONY CONCERT

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

The problem of Bach's impossibly high trumpet parts—for what sort of instrument were they written and what are you going to do about them today?—was given an airing at yesterday's Symphony Concert. The current program begins with the Second Brandenburg Concerto, and the thankless task of playing the solo trumpet has fallen to Roger Voisin, while the more grateful roles of solo violin, flute and oboe have been assigned as usual to Messrs. Burgin, Laurent and Gillet, respectively. Had it been possible to solve this trumpet difficulty in a wholly satisfactory fashion, all would not have been well. These Brandenburg Concertos are chamber works, unsuited to a large hall and a large body of players, and a piano is a poor substitute for the rightful harpischord. The other Bach number, the D major Suite, of the celebrated Air, fared better but there was still more weight of tone than Bach's orchestra will really stand.

Besides further honoring the 80-year-old Sibelius with a performance of his Fifth Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky chose this occasion to present to the world the Violoncello Concerto of Vladimir Dukelsky, with Gregor Piatigorsky as the soloist. While agreeable in many respects, the work serves to strengthen a growing conviction that Mr. Dukelsky is happier as his alterego, Vernon Duke, the composer of music for the films and for the lighter musical stage. This Concerto has a dreamy slow movement to which no one could very well object and a bright finale that suggests both Shostakovitch and Prokofieff. The first movement seemed rather confused, a mingling of sweet tunes and sour harmonies with an irrelevant episode taking the place of the customary development section; also, the balance between solo instrument and orchestra is not too well adjusted. However, the real trouble with Mr. Dukelsky's serious music is its lack of personality. You can occasionally find Vernon Duke in it but you can't identify Dukelsky. Mr. Piatigorsky, to whom the piece is dedicated, played it as well as you expected he would, and the audience made a big fuss over both composer and soloist.

Apparently Dr. Koussevitzky has been forced to abandon his ambitious plan of playing all the Sibelius symphonies this season. We have thus missed a chance to hear the neglected Third and Fourth. What Nos. 2 and 5 need is a vacation.

This Clipping From ALTOONA, PA.
TRIBUNE
[illegible]

Duo-Pianists Will Play In City Jan. 16

This year Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff, the famed duo-pianists, whose appearance at the Altoona High school auditorium on Wednesday, Jan. 16, will be a highlight of the local music season, are celebrating their first decade as a full-fledged concert attraction.

In their ten years as duo-pianists, they have achieved a record believed unparalleled by any other team. Distinction conferred on only the greatest artists has been theirs—repeated appearance with all the leading symphony orchestras, including the Toscanini orchestra, the Boston symphony under Koussevitzky, the Philadelphia orchestra under Ormandy, the New York Philharmonic and all other major orchestras.

They are perennials at the outstanding music festivals from Massachusetts to California and they have enriched two-piano literature by rediscovering many works long neglected by duo-pianists. In addition, Luboshutz has made many beautiful arrangements of great compositions.

Both started playing two pianos for the sheer pleasure it gave them and for entertainment of their friends. Out of these informal recitals grew the concert tours and their amazing success.

Pierre Luboshutz, a Russian, explains the secret. "Good duo-pianists are born, not made," he says. "It's a special gift. Even if we played in separate rooms we would always be together. Before Genia starts to play, something happens inside of me and I know what she will do—even when she tries to tease me with a trick."

Genia Nemenoff is a Parisian, of Russian parents. They met in Paris in 1929 when she enrolled in a master class conducted by Mr. Luboshutz at the Paris conservatory. They were married two years later in the United States, three days after she arrived in this country.

Last season they attracted wide attention with the new concerto for two pianos which Bohuslav Martinu, the distinguished Czech composer, wrote for them. It is conceded to be one of the best modern works of its kind. Its first performance in Philadelphia with the orchestra under Ormandy exhausted the superlatives of the music press.

Despite their constant traveling the Luboshutz maintain a home in New York. Her husband calls Mlle Nemenoff the best cook and homemaker in America. Says the distaf side, "He's just prejudiced in my favor."

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

By CYRUS DURGIN

Serge Koussevitzky returned to the conductor's stand of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon, bringing with him a Cello Concerto by Vladimir Dukelsky, with Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist. The remainder of the program represented Bach of the Second Brandenburg Concerto and the Suite No. 3, in D major, and Sibelius of the Fifth Symphony.

When he is writing "serious" music he is known as Vladimir Dukelsky; when he writes popular tunes he calls himself Vernon Duke. In the Cello Concerto, composed in 1942 but played for the first time yesterday, Messrs. Dukelsky and Duke seem to have collaborated. It is a virtuoso piece, with fearsomely difficult places for the soloist, but it is not particularly "serious."

Neither is it dry, for there are tunes, bright colors in the orchestra, a really beautiful slow movement and a rousing finale. Call the first movement a warming-up interlude and you'll not be far wrong. Yet I doubt that the Concerto will add much fame to either soloist or composer, for the substance is slight and the structure seems rambling.

Nevertheless, the Concerto is undeniably effective for an astonishing magician of the cello like Mr. Piatigorsky, and for a virtuoso orchestra like the Boston Symphony. All hands received a cordial demonstration when the piece was finished. It is a good thing, this rapprochement between Mr. Dukelsky and Mr. Duke. Each has something to offer the other. Were they to pool all their resources, there is no telling what brilliant results might come about.

With the Second Brandenburg Concerto and the Suite No. 3, the Friday subscribers had practically a banquet of Bach. For the Second Brandenburg, Mr. Koussevitzky used a reduced yet sizable body of strings, with the violin, flute, oboe and trumpet of the "concertino" before him in semicircle, and the piano of the "continuo" in the middle of the whole body. That excruciatingly high trumpet part was bravely—and admirably—played by Roger Voisin, who was said to be using a special French instrument, long and of small bore, reaching an octave above the usual B-flat trumpet. Both works of Bach were done with the utmost transparency and beauty of tone, and with a precision that fairly sparkled.

In point of eloquence and breathtaking orchestral finesse, however, the high point of the concert was reached in the Fifth Symphony of Sibelius. The prevailingly dark colors of this work make it seem deceptively simple; but there are hundreds of subtle details that must be dealt with accurately.

The Sibelius Fifth of late years has been quoted low on the symphonic market, which is a mistake, for every performance yields something unperceived before. Any work that continues to reveal itself is undeniably a masterpiece.

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The 12th regular concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, was the soloist. The program was as follows:

Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 in F major . . . Bach
Violoncello Concerto. . . . . .Dukelsky
Overture (Suite) No. 3 in D Major. . .Bach
Symphony No. 5 in E flat major, Op. 82 . . . Sibelius

It is such an odd sensation to be sitting at this desk and once again pounding out a Symphony notice after a lapse of nearly four years that the intrusion of a personal note in discussing the concert will perhaps be excused by regular readers of the column. During the interim I have heard orchestral or indeed any music so spottily that the mere fact of listening to the Boston Symphony Orchestra is an astonishing experience. I have trained myself by listening to the three previous concerts, but even so it is hard to write about it in cold and measured terms. The orchestra is, to put it bluntly, so terribly good.

I have heard in the past two years all the British orchestras and the Brussels Philharmonic in particular a number of times. The latter is very acceptable even under the two regular and inferior conductors and the British BBC Orchestra is still a good instrument. But the plain fact is that none of them can hold a candle to our orchestra here. I venture to say that there is not an orchestra in Europe that could touch yesterday's performances with a large pole and I should be willing to doubt if there are many in this country. Mr. Koussevitzky's genius seems to me not a whit the less in this passage of years. It certainly is wonderful to be a regular attendant at the concerts again!

Yesterday's novelty, Mr. Dukelsky's Cello Concerto, proved to be well worth the unquestioned difficulty of producing it. The first movement is the hardest to grasp at a first hearing. The second movement's rhapsodic and lyrical beauty and the finale's dash and glitter could be more easily taken in. It is all of it original and arresting music. This composer's "Dedications," played here seven years ago, was also a remarkable score. It is, to be sure, notoriously difficult to write a 'cello concerto, and more capable composers have failed at it than at any other musical task. That Mr. Dukelsky has brilliantly and originally succeeded is greatly to his credit.

It is well known that Mr. Dukelsky is in another personality a writer of popular music. But he was first of all a composer of serious music, and neither talent works to the disadvantage of the other. Judging by results it might be a good idea if some more of our American composers tried their hand at the light stuff. The Concerto was brilliantly performed by Mr. Piatigorsky and superbly seconded by Mr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra. The composer was on hand to receive the more than polite, if less than tumultuous, applause.

The other remarkable thing about this excellent concert was the performance of Bach's 2nd Brandenburg Concerto, with its difficult solo parts. The high register for the trumpet is a particularly thorny problem, solved in some instances by using an E flat clarinet. Even some of the famous swing trumpeters cannot play in this register; they can only reach it from time to time. Mr. Voisin used a curious looking French instrument and he did play in the register and play very well too. Our spies tell us that he was overheard to say that this performance was harder than 2 years in the Navy. Mr. Koussevitzky properly singled him out for special applause, in addition to his colleagues Messrs. Burgin, Laurent and Gillet.

A Bach Suite in 19th century arrangement and Sibelius's familiar 5th Symphony completed the concert. The 5th is probably the most enduring of the 7, the 4th being too bleak for most tastes and the 7th, for some reason, not as appealing. It had a grand performance and had the merit, if you look at it that way, of sending everybody out of the hall humming.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

By CYRUS DURGIN

The Boston Symphony concerts of yesterday afternoon and tonight are the last in the current visit of our distinguished guest conductor from England, Sir Adrian Boult. His program consists of the tone poem "Tintagel," by Sir Arnold Bax, which had not been done at these concerts before; the "Prague" Symphony (K. 504) of Mozart, and "The Planets" by Gustav Holst.

The performances yesterday were the finest I have heard from Sir Adrian Boult during this visit. The orchestra in the large scorings of Bax and Holst sounded richer, more luminous and with more freedom and poise. There was a clear, admirably styled and consistently maintained "line" in the rarely-done Symphony of Mozart which, as with the Haydn Symphony of last week, was played by a much reduced orchestra that had only two double-basses by way of foundation.

The "Prague" Symphony was vigorously performed, too, but with no loss of delicacy where that was required and without any broadening of the essential Mozart style. Sir Adrian had his own firm convictions about orchestral performance of Mozart and they are sound convictions, although it did seem that for this particular symphony there safely could have been more strings. That, however, is a matter of individual choice.

Arnold Bax no doubt is a minor figure among composers of this century, and the neo-Romantic bias of such music as "Tintagel" puts a certain curse of "old-fashioned" upon him in the minds of rigorously modern people. Yet we could hear more of Bax if only for the sake of the delectable sounds he produces. "Tintagel," a vague evocation of the "castle-crowned cliff of Tintagel" on the English coast of Cornwall, communicates no message beyond that of romantic musings upon a magnificent stretch of scenery. Its mood, however, is pleasant and its interplay of orchestral color highly attractive.

In "The Planets," that prodigious collection of seven tone poems about the astrological significance of seven of the eight major planets, are some of the finest and most imaginative pages of early 20th Century music. Holst's talent is not one to be taken lightly. His writing was at once bold and sensitive, and it had an uncommon power of characterization.

There is vivid differentiation between the ugly clamor of Mars, the analgesic beauty of Venus, the hearty fun of Jupiter, the winged scherzo rhythms of Mercury, the deep understanding—both sad and valorous—of Saturn, and the fantasy of Uranus, which might be an evocation of "The Tempest." Neptune, with its other-worldly chorus of women's voices and its enigmatic finish, is perhaps the most ambitious, imaginatively, and the most elusive to comprehend.

Yet "The Planets" does go on and on until, as my perceptive friend in 0-32 remarked, one is inclined to beg "Holst! Enough!" But "The Planets" was written at a time when length commanded more respect than it does now. "The Planets," and "Tintagel" also, drew from Sir Adrian more fire and intensity than has been customary with him before. He is always, nevertheless, a conductor of excellent taste and high technical skill. It has been a pleasure to have him again as guest.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JAN 5 - 1946

—New Recordings—

'Modern' Music Is Old Fashioned

Milhaud Already Historical but Early Rachmaninoff Impresses

—By C. E. L.—

THE WORD MODERN as applied to music hasn't meant much for a good many years. It has been applied to such disperate things as Hazel Scott's pianism and Stravinsky's orchestration and is about as definitive as the label "modernistic," used by those who have no better name to describe anything in the graphic arts from abstractions to the merely bizarre.

More and more, though, the term modern music begins to cover a specific idea. It is almost synonymous with dissonance and to that extent "modern" music is old-fashioned.

Victor starts the New Year by giving us an opportunity to compare some things which have in common the fact that they were created about the same time and recently, or at least since the turn of our graying century. These are Rachmaninoff's "Isle of the Dead," Milhaud's Protée and Hindemith's Six Chansons. Those who lift the eyebrow at the inclusion of Rachmaninoff are reminded that the phenomenal currency of Tschaikowsky and Chopin give them rank as the greatest of modernists.

* * *

ALL OF THESE scores have the benefit of expert interpreters and topping them all is Koussevitsky and his Bostonians in the Rachmaninoff threnody. Although a fairly early work, "Isle of the Dead" is generally conceded to be about the finest of the composer's orchestral works.

In its darkly romantic spirit and its lushness of execution it is a faithful tonal realization of the Boecklin painting which was its inspiration.

This sumptuousness was simply made for the Boston Symphony. The shimmering vibrancy of its strings is not often caught on the records like this. There is teamwork here by artists and technicians. A spare side is given over to an orchestral version of the same composer's Vocalise, orchestrated long ago for Kousevitsky's Moscow concerts.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JAN 4 - 1946

HAD TRIED IT THAT WAY

Boston, Jan. 3.—(UP)—Gregor Piatigorsky, one of the world's tallest and most talented cellists, appeared at the Boston Symphony Orchestra rehearsal today, his huge instrument dangling from his outstretched arm and dwarfed by his 6-foot, 4-inch frame.

"He looks as if he could tuck it under his chin," whispered one violinist to another.

"Young man," snapped Piatigorsky who had overheard the remark, "I have tried in that way too—but I prefer to play in the orthodox position."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

DEC 28 1945

Boston Symphony Booked

Will Give Next New York Concerts at Carnegie Hall Jan. 9 and 12

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its next New York concerts at Carnegie Hall on Wednesday night and Saturday afternoon, Jan. 9 and 12. Serge Koussevitzky's program for the evening concert includes Beethoven's "Coriolanus" overture, Stravinsky's capriccio for orchestra with piano solo and Brahms's fourth symphony. Jesus Maria Sanroma will be the soloist. In the matinee, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct Bach's second Brandenburg Concerto, Vladimir Dukelsky's new cello concerto, with Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist, Bach's third suite and Sibelius's fifth symphony.

Richard Burgin will conduct the Boston Symphony's next concert at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Friday night, Jan. 11. The program includes Brahms's Academic Festival Overture, Ravel's "Pavane pour une infante defunte," Prokofieff's second "Romeo and Juliet" suite and Franck's symphony.

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
~~CALL~~
News
DEC 31 1945

Shostakovich May Appear in Boston

The most discussed symphonic composer of the present, Dmitri Shostakovich, creator of the "Leningrad" Symphony, may make his first United States appearance in Boston's Symphony Hall. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Orchestra, made the announcement in announcing his plans for the 65th season of the orchestra, and his own 22d term at its helm. He said an invitation had gone from himself and the orchestra's trustees, inviting Shostakovich to Boston in any of three capacities—as conductor, as piano soloist, or "as a simple member of the audience."

The Boston Symphony is scheduled for two appearances in Newark at the Mosque, with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, under sponsorship of the Griffith Music Foundation. The dates are February 14 and April 11.

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

JAN 6 - 1946

Music Notes

Boston Symphony To Play Works By Prokofieff

By ALICE EVERSMAN.

The return of the Boston Symphony this week is one of the major musical events for the season. For many years in the past, this city was on the itinerary of the Boston group and several concerts were given here each season. But at that time, Washington was not so orchestra minded and the interest in that direction was focused on the maintenance and development of the National Symphony. Audiences were small for the Boston's visits and finally the concerts were discontinued except for special occasions such as that of the Russian War Relief in 1942.

Last season the orchestra came for one program and met a warm reception from the many who had heard it only over the air. Thursday's concert in Constitution Hall will be the second under the sponsorship of the Cappel Concert Bureau and the program arranged by Serge Koussevitsky will honor two composers only, the Russian Serge Prokofieff and the great Finn, Jan Sibelius.

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY.

Two contrasting works by Prokofieff, his "Classical Symphony" and his "Symphony No. 5," will form the first part of the program which will conclude with Sibelius' "Symphony No. 2." This is the first time in years that three symphonies have been programmed for one orchestral concert.

Prokofieff's "Fifth Symphony" is his last and for its introduction to the musical world Koussevitsky was its godfather. It was he who, learning of the plight of Russian composers as regards music paper on which to record their ideas, ordered a supply sent to them at his expense. Prokofieff, then working on his symphony in the Caucasus where he had been sent by the Soviet government together with other prominent composers when the Nazis invaded Russia, was one to benefit from the gift. In gratitude he sent an autographed score of the symphony to Dr. Koussevitsky with permission for its first performance. This took place on the broadcast of November 17, bracketed then, as it will be Thursday, with the composer's "Classical Symphony" written 28 years ago.

A warm friendship has existed between Prokofieff and the Boston Symphony for many years. When the 50th anniversary of the orchestra was celebrated 15 years ago, Prokofieff wrote his "Symphony No. 4" for that occasion dedicating it to the members of the orchestra. His various works have been constantly in the repertoire of the Bostonians.

The new symphony was given its Russian premiere just a year ago, January 13, 1945, with the composer conducting. He calls it a "symphony about the spirit of man."

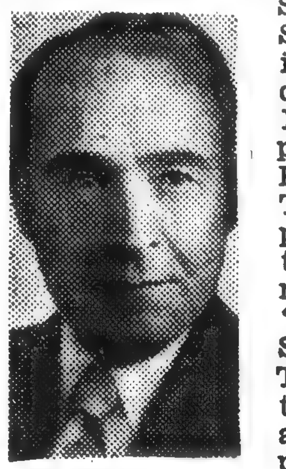
This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES HERALD

JAN 6 - 1946

Koussevitzky To Offer All Alien Music

By Glenn Dillard Gunn

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, when they visit the Nation's Capital Thursday, January 10, in Constitution Hall, will set an example in program-making that is both good and bad.



Koussevitzky

It is good in that it will include only music which can be labeled contemporary, its most ancient work being the Second Symphony of Sibelius, and its most recent the Fifth Symphony of Prokofieff. This is to be prefaced by the same master's "Classical" Symphony. The quotation marks are the composer's and I always felt he added them with his tongue in his cheek.

Koussevitzky's example is bad in that for this single appearance in the center of our Government he has not elected to play any of the numerous American works which he offers to the public of Boston. He may well share the New York attitude toward Washington and the rest of the world, namely, that we belong in the cultural sticks. In that case, he has an especial duty toward us that is concerned with the exhibition to us of our own culture. For example, Koussevitzky is famed, among many things, for his reading of Howard Hanson's Third Symphony. He has not recorded it, as he has the Prokofieff "Classical"; but he has made it as effective in the concert hall as any of the modern scores.

♫

ANOTHER objection to Koussevitzky's program for Thursday night is that he already has played the Prokofieff "Classical" for us. It is a charming symphony—witty, a bit sardonic, novel, but delightfully eclectic in vocabulary. It will be a pleasure to hear it again; but such satisfactions as may derive from the performance will be tempered by a sense of loss because of the program's omissions. The Fifth Symphony of Prokofieff is new to Washington. The Sibelius Second, of course, is not.

Koussevitzky's patriotic attitude toward Russian music is a good example for such American artists as may be sufficiently fortunate to capture the ear of the American public. Only two natives are permanently placed at the head of symphony orchestras—Wallenstein, in Los Angeles, and Krueger, in Detroit, either of whom could improve his record in the matter of our own music.

♫

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

JAN 6 - 1946

RACHMANINOFF: ISLE OF THE DEAD.

This score is one of the Rachmaninoff's best. It is full of somber musings and passionate surges but it keeps to the point and the scoring for the orchestra is masterly. The recorded performance, which is appropriately rich, is by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky. The recording is excellent. (Victor 2 records.)

Back to Realities; Reflections on Returning

Jan. 6

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

When Max Beerbohm took over the chair of dramatic critic of "The Saturday Review" from Bernard Shaw he introduced himself by writing an article in which he listed the reasons why he was the most incompetent man on earth for the job. It was an impressive list and an amusing expose of the critical game. I have just been re-reading that article and wishing I had the courage and the honesty to write something in the same line. Of course, Sir Max went on in the subsequent eight years of his duties to be one of the very best critics who has ever written in English; and the analogy might not hold!

It has been nearly four years since I last set key to ribbon in this office and upon the general topic of the arts and I do so again now with real trepidation. It is possible that the habit of criticism will come back as easily as the arts of swimming, skating and bicycling which one is supposed never to forget. I can testify that the last named can be resumed without so much as a nervous tremor. I was as much at home on a bicycle in English lanes the Army in keeping up with the arts is that you do not get enough chance to play and read. I was lucky in being for four months in London in Mr. Jan. Smeterlin's house and playing on his admirable piano when the weather was good. I mention the weather because a couple of his windows had been knocked out and could not be replaced and English summers are not like ours. I was also lucky in having a flat in Frankfurt with a brand new piano. But these were brief interludes in an otherwise almost musicless existence.

Well, I fancy I have said quite enough on the subject of "Why I should not be a music critic" and had better buckle down to doing as respectible a job as I can. Philip Hale used to tell me that the best model for a young writer in English was Swift and all the past week I have been following his advice and steeping myself in "Gulliver's Travels." Let us hope the dose works!

This Clipping From
DURHAM, N. C.
HERALD

JAN 6 - 1946

Victor Recordings

RACHMANINOFF: ISLE OF THE DEAD, Op. 29; VOCALISE, Op. 34, No. 14, arranged for Orchestra by Sergi Rachmaninoff. Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. Victor Album M or DM-1024; three 12-inch records.

When one hears such Rachmaninoff compositions as his Second-Symphony, Second Piano Concerto, "Rapsody on a Theme of Paganini," the immortal "Prelude in C-sharp Minor," and the tone poem, "Isle of the Dead," a recording of which Victor has just released, one wonders about the authority of the following statement, which was made by Howard D. McKinney and W. R. Anderson in their book, "Music in History," in 1940:

"Sergei Rachmaninoff (b,1873)," they write, "has tried and failed, like so many fine artists, to make the best of the two worlds of virtuoso performer and composer; very few men have succeeded equally well in both. (Have they forgotten J. S. Bach, Niccolo Paganini, Fritz Kreisler, Frederic Chopin, whom Mendelssohn called "a truly perfect virtuoso," Johannes Brahms, Sergei Prokofiev, Franz Liszt, and George Frideric Handel, to name a few who come immediately to mind!) While Rachmaninoff can hardly be called merely an echo of Tchaikovsky—for his darkest, stronger elements have a pull of their own—there is little originality in his music. Yet he has written a considerable number of things (inexcusable!) for the piano and the orchestra, to the obvious delight to a great number of people."

To take further issue with the above statement would be a waste of space, for the music of Rachmaninoff needs no defense. The tone poem, "Isle of the Dead," with which this review is directly concerned, alone is sufficient to disprove such an obviously prejudiced opinion. It is no "thing" in the sense that Messrs. McKinney and Anderson use the word, but magnificent impressionistic program music.

Inspired by Arnold Bocklin's famous picture of the same name, "Isle of the Dead" depicts, in somber phrases and soaring melody, a tomb-like island being approached by a boat containing an oarsman, a white-robed figure, and a coffin. It was written in 1907 in Dresden. The climax of brass, which comes after lamenting cries, is reminiscent of the "Dies Irae," the liturgical hymn of the Last Judgement. Thus its originality is not entirely pure. But its brooding nature and tonal coloring are distinctly those of Rachmaninoff's creative genius.

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, by their sympathetic and brilliant playing, bring out all the mournful beauty and weighty harmony of "Isle of the Dead." Rachmaninoff's "darkest, strongest elements" are here and they have indeed "a pull of their own." To complete this album of memorable music, Rachmaninoff's own arrangement for orchestra of his "Vocalise" fills the sixth side of the records.

This Clipping From
MADISON, WIS.
CAPITAL TIMES

JAN 6 1946

ISLE OF THE DEAD

FEARFUL that in his growing popularity he was losing his soul, Serge Rachmaninoff left his post as manager-conductor at the Grand theater in Moscow in 1906 and went into seclusion at Dresden. The effects of his monastic life there and an overwhelming fascination for Arnold Boecklin's painting, The Isle of the Dead inspired the young Russian, then only 34, to compose a symphonic poem which describes the somber mood of the painting—the tranquil lapping of the waves about the mysterious island, the Stygian boatman, the stark pines and the murky water. Rachmaninoff's work, also titled The Isle of the Dead, is performed by The Boston Symphony orchestra in a new RCA Victor recording (DM-1024, three 12-inch) which seems to me to leave little to be desired in matter of classic presentation.

No greater reward can befall a composer than to have his work interpreted by a capable conductor who loves it and understands the motivating forces which inspired it. Serge Koussevitzky supplies the proof of this statement by the supreme devotion and depth of understanding he displays in directing this magnificent group of musicians.

It is melancholy music. Opening on a note of nervous excitement, it slowly develops into a threnody of tremendous intensity, subsiding gradually into a calmness in which peace at last, overcomes suffering. Strains of the Dies Irae, the liturgical hymn which celebrates the Last Judgment, blend fittingly into the musical fabric, and muted strings and harp in low registers add much in carrying out the somber coloring of the work.

The sixth side in the album offers Rachmaninoff's own orchestral arrangement of his Vocalise, Op. 34, No. 14.

This Clipping From TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES

JAN 6 - 1946

LISTEN
DISC-DATA
By
Eulalah Overmeyer

ISLE OF THE DEAD, (Rachmaninoff)—Symphonic Poem after Boecklin's Painting, played by The Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, Victor DM 1024. This is an outstanding release of the month. Serge Rachmaninoff is the most beloved Russian composer since Tschaikowsky. His melodious compositions follow the same romantic vein as the ever popular Tschaikowsky.

Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony have another "feather in their cap" with this transcendental performance.

This Clipping From
ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES

JAN 6 - 1946

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY will take the "Boston Symphony Orchestra to Hunter College in New York on Saturday, January 12, for its second broadcast of the season from that hall over station WSLS. The program will be heard from 9:30 to 10:30 p. m.

For the concert, Dr. Koussevitzky has selected two symphonies. The first, a brief nine-minute work, by Mozart is known as the Symphony in E flat, No. 26. The second work will be the Symphony No. 4 in E minor of Brahms, completed in 1885 and still regarded as one of the outstanding symphonies of all time. Played on January 22, 1886, for the first time by the Bostonians, it has remained in repertoire ever since.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JAN 6 - 1946

Will Resume Classes At Berkshire Center

Koussevitzky Again Director, Six Weeks Scheduled

After a two years' suspension owing to war conditions, the Berkshire Music Center will resume its activities under Serge Koussevitzky's direction next summer at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Aaron Copland has been appointed assistant director. The 1946 session will run for six weeks, July 1 to Aug. 10. The last three weeks coincide with the first post-war Berkshire Symphonic Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky.

As before, the school will have two sections, one for qualified music students and the other for students with less specific qualifications who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation. The first section will consist of an orchestra, departments of opera and chamber music and classes in conducting and chamber music. The second section will include another orchestra and a chorus preparing for the Festival concerts. All students will have access to the Center's concerts, lectures and other activities, as well as to the Festival itself. The faculty will again be composed of principals of the Boston Symphony and other notable musicians.

Applications for auditions for the Center's departments should be made to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JAN 6 - 1946

Berkshire Music Center to Reopen Next Summer

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced that the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be reopened next July at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. The school was started in 1940 but was closed for two years because of the war. The faculty will consist of principals of the Boston Symphony and other notable musicians.

The term will consist of six weeks (July 1 to Aug. 10), the last three coinciding with the Berkshire Festival under Dr. Koussevitzky, which also will be reinstated next Summer.

MUSIC'S TEN BEST

Desire Dufauw Causes Some Excitement By Naming Works He Considers Basic

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

THE present-day substitute for the prima donna's stolen jewels is the conductor's startling statement. When one of these boys thinks that a bit of publicity would not be amiss he summons the reporters or in some other way conveys to a palpitating world his latest brain throb. A while ago it was Artur Rodzinski averring that jazz was among the causes of juvenile delinquency. This gave other musicians, of both the long-and the short-haired variety, a chance to break into print by declaring that the New York Philharmonic-Symphony director was talking through his hat.

The latest to enter the field is Desire Dufauw, now of the Chicago Symphony. The Belgian-born maestro, who once led our orchestra as guest, has given out what the Associated Press despatch called a list of the world's 10 greatest works of music. This, I believe, is something new. We have repeatedly had the "10 greatest" books or the "10 greatest" novels. But has anyone else had the temerity to do this with music?

In point of fact Mr. Dufauw didn't put it quite that way. His 10 pieces were those that in his opinion "would form the most comprehensive basis for the understanding and enjoyment of all music." Being a symphony conductor he confuses music with orchestral music, thereby ignoring the following important categories: choral music, chamber music, piano music, organ music, song and opera. Since he includes Stravinsky's "Petrouchka," he does not exclude music originally composed for the stage. Conspicuously absent from his list, however, is Wagner, a bigger shot, one might suggest, than any of Mr. Dufauw's 10 masters, saving only Bach, Beethoven and Mozart. Of his nine remaining pieces six are symphonies: Mozart's "Jupiter," Beethoven's Fifth, Schumann's Third ("Rhenish"), the Franck and the Fifth of Shostakovitch. That still leaves Bach's Suite in B minor for strings and flute, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" and Debussy's Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun."

* * *

On vacation at Southern Pines, Dr. Koussevitzky was not available for questioning. He is probably too discreet to have attempted such a classification in the first place, but requested to make a selection of his own he might offer a different Bach, Mozart and Schumann, probably Beethoven's "Eroica," Tchaikovsky in place of Franck and Sibelius at any cost. Just now he is more sold on Prokofieff's Fifth than upon the D minor of Shostakovitch. He might place Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony above any of the Schumann works, but among them he would certainly choose No. 1. (I personally would vote for the Second, and the "Rhenish" would be my fourth choice. There are fine things in it but the piece as a whole is labored, hinting all too plainly at the composer's approaching crack-up, and the one whose orchestral dress is the least flattering.) Debussy's "La Mer" is a far more characteristic work than the "Faun," while the greater Strauss is to be found in "Don Quixote" rather than in "Till," brilliant as the latter is. Stravinsky's "Firebird" suite, though probably less typical, is a better concert piece than "Petrouchka." However, "The Rite of Spring" is of far greater import than either, if distinctly less salable, and Mr. Dufauw plainly had salability in mind. And where does poor Schubert got off? As a symphonist, the composer of the "Unfinished" and the C major stands closer than any other to Beethoven.

* * *

The fact of the matter is that the literature of the orchestra is too rich and too varied to be boiled down to any 10 numbers. Handel, Haydn, Berlioz, Bruckner, Mahler, Schoenberg and Bartok would have their champions. No self-respecting Czech could give Smetana the gate; no proper Englishman would omit Elgar—unless it were to substitute Vaughan Williams! If no American composer has yet received mention in this discussion, that is not Mr. Dufauw's fault, since he added that he considered George Gershwin "the greatest musical genius" this country has produced. He certainly came nearer to sounding a more distinctive note. His reliance on European models is less than that of MacDowell or Chadwick, at one extreme, or of Copland, or even Harris, at the other. Yet he was less accomplished in a technical sense, not only than these four, but than a great many that might be named.

In that he had more genius than scholarship Gershwin was like Moussorgsky. The Russian has no claims to be included among the orchestral writers, but no list of the 10 greatest operas could justly overlook his "Boris." You can pick your own works, but for the other nine composers, and to match Mr. Dufauw in the theatre, I suggest Gluck, Mozart, Rossini, Wagner, Verdi, Gounod, Bizet, Puccini and Strauss. And I, too, would be giving some good men the cold shoulder.

* * *

At this afternoon's Symphony Concert Sir Adrian Boult will repeat the Purcell-Woodgate Trumpet Tune and Air, Ireland's "The Forgotten Rite," Elgar's "Enigma" Variations and the First Symphony of Brahms. The program for Friday and Saturday will consist of Bax's "Tintagel" (new), Mozart's "Prague" Symphony and Holst's "The Planets."

* * *

Boston Symphony Gives Great Performance Here

By ARTHUR W. QUIMBY

The Boston Symphony orchestra under the leadership of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky made its annual visit to New London last night when it [illegible] a sold-out house at the [illegible] These concerts [illegible] coming a tradition here, [illegible] this is one case where [illegible] would care to see a tradi[illegible]

[illegible] is a superbly [illegible] of musicians, partly [illegible] by the Henry Lee Hig[illegible] endowment and enthusi[illegible] by the people [illegible] above all else the [illegible] as we hear it to[illegible] Koussevitzky. He can [illegible] orchestra play above the [illegible] individual capabilities [illegible] men in it. He is a great in[illegible] a master of conducting [illegible] a stimulating program [illegible]

[illegible] is his consistent cham[illegible] of the cause of new music [illegible] the days of the Concerts Koussevitzky in Paris to the pres[illegible] which stamps him as a prophet and a pioneer. Never content to [illegible] on his laurels he has the un[illegible] energy to continue con[illegible] in search of new materials [illegible] the artistic integrity to pre[illegible] each new work—however un[illegible] it may be with the public [illegible] with the same care he would de[illegible] an accepted master.

Nor have his activities been lim[illegible] to European composers; the young men of his adopted country have had repeated occasions to be grateful to him. Indeed, Hugo Leichtentritt in a recent article on Music in America writes—"In the main, the ascendancy of the American leaders is due to the initiative of Dr. Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony orchestra. . ." This is of far reaching importance and we are greatful to Dr. Koussevitsky for it.

The program opened with the Overture No. 3 in D major by Bach, properly speaking a Suite but given the name "Overture" by Bach because of the importance of the first movement. Where in all music is there greater dignity than in the "Grave" of the first movement, or a more soul-purifying exaltation than in the "Air"? The lightness of the Gavottes and the Bourree was enhanced by the director's felicitous use of a small orchestra in contrast to the full orchestral tone at the beginning and at the end.

The classicism of the Bach was followed by the neo-classicism of Stravinsky in his Capriccio. This is actually a piano concerto but the composer tells us that he chose this name because he wished a freer form. Stravinsky played this work widely in Europe after its composition in 1929, his son played it, and it has been performed by many others; but it is hard to see how anyone could have excelled the performance given the piano part last night by Jesus Sanroma.

It is a tailormade to fit his technique and his temperament, crisp, biting, whimsical, and scintillating in turn. Whether one agrees that these later compositions of Stravinsky are the equal of his earlier, more spontaneously Russian works —and what man would not be changed whom revolution and war had twice in a lifetime forced to seek a new homeland—at least all will agree that pianist, conductor, and orchestra gave the Capriccio a brilliant and exciting performance.

For the piece de resistance Koussevitsky brought us the Symphony No. 4 in E minor by Brahms. This work was probably familiar to every member of the audience, and yet one had the impression that he was hearing it in its true glory for the first time. One could write reams of reasons for this, but suffice it to point out only two. First, the interpretation was free of all false effects and exaggerations, allowing the music to speak naturally and with inevitability. Second, Koussevitsky missed not a single point of emphasis. Every truth set down by the great soul of Brahms was enunciated to us through the great soul of Serge Koussevitsky. That is what makes a great performance, and that is why last nights performance was great.

↑[58]

MUSIC

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

Symphony Concert

The 15th regular concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Sir Adrian Boult conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows:

"Tintagel" ....Bax
Symphony in D major, "Prague," K 504 Mozart
"The Planets"............................Holst

It is positively astonishing that Holst's "Planets" has been left on the shelf since 1932. I venture to say that those of us who heard it then when the composer himself conducted have ever since remembered it, not in detail perhaps, but have treasured the impression of a modern masterpiece. For some reason, even in England, Holst has never been granted the full meed of praise that his contemporaries, Elgar, Delius and Vaughan-Williams, have received. His is actually, though, the most original talent that Britain produced in the 20th century. (It may be that Walton is another, but I am not familiar enough with his larger works to say.)

At any rate it is good that Sir Adrian wound up his three weeks' visit with the Boston Symphony by reviving this splendid and remarkable score. From its title and descriptive sub-titles it might be thought that "The Planets" was an example of modern romanticism. Nothing could be further from the truth. The music has varied emotional impacts, but the prevailing mood is certainly not romantic. Nor does it stem from established schools of musical style. There is the folk-song element in "Jupiter," a touch of Dukas' "Sorcerer's Apprentice" in "Uranus" and a hint of Debussy's "Sirenes" in "Neptune." But by and large "The Planets" is an eminently original masterpiece.

The seven movements are deftly contrasted, so that the listener gets something of the conventional first movement allegro, adagio, scherzo and finale. But there the resemblance ceases for Holst has his own emotional scheme to work out. Thus the work begins with the violence of "Mars" and ends with the cold and mystical "Neptune." There is not a dull or banal page in the whole score. Sir Adrian has, of course, a special interest in "The Planets," for he introduced them to the world. He lavished affectionate care on the performance yesterday and secured what can only be described as a triumph.

The concert began with an outmoded and not very interesting tone poem by Arnold Bax, "Tintagel." It was meant to evoke Cornwall and the sea and the Arthurian legends which cling around that coast. But the power of evocation which the music may once have had, has departed, very likely forever. The tone poem starts well, but soon loses itself in a succession of cliches of the so-called impressionist period.

Mozart's enchanting Prague Symphony brought us happily out of the Bax doldrums. The slow movement is one of those curiously "modern" pieces that Mozart occasionally produced. I have always also suspected that Prokofieff got some of the ideas for his Classical Symphony out of the finale. Sir Adrian chose to perform the Symphony with a greatly reduced orchestra. This worked admirably in the finale, but the first two movements are not such delicate flowers that they cannot stand a bit larger orchestra. Perhaps this is to cavil too much, for the Symphony was beautifully played and utterly captivating to hear.

The concert will be repeated tonight. Next week Mr. Koussevitzky returns to his post and will offer us Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony and Tchaikovsky's Pathetique.

SYMPHONY CONCERT

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

The present visit of Sir Adrian Boult, which ends officially this evening, has been by no means unprofitable. Nevertheless, there is reason to regret that his programs paid so little heed to the England of today and were so largely given over to music that, to put it bluntly, has outlived its usefulness. In such case was Arnold Bax's tone poem, "Tintagel," that yesterday had its first performance in Boston. The Cornish cliffs and the ruins of King Arthur's castle make a tempting "program," and perhaps 30 years ago the music suggested these things, but its evocative power has largely disappeared. As in Ireland's "The Forgotten Rite," little remains save outmoded formulas.

There is more vitality in Holst's "The Planets," last conducted here by the composer 14 years ago. In this instance Holst must be credited both with a considerable degree of technical skill and no small amount of imagination. The task, however, lay outside his powers, as it might of that of almost any composer. In their various astrological associations Mars, Venus, Mercury, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus and Neptune are characterized with some degree of success, but the music itself is seldom gripping. You could hardly reduce the work to a mere succession of sound effects, yet the orchestration seems more significant than the musical thoughts which it clothes. These last are often reminiscent and, at times, as in "Jupiter" and "Uranus," verge on the commonplace. But better, perhaps, an obvious idea than none at all. The performance was prepared with great care, and it would be rash to say that the composer's intentions had not been fully realized. The chorus of women's voices, used in the seventh movement, "Neptune the Mystic," had been trained by Arthur Fiedler.

For the central number, Mozart's "Prague" Symphony, Sir Adrian, as in the Haydn Symphony of a week ago, used a greatly reduced orchestra, but with less happy effect. Particularly in the first and second movements a large body of strings would have suited better the breadth of the one and the richness of the other. Only the finale really came off; the rest sounded meagre.

Philharmonic, Philadelphia And Boston Groups Are Heard

By Miles Kastendieck

New York

Eight orchestral concerts within six days by three of the finest orchestras in the world was the order of the week for New York music lovers. The Philadelphia Orchestra started it off on Jan. 8 with Bruno Walter as guest conductor. The Boston Symphony came for its second visit the following night with Koussevitzky to conduct its two Carnegie Hall concerts and Richard Burgin the Brooklyn concert. The Philharmonic-Symphony ran its full schedule of four concerts with Rodzinski conducting. There were several soloists, one new concerto, and plenty of superior music making.

Topping all this activity was Fritz Kreisler's playing of the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto with the Philharmonic-Symphony. Certainly this was one of the treasurable moments of this season as well as of many years of Kreisler, including the times when he has played this concerto. All the facets of his art shone in his playing, obviously mellowed with the years but surprisingly vigorous. It pulsated with life, it grew expansive in expression, it entranced with the communicative quality of his tone, it enthralled with the interpretative capacity of the man. Such a heart-warming fired the audience, which showered him with applause.

Rodzinsky began these concerts with Boccherini's Symphony in A, a charming product of the eighteenth century, and closed with Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony, a work that seldom fails to stir the listener. Both were delivered in a direct, lively, clean-cut fashion, with some real brilliance to end the Tchaikovsky. In the weekend programs Moussorgsky's Prelude to "Khovantchina" and Prokofiev's Second Violin Concerto, with Patrice Travers as soloist, were combined with the Tchaikovsky. Miss Travers coped successfully with the demands of the concerto, finding in its content a kind of music to which she readily responds. Her success with it prompted the thought that it might be well for young artists to offer contemporary works as they climb the ladder to maturity.

* * *

Koussevitzky introduced Vladimir Dukelsky's Cello Concerto with Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist. The work was politely received; only the composer's presence stimulated applause. Ideas may have changed as to the kind of music which should be written for cello, but even then there were many measures in this work which were not particularly suitable for the instrument. Dukelsky appears to have indulged himself in as many clever ideas of orchestration as he could command. The heterogeneous results were not especially musical, only functional. The virtuosity of the score was admirably met by soloist, conductor, and orchestra, but all of these could not arouse much interest in the work. The audience at this concert found solace in the characteristic performances of Bach's D major Suite, and Brahms' Fourth Symphony, both of which were played true to the Bostonians' style and integrity.

In Brooklyn Richard Burgin and the orchestra played the same Bach Suite, Ravel's Pavane pour une Infante défunte," Dukas' "The Sorceror's Apprentice," and the Brahms Second Symphony. The playing sounded well, the conducting was conscientious, the interpretations were sincere and straightforward. For most, the highlight of the evening was the Dukas. Any conductor other than Koussevitzky leading the Boston Symphony meets rigid standards.

The Saturday matinee program included Moussorgsky's Prelude to "Khovantchina," Prokofiev's "Romeo and Juliet" Ballet, Second Suite, Stravinsky's Capriccio for Orchestra with piano solo played by Jesús María Sanromá, and Sibelius' Fifth Symphony. Under Koussevitzky's direction the performances of these works pursued a familiar course. Interest centered on the Stravinsky, with which Sanromá is especially associated, since the work is seldom given. That it stands the test of time belies its apparent sophistication.

This Clipping From RICHMOND, VA.
NEWS-LEADER
JAN 9 - 1946

Shostakovich Sends New Year's Greetings to Friends of Music

By DMITRI SHOSTAKOVICH
Special to The News Leader

MOSCOW.—(NANA)—When, according to the good old tradition, we expressed our wishes on New Year's Eve, we wished in the first place that 1946 shall prove to be the happy beginning for long and continuous years of peace. Personally, I would like to find that in 1946 the word "war" should be deleted from man's vocabulary; that scientists in the quiet of their research rooms should work on experiments with the aim of making life easier and happier; that the glow of the huge and devastating fire which swept the world during the last six years should forever be extinguished.

I would like to see 1946 usher in a new stage in the development of sincere friendship between people in cultural fields of endeavor everywhere. There are many ways in which we could benefit each other.

Recently, Yehudi Menuhin, superb musician that he is, captivated our hearts with his profound, poetic talent; his concerts in Moscow left an impression as one of the brightest events in the aristocratic life of 1945.

With this message, I send my heartiest greetings to the brilliant representatives of American music: Arturo Toscanini, Sergei Koussevitsky, Leopold Stokowski, Jascha Heifetz and others whom we ardently wish to have as guests on the Soviet concert stage. I wish that the peaceful waters of the Atlantic may become a wide avenue leading to friendship and collaboration between our great nations.

In literature, music, scientific achievements and sports, let everything that is good and useful henceforth be accessible to the growing generations to the fullest extent.

These wishes are not devoid of egoism. We who have passed our youth will live in peace and ease only if our children will not be threatened by another frightful war. Peace deserves that all honest peoples should serve it with a strong will, ability, and skill.

Happy New Year!

JAN 10 N.Y. WORLD TEL.

Music

By Robert Bagar

Bostonians Present a 'Cello Novelty

A 'cello concerto new to local ears, a soloist and two familiar numbers were what Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra put before a large audience in Carnegie Hall last evening. The 'Cello Concerto in C major—composer, Vladimir Dukelsky—was the novelty: the soloist, Gregor Piatigorsky. As for the old standbys, these were the Bach Suite No. 3 in D major and the Brahms Fourth Symphony.

Vladimir Dukelsky is a serious composer, who can toss off an oratorio, a symphony or even a 'cello concerto just like that. And Vernon Duke is a "pop" composer whose creative energies function with as much aplomb in contriving a musical comedy or movie score. N. B.—Dukelsky and Duke are one and the same man, and more power to all three, or something.

Playing Was Good.

I'm sure that Mr. Piatigorsky and the conductor and the orchestra gave the Concerto a concise reading. The soloist was almost always in tune, his technique expert, his tone clear and often expressive. The orchestra's share of the burden seemed fair enough, the rhythms were properly marked, the upward surges and the downward dips remarkable, the notes all played. So much for the performance, and nothing especially wrong save with the Concerto itself.

That was another matter. Mr. Dukelsky did some wandering in regard to style. He was dissonant one moment and romantically lush — 19th century vintage — the next. And the solo line kept up an incessant chatter. It was ya-ka-ta, ya-ka-ta, ya-ka-ta all the time. When the 'cello spoke "modern" phrases in the first movement the orchestra generally contributed harmonies about as unconventional as Puccini's. And the other way around.

A Waste of Ideas.

There appeared to be quite a number of good ideas wasted in the second movement, ideas of rhythmical or melodic, or of instrumental combination. Likewise in the third, which skipped about uncertainly among the martial, the sentimental, the satirical and the bombastic.

In short, Mr. Dukelsky's Concerto—which, incidentally, takes a lot of playing to perform—is fragmentary. Some of its music just didn't come through, especially when the 'cello stomped around in the same low registers as the other strings.

Mr. Koussevitzky's delivery of the Bach was puristic in the best sense. The famous Air soared spontaneously right out of the strings. And a word of praise about Concertmaster Richard Burgin's ensuing fleet and fluty solo bit is not amiss.

* * *

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

JAN 10 1946

Koussevitzky Introduces Dukelsky's Concerto

Dukelsky's Cello Concerto was the chief item of interest and the least important number in the Boston Symphony Concert at Carnegie Hall last night. Koussevitzky saved the evening by having Bach's D Major Suite and Brahms' Fourth Symphony on the program. Gregor Piatigorsky was the soloist.

The first New York performance of the concerto fell flat. The appearance of the composer prompted more than feeble applause, but the audience found little to its liking in this curious, derivative, time-consuming work. Except in the second of three movements there was little ingratiating writing for the cello and a great deal that was as unnecessary as it was apparently difficult. The orchestration was full of naive ideas which might have proved something if the material at hand were worth working over, but the whole concerto sounded heterogeneous. When a musical idea was allowed to float freely for a moment, it inevitably fell into air pockets.

Piatigorsky struggled manfully with the solo part, managing to pull out some good tone now and then but having to encounter more notes than were comfortable for his instrument. The orchestra met its task with typical Bostonian virtuosity.

BOSTONIANS PLAY DUKELSKY'S MUSIC

~~Sun NY~~ Jan 10

By ARTHUR V. BERGER.

A renewed interest in the cello is noticeable among our more advanced composers. Vladimir Dukelsky's Concerto in C, heard at the Boston Symphony concert in Carnegie Hall last night, is only well contrived, and it is full of one of a number of novelties on the agenda featuring that instrument. If it once appeared that strings, and especially the lush, romantic cello, were doomed by the stonier objectives of contemporary music, this is evidently no longer true. But the cello is hard to write for in any idiom, and even the masters of the past did not always succeed. Dukelsky is thus to be complimented on the suave way in which his musical ideas have conformed to its limitations.

There was nothing rugged in the sounds produced by last night's soloist, Gregor Piatigorsky, for whom the work was written. For this, of course, credit goes not only to Dukelsky but to the performer. The third Russian in this collaboration, Serge Koussevitzky, conducted as if he too shared in the rapport. A few places where cello was covered up by orchestra were due to heavy scoring which can easily be cleaned up; but the instrumentation as a whole was titillating effects of a subtle and imaginative kind. Musically, the first movement reminded me of a downtown traffic jam, for, like an auto in such a predicament, the material bogged down each time it got moving. But the buoyant finale was unusually satisfying, and the middle of the Aria was striking.

Notwithstanding his Broadway alias, Vernon Duke, Dukelsky remains faithful to Russian traditions, and the possible derivations from Prokofieff, synthesized in his own terms, come by him naturally. Flanked by Bach's Suite No. 3, in D major, on one side, and the Brahms Fourth Symphony on the other, his concerto pleased at least a portion of the audience, to whom he bowed from the platform. Koussevitzky, for his part, elicited richness of sound too consistently in the Bach and he was too frenzied in parts of the Brahms to suit my taste. But the contrapuntal clarity in the one work and the extraordinary variety in the other were among many distinguished features of this concert.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

JAN 10 1946

Koussevitzky At Carnegie

By GRENA BENNETT

Serge Koussevitzky's remarkable achievements as a conductor have seldom been more completly shown than at last night's concert of the Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall.

And, moreover, he can always be depended on to introduce a new composition, whether it be worthy of the effort or not.

His pioneering last night was devoted to the first performance in this city of a violoncello concerto by Dubelsky, with the sole part played by Gregor Piatigorsky.

The work is a restless one, occasionally tinged with ultra-modern inharmoniousness, frugal in melodic content and frequently tenous.

Although the work was directed with sincerity and authority, played by one of the greatest orchestras in the world, and with the soloist occupying a place on the highest rung of the artistic ladder, even such a combination could not rescue it from dullness and monotony.

But there was compensation in the other portions of the program, which began with a superlative reading of Bach's D major Overture Suite. The sounds from the strings were mellow, rich and of beautiful texture and the spirit of each movement was invoked with beguiling charm or spontaneity, according to the label of the sections.

Then came, as the peak of the evening's fare, the glory of Brahms' Fourth Symphony, in which every measure of its construction and the abundant melodic material, so well-ordered and so consistent in its continuity and rhetoric, brought the evening to a most satisfactory, rewarding end.

* * *

—Hague— PM JAN.10.46

Cello Concerto, And Met Debut

Vladimir Dukelsky, the Russian-American composer who writes for Broadway musical shows under the name of Vernon Duke, has composed a new Violoncello Concerto for Gregor Piatigorsky, and the distinguished cellist introduced it Wednesday night in Carnegie Hall with the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky. As the standard repertory of concerti for cello and orchestra is limited, a new work in this category is always welcome. But I don't believe you will be hearing many repetitions of Mr. Dukelsky's contribution in the future.

For it is a rarely ingratiating piece of music, eclectic, pointless and generally tedious. Like the popular song of a decade ago, "the music goes 'round and 'round," only this time it comes out nowhere. The first movement, with its cadenza for cello and harp and its reminiscences of Rachmaninoff, is the most impressive; the second, a long-drawn out and rather somber Aria, meanders and repeats itself; the third, with its marchlike themes a la Shostakovich, is livelier in its proclamative and brassy fashion.

Mr Piatigorsky set forth the solo part with great suavity and mellowness of tone, and Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra provided expert support. But infinitely more rewarding musically was the polished and finely balanced performance the Bostonians gave Bach's Suite (or "Overture" as the composer called it) No. 3 in D major, which opened the evening.

The second half of the program

NEW YORK POST, THURSDAY, JANUARY 10, 1946 30

Words and Music

Piatigorsky Plays Dukelsky Concerto With Bostonians

By Edward O'Gorman

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra returned to Carnegie Hall last night bearing a gift. This was Vladimir Dukelsky's Cello Concerto, written in 1942 for Gregor Piatigorsky and not heard here until Mr. Piatigorsky played it with the Bostonians last night. It shared a program with Bach's D Major Suite and Brahms' Symphony No. 4.

The usual large Boston Symphony audience received the concerto with a generous show of enthusiasm, although the conversational vote-casting in the lobby between halves—if that indicates anything—consisted of about equal parts of yes and no. Some went so far as to say that bringing this concerto all the way from Boston was carrying a thing too far.

However, when a man of Mr. Piatigorsky's astuteness devotes an entire solo appearance to this concerto, I think it behooves us to suspect that there may be more to it than first meets the ear.

PIATIGORSKY

This isn't music that has the strength of form or the brightness of invention to compel very close attention, and I find that my recollections of it, after two hours, are already growing hazy. Rather dimly, I recall a spotty first movement, probably its weakest, a movement running to odd and sometimes novel effects; an aria of a second movement that rose at one point to a lyrical level that was tops for the entire concerto, and a final movement that had a lot of zip and promised to develop character but seemed to fall apart when the test came in the form of a coda for the whole business.

The concerto has its lyric moments, and these, I think, are its best moments. But in every case, when Mr. Piatigorsky broke into song on the A string, I had the feeling that Mr. Dukelsky was merely dropping back on that last and most dependable resort of composers for the cello: a vibrant, singing passage up where the cello sings best.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JAN 10 1946

The Bostonians

Piatigorsky Plays Concerto by Dukelsky (Vernon Duke)

By Francis D. Perkins

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, concert last night at Carnegie Hall. Soloist, Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist. The program:

Suite No. 3, in D major....................Bach
Violoncello Concerto ....Dukelsky
Symphony No. 4, in E minor..........Brahms

Three and a half years ago, Gregor Piatigorsky asked Vladimir Dukelsky to compose a cello concerto for him. The Russian-American composer finished the work just before he joined the Coast Guard, and orchestrated it later during occasional free moments. This work was first played in Boston by Mr. Piatigorsky and Dr. Koussevitzky's admirable orchestra last week, and introduced to New York last night by the same eminent participants.

Both in the concert field and on the Broadway stage, to which he contributes under his pseudonym of Vernon Duke, Mr. Dukelsky is known as a talented composer, and his new concerto has interest and appeal, although not in an unvarying degree. The cello part is sometimes interwoven with the orchestral ensemble, but the soloist has a liberal opportunity to display his technical deftness and nearly all the timbres and sonorities within the cello's compass. The composer also provides passages in which the cello and one or more other instruments are jointly in the foreground. Some of these proved effective, others less so.

The work, in three movements, takes a little under half an hour to play. The first movement seemed somewhat episodic, although its form is definite enough. The second movement, in which the cello sings in long lyric lines, is the most ingratiating of the three, if a trifle lengthy. The main theme of the finale is a brisk march, whose character is not unlike that of the finales of Shostakovitch's fifth and sixth symphonies. Here the cello has quite an athletic assignment. The themes themselves vary in cogency; melodiousness is not lacking; the harmonization has its pungencies, but is usually on the conservative side.

Mr. Piatigorsky's playing left nothing to be desired, and the orchestra provided well co-ordinated and expressive co-operation. The composer was called to the stage to share the applause.

The Bach suite, or overture, in D major, received a broadly conceived, sonorous performance, and the familiar air for strings was played with praiseworthy clarity. In what there was time to hear of Brahms's fourth symphony, much was played wit hnotable eloquence. the interpretation had its more routined moments. The merits of the orchestra itself were impressively disclosed.

[59]

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JAN 10 1946

BOSTON SYMPHONY OFFERS NEW WORK

Dukelsky 'Cello Concerto Given for First Time Here—Gregor Piatigorsky Is the Soloist

By OLIN DOWNES

A new 'cello concerto was given its New York première last night by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton in Carnegie Hall. ~~The~~ concerto was Vladimir Dukelsky's. The soloist was Gregor Piatigorsky.

A young composer complained to us once that when he had a score performed it had to "muscle in" on programs between famous masterpieces. He thought this unfair. But there does not seem to be a way out of it. The audiences are few that would willingly consent to programs consisting entirely of new and unknown works. They would reasonably decline to take the risk of an evening which might reveal material of interest and merit, and might produce nothing worth the journey to the concert hall.

Mr. Dukelsky's Concerto is not only thoughtfully, but elaborately composed, with considerable of dissonance into the bargain. Dr. Koussevitzky put it between two masterpieces of the established repertory—the Bach D major Suite, with the famous Air for the strings, and Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

These works, it is true, did not make it entirely easy for Mr. Dukelsky, especially as he does not cling to the beaten path in his difficult and brilliantly sounding score. This score requires virtuosity of a high order of the orchestra, and superior conducting, as well as temperament, technic and mettle on the part of the soloist.

The performance in itself was remarkable. Mr. Piatigorsky gave every indication of heartfelt interest in the work, which offered him problems and opportunities that might well challenge such a master of his instrument. He handled these problems in the most complete and authoritative manner. Technical feats were tossed off masterfully and treated as figuration accessory to the musical thought—not as mere display of virtuosity. In fact, there are no passages of superfluous display. Cadenzas and all, they are part of the musical structure. And Mr. Piatigorsky sang gloriously upon his instrument. The orchestra did equally well with a highly developed and profusely instrumentated score. The performance itself was a fascination. What of the music?

We liked most of the concerto, in spite of its gadgets. For there are genuine lyrical themes, gay themes in dance or march style, invention when the style is not forced or affected. But why all the gadgets? The arsenal of "modern" effects, harmonic, orchestral, rhythmic, is used, as if Mr. Dukelsky wanted to assure us that he had as many tricks up his sleeve as any of them and go just as far to left of center as anybody dared him to. The result is often brilliant and warmly colored, but sometimes artificial, and even, as of today, old-fashioned. The tricks were fresh a couple of decades ago, but they quickly stale and weaken what is genuine in the music.

Such, at least, is a first impression of the music, which has inherent vitality and interest, with many amusing pages and a weak slow movement.

For these reasons, and despite a performance in which soloist and conductor did everything that was for the good of the work, its composer was in rather a hard place among masterpieces. Of the performance of Bach the present reporter cannot speak, for he missed it. The reading of the Brahms symphony was the most virile and impassioned we have heard from Dr. Koussevitzky. It revealed anew the essential character of the music.

This is often forgotten, because of the lyrical opening and the autumnal melancholy that inhabits many pages. The symphony is then presented as an introspective and even pessimistic revery. But it is nothing of the kind. The rugged power and spaciousness of its plan; the special beauty that haunts the mind, of the Andante; the bearish scherzo, and the consummative series of final variations—these pertain not only to the poetical, but the heroic. They were emphasized in Dr. Koussevitzky's exceptionally powerful and architectural interpretation.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

JAN 10 1946

MUSIC

By Miles Kastendieck

Berglund Makes Debut at the Met; Koussevitzky Plays New Concerto

In Joel Berglund, the Swedish baritone who arrived in New York just a few days ago, the Metropolitan had a new Hans Sachs for the third performance of "Die Meistersinger" at the Opera House last night. He is a find, for there is quality in his voice, in his singing, and in his stage personality. His debut was an exhilarating one especially on the vocal side.

Of special interest in his first appearance was the ease with which he sang the upper notes of his role in the third act. It has been years since they came through so clear and so true in a performance. Furthermore, his diction was such as to make it possible to follow the words, an achievement in itself. He may not yet have acquired all the richness of character necessary to portray Hans Sachs at his best, but he caught the emotional impact of the first scene of the third act and created a definite atmosphere in his renunciation. It was a pleasure to hear him in the Quintet. This was a Hans Sachs to appreciate.

The performance as a whole moved along well, appropriately paced by George Szell. There were several shifts of cast because of indisposition. Karl Laufkoetter sang David commendably in place of John Garris. Emery Darcy and George Cehanovsky were recruited for minor roles. The Eva was Eleanor Steber, satisfactory but not outstanding. Charles Kullman gave a creditable portrayal of Beckmesser. Kerstin Thorborg filled the role of Magdalene adequately. Again the ensemble was the thing.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

JAN 12 1946

MUSIC

By Miles Kastendieck

Richard Burgin Conducts Bostonians In Concert at the Academy of Music

Richard Burgin and the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave a good concert at the Academy of Music last night. There was not the exhileration which performances of the works on this program can generate; there was no special lift to carry the audience through another month until the orchestra plays again. But there was good, solid musicianship on exhibition throughout the evening. And there was the Boston Symphony to hear, an orchestra which boasts few rivals.

Of course we are spoiled in Brooklyn. We expect Koussevitsky to conduct when there are only five concerts in a season anyhow, we experience a let-down if he does not appear. Everybody knows that conductors do make a difference.

Mr. Burgin worked hard; he worked conscientiously; he did a sincere job. Elevation of the spirit and a keen dramatic sense are not associated with his conducting, but honest, straightforward directing are. He kept the orchestra in hand and guided them intelligently. The players let him down now and again; it wasn't quite fair.

The program was good. It had something to satisfy every taste that was not too extreme. The opening Bach Overture (Suite) in D, containing the famous Air, is a grateful work. It was well played; the performance was not so very different from the Wednesday night concert in Carnegie Hall except for the need of sharpness of accent and of pointing up phrases. Ravel's "Pavane pour une Infante defunte" followed, a completet contrast in style and intent. It could have been played with more color and more artistry. Dukas' "Sorceror's Apprentice" completed the first part. Few fail to respond to its necromancy which stems first from the music, then from a performance. The musical tale was convincingly told; the orchestra was in excellent form.

Brahm's Second Symphony was the major work on the program. Its romanticism is expressive under all circumstances, for it is the essence of the music itself. There were times when Mr. Burgin appeared to be plodding through, when the orchestra didn't "give." For instance, the coda of the first movement calls for more spontaneity than this performance had; the cellos should sing with deeper tone in the Adagio. But the music flowed along smoothly, if somewhat calmly; the playing picked up in the Finale, achieved some spirit, and came through at the finish with some of the required brilliance. If not exactly inspired, the performance was faithful to Brahms. It commanded a great deal of respect even though it called for no cheers.

A capacity crowd of Brooklynites attended the concert.

Seated in Box I were Mrs. Edward C. Blum and her guests.

Mrs. Dean C. Osborne, hostess in Box 2, entertained former Supreme Court Justice Lewis L. Fawcett, Mrs. Theodore Frohne, Mr. and Mrs. Donald G. C. Sinclair, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Fawcett and Mrs. James Fawcett.

Box 3 was occupied by Mrs. Benjamin Prince and her guests: Dr. and Mrs. John Howland Lathrop, Dr. and Mrs. Miles Kastendieck, Dorothy Lawton and Mr. Leslie Hodgson.

Members of the Brooklyn Woman's Club were seated in Box 4: Mrs. Burgess Osterhout, president; Mrs. Thomas H. McClintock, Mrs. George Hills Iler, Mrs. Robert F. Ives, Mrs. Adolph L. Muller, Mrs. William E. Howes and Lois Pinney Clark.

Seated in Box 5 were Emma Jessie Ogg and Mrs. William B. Parker and the latter's guests: Mrs. George M. Wiles, Ella Taylor and Katherine F. Parker; Jessie Lockitt and her guest, Mrs. Henry V. Raymond.

Tickets for Box 7 were distributed to enlisted men and non-commissioned personnel of the navy This box was donated by the Brooklyn committee for the Boston Symphony Concerts, of which Mrs. Henry J. Davenport is chairman.

Tickets for Box 8 were donated by the institute to officers of the U. S. Army.

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
JOUR. OF COMM.

JAN 11 1946

RECORDS

Rachmaninoff 'Isle of the Dead'; Haydn 98th; Hindemith Chansons; Hot Hymning

By William Leonard

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra, one of the busiest recording organizations in the land ever since the Petrillo ban ended, adds another first-rate set to the Victor catalogue with its performance of Rachmaninoff's tone poem, "Isle of the Dead" (album DM-1024, three twelve-inch records). Inspired by Arnold Boecklin's romantic painting of the same title, and based on the mournful liturgical hymn, "Dies Irae," it is a brooding, melancholy work whose lack of great popularity may be attributable in part to the somber tone of its color.

Serge Koussevitzky's direction, a model of accuracy in tempo and consistency in phrasing, captures and reflects the tone poem's atmosphere admirably. The album is worthwhile not only for the merit of the Bostonians' performance, but because it constitutes a long overdue replacement for the now antiquated recording made by the Philadelphia Orchestra year ago.

"Isle of the Dead" fills the first five record sides; the sixth and final one holds Rachmaninoff's own orchestral arrangement of his song, "Vocalise."

* * *

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

JAN 11 1946

Postlude

Symphony In 3 Courses Real Delight

By Ray C. B. Brown

Sergei ~~Kussevitzki~~ conducts the Boston Orchestra on Thursday night in Constitution Hall. Program: Classical Symphony, Op. 25 (Prokofiev), Symphony No. 5, Op. 100 (Prokofiev), Symphony No. 2, Op. 43 (Sibelius).

There were no hors d'oeuvres or pastilles de menthe on the program of the Boston Orchestra last evening, but three solid courses of symphony, yet the crowded auditory in Constitution Hall assimilated them with a delighted avidity. It is probably because we hear this superb band so seldom that its superlative tonal quality comes as a fresh surprise each time. In the rehearsal room must be hidden the secret method by which Sergei Kussevitzki induces his musicians to produce whether from strings, woodwinds or brass those tones which are either so silkenly covered or so splendidly stark as to arouse continuous admiration.

Because of these polychromatic irradiations of tone, the two familiar works presented (Prokofiev's Classical Symphony and the D major Symphony of Sibelius) underwent subtle transformations that made them virtually new compositions. In the Prokofiev, the sudden shifts of key were not angular or saucy, the deceptive cadences seemed perfectly logical, and the leaping intervals in the melodies had a balletic grace. The reverse treatment to which Sibelius subjects his themes, introducing them as seemingly irrelevant fragments, building them up in what used to be called the development section, and dissecting them again in the recapitulation, came out so beautifully clear that there was no mistaking the patterns.

Prokofiev's fifth symphony proved to be a sterling and significant work, powerful in its impact, completely free from artifice for the sake of surprise, and thoroughly serious in intent. The composer is reported to have said that "it is a symphony about the spirit of man," and that is precisely the impression it leaves. It has moods of gayety and of anger, of protest and of acquiescence, and it is alive in every measure. It reveals an increasing lyricism in Prokofiev's style; the themes have a close cogency of thought, the lines are more plastic; and the tranquil passage for divided violoncelli and basses that opens the last movement is one of the loveliest in contemporary music.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JAN 11 1946

The Bostonians

Piatigorsky Plays Concerto by Dukelsky (Vernon Duke)

By Francis D. Perkins

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, concert Wednesday night at Carnegie Hall. Soloist, Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist. The program:

Suite No. 3, in D major..................Bach
Violoncello Concerto..................Dukelsky
Symphony No. 4, in E minor..........Brahms

Three and a half years ago Gregor Piatigorsky asked Vladimir Dukelsky to compose a cello concerto for him. The Russian-American composer finished the work just before he joined the Coast Guard, and orchestrated it later during occasional free moments. This work was first played in Boston by Mr. Piatigorsky and Dr. Koussevitzky's admirable orchestra last ~~week~~ and introduced to New York Wednesday night by the same eminent participants.

Both in the concert field and on the Broadway stage, to which he contributes under his pseudonym of Vernon Duke, Mr. Dukelsky is known as a talented composer, and his new concerto has interest and appeal, although not in an unvarying degree. The cello part is sometimes interwoven with the orchestral ensemble, but the soloist has a liberal opportunity to display his technical deftness and nearly all the timbres and sonorities within the cello's compass. The composer also provides passages in which the cello and one or more other instruments are jointly in the foreground. Some of these proved effective, others less so.

The work, in three movements, takes a little under half an hour to play. The first movement seemed somewhat episodic, although its form is definite enough. The second movement, in which the cello sings in long lyric lines, is the most ingratiating of the three, if a trifle lengthy. The main theme of the finale is a brisk march, whose character is not unlike that of the finales of Shostakovitch's fifth and sixth symphonies. Here the cello has quite an athletic assignment. The themes themselves vary in cogency; melodiousness is not lacking; the harmonization has its pungencies, but is usually on the conservative side.

Mr. Piatigorsky's playing left nothing to be desired, and the orchestra provided well co-ordinated and expressive co-operation. The composer was called to the stage to share the applause.

The Bach suite, or overture, in D major, received a broadly conceived, sonorous performance, and the familiar air for strings was played with praiseworthy clarity. In what there was time to hear of Brahms's fourth symphony, while much was played with notable eloquence, the interpretation had its more routined moments. The merits of the orchestra itself were impressively disclosed.

[60]

Review in Retrospect; Music in Brussels 1944-45

Jan 13

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

During the period that I was stationed in the Belgian capital, September, 1944, through September, 1945, I managed to sneak off to a number of concerts and operas. This number was not nearly so large as I could have wished, but it at least permitted me to have a bowing acquaintance with the musical season in Brussels during the first year of liberation. I doubt if the Belgians themselves would particularly like to have that season reviewed. They were not especially proud of it and resented that most of it had been planned under the last year of occupation. But it is not primarily with the intention of being critical that I propose to give an account of this season. Rather it is to show what can be done under circumstatnces which could hardly be considered favorable.

Remember that after the first joys of liberation the people were both cold and hungry. During most of the winter the electricity was shut off during the day, which meant that rehearsals could be held only with great difficulty. The main Brussels concert hall is built on the side of a hill and consists of several halls under one roof, but underground. It is actually a most convenient arrangement, this Salle des Beaux Arts, because you get Symphony Hall, Jordan Hall, a movie theater and several small recital halls all in one. They are modern, comfortable and, as far as I could judge, accoustically acceptable. Brussels is better equipped physically for concerts than any other city I can think of.

Both the Salle des Beaux Arts and the Royal Opera House, the Theatre de la Monnaie, managed to get heated throughout the season, though they never came up to our American turkish bath standards. How the musicians and singers got enough to eat, until the ration substantially improved in the spring, I shall never know. At any rate neither transport nor any other hardships ever really interfered with the season. And luckily, during the Ardennes Offensive, Brussels was almost completely spared the heavy V-bombing which did so much damage in Antwerp and Liege.

Besides the concert building I have described, Brussels has its famous Conservatory, complete with concert hall, and the ultra-modern building and auditorium of the Radio Nationale Belge. The English officer who took me there to hear the first Belgian performance of Shostakovitch's Leningrad Symphony told me that as a broadcasting building it knocks the spots out of the B. B. C.

The Brussels Philharmonic is the chief Belgian orchestra and is, to my way of thinking, a very good one. By comparison it was a little embarrassing when the British sent the Halle Orchestra of Manchester, under Barbirolli, to play for the troops in November, 1944. A number of Belgians were invited to hear it, their first music outside Europe in 5 years. I don't know what they thought, but my own view was that the British would have done far better to have engaged the Brussels Philharmonic to play for the army and to have sent the equivalent of the Halle's weight in potatoes.

Unfortunately, this orchestra suffers from its two regular conductors, Messrs. Weemaels and Fran Andre, who are not particularl inspired. Mr. Weemaels handle the Beethoven cycle which made u the backlog of the season, and am sorry to say he inevitably pu me to sleep until I stopped going t the series. Mr. Andre seems to me better. It was he who conducted the Shostakovitch and a very creditable performance of Stravinsky's Sacre du Printemps. But when Charles Munch came up from Paris and took over the orchestra the difference was positively electrifying. He led the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto, with a technically brilliant French girl, Nicole Henriot, as soloist, and roused the crowd to terrific enthusiasm. Of course, they had not heard any Tchaikovsky for a long time, but even so and to these more jaded ears the performance by the orchestra under this conductor was the nearest thing I heard to our own the whole time I was abroad.

The orchestral season was, on the whole, pretty conventional with the emphasis outside of Beethoven, on French and Russian music which had been forbidden. From the point of view of modern music the most interesting event was the visit of the French composer, Francis Poulenc, who played his own Piano Concerto. There was also a delightful series of chamber orchestra concerts of 18th century music. I have no space left to deal with opera and shall therefore devote another article to that topic later on. But I hope I have said enough to show that good music was by no means dead in liberated Belgium.

This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE

JAN 13 1946

RECORDED MUSIC

The sombre but rather luscious melancholy of Rachmaninoff's music reaches an apogee in ISLE OF THE DEAD, the tone poem based on Boecklin's painting of the same name. The Boston Symphony orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, gives it a richly poetic reading in Victor M-1024 ($3.68).

The recording is exceptional for orchestral texture, dark lyric mood beautifully sustained, and spacious reproduction. Odd side is devoted to Rachmaninoff's "Vocalise."

Herbert Janssen, baritone, backed by the Metropolitan Opera orchestra under Paul Breisach, sings two "Tannhaeuser" excerpts — WOLFRAM'S ENTRY and O DU MEIN HOLDER ABENDSTERN—in fine Wagnerian style, with the voice wholly unforced and giving the music tenderness and dignity (Columbia 71697, $1.05).

Drive and buoyancy characterize SYMPHONY NO. 98 in B FLAT (Haydn), played by NBC Symphony orchestra under Arturo Toscanini (Victor M-1025, $4.73). This is one of the so-called London symphonies of Haydn, a work of great breadth and vitality in musical ideas, and given typical Toscaninian sharpness of focus and impact.

—J. K. S.

This Clipping From
TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD

JAN 13 1946

Off the Records

Rachmaninoff: "Isle of the Dead" played by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting. Three 12-inch records, Victor Album DM 1024, $3..50.

Probably no composition of Rachmaninoff's is more Russian in flavor than his somber tone poem, "Isle of the Dead," suggested by Arnold Boecklin's painting. A listener familiar with Russian music, but not with this particular number, might well wonder whether a hitherto unknown Tchaikowsky had been discovered.

And yet, if he listened well, he would know that it could not be Tchaikowsky after all, but someone more recent, someone to whom the principles of Impressionism were, though not a fetich, certainly not unknown.

Doctor Koussevitsky is one of the finest interpreters of Russian music. He and the Boston Symphony fairly outdo themselves in capturing the haunting moods of sorrow and quiet hopelessness which permeate the work.

The previous recording, conducted by the composer, was made a good many years ago, before the mechanics of musical recording had reached their present excellence. This recording is much superior mechanically, and at least musically, to its predecessor. It is a beautiful thing, an expression of quiet sadness and dignity, free from hysterical grief.

The sixth side is devoted to the same composer's "Vocalize." Originally planned for voice, its subdued melody lends itself well to orchestral rendition.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JAN 13 1946

RECENT RECORDS

By JEROME D. BOHM

VICTOR'S January list includes Rachmaninoff's "Isle of the Dead," performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, ~~and Leonard~~ Bernstein's "Jeremiah" Symphony, played by the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra conducted by the composer, with Nan Merriman as mezzo-soprano soloist. The reason this reviewer has for pairing these works for discussion is that they were both penned when their composers were twenty-four years old, and reveal how differently young romanticists express themselves nowadays than they did in the early years of this century. For the composer of "Jeremiah" is at heart, at least in this symphony, as much of a romanticist as was the late Sergei Rachmaninoff.

Both composers write with their emotions at the seething point, but the musical language of Rachmaninoff is similar to that utilized by Tchaikovsky, the dark sumptuous orchestration being part and parcel of its ideational connotation. Mr. Bernstein, living in the world of Stravinsky and Milhaud, has discarded the tonal gorgeousness considered by the neo-romantic school as being essential to expressivity, and his musical speech is more concise, less sensuous than that of his predecessor's, but none the less a telling medium for the conveyance of his message.

This writer is not an admirer of Rachmaninoff's works in the larger forms. But "The Isle of the Dead" is probably his finest contribution to symphonic literature. The utilization of the "Dies Irae" as one of its principal themes is in part responsible for the absence of the sentimentality which was to devitalize most of the Russian composer's later extended products, and structurally, too, this tone-poem, inspired by Boecklin's painting "Toteninsel," is more expertly fashioned than the later, longer symphonies.

Both works are arrestingly interpreted, Mr. Koussevitzky making the most of the opportunities provided for eloquence by Rachmaninoff and Mr. Bernstein, as was to be expected, discoursing his symphony authoritatively, with felicitous aid from Miss Merriman in the final "Lamentation" movement, which the young mezzo-soprano sings understandingly with firm, richly vibrant tones. The recording of the "Isle of the Dead" is a smoother one than that accorded "Jeremiah," in which the surfaces are more than a little crackly.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JAN 13

The Bostonians

Concert Here Features the Capriccio of Stravinsky

By Jerome D. Bohm

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, concert in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon. Assisting pianist, Jesus Maria Sanroma. The program:

Prelude to "Khovantchina"	Moussorgsky
"Romeo and Juliet," Suite No. 2	Prokofief
Capriccio	Stravinsky
Symphony No. 5	Sibelius

This reviewer derived the greatest pleasure at yesterday afternoon's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall from the delightful Capriccio of Stravinsky, which aside from the short, atmospheric Prelude from Moussorgsky's "Khovantchina," was the only really worthwhile music on Mr. Koussevitzky's program. The captivating ideas and rhythmic subtleties of Stravinsky's Capriccio were tellingly unfolded, Mr. Sanroma giving a technically adroit, tonally pithy account of the piano part, and Mr. Koussevitzky and his superb orchestra supplying an alert, flawlessly proportioned accompaniment.

Far less musically satisfying was Prokofieff's Second Suite from his ballet, "Romeo and Juliet." After the menacingly impressive opening measure to the first movement, "Montagues and Capulets," the composer's inspiration deserts him and he has penned some of his most unrelievedly banal pages, the triteness persisting throughout the "Juliet, the Maiden" and dance movements, the tears shed by "Romeo by Juliet's Grave" being strictly of the crocodile variety. Mr. Koussevitzky, who seems to have a genuine affection for this suite, elicited some entrancing sound effects from his musicians, but this music remains one of Prokofieff's weakest products.

However, even second-best Prokofieff is preferable to the inflated neo-romanticism of Sibelius's Fifth Symphony, in which the Finnish composer attempts to erect a structure of Himalayan heights from a mole-hill of ideational material. It is hardly necessary now to point out that Sibelius is an epigonous composer, his subject matter stemming from masters as widely divergent as Tchaikovsky and Wagner; for, although Sibelius has made no secret of his dislike of the composer of "Meistersinger," he has not hesitated to pilfer half of the theme which opens the prelude to that opera and to belabor it ineffectually in the finale of this symphony. The performance was as fine as the most ardent Sibelius devotee could have desired, Mr. Koussevitzky and his musicians investing the pretentious score with unfailing tonal sumptuousness.

This Clipping From
YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO
VINDICATOR

JAN 13 1946

Koussevitzky, Bostonians Play In "Isle of the Dead" Album

By Col. L. R. Boals

On the walls of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York, hangs an example of 19th Century German romanticism, Arnold Boecklin's gloomy imaginary landscape, "Isle of the Dead." A reproduction of this picture so captured the imagination of Sergie Rachmaninoff that in 1907, while he was living in Dresden, he composed the tone-poem of the same name.

This work, reputed to be one of Rachmaninoff's finest, has been recorded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Koussevitzky, in Victor's Masterpiece Album DM-1024, containing three 12-inch disks. In the early days of electric recording, the Philadelphia Orchestra recorded "Isle of the Dead" in Victor's album M-75, the composer conducting. The new recording has the advantage of years of improved technique in engineering, and the magnificent Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky gives the work a masterful performance. Incidentally, the first American performance of "Isle of the Dead" was given by the Bostonians in 1909.

Rachmaninoff had this to say regarding his composition: "My composing goes slowly. I go for a long walk in the country. My eye catches the sharp sparks of light on fresh foliage after showers; my ears the rustling undertone of the woods. Or I watch the pale tints of the sky over the horizon after sundown, and they come; all voices at once. Not a bit here, a bit there. All. The whole grows. So 'Toteninsel'. It was all done in April and May. When it came, how it began; how can I say? It came up within me, was entertained, written down . . ."

The symphonic tone poem is based in part on the "Dies Trae," the liturgical hymn which celebrates the Last Judgment. It is a striking example of the brooding but always poetic genius of Rachmaninoff. On the sixth side is Rachmaninoff's orchestration of his Vocalise, Op. 34, No. 14.

On the cover is a reproduction of Boecklin's painting "Isle of the Dead."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JAN 13 1946

SANROMA IS SOLOIST WITH THE BOSTONIANS

A performance of the Stravinsky Capriccio for Orchestra, with Jesús Maria Sanromá, as piano soloist, was presented in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Other works heard were the overture to Moussorgsky's "Khovanstchina," Prokofieff's "Romeo and Juliet" Suite, No. 2, and Sibelius' Fifth Symphony.

It is always pleasant to hear the Stravinsky work, and especially when skillfully performed as it was yesterday by Mr. Sanromá and the orchestra. With the exception of his very early "Firebird" and "Petrouchka" music, it is one of Stravinsky's most readily accessible works, and rarely fails to please an audience. The last movement is particularly engaging, with gay and tricky rhythmic patterns and sophisticated instrumentation.

There are great problems in programming this work, since its small orchestra and intimate scope do not blend well with the more robust dimensions—both emotional and instrumental—of most of today's orchestral repertoire. Thus, the juxtaposition of the Capriccio with the rather extravagant Prokofieff Suite made it seem a little pale and ineffective, especially since Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra took full advantage of the breadth of the Prokofieff score.

A consistent champion of Sibelius' music, Dr. Koussevitzky always manages to wrest great dramatic impact from the Finnish composer's symphonies, and yesterday's reading of the Fifth was no exception. It was a stunning performance in every respect, and the powerful climax of the last movement, led by the brasses, brought the concert to a rousing close.

M. A. S.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

JAN 13 1946

Rachmaninoff Fund To Stage Concert

For the first time in New York's musical history Conductor Serge Koussevitsky, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Pianist Vladimir Horowitz will appear together on a New York concert platform. On Feb. 12, the two artists and the orchestra will collaborate in a benefit concert to be held at Carnegie Hall on behalf of the Rachmaninoff Fund, Inc., which recently initiated a nationwide contest to discover America's most talented young pianist.

This will be one of the few benefit performances which the Boston Symphony has given here during its many years as a visiting orchestra. It will also be the first time in many years that the general public has had an opportunity to buy tickets for a concert by this orchestra since each year the house is entirely sold out by subscription many weeks in advance of the opening of the season.

Both Mr. Horowitz and Dr. Koussevitzky took a leading part in the founding of the Rachmaninoff Fund a year and a half ago and are active in the promotion of its program to discover and develop outstanding young American musicians. Mr. Horowitz, who was a close personal friend of the famous pianist, conductor and composer, is president of the organization and Dr. Koussevitzky is chairman of the artists' advisory committee of 60 outstanding musicians.

Art—Music—Theater THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, BOSTON, THURSDAY, JANUARY 17

Preview of a Guest Conductor—Blake Drawings

Sir Adrian Boult Discusses Some Works He Will Present

By Winthrop P. Tryon

"We can't give an orchestral concert in London but it is sold out, no matter how big the hall," said Sir Adrian Boult, who is conducting the Boston Symphony for a short winter term in place of Dr. Koussevitzky. "We kept going through the war, too, though on a reduced plan of manpower. The British Broadcasting Corporation Orchestra, for example, which had 120 men before the war, shrank to 90 at once, when the 30 youngest went. It still numbers 90, though only 49 of the original membership remain.

"Is English composing active? Yes, indeed; and not staying in the past either. The D major Symphony of Vaughan Williams is something prophetic. It looks ahead to what the world will be. The music, I regret to say, is not in shape to be carried around. It is in manuscript and is being printed now, though tardily. I wish I could have brought it with me."

* * *

If Sir Adrian cannot make his Boston audiences acquainted with the Vaughan Williams of today, or of tomorrow, as he prefers to say, he can give them a brushing up on the Vaughan Williams of yesterday in a work dating back some dozen years, yet new to Boston—the "Job" Masque for Dancing, based on the pictures of William Blake. "Job," consisting of nine orchestral scenes, is down on the programs of Jan. 25 and 26, and it will be the most like an important novelty, doubtless, of anything he will bring to Bostonian notice.

It may not be the British work, however, of chief distinction and acclaim that he carries in his present portfolio. That will perhaps be "The Planets" of Holst, down on the programs of Feb. 1 and 2. He is performing all seven of the pieces, moreover, that comprise the Suite, if that is how it should be denominated. "System" might be a fair inclusive term for them, comprising Mars, Venus, Mercury, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, and Neptune.

* * *

As for the week at hand, concerts of tomorrow afternoon and Saturday evening, Sir Adrian is submitting to the attention of the Boston Symphony subscribers a couple of small works—one a two-year-old effort of the British composer, Anthony Collins, entitled "A Threnody for a Soldier Killed in Action"; and besides that, a piece which Sir Adrian said had been much performed before British audiences—late, however, getting heard in Boston. This is John Ireland's "The Forgotten Rite," dating just after World War I. There exists a well-remembered "Rite of Spring," by Stravinsky, dating immediately before that war. "Rite," it may be recalled, was something of a word back there in its decade.

Regarding the Threnody, it is a score of but 15 pages, which must mean, though in general it is an Andante, but a brief time for performance. In sentiment, it would seem to be much on the brooding, possibly mystic, order, as though the composer were following in the footsteps of Delius. There seem to be a number of instrumental effects that emphasize the mood of solemnity and that sustain the feeling of lament. It may prove on hearing to be a succession of sobs and outcries, rather than a continuous communication. Possibly music had as well be that way once in a while, instead of always being in some so-called form, with theme, counter-theme, development, and summary.

On the matter of "The Forgotten Rite," John Ireland, its composer, always speaks with a purpose; and as a rule some original touch or other may be expected, whether the work be chamber music or something symphonic. There open out in the score 19 pages of lucid orchestration and along toward the close come a couple of distant and faraway momentary melodies for clarinet and for French horn. Both should be impressive, and that for the horn might be so memorable as to establish the piece in the repertory. The sound (as it reads) is unusual and is far over on the poetical side. You hear the same voice, or one like it, in the modulations and cadences of the stanzas of Edmund Spenser's "Faërie Queene" now and then. You hardly need to be told that you are listening to music of English descent.

Harold Stein

Sir Adrian Boult

Guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra

'Job' Exhibits In Connection With Concerts

A special exhibition in the Symphony Hall Gallery will serve for the next 10 days as an accessory to the concerts of the week end of Jan. 25-26. Sir Adrian Boult, guest conductor, includes in that program "Job: A Masque for Dancing," by Ralph Vaughan Williams. The score was designed for a stage presentation of nine of William Blake's Illustrations of the Book of Job.

The exhibition consists of the collotype reproductions of Blake's preparatory drawings for the engraved illustrations. They were selected from the two original sets of drawings and published in 1935.

Boston and Cambridge are rich in original Blake material. These reproductions catch fairly authentically the pallid tints of the water colors. But the strength of Blake is in his drawing and his decoration, which come through satisfactorily in reproduction.

These pictorial descriptions of the Biblical texts are among the masterpieces of illustration. Laurence Binyon considered them the "greatest work in original line engraving that modern Europe has produced since the sixteenth century." They were made when the poet-artist was 70. They seem a distillation of the essence of his rich inner life and trying outer experience. Grace, and love, and suffering are expressed not alone with refinement and subtlety but with epic exaltation, "in full compass," as Binyon put it, "of his orchestral nature."

Blake showed outward resemblance to some of his contemporaries: In some respects he derived ideas from Michelangelo. But his was an art of faith. Conceits and mannerisms prevalent among his contemporaries were unknown to him. The pictures are stirring for their deep honesty, purity, love. They are compounded from symbols and the dramatic communication of the struggle between the material or evil and the spiritual or good. The water color, "Great and Marvelous Are Thy Works, Lord," is as touching a picture of exultation as has been made in the history of art. That Blake entrusted to music and musical instruments the proper expression of praise is amply demonstrated here.

There are other musical features in the drawings. There is something of musical rhythm, musical sequence, musical contrast of mood. These pictures address themselves, as music does, directly to feeling. D. A.

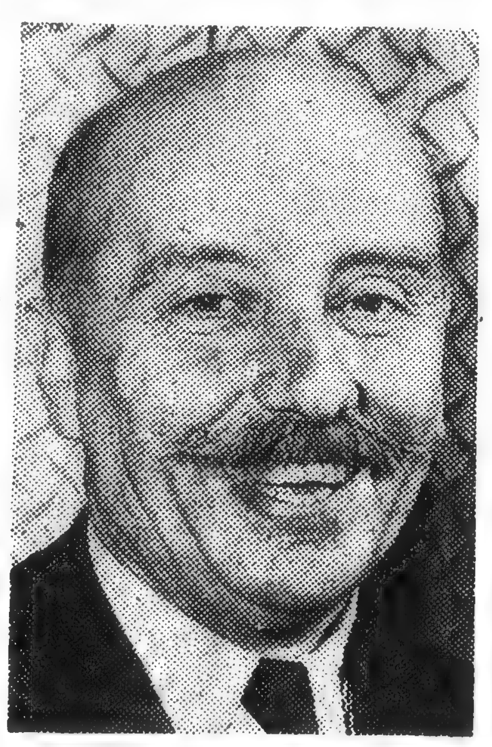
Sir Adrian Boult in Boston to Lead Symphony 3 Weeks

By CYRUS DURGIN

Sir Adrian Boult is here again as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He will spend three weeks on the stand at Symphony Hall during the usual Winter vacation of its regular occupant, Serge Koussevitzky.

The distinguished conductor of London's BBC Orchestra is the same ruddy and hearty English gentleman he was when he last appeared in Boston, in 1935. Over those 11 intervening years he has become somewhat balder and grayer, but his figure is just as athletic as ever and he is just as amiable.

He was here privately as a guest of Harvard's eminent Dr. Archibald T. Davison in 1939. Since that last visit the Summer World War II began, Sir Adrian has seen his orchestra through the difficult war years in England.



SIR ADRIAN BOULT

"Just as soon as hostilities began, we of the BBC immediately left London for Bristol, according to the plan which had been arranged. We stayed two years in Bristol and then had to pack off to a little town called Bedford. There we stayed for four years. We got back to London just last September.

"In 1939 there were 120 members of the BBC Orchestra. It had been arranged that the 30 youngest would go into the service as soon as needed. That got us down to 90 and eventually some of the 90 volunteered for military duty. Now we are back to 90 again and as soon as we can we shall return to the original number of 120. Today we have 10 women in the orchestra. Before the war there were about 15, so, you see, the war didn't make much difference to us in that respect.

"We lost a few men. One of our double-basses, for example, went home just after a broadcast concert one night, and within an hour was killed by a bomb. Our leader (concertmaster in American usage) was tossed off his bicycle into a field one afternoon when a bomb landed too near the country road he was riding down. Another man had a narrow escape when the war garden he tended faithfully was obliterated. It just happened that he wasn't there."

Sir Adrian will give first American performances this week to a Threnody for a "Soldier Killed in Action." The music was sketched by Michael Heming, a talented young English student who was killed at the age of 22 in the battle of El Alamein in 1942. The score has been orchestrated and put together by a composer named Anthony Collins.

"England fortunately lost only a few of her talented and prominent musicians in the war," said Sir Adrian. One was Walter Leigh, a gifted composer. Rudolf Dolmetsch was another. He was one of the best harpsichord players in the country, and the son of Arnold Dolmtesch, the famous authority on old music and instruments.

Played for Fighting Men

"The leading young English composers today probably are Benjamin Britten and Alan Rawsthorne. I believe you know some of Britten's music in Boston. Rawsthorne is about 40, a few years older than Britten. Rawsthorne has done a very clever Piano Concerto and a couple of other symphonic pieces which I haven't seen.

"Rawsthorne was bombed out during the blitz and some of his manuscripts were lost. I said to him: 'You probably can remember enough of those compositions to write them down again, can't you?' He gave me a very good answer when he replied: 'Yes, but I think I might better spend the time writing newer and better music.' "

Sir Adrian and the BBC gave concerts for various military units, spending a week with the British fleet at Portsmouth, a week with the American Army at Shrewsbury, one with the British Army at Aldershot and two weeks with the air forces in Wales. He had an amusing encounter with an officer who said he was married to the granddaughter of a conductor who, years ago, had been world famous.

"After a concert, headquarters gave us all an excellent dinner. I noticed one particular officer who seemed to be in charge. I thanked him for the meal and he told me that his wife was the granddaughter of this famous conductor. He asked me, very sincerely: 'Can you tell me, sir, was he really good?' "

This Clipping From
BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

[illegible] 3 1946

SIR ADRIAN BOULT, conductor in chief of the British Broadcasting Corporation, is in this country as principal guest conductor during the mid-season vacation of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony.

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE

BBC Conductor In U. S.

Sir Adrian Boult, conductor in chief of the British Broadcasting Corporation, is in this country as principal guest conductor during the mid-season vacation of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JAN 13 1946

Boult Guest Leader With the Bostonians

B. B. C. Conductor to Present Several British Works

Sir Adrian Boult, conductor in chief of the British Broadcasting Corporation, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in twelve concerts, beginning with next Wednesday night in Cambridge and Friday afternoon and Saturday night in Boston's Symphony Hall. He will not conduct in New York during this visit, but the Saturday night concerts of Jan. 19 and 26 and Feb. 2 will be broadcast from 9:30 to 10:30.

One of the works in the broadcast portion of next Saturday's program, in addition to Brahms's first symphony, is "A Threnody for a Soldier Killed in Action," which Anthony Collins has constructed from fragments left by Michael Heming, who was killed in action at El Alamein in 1942 at the age of twenty-two. He was the son of the noted English barytone, Percy Heming. The first of the concert includes the first Boston performance of John Ireland's "A Forgotten Rite" and Elgar's "Enigma" Variations.

The Boston program of Jan. 25-26 begins with William Walton's overture, "Scapino," new to Boston, and Haydn's eighty-sixth Symphony. The radio audience will hear Leslie Woodgate's arrangement of a Trumpet Tune and Air by Purcell and Vaughan Williams's "Job, a Masque for Dancing."

Art—Music—Theater THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR,

Sir Adrian Boult as Guest in Boston-

English Novelties Offered By Distinguished Visitor

By L. A. Sloper

Sir Adrian Boult is the distinguished guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the last three weeks of January. He is no stranger to the town, for he was here in the same capacity 11 years ago, and his return is very welcome. He was received with the greatest cordiality at his first Symphony Hall concert, on Jan. 18.

As before, he appeared, and quite properly, as an ambassador of musical good will between the two largest English-speaking nations. In this capacity, he gave the first Boston performances of two contemporary English works, and revived Elgar's "Enigma" Variations. The novelties were John Ireland's Prelude, "The Forgotten Rite," and Anthony Collins' "Threnody for a Soldier Killed in Action." Brahms' First Symphony completed the program.

The British style in music, like the British foreign policy, is notable for its continuity. It is representative of the fine traits of the British character. It has a strong foundation, warmth with reserve, a controlled sentiment, a dignified lyricism, an Apollonian restraint. It does not lend itself readily to passionate expression, but it has sturdiness, charm, and a genuine emotional content without extravagance.

* * *

Consider, for example, the contrast between the "Rite" of John Ireland and that of Stravinsky. The Russian assails the ear with horrendous sounds and with violent rhythms. Although the Englishman is writing about the same subject, his form is simple, his melodic line pure, his harmonic scheme conservative, his dynamics gentle. Regarded superficially, his score looks pale and even bloodless beside the noisy "Sacre." Edwin Evans was right when he said that Ireland lacks showmanship—a quality that no one will deny Stravinsky has.

But music does not consist of size and noise alone. For a listener with an ear attuned to the subtler beauties of the art, this score of Ireland's will have a strong appeal. Instead of frenzy, it evokes nostalgia, instead of violence, reflection. In the absence of any first-hand testimony about prehistoric times, we may perhaps assume that Stravinsky's record is the more realistic, so far as concerns the upheavals of nature and the delirium of primitive man. But there was something above the beast in man's nature, and Ireland has captured and revealed this human aspiration in exquisite form. This music will never cause rioting, but I think it has a good chance of survival, at least in the land of Purcell, Byrd and Morley.

* * *

Collins' "Threnody" is based on musical sketches left by Michael Heming, killed in action at El Alamein. A legend has already grown up about what happened. As the program book tells us, the fragments were shown by Michael Heming's father to John Barbirolli, who sent them to Mr. Collins, an orchestral player and conductor. Mr. Collins, however, was in the United States, in fact in Hollywood, writing for the films, and this score was first played over the radio, and its history described on the air in a "March of Time" sequence.

This background may perhaps explain why the music lacks conviction. It sounds like the score of an orchestral musician whose memory is naturally filled with relative material, but who has not had the creative imagination to use the material to valid artistic purpose. This is technical manufacture without inspiration, and therefore it cannot communicate the grief or the hope inherent in the subject matter.

* * *

Elgar's "Enigma" Variations are regarded by many people in America as his best work. Certainly they have the Englishness that one expects of him. Those who do not know the subjects of his sketches can hardly appreciate the characterization, but fortunately for us the music is interesting as music. It is lyrical, it is humorous, and it is brilliantly orchestrated. Sir Adrian played it con amore.

On his previous visit Sir Adrian gave us the most delightfully songful performance of the Schubert C major Symphony that I have ever heard. With Brahms he was less successful. He was straightforward, competent, faithful to the letter of the score; and the result, except for the last half of the last movement when everything seemed to wake up, was dull. The interpretation was literal, and the director failed to penetrate below the surface of the score.

This Clipping From
ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES

JAN 13 1946

SIR ADRIAN BOULT, leading conductor of Great Britain, takes over the podium of the "Boston Symphony Orchestra" for the ensemble's Saturday, January 19, concert over station WSLS. Sir Adrian, just arrived in this country, is resuming an association which brought him here just 10 years ago and for the same purpose.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky invited the British maestro to preside over a series of concerts with the Boston Symphony. Three of these will be broadcast over station WSLS on successive weeks.

E BOSTON DAILY GLOBE—

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

By CYRUS DURGIN

Sir Adrian Boult introduced three English scores to this city at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall yesterday afternon. They are William Walton's Comedy Overture, "Scapino," a Trumpet Tune and Air of Henry Purcell as orchestrated by Leslie Woodgate and Vaughan Williams' "Job: A Masque for Dancing." Haydn's D major Symphony, No. 86, completed the program.

In general it must be confessed that this list offered more in prospect that it gave in actual performance. Somehow, the afternoon was dullish apart from Walton's turbulent and engrossing Overture. The orchestral tone oftentimes was dry.

While Sir Adrian's conducting exhibited its usual precise care and good taste, there was little in the way of high feeling or excitement. The Haydn Symphony, one of the Paris series, went very clearly and in admirable style, but here as elsewhere the performance was such as to make you listen analytically rather than be moved emotionally.

"Job: A Masque for Dancing," is a sort of allegorical ballet, composed in 1930. It is an earnest and well-wrought score whose delineative ideas were founded on the engravings that William Blake made as illustrations for the Old Testament Book of Job. It is, consequently, music of the theatre and yet music of faith and affirmation.

In a way, the "Job" music shows a somewhat different side of Williams than you find in the "London" or "Pastoral" symphonies or in the Thomas Tallis Fantasia. It meanders a good deal, the texture is alternately smooth and bristly with the penetrating harmonic effects derived from sophisticated counterpoint. And yet in its consistent use of modal cadences and other archaic effects, the "Job" music is unmistakably in the familiar manner of earlier scores by Vaughan Williams.

I suspect that "Job" would be much more effective with stage spectacle than it is as pure concert music. The score by itself seems long and diffuse and too much of the same thing. There are, nevertheless, memorable pages, such as Satan's ascent of God's Throne, the serene naivete of the Pavane of the Sons of the Morning and the contemplative epilogue.

As for Purcell's Trumpet Tune and Air—whose solo was excellently played by Georges Mager—it is amazing. Leslie Woodgate, choral director for the B. B. C., laid violent hands upon a pair of innocent harpsichord pieces, togged them out in full orchestral dress, with organ added for extra measure, and set them adrift in the world. In this version they sound like a long fanfare for the opening of Parliament or a processional to Westminster Abbey.

SIR ADRIAN BOULT

Conducting Boston Symphony Orchestra

Distinguished Englishman Wins Favor

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

THE answer is, of course, that they have been at it for centuries, but it occasionally seems very odd that the English can be so self-sufficient musically while we import, or have imported, most of our conductors and a large proportion of our orchestral players. Not only does England get along very well with the home-grown product, it is also in a position to export it.

Consider the English conductors who have been here with recent years: Sir Thomas Beecham, the late Sir Henry Wood, the Irish-born Sir Hamilton Harty, also deceased, John Barbirolli and Sir Adrian Boult of the BBC orchestra, now officiating at Symphony Hall. Yet another Britisher, Dr. Malcolm Sargent, has been in New York this season as one of the conductors of the NBC symphony.

Well, Rome wasn't made in a day, and we are making progress in that direction. Karl Krueger, Howard Barlow, Ernst Hoffman, Leonard Bernstein and Werner Janssen have all made their mark and there are new men coming along all the time. We even have as much claim on Stokowski as does England, since he began his sensational career after he had become established in this country.

Of these Englishmen, we of Boston know best Sir Thomas Beecham, since we have heard him both in concert and in opera. Nevertheless, he conducted only one pair of Symphony concerts, and the same is true of Henry Wood, while Harty made his sole local appearance at the Pops. Sir Adrian conducted two pairs of concerts when he was here in 1935 and now he is doing three.

* * *

No mere specialist in British music is Sir Adrian. We gratefully recall his performance of the Schubert C major Symphony, 11 years ago. At the concerts of last week he gave us the C minor Symphony of Brahms, a performance, however, that had not been heard at the time these comments were set down.

Speaking of Boult and Brahms, this department was the recipient not long ago of a handsome brochure entitled "Music in Our Town" (The Story of a Civic Hall). The author is L. B. Duckworth and the "town," Wolverhampton. In the chapter "Some Conductors" there occurs the following: "'Reliable' is the adjective which comes first into my mind when I think of Boult. One does not expect electrifying performances from orchestras he conducts, but one can safely anticipate sound ones, as faithful to the composer's intentions as he can make them, according to his lights. I hate speaking or writing of So-and-So's Beethoveen or Such-and-Such's Wagner, but one may, without lauding the conductor at the expense of the composer, speak and write of Boult's Brahms, for he must rank among the world's best interpreters of that composer's works. Boult, if I may say so without disrespect, is somewhat stolidly English as Brahms was somewhat stolidly German, and the temperamental affinity between them seems to serve to bring out the best in the music."

* * *

Last week Sir Adrian's English pieces were John Ireland's "The Forgotten Rite," Michael Heming's "Threnody for a Soldier Killed in Action," fragments left by a 22-year-old composer killed at El Alamein, put together by Anthony Collins, and the "Enigma" Variations of Elgar. Sir Adrian admitted in conversation that he had wished to revive Elgar's Overture, "In the South," but Dr. Koussevitzky wanted the "Enigma." This week we are to hear three novelties, one of them ancient: Walton's Comedy Overture "Scapino," a Trumpet Tune and Air by Purcell, arranged by Leslie Woodgate, and "Job: a Masque for Dancing," after William Blake, by Vaughan Williams. Next week will come another novelty, Bax' "Tintagel" and Holst's "The Planets," last conducted here by the composer himself. The remaining number on the program for Friday and Saturday is Haydn's Symphony, No. 86. Next Sunday afternoon Sir Adrian will repeat the Purcell, Ireland, Elgar and Brahms items.

* * *

There is a certain timeliness in the performance of Purcell's music. This master, who worthily carriel on the traditions of Oddington and Dunstable, of Taverner and Tallis and the great Elizabethans, died 250 years ago last November. Legend has it that his wife, disapproving of her husband's nocturnal activities, locked him out and he thereby contracted the cold that finished him. It has been objected that the texts of many of his occasional pieces were unworthy of the music which he put to them. There are also choral works that are satisfactory from every point of view, with which we should be better acquainted. No composer has ever excelled him in setting English words to music. Consider such a familiar example of his art as the noble air, "When I am Laid in Earth" from "Dido and Aeneas." We should know more of his chamber music than we do, and it is chiefly in the form of adaptations and arrangements that we hear him at orchestral concerts. His influence upon Handel was enormous and we are constantly amazed at his modernity. Benjamin Britten, an outstanding figure in present-day England, justly speaks of "his unfettered rhythms, his boldly discordant harmonies, his long, soaring melodies."

* * *

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
TIMES

JAN 13 1946

ADRIAN BOULT IN U. S. TO CONDUCT SYMPHONY

Sir Adrian Boult, celebrated British conductor and conductor-in-chief of British Broadcasting corporation, arrived in the U. S. this month from England to serve as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Sir Adrian will conduct the ~~programs of the~~ ensemble over station WSUN and ABC on Jan. 19 and 26, and Feb. 2, in the weekly Saturday series heard at 9:30 p.m.

This is the first time in 10 years that Sir Adrian has appeared with the Boston Symphony, his last visit to the country also having been made to serve as guest leader of the ensemble.

THE BOSTON HERALD, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 16, 1946

SIR ADRIAN HOPED TO BUY A SHIRT

By RUDOLPH ELIE, Jr.

Sir Adrian Boult bears such a close resemblance to Col. Blimp it is a little startling. He's much slimmer, much taller and a good deal handsomer, but he has the same prominent British nose, the same fierce mustachios, and the same sort of chin.

He's here, as you've doubtless heard, to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the next three weeks while Dr. Koussevitzky takes his mid-winter vacation at Southern Pines, but he doesn't think much about that. As conductor of the famed British Broadcasting Symphony Orchestra, and one of the top 10 orchestral leaders of the day, stepping onto the conductor's stand of the Boston orchestra doesn't feaze him very much. What worries him is that he thought he'd be able to get some white shirts in America, and he can't find a single one.

DIFFICULT TO FIT

"I have a rather long neck, you know," he said, "and it is the dickens and all to be properly fitted. It is, in fact," he added glumly, "the dickens and all to be fitted at all in England. Ah, well, the shops here are so filled with everything I'll enjoy scouting around even if I can't get a white shirt."

He said the abundance of food in America is terribly disconcerting after the bleak diet he's used to in England. "It's a nightmare to go down for dinner," he said, laughing. "I get bilious merely contemplating all the rich food; if I don't look out I shall gain a pound a day."

He told us things were pretty bad in England, and getting worse. "You simply wouldn't know the war was over and done with," he said, with that good-humored imperturbability so characteristic of the British understating their difficulties. "It wouldn't really be decent for us to dine better now than we did during the war, you know," he added. "We couldn't enjoy our food properly knowing the folks in Europe are starving."

Sir Adrian came over on the Queen Mary with the 82d Airborne Division. There were about 80 civilian passengers on board the liner, too.

"Before we got accommodations they came around with a form we had to sign," the British conductor said, "agreeing not to make a row if we didn't like our food or quarters. I was delighted with both. We had two meals a day and I had great sport watching the troops playing cards and dice. Poor fellers, they were so crowded in they had to take turns sleeping, but they loved it. They were going home."

ONE OF WORLD'S FINEST

Sir Adrian's BBC orchestra, long considered one of the finest symphony orchestras in the world, had its ups and downs during the war but struggled along somehow and never missed a concert. After the blitz it moved out of London to Bristol, from which base of operations it traveled throughout the country giving concerts to American, British and Canadian troops, as well as hundreds of "luncheon" concerts for war workers.

"We had 120 musicians on Sept. 1, 1939," Sir Adrian said. "A week later we had lost 40 to the army. But we managed somehow to maintain an orchestra of about 90 people, and now we're getting some of our old people back. We lost a good many, even amongst those who stayed behind, but it could have been worse, I suppose."

As a matter of fact, Sir Adrian lost his own stepson, whose photograph—along with photos of his wife and four surviving children—he keeps on his bureau. Ordinarily Lady Boult travels with him everywhere, but he thought it greedy to ask for passage for her when so many others need transportation so badly. "This is a business trip, really," he said, "and it would be unfair."

When he rehearses the orchestra he drives right through the work he is performing, then tells the musicians what was right or amiss. They like to work with him as he never wastes time, lectures or loses his temper. He knows exactly what he wants and how to get what he wants.

Sir Adrian has been here many times; he conducted the Boston orchestra about 10 years ago, and is widely acquainted in Boston. But his wide knowledge of America springs from his amusing hobby of ducking off to some preposterous, unheard of place, and staying there for a week or so.

This time he had chosen a tiny spot called Fernandino in Florida. His system is to study a road map (he had a drawer full of them in his hotel room), select a place that touches his fancy, and set off to see what happens. There is a fort there, he said, which had swapped hands several times during the Civil War, and somehow it looked like an amusing place on the very tip of northeast Florida. "But the 'Mary' is going to sail a few days earlier than I expected," he said, "so my junket is off. I hope I might find a white shirt there," he added, smiling widely. "Oh.

Unusual Hobbies of Symphony Players

Head Violinist Is Mycologist, or One Who Studies Mushrooms---Another Raises Pheasants--Then There's an L St. Brownie

Roger Voisin displays his special trumpet which he had made to play certain high notes in Bach's Brandenburg Concerto. Note extraordinary length of bell as compared to ordinary trumpet. For his hobby young Voisin is trying to solve the mystery why Bach wrote such high music for the trumpet.

When not on the stage at Boston Symphony Hall, Julius Theodorowicz pursues his unique hobby—mycology, or the study of mushrooms. Here he is in his Newton Centre home viewing a sporeprint of an unusual specimen.

Carlos Pinfield, violinist in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, finds complete relaxation in his hobby, wood-carving.

Boaz Piller, contra bassoonist for the Boston Symphony, spends his spare time and cash searching for miniature statues of complete orchestras, of men and animals. The collection which he started as a hobby is now valued at thousands of dollars.

BY FRANK G. JASON

What do artists do for hobbies? Or don't they bother with any interests outside of their art? Well, the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra indulge in an amazing assortment of hobbies.

Name almost any subject that comes to mind and someone of the 110 musicians, who make up one of the country's outstanding musical organizations, will be able to elaborate upon it, not sketchily either but at great length.

As a release for their over-wrought nerves they have sought comfort in things in direct contrast to their art.

Who would ever suspect for instance, that concert-master Julius Theodorowicz was an ardent mycologist? He is however and is considered one of the few experts in the country.

Mycology, in case the word intrigues you, is the study of mushrooms and whenever he is not attending rehearsals or performances, J. Theodorowicz buries himself in books on the subject and delves deep into the mysteries of sporeprints.

He revealed the other day a number of interesting bits about the lowly mushroom that most people don't know. Every thing that grows umbrella shaped is a mushroom and they are not all poisonous as many of us believe.

Breakfast on Puff Balls

He will tell you that only five out of every 1000 varieties are poisonous and only five out of 200,000 are deadly poisonous.

Those white puff balls you see in fields and meadows on golf courses or in your own backyard are a variety of mushroom and if you want to try something really tasty pick them and stew them in milk, then smack your lips and go out and look for more. You'll never again kick them while out walking for the mere pleasure of seeing them splatter all over the lot or take a practice swing at them with your number five iron.

Mr. Theodorowicz, who has been playing violin for the Boston Symphony since 1897, began his study of mushrooms while a youngster in his native Poland. Since then he has gathered them from all parts of the world but he says that none can compare in flavor than those found in European countries. Atmospheric conditions over there, he says, is more suitable to them.

Feast for Players

Don't misunderstand, however, that American grown mushrooms are not good, for they certainly are, and unless you were a connoiseur like Mr. Theodorowicz you'd never know the difference.

"The most delicious of all mushrooms," said Mr. Theodorowicz, "is the Bolitus edulis. It is much more meatier than the ordinary mushroom and has a distinctive flavor of its own."

Mr. Theodorowicz has an extreme passion for mushrooms and scarcely a day passes but what they turn up on his table, and he does all the preparing of them. Because he is so fond of them he keeps a number of jars of dehydrated mushrooms on his pantry shelves. He began dehydrating them long before that process became popular. In fact he displayed some he gathered at Lake Placid 27 years ago. They are still in good condition and he uses them only when he wants to add a special flavor to a dish.

Often he makes a complete meal of mushrooms alone. He'll make himself some mushroom soup and then whip up a batter of eff and flour, add more mushrooms and fry it like a pancake. When it's done he says you can't tell it from a Wiener Schnitzel.

A couple of summers ago when the orchestra was playing at Tanglewood Mr. Theodorowicz went off between rehearsals and gathered a couple of bushels of mushrooms and prepared them for members of the orchestra. They gorged themselves on them and after the feast was over he had converted several players to the mushroom lovers' group.

Woodcarver on the Side

Mingling with the musicians before a Friday concert we found Carlos Pinfield, another violinist, who revealed he finds his recreation in woodcarving. In his desire to become expert in it as he is with the violin he studied under a famed English ecclesiastical woodcarver who specializes in doing altars for churches all over the world. Pinfield hasn't attempted these larger works, but his home is filled with his carvings, which are truly works of art.

Boaz Piller, contra bassoonist, who keeps bachelor apartments on Westland ave., adjacent to Symphony Hall, specializes in collecting miniature statuettes of complete orchestras. He prizes mostly his nine-piece, frog band. These are small figures made to resemble frogs and each is playing a different instrument. They are made of porcelain, and perfect in detail.

Included in his miniature orchestra collection is also one complete with 10 monkeys; another of 16 Mexican figures, only an inch high; a cat orchestra of 10 pieces, six of which have their heads attached to hair springs and sway at the slightest jar or blowing of breath upon them; a seven-piece cherub band which he likes to refer to as his "angel orchestra"; a minstrel band of 10 pieces, four of which are large figures about six inches tall and the other six a scant two inches high. Another orchestra is composed of six ivory figurines, made in France.

As his collection stands today, prices being what they are, it is valued at several thousands of dollars. It has grown so far ahead of his expectations that it no longer belongs in his apartment.

"It is an historical collection and each piece is a work of art," says Piller. "It is my ambition now to find a good and appreciative home for it where it may continue to live through the centuries to come."

Being of musical mind Piller has extended his hobby to collecting miniature musical instruments. He has hanging on his wall a miniature violin that once belonged to the brother of the famed violinist Franz Kneisel. It is more than 100 years old. Beside it hang tiny replicas of guitars and mandolins complete in detail right down to the ivory inlays.

Prying further into the idle hours of Symphony orchestra musicians we learned that cellist Jacobus Langendoen amuses himself by making cartoons of his colleagues. Rather than drawing with pencil or pen he works directly from halftone pictures printed in programs or on fliers.

By rubbing the printed picture he he smudges it in such a manner as to change the entire facial expression of the subject. Recently he did one of Jesus Maria Sanroma. The portrait he worked from showed the noted pianist artfully posed over the piano, his hand resting near his cheek. When Langendoen finished it looked as if Sanroma was groaning over a severe toothache.

Raises Rabbits

Rene Voisin, trumpet player, occupies his idle hours raising rabbits and chickens. His son, Roger, who also plays trumpet, sticks to music for his off duty pleasures. For a number of years Roger has been attempting to track down the mystery of the high trumpet notes in Johann Sebastian Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 in F major.

It seems that there never has been a trumpet constructed in modern days capable of reaching those high notes and if there was such an instrument during Bach's time he wants to find out what it was like. So far he has never been able to locate anything which might accomplish what Bach wrote. But he is still trying.

In order to play those notes, however, he has a specially constructed trumpet which has an elongated bell of 18 inches built on to it. It serves the purpose extremely well but he is not satisfied that it was the instrument Bach's music was written for.

If the mystery which is now several centuries old is ever solved much credit will be given to this youngest Symphony musician for his efforts in breaking it.

Minot Beale, violinist, who lives in Rockland and by the way, one of the few Yankees in the orchestra, goes in for raising rare pheasants. He has coops surrounding the side and back of his family homestead which contain such rare specimens as the Impeyan, Golden and Windsor pheasants, all of which originated in Asia.

He belongs to that rare group of poultry fanciers who exchange information on the habits of these unique and beautiful birds which entails a great deal of correspondence.

Melvin Bryant of Belmont, who also plays violin, specializes in raising apples.

Oboe Player Jean Devergie of Brighton has gained quite a reputation for himself as a culinary expert. He has a very special way of concocting spaghetti, Marseilles style, which has made many of the "long hairs" drool while he speaks of it. It contains an extraordinary amount of ingredients most of which he retains as his personal secret.

A Fine Hobo

Once he made a batch of it at the Tanglewood camp for some of the men of the orchestra. It was an open air feast for while there he always camps out. The boss, Koussevitzky, happened upon the scene that day and was invited to partake of Devergie's specialty. None of the men had shaved and looked like a bunch of tramps compared to Koussevitzky who arrived in his usual immaculate attire.

After the noted conductor ate his fill he leaned back and came forth with one of his rare bits of humor.

Addressing the oboe player, he said: "You are not only a vunderful cook, but also a fine hobo."

A number of musicians enjoy sleeping and living in tents while at the summer concert site. Among them are Siegfried Gerhardt and Jean Cauhape, both viola players, and Rene Voisin, who has a very elaborate camping outfit.

Harry Grover, who also plays viola and hails from Watertown, has a passion for long distance running. On several occasions he has been an entry in the Boston Marathon, which is held on April 19. He has never come in for any of the top prizes but you can always find him in the list among those who finished the grind.

An L Street Brownie

Violinist Einar Hansen of Boston goes in for the more rugged sport of winter bathing. He is a member of the exclusive "L Street Brownie Club." The colder, the weather is the more he enjoys his icy dip. You can easily pick out this musician in the orchestra by his shock of very light yellow hair.

Raphael Hiller of Boston when not taken up with his violin keeps busy in attempting to master KUO YU, which is China's national language. He is pretty well advanced in it too.

George Humphrey, viola player of Arlington, makes violas in his leisure hours but what is unusual about such a craftsman is that he also makes bows. This is a bit of tricky business, for the wood selected in the manufacture of them must be chosen for its ability to respond to tension. It must be of certain weight and of accurate length down to the fraction of an inch.

The best wood, or perhaps the only kind of wood which can be used for making bows in Pernambuco wood which comes only from Brazil. Because it is a knotty and crooked wood, sometimes a piece suitable for a bow cannot be found in eight to 10 tons of it.

Marcel Lafosse, trumpeter, is able to get off a perfectly side-splitting bit of comedy imitating passe opera stars. He performs these vocal acrobatics at parties only. He knows all the collaturo tricks inside out. In order to do his stint to perfection he must know his operas and it is said that he has an extraordinary knowledge of the subject.

Rosario Mazzeo of Somerville, the only bass clarinetist in the orchestra, turns to ornithology for his hobby. With friends who also lean to this subject he spends a great many hours observing birds. When they receive word that a certain type of bird is migrating they head for blinds such as used by duck hunters and sit for hours in the bitter cold and dampness merely to watch the activities of their feathered friends.

He has also studied the whole history of the clarinet. Once with the aid of an instrument maker he constructed a clarinet for the special purpose of playing the bass notes in one of Shoskatovich's symphonies. The Russians, it seems, go in for low notes and have instruments made accordingly. Mazzeo went them one better in his instrument and added several more low notes just in case the famed composer writes another symphony with sub bass notes.

Painters and Cat Breeders

Jacob Raichman, trombonist from Brookline, is a gifted impersonator, which he does entirely in pantomime. He's a short, broad-shouldered, deep-chested, bald-headed, moon-faced little man. After his first contact with a person he can impersonate him to perfection. He has a quick eye for picking up mannerisms of walking, use of hands, tilting of head which his subjects generally use and there's no difficulty in identifying the person when Mr. Raichman takes him off.

Rolland Tapley, violinist of Wellesly is a master of woodcraft. Some summers he has been an instructor at boys' camps. He also goes in for raising cats for exhibition purposes.

Painting with water colors is the hobby of Karl Zeise of Needham, when his time isn't consumed playing the cello. He specializes in landscapes and has the reputation of being better than the average amateur.

D. Eisler, another violinist, restores old paintings. Working with wads of cotton and strange chemicals he has been able to achieve what most people would think impossible. Like the few men who indulge in this painstaking work for a living, he too has his own secrets of the trade which he will not divulge.

You can almost always find Enrico Fabrizio in his cellar workshop in his Arlington home busily occupied. For years he has attempted to make a fine cello, the instrument of which he is a master. Eventually he produced one so good, he knew he could never make a better one and gave up the project. His reputation of a craftsman has spread far and wide.

When the renowned cello virtuoso Piatigorsky heard one of Fabrizio's cellos he was amazed at its excellent qualities and immediately commissioned the Arlington man to produce a similar one for him.

—Youth Concert

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

JAN 1 4 1946

Boxholders Listed For Benefit Event

A list of boxholders for the benefit concert to be presented for the benefit of the Rachmaninoff Fund, Inc., on February 12 at Carnegie Hall, by Vladimir Horowitz, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been announced by Mrs. William C. Breed, chairman of the committee on arrangements.

Included in the list are Mmes. Busch Greenough, Rogert Woods Bliss, Charles E. Mitchell, William Woodward, Ralph Seward Allen, Donald Peabody Blagden, Lionel Perera Jr., James P. Donahue, Myron C. Taylor, John T. Pratt, George D. Widener, Beverly Bogert, Natalie Rachmaninoff, J. Philip Benkard, George Uzielli, Arturo Toscanini, Otto H. Kahn, William Rosenwald, Vladimir Horowitz and Walter Naumburg.

Other subscribers include Mmes. Gordon Auchincloss, Allston Iselin, Winthrop W. Aldrich, George Amory, Louis Bissell, Dexter Blagden, Maurice Brill, Harold Brooks, John Nicholas Brown, Thomas L. Chadbourne, Robert Clarkson, Chester Dane, Russell Davenport, Lawrence Elliman, Mansfield Ferry, Leopold Frederick, Bernard Gimbel, Morris Hadley and Morgan Hamilton.

The committee on arrangements includes Mmes. Taylor, Toscanini, Naumberg, Kahn, Horowitz, Rachmaninoff and Bliss as well as Mrs. Frederick Steinway, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mrs. N. Penrose Hallowell, Edward A. Taft of Boston, chairman of a regional committee for the New England area, and Mrs. John T. Pratt, who is chairman of the board of directors of the fund.

Beethoven's Fifth Is Main Item of Bill

As a jeweler takes a watch to pieces, Mr. Beckett, conductor of the Youth Concerts of the Boston Symphony, showed up the mechanism of the orchestra for his audience of young folks at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, explaining two particularly important elements—the bassoon and the French horn. That was all. Other wheels out of the works another time. The bassoon and the horn have medium notes which are remarkably similar in sound, so that one may easily be mistaken for the other; but they have high and low tones that are unmistakably individual. Somewhere along in their middle registers they make a remarkably pleasing blend.

Educational illustrations and discussions form a part of the Youth Concerts scheme of things; and then, questions arise around a concert hall and come up for answer, just as they do in school. Take the showbill on the outside of the Symphony Hall portal, detailing in big letters what will be performed on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Here is a strange composer, named Enigma, whose Andante Variations stand announced, to give pause to passers-by. The older of such youths as had their attention caught by the advertisement no doubt quickly figured out what was the matter. Younger ones perhaps waited for their teacher to tell them tomorrow.

At any rate, we want to be at home with music; and there are musicians who make us feel that way, we hardly know how. One of the sort seems to be Jacobus Langendoen, the cello player, who was soloist yesterday, taking part in a presentation of music that Saint-Saëns in his fluent way wrote for violoncello and orchestra. Possibly it was the composer as much as the interpreter that excited the applause. But certainly the impression made was a friendly one and Mr. Langendoen had to come out a couple of times or more from backstage and make a bow.

The big work of the day was the Beethoven Fifth Symphony, at the opening; and the little one the Ponchielli "Dance of the Hours," at the closing. As seems so often to happen, the little one excelled in charm. W. P. T.

This Clipping From
JACKSON, TENN.
SUN

JAN 2[illegible] 1946

Symphony Rehearsal Interrupted By A UNO Delegation

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, rehearsing ~~recently under~~ the eminent British conductor, Sir Adrian Boult, for its Saturday night broadcast over WTJS-ABC, was halted abruptly when a delegation of the United Nations Organization visited Symphony Hall.

The visitors, touring Boston seeking a possible site for UNO headquarters, desired to test the acoustics of the home of the Boston ensemble. While the musicians and Sir Adrian rested, they heard Howard Houston, technical adviser to the delegation, recite Lincoln's Gettysburg Address. Although the 2,231 seats in the auditorium were not occupied, the musicians and conductor listened carefully to the "oration."

Symphony Hall, built 45 years ago, and styled after the Leipzig Gewandhaus which was a casualty of the war, has long been noted by experts for its acoustical properties.

The delegation gave no indication of their reaction, but left the orchestra and the auditorium for the more pressing problem of finding out what hotels and other halls would be available for the UNO should it establish its permanent home in Boston.

This Clipping From
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD

JAN 18 1946

UNO GROUP HALTS BOSTON SYMPHONY

BOSTON, Jan. 17 (UP)—The delegation seeking a site for the United Nations Organization toured this city today.

The members interrupted a practice session of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by testing famed Symphony Hall for acoustics with a rendition of Lincoln's Gettysburg address.

Principal reason for the city tour was to locate halls and hotels that would accommodate UNO sessions pending the completion of a permanent home.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JAN 18 1946

PARIS TALK ON SITE IRKS UNO VISITORS

Bidault Claim of Hyde Park as 'Likely' Is Criticized by Gavrilovitch and Briere

By MORRIS L. KAPLAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BOSTON, Jan. 17—Visibly disturbed by a report from Paris that Georges Bidault, French Foreign Minister, had informed the French Cabinet that Hyde Park, N. Y., was "likely" to be selected as the permanent headquarters of the United Nations Organization, Dr. Stoyan Gavrilovitch, chairman of the UNO site inspection group, nevertheless announced today that the ancestral home of President Franklin D. Roosevelt "definitely remains as one of the six sites to be recommended to the general assembly."

Both he and François Briere, counselor of the French Embassy in London and one of the seven members of the group that began an inspection of potential sites eight days ago, including Hyde Park last Thursday, emphatically denied that they had communicated with M. Bidault or any one else in Europe, or had forwarded any reports from this country. Dr. Gavrilovitch, studying a copy of an Associated Press report on M. Bidault's announcement, treated it as a matter of semantics.

" 'Likely' does not mean much," he said. "As the decision has to be taken by the General Assembly, I don't see how it can be taken before we have the facts."

Symphony Hall Inspected

The committee's inspection of interim facilities continued meanwhile on schedule. After visiting Symphony Hall, the seven delegates viewed Harvard University in a seven-minute ride in a 37-passenger bus through the yard and admired the Georgian architecture.

The delegates' arrival at Symphony Hall interrupted a rehearsal of the 107-piece Boston Symphony Orchestra which was being conducted by Sir Adrian Boult of the British Broadcasting Corporation.

The party next inspected the High School of Commerce, whose 200,000 square feet of floor space includes forty-five rooms. Inspected also was the Cadillac Building, where 1,200 persons are now employed by the First Service Command.

At luncheon in the Statler Hotel the delegates were host to Gov. Maurice J. Tobin, Charles Francis Adams, former Secretary of the Navy, and Karl T. Compton, president of Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Mr. Tobin afterward told newspaper men that Boston had readied two hotels to take care "immediately" of the UNO.

If there are any difficulties, they are in the "incubator stage," he said.

The committee has received an offer of the 1,000-acre Princemere estate as an outright gift for a permanent UNO site. It lies in the communities of Beverly, Hamilton, Wendham and Manchester. At a meeting in the office of Beverly's Mayor Daniel McLean it was offered outright to the UNO by the owner, Frederick H. Prince, former Boston banker, through a representative.

Dewey Eager to Assist

Gov. Thomas E. Dewey has informed Dr. Gavrilovitch of his eagerness to be of any further service to the group, it was announced yesterday by the group headquarters at the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria. In a letter to Dr. Gavrilovitch, dated Monday, the Governor said:

"If I can be of any service personally, I should consider it a pleasure if you would advise me and I should be more than happy to respond to any request," the letter said, and added:

"I should also like to extend to you and to the members of your committee a cordial invitation to luncheon or dinner at the Executive Mansion at any period you find it possible to visit Albany durng the period of your stay in the United States."

SIR ADRIAN BOULT, eminent conductor, who will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the next three weeks in Boston on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings and also the concert in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on Wednesday evening.

Davenport, Ia.
Democrat

JAN 13 1946

SIR ADRIAN BOULT

. . . conductor in chief and former musical director of the British Broadcasting orchestra, has come to America at the invitation of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky after an absence of 10 years, and will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in three concerts on Jan. 19, 26 and Feb. 2. For the broadcast of Saturday night, Jan. 19, he will play Purcell-Woodgate's Trumpet Tune and Air and Brahms' First Symphony.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JAN 15 1946

Rachmaninoff Fund Benefit

Mrs. N. Penrose Hallowell presided at a meeting and tea yesterday at the St. Regis to advance plans for a benefit concert to be given by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Vladimir Horowitz, pianist, at Carnegie Hall, Feb. 12, for the Rachmaninoff Fund, Inc. At the meeting were Mmes. Archibald S. Alexander, Sherman Baldwin, Garrison Elder, Cornelius C. Felton, Edward G. Lowry, Grayson M. P. Murphy jr., Irving Pratt, Minton M. Warren, Lewis Iselin jr., Miss Susan Dalton and Miss Doris Foote.

This Clipping From PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS

JAN 14 1946

Sgt. G. W. Stowe, staioned in the Pacific brings word of the premiering of a new score by Dai Keong Lee, Hawaiian composer, by the Manila Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Sgt. Robert Weiskopf. The score was written while the composer was on army service in the jungles of New Guinea. The premiere has especial interest for Music Club members because the Prelude Hula of Mr. Lee are on the list of 13 orchestral works recommended by the Federation to major symphony conductors for presentation this year, and also because Sergeant Weiskopf, who was formerly a student of conducting under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, is husband of Eunice Podis, the Federation's 1945 piano winner.

SCIENCE MONITOR
Registered in U. S. Patent Office
RN., IONAL DAILY NEWSPAPER
HURSDAY, JANUARY 17, 1946 |  ATLANTIC EDITION | TWO SECTIONS | THREE CENTS Greater Boston Newsstands | FIVE CENTS Elsewhere

Eyes Symphony Hall for Quarters; to Surrender Its Mandates in Africa

By a Staff Photographer

First stop in the United Nations Organization Inspection Group tour today [illegible] possible Boston sites for temporary housing of the UNO was [illegible] ny Hall, home of the world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra. The city's interim facilities for the UNO are one of the strong points in Massachusetts' case as a prospective home for the UNO permanent headquarters.

Assembly Shift To Hub Looms In Two Months

By Donald O. J. Messenger

Staff Writer of The Christian Science Monitor

Inspection of Boston's facilities for housing the United Nations Organization during the four to five years when permanent headquarters will be constructed began today when the seven-member UNO Inspection Group, headed by Dr. Stoyan Gavrilovic of Yugoslavia, visited Symphony Hall.

The home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra would be used for UNO assembly meetings during the interim period. Its availability has been one of the strong points in Massachusetts' case as a prospective site for the UNO headquarters.

Today's tour started from the Hotel Statler, with the Inspection Group and newspapermen being loaded into special busses for the trip which will include examination of hotel facilities and possible sites for housing the UNO Secretariat during the construction of permanent headquarters buildings.

The Inspection Group was met by George E. Judd, Manager of the Boston Symphony, who conducted the members through the building.

As the delegates arrived Sir Adrian Boult, conductor of the British Broadcasting Corporation Symphony Orchestra and present guest conductor of the B. S. O., was preparing to rehearse the Boston orchestra.

"High Note" of Visit

Perhaps the high note of the visit was reached when, as the delegates were leaving, Sir Adrian swung the orchestra into a spirited rendition of the last variation of the Sir Edward Elgar's "Variations on an Original Theme" to the obvious enjoyment of the Inspection Group. The members sat down and listened to the end of the concert piece.

François Briere, French member of the group, took time out to greet personally French members of the orchestra.

To the words of Abraham Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, the acoustics of the hall were treated by Howard Huston, technical adviser to the UNO and former member of the League of Nations Secretariat.

As the words "Fourscore and seven years ago . . ." sounded through the hall, they rose above the talk of conversing committee members. Dr. Gavrilovic and his colleagues appeared pleased with the acoustics, even after the committee Chairman told Mr. Huston to speak in normal tones.

UNO Site-Seekers Attend Symphony Rehearsal

By EARL BANNER

One of Boston's greatest attractions was displayed informally to the UNO site-seekers this morning when they paused at Symphony Hall just in time to enjoy a rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by British Sir Adrian Boult.

The seven-man delegation entered the hall during intermission, and was greeted by a chorus of "Francois! Francois!" as French musicians recognized Francois Briere, former French consul in Boston. M. Briere and his friends held an enthusiastic reunion on the stage.

When Howard Huston of the UNO secretariat mounted the podium to test the acoustics, M. Briere advised him to, "Speak it like Wellington Koo." He was not asked to elaborate on the reference to Koo, who led the Chinese delegation at the

UNO

Continued on Page 5

Continued from the First Page

San Francisco UNO session, but it was interpreted as a good-natured jibe at Koo's objections to having French designated as official UNO language.

Dr. Stoyan Gavrilovic of Yugoslavia, chairman of the site-seeking group, asked Sir Adrian's permission to remain for the rehearsal, and this was granted with pleasure and promptness. Sir Adrian is here to preside as guest conductor at the orchestra's Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts.

A chance to hear a rehearsal of his famous orchestra is something that would be prized by thousands of Bostonians who have attended its concerts for years.

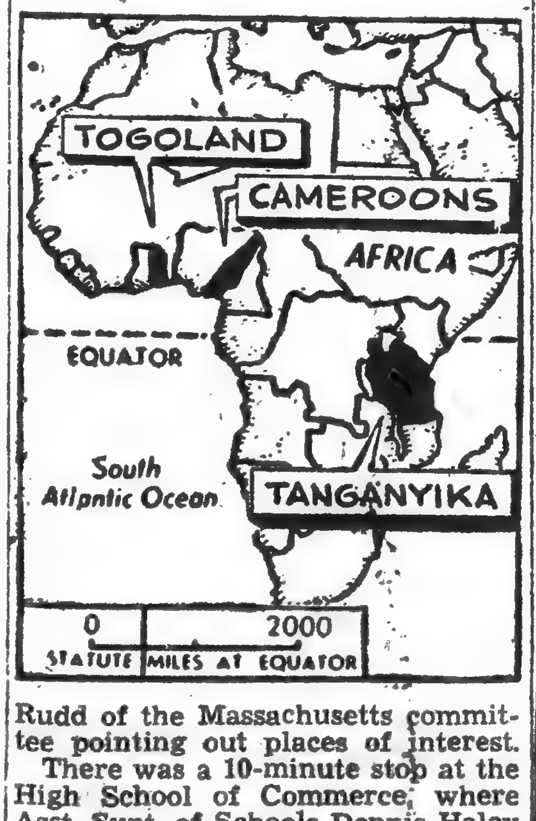
Dr. Gavrilovic's assertion of yesterday that he is "very much at home" in Boston's present frigid weather was repeated this morning when he answered the query of a policeman on leaving the Hotel Statler.

It was learned this morning that the committee will extend its [illegible] stay two days beyond the [illegible] period, remaining here until Friday, Jan. 25. This information [illegible] of those ad- [illegible] Massachusetts site.

[illegible] was not the only native-language greeting at Symphony Hall. A Russian member of the orchestra met Georgii Saksin, the U. S. S. R. delegate, and conversed with him for several minutes. The musician reported later that Saksin said he "liked Boston very much."

The French delegate and trumpeter Roger Voisin exchanged an enthusiastic accolate. Others who greeted M. Briere included flautist Georges Laurent, 'cellist Hypolite Droeghmans, viola player L. Artieres, trumpeters Georges Mager and Marcel LeFosse and trombonist Lucien Hansotte.

After leaving Symphony Hall, the delegation proceeded through the Back Bay in three buses, with George Holmes Perkins and Dwight Rudd of the Massachusetts committee pointing out places of interest.



There was a 10-minute stop at the High School of Commerce, where Asst. Supt. of Schools Dennis Haley and Headmaster Frank Roland acted as guides.

When a delegate asked Roland to explain [illegible] s on the gymnasium, [illegible] admaster said that th[illegible] outlines of a basket ball [illegible] and added, "Wouldn't y[illegible] ave a game?"

The only audible answer was a seven-man chuckle, but twinkles in the eyes of Russia's Saksin, Yugoslavia's Dr. Gavrilovic and China's Dr Shuhsi Hsu gave them away. They would have "liked to play a game," it was quite apparent.

The delegation circled the Boston Museum of Fine Arts twice, but did not enter. Led by a police car, with siren heralding their approach, the delegates were whisked through red lights and other impediments to routine traffic.

Their buses went from the Back Bay, out Embankment road, to the Harvard Business School, then crossed the Charles River and rode in and around Harvard yard. It was believed that this was the first time buses had ever entered the yard's sacred precincts.

Returning to Boston, the delegates gazed with interest as they passed M. I. T. The party proceeded to the Statler for a luncheon with Gov. Tobin and the Massachusetts UNO committee. The menu had been planned long in advance, so there was nothing startling about the fact that filet mignon was the main course.

Combined with the site-seekers' task of selecting permanent UNO headquarters was the immediate necessity of finding temporary quarters to be used until the permanent UNO seat can be built which may take as lang as four years.

Temporary quarters are an urgent matter with the UNO because the world organization wants to hold the second half of its meeting in the United States. Dr. Gravilovic, chairman of the committee, said the second half meeting might begin late February or early in March.

Today the committee visits Symphony Hall, the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, some buildings of the Harvard Medical School and the Gardner Museum, as well as two hotels which are being vacated by the armed forces and will be available for other occupancy soon.

Tomorrow, the committee will start its tour of available sites for a permanent UNO seat. Plymouth and the Blue Hills region will be visited, two of seven sites on the list.

More specifically these areas will be visited: The vicinity of Beverly and Wenham, running toward Topsfield; North Andover; Concord and Lexington; Sudbury; near Worcester; Plymouth; Blue Hill area, extending towards Canton and Dover.

The UNO's need for a large area was emphasized by Dr. Gravilovic who pointed out that living quarters must be provided for 1500 officials and probably close to 3000 persons, when the families of the officials are included.

He also said that hotel accommodations, several halls and transportation facilities, both train and air, must be furnished to make the UNO seat workable and convenient.

An announcement by the committee of its temporary quarters is expected to be a good tip on the location of the permanent seat because it is believed the committee will place both in the same vicinity.

Bidault Stuns UNO Group Here

Hyde Park NOT Sure Site, Says Gavrilovic

By CARLYLE HOLT

The statement yesterday afternoon of Georges Bidault, French Foreign Minister, that the choice of permanent seat of the UNO was "likely" to go to Hyde Park exploded like a noiseless bomb in the midst of seven UNO site seekers now in Boston.

Francois Briere, French member of the committee, could not account for M. Bidault's statement and said he knew nothing about it. Mr. Briere has not communicated with his government in Paris since he arrived in this country.

"We shall wait till we have surveyed the Boston area," he said, "before we form an opinion on the whole problem."

See SITES Page 2

Thumbnail Sketches Of 7 UNO Envoys Who Hold Hub's Fate as Site

By JOHN LYNCH

Upon seven men rest the basic decision of whether the new headquarters of world government is located in the Greater Boston area. The seven-man inspection committee now in this area must, of course, reports its recommendations to the General Assembly of the United Nations Organization in London, and the vote on the site will be taken by representatives of 51 nations. Nevertheless, th ecommittee holds the basic decision.

Who are these men? This reporter has had the exclusive opportunity of riding with them in their private railroad car, talking with them and discovering their background.

The chairman, Dr. Stoyan Gavrilovic, is a veteran diplomat and one who has experienced the rigors of war in his country. He served at the League of Nations at Geneva from 1924 to 1934, and his son, Ivan, now 16, was born there. His diplomatic experience was gained in Belgrade, Washington and other capitals.

VISITED HARVARD

Boston is not new to him. He has visited Harvard and in 1943 lectured here and was guest of Mrs. Larz Anderson, prominent clubwoman.

Ivan and the diplomat's wife, Vera, also know what war is like. Traveling from Capetown to New York in 1942, they had nearly completed the 28-day voyage when their ship, the City of New York, was sunk by a submarine 1½ days from port. American ships rescued the passengers.

Ivan is now studying journalism at Lincoln High School in New York City.

Dr. Gavrilovic, meanwhile, was forced by war from Yugoslavia to Greece, and was taken from there under British escort to Alexandria. His travels later included Cairo, Palestine, San Francisco, Rio de Janeiro, Ottawa, Can., Belgrade and Washington. He served as envoy extraordinary in visiting Tito in 1944 as efforts were being made by the government-in-exile to recognize the affairs of Yugoslavia.

HSU NO STRANGER

Dr. Shushi Hsu, vice-chairman of the committee, is 53 and the father of three boys—of whom he is very proud. In anglicized form, his wife's name is Grace.

He is no stranger to the United States, having come from Chungking to gain his Ph.D. at Columbia in 1635. He has been adviser of the Chinese ministry of foreign affairs since 1936, and served in the foreign minister's office at Washington in 1942-43. At San Francisco and at London for the UNO preparatory commission he served as technical adviser of the Chinese delegation.

Awni Khalidy, the committee member from Iraq, might be mistaken at a quick glance for Julio Lacarte, the Uruguayan delegate. Both are dark, both have dark hair and wear black-rimmed glasses. Both speak excellent English.

Khalidy was born in Bagdad, Iraq, in 1910. He received his bachelor of arts degree from the American University at Beirut in 1933, and became secretary of the Iraq legation in London in 1939, after having served for several years in the ministry of foreign affairs. When the UNO Preparatory Commission started its sessions in London, he was assigned as secretary of the Iraqui delegation.

LACARTE ONLY 28

Lacarte, secretary of the Uruguayan embassy at London since 1943, is a native of Montevideo, and is 28. Married 5½ years, he has a four-year-old daughter, Julieta Luisa.

The United States is not exactly new to Lacarte, for he attended school in Queens, New York, for six years while his father, Antonio Lacarte, was stationed there in the Uruguayan diplomatic service. His father and mother now are in London.

The 42-year-old Russian delegate, George Saksin, was born in Leningrad. Fifteen years married—he laughed at attempts of an American tongue to get the lilt of his wife's name and said "Call her Helen; that's what it means"—he has a 12-year-old son, Michael. Both his wife and son are now in London.

Saksin is a graduate of the Polytechnic Institute of Leningrad in the class of 1930. Veteran of the Soviet diplomatic service, he has served in the Moscow foreign office and as counselor of the Soviet embassy in London. He visited New York for three or four days, he said, when he was in this country in 1943 at the food conference at Hot Springs.

STRIKE CURBED PLANS

Maj. Kenneth G. Younger, the British delegate on the committee, is a member of Parliament, representing Grimsby, a leading fishing port. Because of this he has a particular interest in Boston's fishing industry, now unfortunately sharply curtailed by the t rawler strike.

Maj. Younger was born in Dunfermlin, Scot., in 1908, and was graduated from Winchester College and New College, Oxford. London barrister since 1932, he engaged in intelligence work for the British Army during the war. Married in 1934, he has a 9-year-old daughter, Susie, or more formally, Susannah.

Francois Briere, the French delegate, need not be further described to Boston residents who know him as French consul here during the 30's and up to the start of the war. It suffices to say, he likes Boston.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 17, 1946 Boston Globe.

(Photo by James L. Callahan, Globe Staff)

ENTHUSIASTIC REUNION—Members of Boston Symphony Orchestra greet Francois Briere, French UNO delegate, as site committee visited Symphony Hall this morning. M. Briere formerly was French consul here.

BOSTON TRAVELER – Thursday, January 17, 1946

UNO AT SYMPHONY HALL—The UNO inspection group, visiting Symphony Hall today to inspect one of the facilities available for interim use of the UNO if it should decide to come to Massachusetts, found the Boston Symphony Orchestra in rehearsal. Above, Francois Briere, French delegate, conv erses with orchestra members. Below, the entire delegation pauses outside the hall.

[67]

GLOBE—FRIDAY, JANUARY 18, 1946

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA PLAYERS GREETED by M. Francois Briere, French delegate, yesterday at a Symphony Hall rehearsal during UNO selection committee's tour.

In the morning the committee was lucky enough to visit Symphony hall during a rehearsal under direction of Sir Adrian Boult, guest conductor. They sat down and listened for some time. Francois Briere, who knew some of the musicians was as enthusiastically greeted as if the men were celebrating a college reunion.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

UNO Site Group Reports Progress

18

South Shore Will Be Visited Today

By ARTHUR STRATTON

Dr. Stoyan Gavrilovic of Yugoslavia, chairman of the United Nations Organization delegation considering Massachusetts as a site for the temporary and permanent headquarters of the UNO, last night at the Hotel Statler dismissed as meaningless a statement by Foreign Minister Georges Bidault yesterday that the UNO home probably would be established at Hyde Park, N. Y.

Before a meeting of the French cabinet, Bidault said it "appeared likely" that the UNO site would go to the home township of the late Franklin D. Roosevelt.

NOT UP TO BIDAULT

When this news was received by the Massachusetts group working mightily to impress Dr. Gavrilovic and his six colleagues with the desirability and availability of a number of sites for the world organization in this state, it momentarily bewildered them.

However, Dr. Gavrilovic quickly set them straight with the reminder that delegates from 51 nations in the UNO's General Assembly are going to pick the spot for their permanent home and not Monsieur Bidault.

"I would like to stress that word likely," added the spokesman for the inspection group, who is a delegate to the General Assembly himself. "Anyone can say likely. Likely doesn't mean much.

"The decision has to be taken by the General Assembly. No report as yet has gone from this group.

"Undoubtedly Hyde Park will be one of six sites which we will recommend to the General Assembly. As I have explained before there will be about six sites recommended, with perhaps two or three outside of Massachusetts and perhaps three or four inside of Massachusetts."

At the same time the French representative on the inspection group here for an eight-day visit, M. Francois Briere, expressed surprise that Bidault "had made such a statement without consulting me." He added he had had no communication whatsoever with Bidault on the matter. "In no way can I account for the statement," he concluded in the presence of Dr. Gavrilovic.

PROGRESS MADE HERE

This momentary diversion from the business at hand came at the end of a day in which Dr. Gavrilovic, who is the spokesman for the delegation, said excellent progress had been made by the members on the second day of their inspection visit here.

He disclosed that consultants of the Massachusetts UNO group and Gov. Tobin had met every stipulation with respect to office space and living accommodations for the several thousand UNO delegates and attaches in the event the organization decided to set up interim headquarters in Boston while their permanent seat was being built elsewhere. The UNO desires to have its interim facilities close by the site of their permanent headquarters so that if Boston were selected for this purpose, Massachusetts apparently would have a better chance of winning the permanent seat. The latter can not be located within the limits of a city of the size of Boston under UNO stipulation.

Dr. Gavrilovic said he had informed the Massachusetts leaders in the UNO bid that 1500 rooms would be needed in Boston to care for the UNO personnel while here for from three to five years on an interim basis.

PROMISED FOUR HOTELS

He said local authorities, in the personages of Gov. Tobin and the Massachusetts UNO executive committee, had promised him four hotels, namely the Victoria, Lincolnshire, Buckminster and the Somerset, would be turned over for exclusive use by the UNO. This, he estimated, would provide about 1000 rooms.

The balance of approximately 500 rooms could be assured him in the Hotel Statler and Copley Plaza, he said he had been informed by the local group.

With respect to necessary office space he said he and his delegation had been shown the six-story-office building opposite Cottage Farm bridge and which now is occupied by the Army's First Service Command. This, he said, comprised 250,000 square feet of floor space, or 30,000 more square feet than were the UNO's minimum requirements.

He indicated he was impressed by the physical lay-out of Symphony Hall, which he visited with his associates yesterday. He said it had a seating capacity of 2800, which approximates the UNO's interim needs, and added that this was in addition to some splendid committee rooms both within Symphony Hall and within Horticultural Hall across the street.

Returning to housing accommodations he disclosed he had received a "splendid" offer from Paul F. Clark, president of the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Company. "Mr. Clark told me today that his company is building 1200 homes in the Brookline area and he placed them at the disposal of the United Nations Organization," he explained. "It's my understanding these homes will be ready for occupancy within seven or eight months after construction work is started."

PROSPECTIVE SITES

Turning to prospective sites for the permanent headquarters, Dr. Gavrilovic said his group now had foremost in mind for consideration and inspection four in as many sections of Massachusetts. He listed them first, a so-called North Shore area, which he described as extending from Tewksbury to Beverly. "It is the suggestion that we go more to the east of this area and center our project around a place called Beverly Farms," he explained.

"It is my understanding that the land is good for building. It (referring to the UNO home) would have about 40 square miles, with much of the development westward. The climate is very good there, we hear. The cost of the land is said to be about $140 to the acre, or a total cost of about $10,000,000."

The second he outlined was the Sudbury area, with the center of the site to be in that town. He pointed out that Bedford airport, where trans-Atlantic airplane service already is running, was nearby. "Also there are some very good reservoirs and a string of lakes which would make a good buffer against spreading cities," he added.

TO SEE PLYMOUTH TODAY

Then Mr. Gavrilovic mentioned the Blue Hills area and a so-called Plymouth area, both of which will be inspected by the delegation today. They will make the trip by bus, going first to Plymouth and then to Blue Hills after luncheon at the Toll House in Whitman.

He expressed the opinion that the 12 square miles of state land in the Blue Hills area also would be a "good buffer against engulfment by a spreading city." About 40 square miles, extending nearly to Brockton, would be taken, he explained.

The central part of a UNO home in the Plymouth area would be in the Manomet section, he went on.

Dr. Gavrilovic explained last night that when his committee makes recommendations containing six prospective sites they will not be listed in the order which the committee feels they should be considered. "No preference will be set forth in the report," he replied in answer to an inquiry along this line. "We probably will list them alphabetically."

Boston's UNO Interim Needs Found Ample

Blue Hills Appeal To Committee For Permanent Site

GREETS SYMPHONY PLAYERS

M. Francois Briere of France, former French consul in Boston, greets members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday at a Symphony Hall rehearsal, during UNO selection committee's tour of interim facilities. (Associated Press Photo)

BOSTON, Jan. 17 (AP)—Facilities capable of meeting the interim requirements of the United Nations Organization have been offered in Boston, Dr. Stoyan Gavrilovic of Yugoslavia, chairman of UNO's site selection committee, said tonight in an interview.

The committee, also charged with finding a permanent location for the world peace agency, inspected several hotel, school and business buildings. A sub-committee visited others.

Tomorrow, the committee will inspect prospective permanent sites for the world peace city in the vicinity of the Blue Hills State Reservation, 7 miles south of Boston, and Plymouth, 35 to 40 miles from the city.

PARIS, Jan. 17 (AP)—Foreign Minister Georges Bidault told a French cabinet meeting today it appeared likely the permanent home of the United Nations would be at Hyde Park, N. Y.

Four Hotels Available

Dr. Gavrilovic said four hotels, recently vacated by the armed forces and capable of accommodating 1000 persons, had been offered in entirety. These were the Lincolnshire, Somerset, Buckminster and Victoria. Two other hotels had agreed to furnish quarters for 500, thus meeting the immediate needs of UNO.

A large business building formerly occupied by an automobile company, and recently by the Army's First Service Command, with 250,000 square feet of office space, had been made available, he said, although only 220,000 square feet were required.

Impromptu Concert

When the inspection committee called to inspect Boston's Symphony Hall today it was tendered an impromptu concert. The usicians, some in shirt-sleeves, re leaving the stage after a arsal, but returned to render 's "Enigma" variations, under the direction of Sir Adrian Boult.

Other facilities offered the committee included Horticultural Hall and the High School of Commerce.

Dr. Gavrilovic said that after inspection of possible permanent sites in Massachusetts and Rhode Island, the committee would return to Boston to continue examination of proffered interim facilities.

The committee chairman explained that the Blue Hills reservation was a factor in favor of that location, since the big state park would act as a "buffer," to prevent encroachment by a large city. He said numerous lakes were similar consideration in weighing the possibilities of the Concord-Lexington area.

Insurance Company's Offer

An area between Beverly, on the North Shore, and Tewksbury, he said, was definitely on the inspection program. Each of these locations, he said, could furnish sufficient area.

A large insurance company, Dr. Gavrilovic said, had offered to make available 1200 small houses and apartments which it will construct in Brookline, adjacent to Boston.

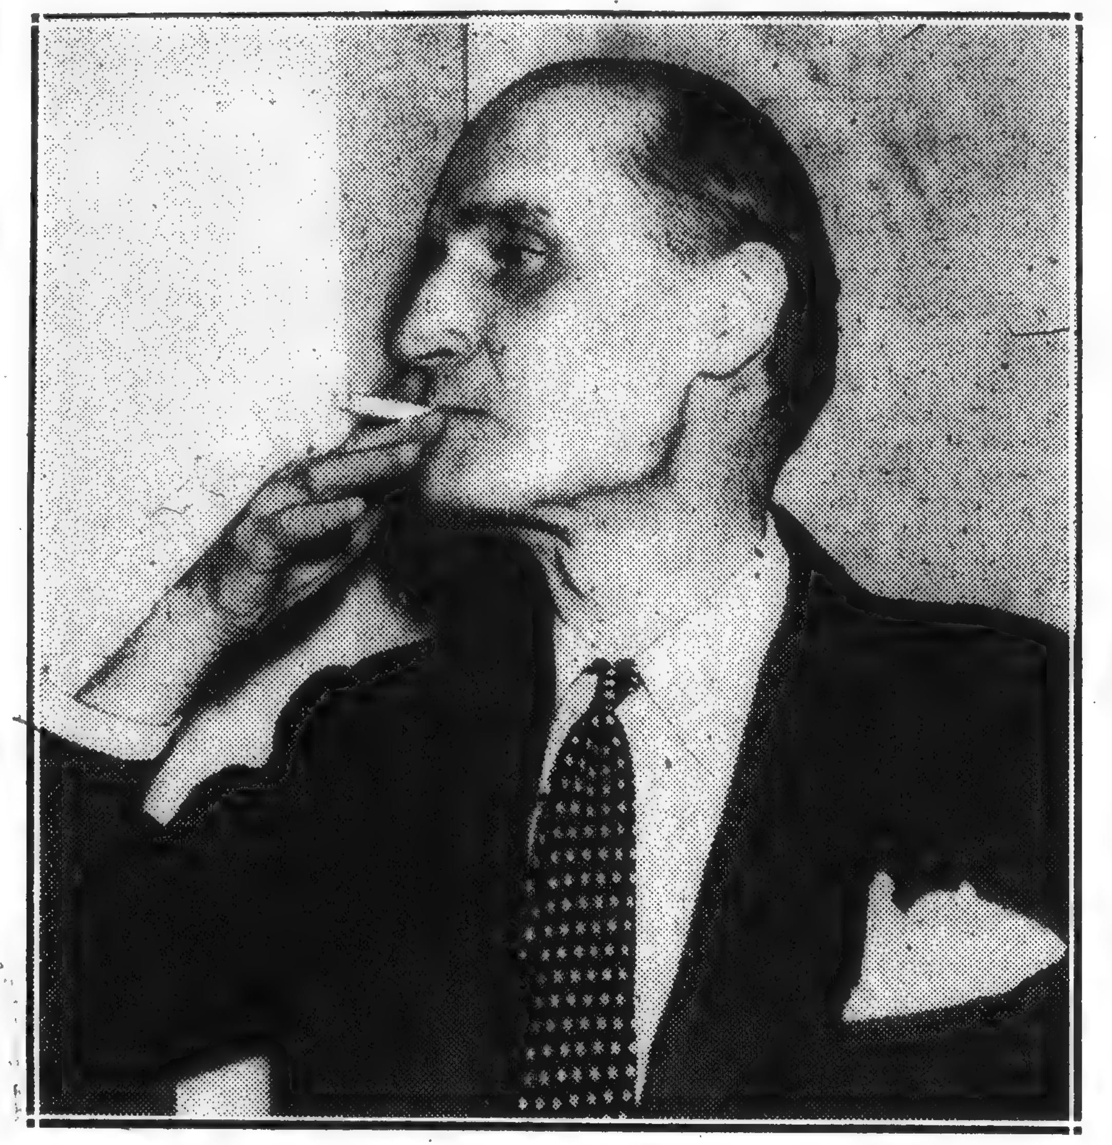
Dr. Gavrilovie explained that in submitting recommendations, probably six in number, the committee would indicate no preference, but simply offer the results of its inquiry. He did say, however, that Hyde Park would be one of the six.

Gov. Mortimer Proctor of Vermont breakfasted with Dr. Gavrilovic today and offered interim facilities in that state.

[68]

OSTON POST, FRIDAY, JANUARY 18, 1946

UNO Group Denies Hyde Park All Picked



UNO PICKS SITE—NOT BIDEAULT

Dr. Stoyan Gavrilovic, chairman of UNO inspection group in Boston, snapped at press conference yesterday as he commented on Paris report that Hyde Park, N. Y., was likely to be chosen permanent headquarters.

Continued From First Page

An Associated Press despatch quoting M. Bideault as reporting it appeared likely the headquarters of UNO would be located at Hyde Park, brought down a bit of chill for a very brief moment during the afternoon as the inspection of interim facilities was in progress. Dr. Stoyan Gavrilovic, its chairman, expressed surprise that M. Bideault should make such an assertion without consulting him first.

Francois Briere, French member of the group, took occasion to answer a query by stating unequivocally that he had communicated, in no way with any member of the French cabinet, or anyone else in France, while he has been on his site-inspection mission in this country.

At last night's meeting with the press, Dr. Gavrilovic made a positive statement. He had then read the despatch quoting M. Bideault.

No Report

"Anyone can say a place would be likely to be selected," he said. "I stress the word 'likely.'

"The decision on a site for permanent headquarters of the United Nations will be made by the UNO assembly, and I don't see how it can be made before we get back to London to make our recommendations.

"No report has been made yet, and no report will be made until we return."

M. Briere, asked to comment on the Bideault remark, replied:

'I have nothing to say about it. I have not sent any report, of any kind, to Paris, or any other place in France, since I have been in this country.

"I shall wait until the survey of the Boston area is completed before I have an opinion on the whole problem."

Good Progress

Dr. Gavrilovic reported the day's work had resulted in very good progress here on all questions involved in consideration of both an interim site and a permanent site for headquarters of the big international peace organization. The Boston area still looms with a possible four recommendations out of a limit of six for a permanent home for the UNO.

And the temporary facilities surveyed indicated adequate accommodations for the interim setup.

An interesting sidelight on events of the day touched on the Yankee enterprise of the State of Vermont. For Dr. Gavrilovic revealed that Gov. Mortimer R. Proctor of Vermont had called early in the morning, and had had breakfast with him, offering the facilities of Burlington and surrounding country for both interim and permanent headquarters of the United Nations Organization. And this right under the noses of the sovereign Commonwealth of Massachusetts and all the cohorts Gov. Tobin has taken pains to place at the UNO group's disposal.

Impromptu Concert

Yesterday was a full one for the site-inspection group. Even last night they were busy with correspondence and conferences until long past normal bedtime.

Dr. Gavrilovic's report of progress was frank and complete. He said that he and his associates already had visited several places offered in connection with interim facilities. They had inspected Symphony Hall, where they were treated to an impromptu concert by the 107-man orchestra which had just finished rehearsal.

Symphony Hall, with a seating capacity of 2800 people, had rooms suitable for committee meetings and the press. And across Massachusetts ave., Horticultural Hall had been offered, where more committee rooms and meeting halls were available, he said.

Four hotels, with a capacity of 1000 rooms, had been offered and were being inspected. They were the Lincolnshire, the Somerset, the Victoria and the Buckminster, all being reconverted following their release by branches of the armed forces. And the Copley-Plaza and Statler Hotels had offered to make available some 500 other rooms considered necessary to meet temporary housing requirement for the general assembly if and when it comes here.

Adequate Floor Space

For the UNO secretariat offices, the Cadillac building on Commonwealth ave. opposite the Cottage Farm bridge, now occupied by the army's First Service Command, and the Buick building diagonally opposite it, had been offered. The Cadillac building was inspected yesterday afternoon, with Lt. Gen. Oscar W. Griswold welcoming the inspecting group.

Dr. Gavrolovic said it had adequate floor space, some 250,000 square feet, against a requirement of but 220,000 square feet.

"It will be large enough," he said. "Of course, it would have to be remodeled, mainly by partitioning."

Regarding housing facilities for the secretariat, there will have to be accommodations for 1500 persons to live in, houses and apartments and rooms. These are being checked, and the John Hancock Insurance Co. has offered its housing project as soon as it is built, a matter of some months, he stated.

The High School of Commerce was inspected.

For Permanent Sites

Regarding permanent site locations, Dr. Gavrilovic said that so far four places tentatively have been agreed upon for inspection. These he designated as follows:

Area No. 1—The north shore area, including a location centring around Tewksbury to the westward, and one centring around Beverly Farms near the sea. About 40 square miles are available in each location proposed. Climatic conditions seem very good, he said, and the cost would be about $400 an acre, or a total of about $10,000,000.

Area No. 2—The Sudbury area, with its centre near Bedford and ranging out into the outskirts of nearby Concord. Very fine reservoirs and lakes exist in this section, making good buffers against the spread of growing cities, he said. The Bedford Airport would be available.

Area No. 3—The Blue Hill area, only about seven miles from Boston, with a 12-square-mile State reservation to form a buffer against encroachment by the city, and including some 40 square miles in itself, with Brockton at its southern limits. The Norwood Airport would be available, although it would have to be expanded, he said.

Area No. 4—The Plymouth area, 35 or 40 miles from Boston, with about 40 square miles centring on Manomet. This could be expanded to a great extent if necessity should arise, he said.

Lengthen Stay

So many apparently satisfactory sites have been offered the UNO for inspection in the Boston area, which includes territory within a 60-mile radius, that the inspection group has had to extend the duration of its stay in this section, it was revealed yesterday as announcement told of present tentative plans to remain in this general area.

According to these plans, after today's visit to Plymouth and the Blue Hills areas, the UNO group expects to remain in Boston Saturday, Sunday and Monday; to visit Worcester and Providence Tuesday, remaining in Providence Tuesday night and Wednesday, to return to Boston Thursday, and leave Boston Friday on the 5 o'clock Merchants Limited.

From Beverly late yesterday came word that Mayor Daniel McLean's office was the scene of a meeting at which the famous 1000-acre estate of Frederick H. Prince, known as Princemere, had been offered as an outright gift to the United Nations. This big property lines in the communities of Beverly, Hamilton, Wenham and Manchester. It may be visited when the UNO site-inspection group visits the north shore, it was stated.

UNO DENIES HYDE PARK ALL PICKED

Inspection Group Says Decision Yet to Be Made

BY JACK HARDING

The general assembly of the United Nations Organization will decide where its permanent home will be located, and not Georges Bideault, foreign minister of France, who yesterday told a Paris cabinet session that it "appeared likely" it would be in Hyde Park, N. Y.

Shucked of all the courtesy and diplomatic language with which the UNO site-inspection group now in Boston enveloped its comment, this was the point made at last night's official press conference in the Hotel Statler.

UNO Unit Finds Musical Boston

Everything started out sedately and according to plan this morning for the seven representatives of the United Nations Organizations, who are searching for a site to serve as UNO's permanent home—and then suddenly everything was all amiable and admirable hubbub, followed by music, Sir Adrian Boult, eminent British conductor, performing in his shirt sleeves.

The seven visitors loved it and were still chuckling and talking about it hours later.

They had gone to Symphony Hall to learn about its acoustics. The Symphony Orchestra had just finished rehearsing. About 20 musicians were still on the stage, retieing neckties and putting away instruments.

It happened that most of them were French, among them Roger Voisin, trumpter. He scanned the visitors and leaped to his feet with a cry of "Briere!" M. Francois Briere of France, UNO dele-

UNO GROUP AT SYMPHONY HALL—Members of the inspection group, who will select a site for the UNO, visit Boston Symphony Hall today in the ir tour of buildings within the city. The delegates (l. to r.),, M. Francois Briere of France, Dr. Shuh si Hsu of China and Dr. Stoyan Gavrilovic of Yugoslavia are greeted by George Judd, Symphon y Hall manager.

INP by William Jones

VENING STAR / Jan
SHINGTON, D.C. 11,46

Boston Symphony Acclaimed In New Prokofieff Work

By ALICE EVERSMAN.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, brought the last work of the eminent Russian composer, Prokofieff, for a local hearing last night in Constitution Hall. Two months ago, he introduced the "Symphony No. 5" to this country and the opportunity to hear it was anticipated with interest. Another capacity house greeted the orchestra, which returned for a second time as a feature of the concert season.

Its renowned conductor was accorded an ovation, the enthusiasm of which was hard to quell, after each of three symphonies that comprised the program. Inspired by the warm acclaim, both conductor and orchestra gave of their best and the entire performance was of high order.

Dr. Koussevitzky prepared the audience for Prokofieff's last symphony by opening the program with his first, the "Classical Symphony." Here were two works composed more than a quarter of a century apart, and that time filled with many events—tragic these last years—to influence the composer's thought. That such an influence was at work during the creation of the "Fifth Symphony" is apparent, and yet, stemming mostly from the war as it does, the result is unexpected. Other Soviet composers have written symphonies during the war and they have been fierce with the sound of guns and marching men and exultant with a determined national spirit. Only a shadow of that is to be found in Prokofieff's work.

It would seem as if the composer sought to retain something precious in the midst of all the turmoil, and turned inward to find it. He calls it "a symphony about the spirit of man" and its spiritual quality is constantly evident. Its beginning is pastorale in mood and it returns repeatedly, in its beautiful melodies and gay rhythms, to the simplicity of national life threatened with destruction. But this is not done in the participating spirit that marks other of Prokofieff's writings, but as a nostalgic, backward glance. While little foreboding is expressed in the opening theme, every now and then the presence of war is felt and this emphasizes the seeking that seems to be the keynote of the symphony.

The writing is effortless and bears the stamp of the Prokofieff charm and fancy. There are times when the inspiration falters and on the whole the composer's gay vitality is not constant. But his skill in flowing phrases and in the manipulation of the orchestral voices for fresh effects is as great as ever. Many moments in the symphony, such as the measures given to the wood winds in the second movement, are of rare beauty and there is dramatic power and outbursts of intensity from the brasses and percussion of thrilling character.

The clarity of Dr. Koussevitzky's delivery was impressive, but still more so in the "Classical Symphony," where its real Russian flavor was strongly marked. The performance had lilt and color to it of exceptional understanding that presented the symphony in quite a new light. The contrast between it and the "Fifth Symphony" was appreciable, it being more compact in

---

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

[illegible]

Boult to Conduct Boston Symphony

NORTHAMPTON, Jan. 16 — Sir Adrian Boult, musical director of the British Broadcasting Corporation, will lead the Boston Symphony in its concert at 8 o'clock Monday evening, Jan. 21, in John M. Greene Hall, as part of the regular Smith College Concert series. Sir Adrian, who has conducted the Boston Symphony just once before in 1935, has chosen a program of works entirely by English composers.

The opening number of the program will be the "Tune and Ayre" by Henry Purcell, followed by John Ireland's "The Forgotten Rite," Sir Edward Elgar's "Enigma Variations," and finally "A Masque for Dancing in Nine Scenes" by Ralph Vaughn Williams, dedicated to Sir Adrian.

This Clipping From
MONTGOMERY, ALA.
ADVERTISER

JAN 17 1946

Symphony Coughers

The technicalities of arranging microphones for a satisfactory pickup of a symphony orchestra for broadcast are a sealed mystery to us, but we still wonder if it is necessary to have a cougher within range. The Philharmonic cougher is one of the sub-[illegible] but indomitable sort. At every pause [illegible] program, and every time the music is [illegible] can hear him or her hacking away. [illegible] with the Boston Symphony is a[illegible] aggressive and unpredictable type. [illegible] knows when he will let go, but [illegible] does it is with clarity, volume and [illegible]. The NBC Symphony doesn't seem [illegible] cougher, which persuades us to [illegible] the others can eventually arrange [illegible] without theirs. It may be, of [illegible] that the presence of a cougher is in[illegible] so that the radio listener will feel [illegible] though he were present in the hall. [illegible] change in microphones is impossible, [illegible] radio chains could furnish cough [illegible] handkerchiefs. — Memphis Commercial Appeal.

TIMES-HERALD...JAN. 11, 1946

Boston Orchestra Presents Prokofieffs' 5th Symphony

By GLENN DILLARD GUNN

Dr. Gunn

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra introduced the Fifth Symphony of Prokofieff to as many Washington music lovers as could find places in Constitution Hall last night.

The new work evoked a demonstration for the conductor and a divided reaction for the composer. The modernists were enthusiastic, the conservatives a bit doubtful; but all agreed that the performance was superb.

That the public might evaluate the artistic growth of the composer, Dr. Koussevitzky prefaced the new symphony with the little "Classical" Symphony which Prokofieff wrote 30 years ago. The Fifth Symphony was composed in 1944. Yet either work bears the unmistakable stamp of the Prokofieff genius, and is so individual that it suggests no artistic ancestors even when the established patterns of the art are employed.

Exploits All Materials

This Prokofieff genius is subtle. It employs all the material of which music is made. It abounds in melody. The harmonic vocabulary is familiar though its use is original. Tonalities, however, constantly establish unconventional relationships so that the whole acoustic scene becomes as strange as a lunar landscape across which the melodies, like nearly recognizable figures, move through intriguing lights and shadows.

If the "Classical" Symphony is lean and sinuous music, the Fifth is by no chance ponderous. It marshals some thrilling climaxes, but they excite by their intensity rather than by weight. The result is a constant spiritual tension which is sustained by many reiterated rhythms and by an amazing array of delicate contrasts, rather than by an assault upon the ear and the pulse of the listener. This vast but subtle variety of expressive means mirrors an array of shifting moods. It is these fluctuating moods that hold the attention and compel the participation of the listener, which becomes complete and leaves him with the conviction that he has heard a masterpiece.

Orchestra Unequaled

Another conviction developed as the performance progressed, one concerned with the quality of the performance and with the wealth of interpretative means developed. It seems certain that no other orchestra today equals the Boston group in tonal refinement. This virtue begins with the softer inflections. It extends to every imaginable variation of simultaneous tone-color contrasts in which each acoustic value retains its integrity.

Koussevitzky surely has marvelous ears. He also has kept the enthusiasm of youth though he is now past the span of years traditionally allotted to man. His beat is resilient. His step, though measured, is full of vigor. As the music moves him both he and his men manifest a controlled excitement which, of course, is immediately communicated to the public. Prokofieff could have no more efficient or sympathetic a vicar. Nor could the rest of the contemporaries.

To prove that the romanticists are equally well served, the great Boston conductor closed last night's program with the Second Symphony of Sibelius. With this all the conservatives could relax while the progressives were cheered by a contrast that clearly defined the enlarged resources of contemporary art.

This Clipping From
THE ARGONAUT
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.

JAN 18 1946

Sir Adrian Boult, leading conductor of Great Britain, takes over the podium of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this Saturday for the ensemble's concert, to be heard at 6:30 p.m. over KGO. Sir Adrian, who just arrived in this country, is renewing an association which brought him here just 10 years ago for the same purpose. Sir Adrian will conduct the first performance in America on the air of "Threnody for a Soldier Killed in Action," scored by Anthony Collins from fragments left by Michael Heming, British soldier-composer who was killed at El Alamein. Also heard will be Brahms' No. 1 Symphony.

* * *

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JAN 16 1946

RACHMANINOFF CONCERT

Copland's 'Lincoln Portrait' to Be Offered at Program Feb. 12

Melvyn Douglas, screen star, will contribute his services as narrator in the presentation of Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait" at the concert on the evening of Feb. 12 in Carnegie Hall to aid the Rachmaninoff Fund, Inc.

Vladimir Horowitz, pianist, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Serge Koussevitzky will collaborate in the program. Besides the Copland work, Tchaikovsky's Sixth Symphony in B minor ("Pathetique") and Rachmaninoff's Third Piano Concerto, played by Mr. Horowitz, will make up the program.

Mr. Horowitz, who was a close friend of Rachmaninoff, will be making his first appearance on a New York concert platform as an American citizen.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JAN 16 1946

Boston Symphony Concert

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in one American and two Russian works in its special concert on Tuesday night, Feb. 12, at Carnegie Hall for the benefit of the Rachmaninoff Fund, Inc., it was announced yesterday. The program includes Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait," Tchaikovsky's Pathetic Symphony and Rachmaninoff's third piano concerto with Vladimir Horowitz, president of the fund, as the soloist.

This Clipping From
WILLIMANTIC, CONN.
CHRONICLE

JAN 16 1946

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced that the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be reopened next July at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. The school was started in 1940 but was closed for two years because of the war. The faculty will consist of principals of the Boston Symphony and other notable musicians.

The term will consist of six weeks (July 1 to Aug. 10), the last three coinciding with the Berkshire Festival under Dr. Koussevitzky, which also will be reinstated next summer.

* * *

BOSTON POST, FRIDAY, JANUARY 18, 1946

Symphony Concert for Men at Cushing Hospital

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert to hospitalized service men at Cushing General Hospital tonight. The Red Cross has made arrangements which include the construction of a special canvas runway for 100 bed and chair patients to use from the ward section to the gymnasium.

The concert will be the 500th arranged by the Red Cross entertainment co-ordinating office of the First Service Command this year. The total of audiences has been 24,000.

BOSTON GLOBE
JAN 18 46

500th Hospital Concert by Boston Symphony Tonight

The 500th concert by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Army and Navy Hospitals around Boston in the space of a single year will be given tonight. Richard Burgin will conduct the Orchestra at the Cushing General Hospital at Framingham.

Since Jan. 18, 1945, when a group of players from this orchestra performed at the same hospital, there have been performances by small and large groups, varying from a single player to a symphony orchestra. These concerts, which have required 180 trips, have been undertaken in addition to the orchestra's heavy schedule.

The programs all have been provided voluntarily and most of the concerts were given in wards, especially the neuro-psychiatric wards.

The hospitals visited have included the Cushing General at Framingham, Chelsea Naval, Lovell General (North and South) at Camp Devens, Newport Naval Training Station Hospital, Myles Standish Hospital at Taunton, Edwards Convalescent and General Hospitals at Camp Edwards, Old Farms Convalescent Hospital at Avon, Conn., and the Brighton Marine Hospital.

EVENING STAR
WASHINGTON, D.C. / Jan 11, 46

Boston Symphony Acclaimed In New Prokofieff Work

By ALICE EVERSMAN.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, brought the last work of the eminent Russian composer, Prokofieff, for a local hearing last night in Constitution Hall. Two months ago, he introduced the "Symphony No. 5" to this country and the opportunity to hear it was anticipated with interest. Another capacity house greeted the orchestra, which returned for a second time as a feature of the concert season.

Its renowned conductor was accorded an ovation, the enthusiasm of which was hard to quell, after each of three symphonies that comprised the program. Inspired by the warm acclaim, both conductor and orchestra gave of their best and the entire performance was of high order.

Dr. Koussevitzky prepared the audience for Prokofieff's last symphony by opening the program with his first, the "Classical Symphony." Here were two works composed more than a quarter of a century apart, and that time filled with many events—tragic these last years—to influence the composer's thought. That such an influence was at work during the creation of the "Fifth Symphony" is apparent, and yet, stemming mostly from the war as it does, the result is unexpected. Other Soviet composers have written symphonies during the war and they have been fierce with the sound of guns and marching men and exultant with a determined, national spirit. Only a shadow of that is to be found in Prokofieff's work.

It would seem as if the composer sought to retain something precious in the midst of all the turmoil, and turned inward to find it. He calls it "a symphony about the spirit of man" and its spiritual quality is constantly evident. Its beginning is pastorale in mood and it returns repeatedly, in its beautiful melodies and gay rhythms, to the simplicity of national life threatened with destruction. But this is not done in the participating spirit that marks other of Prokofieff's writings, but as a nostalgic, backward glance. While little foreboding is expressed in the opening theme, every now and then the presence of war is felt and this emphasizes the seeking that seems to be the keynote of the symphony.

The writing is effortless and bears the stamp of the Prokofieff charm and fancy. There are times when the inspiration falters and on the whole the composer's gay vitality is not constant. But his skill in flowing phrases and in the manipulation of the orchestral voices for fresh effects is as great as ever. Many moments in the symphony, such as the measures given to the wood winds in the second movement, are of rare beauty and there is dramatic power and outbursts of intensity from the brasses and percussion of thrilling character.

The clarity of Dr. Koussevitzky's delivery was impressive, but still more so in the "Classical Symphony," where its real Russian flavor was strongly marked. The performance had lilt and color to it of exceptional understanding that presented the symphony in quite a new light. The contrast between it and the "Fifth Symphony" was appreciable, it being more compact in

---

TIMES-HERALD...JAN. 11, 1946

Boston Orchestra Presents Prokofieffs' 5th Symphony

By GLENN DILLARD GUNN

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra introduced the Fifth Symphony of Prokofieff to as many Washington music lovers as could find places in Constitution Hall last night.

Dr. Gunn

The new work evoked a demonstration for the conductor and a divided reaction for the composer. The modernists were enthusiastic, the conservatives a bit doubtful; but all agreed that the performance was superb.

That the public might evaluate the artistic growth of the composer, Dr. Koussevitzky prefaced the new symphony with the little "Classical" Symphony which Prokofieff wrote 30 years ago. The Fifth Symphony was composed in 1944. Yet either work bears the unmistakable stamp of the Prokofieff genius, and is so individual that it suggests no artistic ancestors even when the established patterns of the art are employed.

Exploits All Materials

This Prokofieff genius is subtle. It employs all the material of which music is made. It abounds in melody. The harmonic vocabulary is familiar though its use is original. Tonalities, however, constantly establish unconventional relationships so that the whole acoustic scene becomes as strange as a lunar landscape across which the melodies, like nearly recognizable figures, move through intriguing lights and shadows.

If the "Classical" Symphony is lean and sinuous music, the Fifth is by no chance ponderous. It marshals some thrilling climaxes, but they excite by their intensity rather than by weight. The result is a constant spiritual tension which is sustained by many reiterated rhythms and by an amazing array of delicate contrasts, rather than by an assault upon the ear and the pulse of the listener. This vast but subtle variety of expressive means mirrors an array of shifting moods. It is these fluctuating moods that hold the attention and compel the participation of the listener, which becomes complete and leaves him with the conviction that he has heard a masterpiece.

Orchestra Unequaled

Another conviction developed as the performance progressed; one concerned with the quality of the performance and with the wealth of interpretative means developed. It seems certain that no other orchestra today equals the Boston group in tonal refinement. This virtue begins with the softer inflections. It extends to every imaginable variation of simultaneous tone-color contrasts in which each acoustic value retains its integrity.

Koussevitzky surely has marvelous ears. He also has kept the enthusiasm of youth though he is now past the span of years traditionally allotted to man. His beat is resilient. His step, though measured, is full of vigor. As the music moves him both he and his men manifest a controlled excitement which, of course, is immediately communicated to the public. Prokofieff could have no more efficient or sympathetic a vicar. Nor could the rest of the contemporaries.

To prove that the romanticists are equally well served, the great Boston conductor closed last night's program with the Second Symphony of Sibelius. With this all the conservatives could relax while the progressives were cheered by a contrast that clearly defined the enlarged resources of contemporary art.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JAN 16 1946

RACHMANINOFF CONCERT

Copland's 'Lincoln Portrait' to Be Offered at Program Feb. 12

Melvyn Douglas, screen star, will contribute his services as narrator in the presentation of Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait" at the concert on the evening of Feb. 12 in Carnegie Hall to aid the Rachmaninoff Fund, Inc.

Vladimir Horowitz, pianist, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Serge Koussevitzky will collaborate in the program. Besides the Copland work, Tchaikovsky's Sixth Symphony in B minor ("Pathetique") and Rachmaninoff's Third Piano Concerto, played by Mr. Horowitz, will make up the program.

Mr. Horowitz, who was a close friend of Rachmaninoff, will be making his first appearance on a New York concert platform as an American citizen.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JAN 16 1946

Boston Symphony Concert

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in one American and two Russian works in its special concert on Tuesday night, Feb. 12, at Carnegie Hall for the benefit of the Rachmaninoff Fund, Inc., it was announced yesterday. The program includes Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait," Tchaikovsky's Pathetic Symphony and Rachmaninoff's third piano concerto with Vladimir Horowitz, president of the fund, as the soloist.

This Clipping From
WILLIMANTIC, CONN.
CHRONICLE

JAN 16 1946

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced that the Berkshire Music Center, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be reopened next July at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. The school was started in 1940 but was closed for two years because of the war. The faculty will consist of principals of the Boston Symphony and other notable musicians.

The term will consist of six weeks (July 1 to Aug. 10), the last three coinciding with the Berkshire Festival under Dr. Koussevitzky, which also will be reinstated next summer.

• • •

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JAN 17 1946

Boult to Conduct Boston Symphony

NORTHAMPTON, Jan. 16 — Sir Adrian Boult, musical director of the British Broadcasting Corporation, will lead the Boston Symphony in its concert at 8 o'clock Monday evening, Jan. 21, in John M. Greene Hall, as part of the regular Smith College Concert series. Sir Adrian, who has conducted the Boston Symphony just once before in 1935, has chosen a program of works entirely by English composers.

The opening number of the program will be the "Tune and Ayre" by Henry Purcell, followed by John Ireland's "The Forgotten Rite," Sir Edward Elgar's "Enigma Variations," and finally "A Masque for Dancing in Nine Scenes" by Ralph Vaughn Williams, dedicated to Sir Adrian.

This Clipping From
THE ARGONAUT
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.

JAN 18 1946

Sir Adrian Boult, leading conductor of Great Britain, takes over the podium of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this Saturday for the ensemble's concert, to be heard at 6:30 p. m. over KGO. Sir Adrian, who just arrived in this country, is renewing an association which brought him here just 10 years ago for the same purpose. Sir Adrian will conduct the first performance in America on the air of "Threnody for a Soldier Killed in Action," scored by Anthony Collins from fragments left by Michael Heming, British soldier-composer who was killed at El Alamein. Also heard will be Brahms' No. 1 Symphony.

* * *

This Clipping From
MONTGOMERY, ALA.
ADVERTISER

JAN 17 1946

Symphony Coughers

The technicalities of arranging microphones for a satisfactory pickup of a symphony orchestra for broadcast are a sealed mystery to us, but we still wonder if it is necessary to have a cougher within range. The Philharmonic cougher is one of the subdued but indomitable sort. At every pause in the program, and every time the music is soft, one can hear him or her hacking away. The cougher with the Boston Symphony is a far more aggressive and unpredictable type. One never knows when he will let go, but when he does it is with clarity, volume and authority. The NBC Symphony doesn't seem to have a cougher, which persuades us to hope that the others can eventually arrange to get along without theirs. It may be, of course, that the presence of a cougher is intentional, so that the radio listener will feel more as though he were present in the hall. If a change in microphones is impossible, surely the radio chains could furnish cough drops and handkerchiefs. — Memphis Commercial Appeal.

BOSTON POST, FRIDAY, JANUARY 18, 1946

Symphony Concert for Men at Cushing Hospital

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert to hospitalized service men at Cushing General Hospital tonight. The Red Cross has made arrangements which include the construction of a special canvas runway for 100 bed and chair patients to use from the ward section to the gymnasium.

The concert will be the 500th arranged by the Red Cross entertainment co-ordinating office of the First Service Command this year. The total of audiences has been 24,000.

500th Hospital Concert by Boston Symphony Tonight

The 500th concert by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Army and Navy Hospitals around Boston in the space of a single year will be given tonight. Richard Burgin will conduct the Orchestra at the Cushing General Hospital at Framingham.

Since Jan. 18, 1945, when a group of players from this orchestra performed at the same hospital, there have been performances by small and large groups, varying from a single player to a symphony orchestra. These concerts, which have required 180 trips, have been undertaken in addition to the orchestra's heavy schedule.

The programs all have been provided voluntarily and most of the concerts were given in wards, especially the neuro-psychiatric wards.

The hospitals visited have included the Cushing General at Framingham, Chelsea Naval, Lovell General (North and South) at Camp Devens, Newport Naval Training Station Hospital, Myles Standish Hospital at Taunton, Edwards Convalescent and General Hospitals at Camp Edwards, Old Farms Convalescent Hospital at Avon, Conn., and the Brighton Marine Hospital.

BOSTON GLOBE
JAN 18, 46

This Clipping From
FRAMINGHAM, MASS.
NEWS

JAN 18 1946

Symphony in Concert at Hospital Gym

Boston Orchestra to Give 500th Program for Cushing Patients

The 500th concert by members of the Boston Symphony orchestra in the Army and Navy hospitals around Boston in the space of a single year will take place tonight at the Cushing General hospital at 8 o'clock. Some duty personnel may attend. Richard Burgin, assistant director, will conduct.

Since January 18, 1945, when a group of players from this orchestra performed at the same hospital, there have been performances by small and large groups varying from a single player to a symphony orchestra. The programs have been provided by solo players, combinations of two or three, quartets, or larger groups. The larger groups have played in the recreation hall of the hospital.

The members of the orchestra have been joined by a number of other resident musicians, principally pianists and singers. The audience, consisting of service men confined to Cushing and other New England hospitals, have ranged from a single listener to about 3000. The total audience of the hospital concerts has been about 24,000.

Arrangements have been made to care for a capacity audience of almost 1000. A special covered runway between the gymnasium and the main building has been constructed to allow over 100 bed and wheelchair patients to be moved across the road to the scene of the concert.

The program to be played will include:

Overture to "Leonore," No. 3 by Beethoven
Pavane .... by Ravel
Marche Slace .... by Tschaikovsky
"Pomp and Circumstance," March by Elgar
Overture to "William Tell" by Rossini
Solo Cello: Jean Bedetti
"By the Beautiful Blue Danube," Waltzes .... by Strauss
"Stars and Stripes Forever," March by Sousa

The concerts were organized as part of the Army Rehabilitation programs.

This Clipping From
ST. ALBANS, VT.
MESSENGER

JAN 18 1946

Boston Symphony Makes 500th Visit

FRAMINGHAM, Mass. (UP)—Musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight staged their 500th "bedside" concert within a year when they entertain soldier-patients at Cushing General Hospital here.

Since last January, members of the famed symphonic group have made a total of 180 trips to 10 Army and Navy hospitals in New England, playing to more than 24,000 servicemen.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JAN 19 1946

500th Servicemen's Concert by Symphony

FRAMINGHAM, Jan. 18.—More than 1000 wounded veterans at Cushing General Hospital shouted, whistled and cheered for encores as the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave a program in the post gym here tonight, the 500th concert by members of the orchestra for Army and Navy hospitals in Massachusetts.

The entire orchestra of 120 members played tonight, the first time that it has been complete for the hospital concerts that started a year ago when a group of players came to Cushing and met with such enthusiastic response that they have since sent out groups, solo players, combinations of two or three, quartets and larger numbers to entertain the wounded soldiers and sailors.

Sir Adrian Boult, noted British orchestra conductor, directed the symphony in some of its selections tonight, while other numbers were directed by Richard Burgin, the assistant conductor.

Selections were from Beethoven, Rabel, Tschaikovsky, Elgar, Rossini, Strauss and Sousa, and drew applause that rivaled the jazz selections of any of the famed dance bands that have appeared here.

The Red Cross had a canopy erected from the wards to the gym so that bed patients could be moved to the concert hall for the program.

Most of the concerts have been given in wards, especially the neuro-psychiatric wards, patients from other wards having been wheeled in on their beds or chairs. The larger groups have played in the recreation halls of the hospitals. The members of the orchestra have been joined by a number of other resident musicians, principally pianists and singers. The audiences, consisting of servicemen confined to hospitals, have ranged from a single listener to about 3000. The total audience of the hospital concerts has been about twenty-four thousand.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

JAN 19 1946

STARTING—Sir Adrian Boult, right, shown with Charles Brewer, North American director of the British Broadcasting Corp., at a recent cocktail party welcoming BBC's conductor-in-chief to this country, tonight begins a series of concerts as guest-conductor for the Boston Symphony. Of course, WJZ will b-cast it.

This Clipping From
BERKELEY, CALIF.
GAZETTE

JAN 19 1946

Sir Adrian Boult will be the guest conductor of the "Boston Symphony Orchestra." Sir Adrian will give the first performance in this country on teh air of "Threnody for a Soldier Killed in Action." The score is by Anthony Collins and is based on fragments of a work left by Michael Heming, British soldier-composer, who was killed at El Alamein, 6:30 p. m., KGO.

Charles Butterworth, stage and screen comedian, will be the guest on "Celebrity Club," 7:15 p. m., KQW. . . . "The Merry Widow," Lehar's operetta, will be presented on "The Chicago Theater of the Air." Famaliar music of the operetta includes "The Merry Widow Waltz," "Vilia," and "Love in My Heart," 9:30 p. m., KFRC.

This Clipping From
FRAMINGHAM, MASS.
NEWS

JAN 19 1946

Boston Symphony Orchestra Gives Concert at Cushing

Notable Event Marks 500th Program for Veterans by One of World's Finest Orchestras

One of the greatest symphony orchestras in the world the Boston Symphony, came to Cushing General hospital last night in its entirety to give its 500th concert and observe its first anniversary voluntary hospital series for wounded veterans in this area. A record achieved by few other orchestras in the country was made with last night's performance, the first in any service hospital by the complete orchestra.

One hundred or more bed and chair patients were wheeled to the gym from the ward section through a canvas-covered runway especially constructed for the concert so that bed patients might enjoy it without chancing going out in the open air.

Evidence that the GIs can enjoy classical music as well as jazz and swing was given in the way they greeted the orchestra's selections with cheers and whistles, demanding several encores. Nearly 1000 wounded men and their guests enjoyed the concert which was arranged by the Entertainment Coordinating office of the Red Cross Old Colony Camp and Hospital Council at First Service Command.

The orchestra conducted by Richard Burgin, associate conductor, played a well-chosen program including many works familiar to everyone. Among the favorites of the GI audience were Rossini's Overture to "William Tell" with a beautifully done solo cello part played by Jean Bedetti. Beethoven's Overture to "Leonore" No. 3 and Ravel's "Pavane" were much enjoyed by the boys, many of whom have become symphony fans during the musicians' frequent visits to the hospital.

Also greatly enjoyed was Strauss' dreamy waltz "By the Beautiful Blue Danube" and the stirring powerful "Stars and Stripes Forever" by Sousa. Sir Adrian Boult, conductor of the BBC Symphony orchestra in Great Britain, who is on loan to the Boston orchestra while Serge Koussevitzky is away, guest conducted one number, Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance" March. As encores the orchestra played "Londonderry Air" and "The Bumblebee."

Guests at the concert included Col. and Mrs. F. V. Kilgore, Mr. Judd, chairman of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra and Gen. Harmley, chief of staff of the First Service Command.

The concert was broadcast to the rest of the hospital over the hospital radio station, WCGH. A number of boys evinced no interest in the concert when they were told it yas by the symphony orchestra but after the first selection was broadcast those same boys began pouring into the gym from all over the hospital.

A first class private from New Haven, Ct., Anthony J. Digilo expressed the feeling of many of his fellow GIs when he said, 'Watching the symphony orchestra gives me the feeling of being part of the performance rather than just turning records on a machine." Another patient, Lt. Joseph Harvey of South Valley, N. Y., said frankly "Although I'm a confirmed jazz fan, I do like to see how the other half of the musical world lives."

United Nations flags decorated the hall and behind the orchestra a huge American flag provided a backdrop.

The symphony has given greatly of its time and energy to these concerts for the Purple Heart boys with both small and large groups of musicians, varying from a single player to the full orchestrafi treking to the various hospitals in the area and setting up their instruments. There were 120 men present last night, the complete orchestra except for Koussevitzky.

RADIO
Today

Will Lead Boston Symphony In U. S. Premiere Tonight

Sir Adrian Boult Is Guest Conductor at 9.30—'Madame Butterfly' to Be Heard for First Time Since 1941

For the first time in 10 years Sir Adrian Boult, English conductor, takes the podium of the Boston orchestra in a full-hour broadcast over the American Broadcasting Co. He made his last visit to this country as a guest conductor of the ensemble. Sir Adrian will give the premiere performance on the air in this country of "Threnody for a Soldier Killed in Action," Anthony Collins wrote the score, based on fragments of a work left by Michael Heming, English soldier-composer, killed at El Alamein. Tune in tonight at 9.30 over WSPR.

The Cleveland orchestra, a leading symphonic ensemble, returns to the airwaves this afternoon at 3 to inaugurate a 13-week series of full-hour broadcasts over Yankee's WHYN. The air shows will be rebroadcast. An all-Brahms concert is heard on today's program.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JAN 19 1946

SATURDAY, JANUARY 19, 1946 BOSTON GLOBE

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL
Boston Symphony Orchestra

By CYRUS DURGIN

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Sir Adrian Boult, [illegible] conductor of Lon- [illegible]

[illegible] dependence upon the [illegible] the sequence, and [illegible] orchestration. It is all very pleasant and it has color, [illegible] fine and obscure.

No one knows what Michael Heming might have contributed to music had he not been killed, at the age [illegible] the decisive battle of El Alamein in 1942. He had studied music in England just before the war and he evidently wanted to be both composer and conductor. It is ironic that his own sketches should prove to be his memorial. How much of the music is Heming and how much Collins I do not know. But it is evident that the work is solid, of definite and sustained mood and is neither radical nor conservative.

Elgar's "Enigma" Variations once again were absorbing, and in the "Ysobel" "Nimrod" and "Dorabella" variations, of tender sentiment. Sir Adrian, who is a sound and discerning rather than an exciting interpreter, read them well. It was an orderly, clear and balanced performance, not overdone in polish and refinement and certainly not given to exaggeration in any respect. And yet, in such variations as "Troyte," "R. P. A." and "E. D. U." —the one that characterizes Edgar himself—there was effective tension.

Brahms' First Symphony has been played so often by Mr. Koussevitzky as closing piece in the Spring, that I almost expected to find greenery, sunshine and warmth outside of Symphony Hall. As it turned out, there were sunshine and warmth within the Symphony as Sir Adrian conducted it. He seems to minimize the rocky, rough-hewn aspect of the first movement without diminishing either its power or momentum. The andante "sang" beautifully, and the little allegretto that fills the place of a scherzo, was charming. The finale, I thought, could have been broadened in such climactic measures as the final statement of the chorale-like tune, and elsewhere. This movement was not read so forcefully as the first.

It is good to have Sir Adrian with us again. He will preside at Symphony Hall through the coming two weeks.

1/19, 1946

BOSTON HERALD,

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The 13th regular concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Sir Adrian Boult conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows:

Ireland............"The Forgotten Rite"
Elgar..Variations on an original theme, Op. 36
Collins..A Threnody for a soldier killed in action; based on fragments left by Michael Heming (1920-42), killed in action at El Alamein
Brahms..Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Op. 68

After more than a decade's absence from this platform Sir Adrian Boult returned to Symphony Hall and the Boston Symphony yesterday afternoon to be warmly welcomed by a public which remembered with pleasure his conducting in the 1934-35 season. It must be admitted that yesterday's concert left something to be desired both as to the liveliness of the program and the performance of it. Actually Sir Adrian seemed to me more in the vein two summers ago when he was conducting the BBC in the Albert Hall. But he will be here two more weeks and doubtless will find himself more at home soon.

Elgar's "Enigma" Variations are a stock part of the English repertoire, just as no London season can pass without a performance of his oratorio, "Gerontius." War or no war "Gerontius" receives its annual solemn performance and is attended by a faithful and rapt public armed with well thumbed scores of the work. In May 1944 I felt it my duty to go, but a duty it remained when I left the hall. It must be said that the "Enigma" Variations, a much less formidable work, affect most non-English audiences in similar fashion. We all admire the fine workmanship and the several felicitous passages, such as the whimsical "Dorabella" Intermezzo. But it remains rather a bore. Perhaps the Boston Symphony does not know how to get inside it and communicate its spiritual message to us, but if it cannot do so under the tutelage of Sir Adrian then Elgar is a more recondite composer than I, for one, am willing to concede.

Two works new to Boston figured on the program. The Threnody for the young composer killed at El Alamein is conventional but moving for the associations it evokes. There was at any rate some vital reason to play Mr. Collins' piece, which is more than can be said for the Ireland tone poem. "The Forgotten Rite" dates back to 1913 and has very little of interest to say to an audience in 1946. It is a banal piece of writing of the sort that many composers were doing at that period under the general and rather loose term of "impressionism" and more or less in imitation of the French. There must be dozens of these tone poems lying on the shelves, and why Sir Adrian elected to take down this Ireland work and dust it off is a mystery.

The familiar Brahms Symphony somewhat retrieved the afternoon, but not quite. The interpretation was on the solemn and stately side. The third movement was taken at the most deliberate pace I have ever heard it. It may be, of course, that we have all been living symphonically at too fevered a rate and that it is good for our health that Sir Adrian should come and sober us down. He is always a fine and serious musician. But I must own that I look forward to his next concerts with keener pleasure than I shall recollect this.

The concert will be repeated tonight. Next week Sir Adrian Boult will conduct Walton's "Scapino" Overture, Haydn's D major Symphony No. 86, Purcell's Trumpet Tune and Air and Vaughn Williams' "Job."

JAN. 19, 1946 ..... BOSTON POST

SYMPHONY CONCERT

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's three weeks course in English music, conducted by Sir Adrian Boult, began yesterday afternoon. This first lesson was not especially profitable. Of the three items presented, John Ireland's "The Forgotten Rite," Elgar's "Enigma" Variations and Anthony Collins' "Threnody for a Soldier Killed in Action; based on fragments left by Michael Heming (1920-1942), killed in action at El Alamein," only the Elgar was known here, though the last previous performance, directed by Sir Henry Wood, took place 16 years ago. Among British composers, John Ireland is a distinctly minor figure and this particular work, composed in 1913, sounds today old-fashioned, outmoded and derivative. Far better to have heard something from contemporary England.

The Heming-Collins number is contemporary, of course, but however agreeable, these fragments left by a composer cut down at a tragically early age are slight and bear no clear impress of personality. Mr. Collins has put them together skilfully, and there was just enough of modernity about the piece to make it welcome after the amiable vagueness of Ireland and the prevailing stodginess of Elgar.

Ernest Newman is forever saying that only the English can conduct Elgar, only they can appreciate him. This reviewer has heard not only Wood's version of the "Enigma," but also Beecham's, and found them persuasive. And so was that of Dr. Koussevitzky, when he gave us the Variations in 1927. And so, for that matter, is Toscanini's. Sir Adrian, it seemed, was unduly prone to let the music speak for itself, and, for the most part, that is something that it can no longer do very eloquently. The 9th and 10th Variations "Nimrod" and "Dorabella," are good to hear always. The rest are up and down, while the end comes close to vulgarity. The masterly construction of the work, the effective orchestration no one, of course, can deny.

Some of us have long suspected that Dr. Koussevitzky makes the Brahms symphonies sound better than they are. Sir Adrian let us know just how dull No. 1 really is. However, since we have to hear it every year, it was interesting to have a different approach. And now it is out of the way until another season!

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN

JAN 20 1946

Noted Briton Conducts Boston Symphony Here

Sir Adrian Boult to Direct at Community Concert Tuesday — Appears at Smith College Tomorrow —Has Exceptional Background

By VICTOR PRAHL

The concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Smith college tomorrow night and at the Auditorium in the Community series Tuesday night, carry an especial interest in that they will be directed by the distinguished English conductor, Sir Adrian Boult. This is not Sir Adrian's first visit to this country, having conducted the Boston orchestra and the NBC symphony on a previous visit in 1935. He will be familiar as well to those who saw the recent British film, "Battle for Music," a graphic account of what he and other British musicians accomplished under tremendous odds during the war.

His background is as varied as it is broad, including student days at Oxford and further study at the Leipzig conservatorium, with training in conducting under Artur Nikisch. He conducted his first orchestra near Liverpool in 1914 making his debut at Covent Garden the same year. In World war I he joined the army, and with his knowledge of German held an important job at the war office. In 1916 he was given permission to conduct the Liverpool Philharmonic, making him the youngest conductor the society had ever engaged. He made his debut with the London Symphony in 1918, giving such an outstanding performance of Vaughn Williams's "London Symphony" that he was hailed by the most conservative critics as a conductor with a brilliant future. His subsequent record of achievement bore out their prophecy. For six years he was conductor of the Birmingham orchestra, with guest performances conducting the British Symphony, the Diaghilev ballet, the London Bach choir, and most of the important European orchestras.

It is, however, since he became director of music of the British Broadcasting Corp. in 1930, that his fame has spread beyond England. In 1940, at his own request, he vacated this post in order to devote himself entirely to conducting the BBC orchestras. He is renowned particularly for the interpretations of works by his fellow countrymen, having to his credit, first performances by such composers as Holst, Ireland, Bliss and Williams, many of which have been recorded by Victor. The entire program at Smith and the first half of the Springfield Community concert will be devoted to such works.

Both concerts will open with Henry Purcell's "Trumpet Tune and Ayre." Originally written for organ, it will be heard in an orchestral arrangement by the Englishman Woodgate. John Ireland, probably the most controversial of modern English composers, but admittedly erudite and technically brilliant will be represented by his symphonic poem "The Forgotten Rite." Then comes the most significant item of the first part, one of the real monuments of modern English composition, the "Enigma Variations" by Sir Edward Elgar, composed in 1899. It is this work which brought Elgar out of obscurity to fame, establishing his reputation permanently. The score is prefaced by a series of initials, each set designating a close friend of the composer's, whom one of the variations portrays. The first eloquent and poetic, is the composer's wife, and the final one, a self-portrait. "It is true," he wrote, "that I have sketched for their amusement and mine, the idiosyncrasies of 14 of my friends, not necessarily musicians; but this is a personal matter." For a long time the reason for the title was shrouded in mystery. "The Enigma," he added, "I shall not explain, its 'dark saying' must be left unguessed." But later he confessed that it consisted in a hidden theme which though never actually played, is supposed to accompany each variation, persisting through the entire work in the role of a silent accompaniment. Henry E. Krehbiel maintained that the silent theme was the motto melody of Wagner's "Parsifal." Sir Adrian conducting the BBC orchestra in a performance of this work represents one of his most successful recordings.

In the Springfield concert we shall have the opportunity of judging the composer's versatility in his performance of Brahms's "Symphony No. 1 in C Minor" but in the Smith program he will remain loyal to England with the rarely heard "Job: A Masque for Dancing in Nine Scenes," by Vaughn Williams. This composition, which is dedicated to Sir Adrian, is founded on William Blake's "Illustrations to the Book of Job." It was played in this country by the New York Philharmonic in 1936, at which time the critics hailed it as an exceptional work, "exalted, luminous and sublime, mingling the jubilations of the sons of God with the singing of the morning stars."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JAN 20 1946

RECORDS: SCHUBERT CYCLE

By MARK A. SCHUBART

THERE [illegible]

Rachmaninoff: "Isle of the Dead." Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra (Victor, album DM-1024 three twelve-inch records). From this reviewer's point of view, "The Isle of the Dead" is one of Rachmaninoff's less rewarding works though Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra do what they can to make it impressive. The same composer's charming Vocalise is recorded on a sixth side.

This Clipping From
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD

JAN 20 1946

On the Records

Victor's current list carries an interesting Rachmaninoff item—a new recording of the late composer's Isle of the Dead, by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony. This isn't exactly the kind of music to cheer you up after a hard day at the office. But its dark and mystic beauties are admirably handled by Koussevitzky & Co. And there's an extra inducement offered in the album's last side — Rachmaninoff's own orchestral arrangement of one of his loveliest songs, Vocalise. ($3.50.)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JAN 20 1946

Sir Adrian Boult will conduct the Boston Symphony in a program mainly of British music in Boston next Friday afternoon and Saturday night, including William Walton's "Scapino" overture, Haydn's eighty-sixth symphony, Leslie Woodgate's arrangement of a Trumpet Tune by Purcell and Ralph Vaughan Williams's "Job, a Masque for Dancing." The last two works will be broadcast on Saturday between 9:30 and 10:30. "Job" has been given here at the Lewisohn Stadium in August, 1931, and by the Philharmonic-Symphony in November, 1936.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

THE SEASON

By VIRGIL THOMSON

THE musical season so far has not been overexciting. Here it is half over, and we have had virtually nothing but roast beef and yesterday's champagne. There has been sound workmanship on display in the concert halls; there always is. There have been some premium debuts; there always are. There have been some new works played as is usual; but there haven't been many of these that could be classed in news value higher than what managements call "conservative novelties."

* * *

The Orchestras

THE Philharmonic played in October, as did a half dozen of the other American orchestras, Aaron Copland's "Appalachian Spring." This is a charming work and merits its place in repertory; but we had all heard it in May at Martha Graham's ballet season, where it was given four or five times. The Boston Symphony Orchestra's freshest novelty has been the Prokofieff Fifth Symphony, a sound work more remarkable for the acceptance it shows of contemporary neo-Romantic tendencies on the part of a composer who has hitherto avoided them than for the novelty of the esthetic itself. It is an official recognition by Russia of what has been going on in Paris for twenty years.

[72]

This Clipping From
ST. PAUL, MINN.
PIONEER-PRESS

JAN 20 1946

Spikes Other Reports, Too --

Plan To Resign? No! Avers Mitropoulos

By John H. Harvey

STRONG rumors have been going the rounds about impending changes in the leadership of two of the nation's great orchestras.

One is that 71-year-old Serge Koussevitzky has handed in his resignation as conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra. The other is that directors of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony orchestra are looking for a successor to Artur Rodzinski, who has come in for some rough handling by New York critics.

Harvey

Along with this has arisen a third rumor which has been buzzing about the Twin Cities—that Dimitri Mitropoulos may soon be leaving the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra for Boston.

This the maestro denies flatly.

"There is absolutely no truth in this," he says. "There is even less truth than there might have been in similar rumors several years ago."

Mitropoulos also pooh-poohs the report concerning Koussevitzky's resignation.

"I talked to him a short time ago," he says, "and Koussevitzky told me that not only is he not resigning but he feels that he is good for at least 10 years more."

That leaves, then, only the Rodzinski rumor. At this distance it has been impossible to obtain any authoritative word of confirmation or denial. That report, too, may have no substance, and in any event Rodzinski's contract has some time to run.

However, if the critical anvil chorus continues its crescendo, the directors may very well be moved to find another conductor.

When Barbirolli left the Philharmonic and Rodzinski came in, the latter was well received. It seemed so good to have again a condutcor who has imagination and authority and is a firm disciplinarian.

But the honeymoon is over, and there is available in New York some great conductorial talent. Chief among these is 48-year-old Georg Szell, who has created a tremendously favorable impression as a conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Co. and as podium guest of the Philharmonic, NBC Symphony, Philadelphia and other orchestras in the East during the past several years.

Then there is Fritz Busch, former conductor of the Dresden opera, now in his first season with the Metropolitan. Member of one of Europe's greatest musical families, Busch is a conductor of board interests and mellow authority.

Not to be forgotten, either, is Erich Kleiber, former musical director of the Berlin State opera, now filling guest engagements in this country. He will conduct the NBC orchestra four Sundays beginning Feb. 17.

* * *

ACCORDING to the Associated Press, the Metropolitan opera will try a new experiment in programming next season.

Members of the Saturday afternoon radio audience will be invited to pick six operas they want to hear. Ballots may be obtained from WTCN a little later on.

My list would include "Boris Godounoff," "Pelleas et Melisande," "Die Meistersinger," "Don Giovanni," "Der Rosenkavalier" and either "La Boheme," "La Tosca" or "La Traviata".

This Clipping From BROADCASTING
WASHINGTON, D. C.

JAN 21 1946

BATONS ACROSS THE SEA. Mark Woods (with carnation), president of ABC, greets Sir Adrian Boult (second from left), BBC conductor in chief, on his arrival in New York to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for three of its Saturday concerts broadcast ~~on ABC~~ under sponsorship of Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co. Charles Brewer, BBC North American director, (l), and Sir Francis Evans, British consul-general in New York, were also in the welcoming committee.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JAN 20 1946

Music

By Edgar S. Van Olinda

THE Boston Symphony orchestra announces the resumptio nnext July of the Berkshire Music Center, Serge Koussevitzky, director, at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. Aaron Copland has been appointed assistant director. The school has been suspended for two years, due to war conditions, and will be resumed on the original plan.

One section of the school will be for qualified music students and will consist of an orchestra, an opera depatrment a class in conducting, classes in composition and a department of chamber music. The other section will, as before, consist of students with less specific qualifications who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation.

The term will consist of six weeks (July 1—Aug. 10), the last three coinciding with the Berkshire festival, which will be held in the large music shed as formerly. Audition applications should be made to The Boston Symphony orchestra, Orchestra Hall, Boston.

* * *

Robert W. Morse, dean of the Eastern New York chapter of the American Guild of Organists, announces the following scheduled events to which the public is invited: Jan. 30th, lecture on harmony, counterpoint, fugue and orchestration by Dr. Norman Coke-Jephcott at St. Paul's parish house, 79 Jay street, at 8:15 o'clock. Dr. Coke-Jephcott is organist and master of the choristers at the Cathedral of St. John, the Dicine, New York city. There is a nominal charge for tickets for this event to defray expenses.

April 28th. Massed choirs and special speaker in observance of Guild Sunday, at the Cathedral of All Saints.

May 30th. Organ recital by Claire Coci, under Guild auspices at the Cathedral of All Saints. Mr. Morris requests that any Albany music lovers who may desire to assist in furthering these worth-while musical events, address him at 75 Elk street.

* * *

The Siena Opera forum, Rev. J. B. Carol, O. F. M., president, announces an address in February by Arthur Sherburne of the Schenectady Symphony orchestra, on the development of orchestration in the history of opera. The date will be announced later.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

JAN 21 1946

The Symphony at Cushing

One night last week the Boston Symphony Orchestra went to Cushing General Hospital in Framingham and played a program before a cheering audience of one thousand soldier patients. It was the 500th concert given by the orchestra, or groups from the orchestra, in Army and Navy hospitals in Massachusetts.

There is something heart-warming about the readiness of this excellent, distinguished (and not inexpensive) orchestra to devote itself thus to entertainment of wounded and ill members of the armed forces. Almost anybody, to be sure, would gladly contribute to that entertainment, given the talent and the ability to make a place in the daily schedule, but not everybody with the necessary talent gets down to the business of making time for the work by throwing other obligations aside. The Boston Symphony, its conductors and its players, deserve the thanks not only of the soldiers themselves, thanks fervently expressed, but of the general public. The concerts have given more than ordinary entertainment. There probably is no finer music in the world than that of the Boston orchestra, and it is pleasant indeed to hear that the hospital audiences appreciate it with enthusiasm.

The need for entertainment and cheer in Army and Navy hospitals did not stop with the war. The men recovering from wounds and illnesses incurred during years of combat are, some of them, going to occupy hospital beds for a long time; and as the sense of war's suffering becomes less marked in the civilian consciousness, good entertainment in the hospitals may be a bit harder to get.

It is hoped the Boston Symphony's example, and the example of many other individuals and organizations who have been so generous with their time and talent during war years in camps and hospitals, will be a continuing incentive to provide abundant and excellent diversion to war sufferers as long as the need lasts.

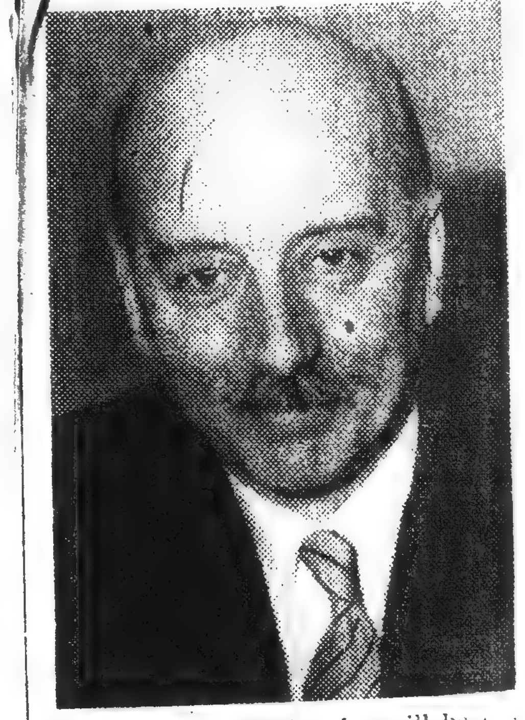
This Clipping From
CHARM
NEW YORK, N. Y.

The chances are you never heard, or heard of, a twenty-four-year-old tenor, Mario Lanza. But you almost certainly will, because this son of an Italian-born six-day bicycle rider—"and a champ, too," Mario will tell you proudly—is almost certain to be the Enrico Caruso of the next generation. Just discharged from the Army after three years, the one-time South Philadelphia High School half-back has never appeared, as of this writing, in opera or concert; he did appear in the Army Air Corps production of Winged Victory. He was helping to move pianos into the famous Philadelphia Academy of Music—his uncle owns a moving concern—for a concert by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra when he was overheard singing at his work by one of the concert's sponsors, who promptly arranged for an audition with Koussevitzky after the concert. Lanza rushed home to take a bath and clean up from his odd-job moving before appearing in front of the maestro. In the artist's dressing-room across the corridor from the conductor's room, Lanza nervously began to warm up with his "lucky aria"—the "Vesti la Giubba" from Pagliacci, which he learned to sing by listening to Caruso recordings. Before he had finished, Koussevitzky rushed in, still in an undershirt, a towel around his shoulders. "It is a truly great voice," he said. And it certainly is. Wait and hear for yourself.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JAN 21 1946

Symphony Conductor



Sir Adrain Boult, who will be [illegible] conductor of the Boston Sym[illegible] Orchestra, when it plays [illegible] Community Concert series [illegible] evening. Sir Adrain [illegible] best known English [illegible]

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JAN 21 1946

Boston Symphony To Rehearse Here

Boston Symphony Orchestra, to play at the Community Concert tomorrow evening in the Auditorium, will hold two morning rehearsals here. The Auditorium has been engaged for rehearsals both tomorrow and Wednesday morning by Adrian Boult, English conductor, directing the orchestra while on tour.

A luncheon will be held in honor of Sir Adrian at the Colony Club Wednesday noon by the Junior League.

This Clipping From
ST. PAUL, MINN.
PIONEER-PRESS

JAN 20 1946

Spikes Other Reports, Too –

Plan To Resign? No! Avers Mitropoulos

By John H. Harvey

STRONG rumors have been going the rounds about impending changes in the leadership of two of the nation's great orchestras.

One is that 71-year-old Serge Koussevitzky has handed in his resignation as conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra. The other is that directors of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony orchestra are looking for a successor to Artur Rodzinski, who has come in for some rough handling by New York critics.

Harvey

Along with this has arisen a third rumor which has been buzzing about the Twin Cities—that Dimitri Mitropoulos may soon be leaving the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra for Boston.

This the maestro denies flatly.

"There is absolutely no truth in this," he says. "There is even less truth than there might have been in similar rumors several years ago."

Mitropoulos also pooh-poohs the report concerning Koussevitzky's resignation.

"I talked to him a short time ago," he says, "and Koussevitzky told me that not only is he not resigning but he feels that he is good for at least 10 years more."

That leaves, then, only the Rodzinski rumor. At this distance it has been impossible to obtain any authoritative word of confirmation or denial. That report, too, may have no substance, and in any event Rodzinski's contract has some time to run.

However, if the critical anvil chorus continues its crescendo, the directors may very well be moved to find another conductor.

When Barbirolli left the Philharmonic and Rodzinski came in, the latter was well received. It seemed so good to have again a condutcor who has imagination and authority and is a firm disciplinarian.

But the honeymoon is over, and there is available in New York some great conductorial talent. Chief among these is 48-year-old Georg Szell, who has created a tremendously favorable impression as a conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Co. and as podium guest of the Philharmonic, NBC Symphony, Philadelphia and other orchestras in the East during the past several years.

Then there is Fritz Busch, former conductor of the Dresden opera, now in his first season with the Metropolitan. Member of one of Europe's greatest musical families, Busch is a conductor of board interests and mellow authority.

Not to be forgotten, either, is Erich Kleiber, former musical director of the Berlin State opera, now filling guest engagements in this country. He will conduct the NBC orchestra four Sundays beginning Feb. 17.

* * *

ACCORDING to the Associated Press, the Metropolitan opera will try a new experiment in programming next season.

Members of the Saturday afternoon radio audience will be invited to pick six operas they want to hear. Ballots may be obtained from WTCN a little later on.

My list would include "Boris Godounoff," "Pelleas et Melisande," "Die Meistersinger," "Don Giovanni," "Der Rosenkavalier" and either "La Boheme," "La Tosca" or "La Traviata".

This Clipping From BROADCASTING
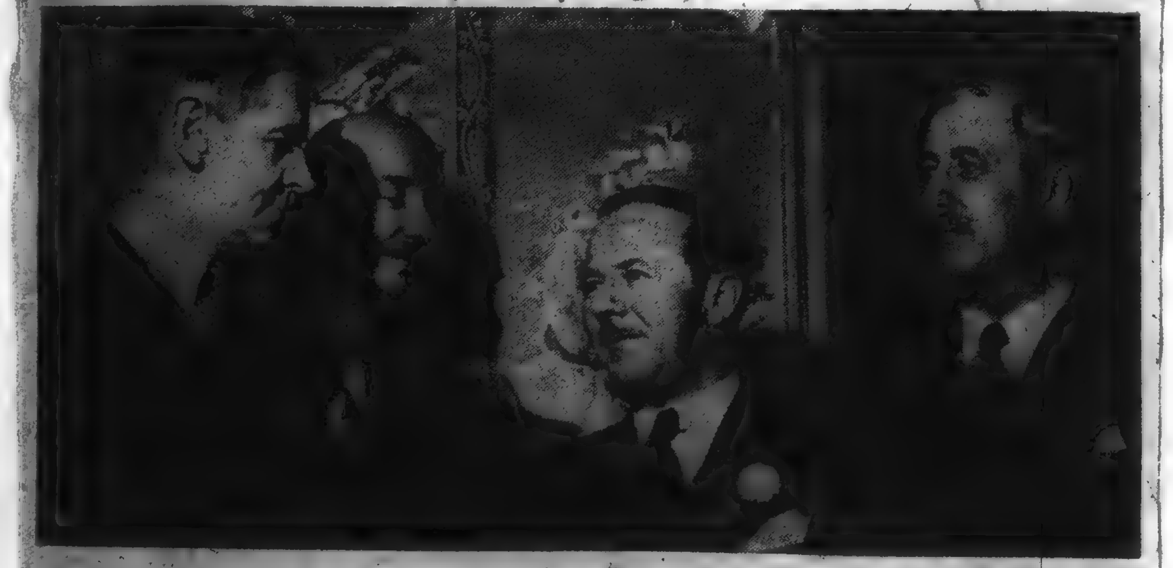
WASHINGTON, D. C.

JAN 21 1946



BATONS ACROSS THE SEA. Mark Woods (with carnation), president of ABC, greets Sir Adrian Boult (second from left), BBC conductor in chief, on his arrival in New York to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra for three of its Saturday concerts broadcast ~~on ABC~~ under sponsorship of Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co. Charles Brewer, BBC North American director, (l), and Sir Francis Evans, British consul-general in New York, were also in the welcoming committee.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JAN 20 1946

Music

By Edgar S. Van Olinda

THE Boston Symphony orchestra announces the resumptio nnext July of the Berkshire Music Center, Serge Koussevitzky, director, at [illegible] in Lenox, Mass. Aaron Copland has been appointed assistant director. The school has been suspended for two years, due to war conditions, and will be resumed on the original plan.

One section of the school will be for qualified music students and will consist of an orchestra, an opera depatrment a class in conducting, classes in composition and a department of chamber music. The other section will, as before, consist of students with less specific qualifications who wish to increase their acquaintance with music and its interpretation.

The term will consist of six weeks (July 1—Aug. 10), the last three coinciding with the Berkshire festival, which will be held in the large music shed as formerly. Audition applications should be made to The Boston Symphony orchestra, Orchestra Hall, Boston.

* * *

Robert W. Morse, dean of the Eastern New York chapter of the American Guild of Organists, announces the following scheduled events to which the public is invited: Jan. 30th, lecture on harmony, counterpoint, fugue and orchestration by Dr. Norman Coke-Jephcott at St. Paul's parish house, 79 Jay street, at 8:15 o'clock. Dr. Coke-Jephcott is organist and master of the choristers at the Cathedral of St. John, the Dicine, New York city. There is a nominal charge for tickets for this event to defray expenses.

April 28th. Massed choirs and special speaker in observance of Guild Sunday, at the Cathedral of All Saints.

May 30th. Organ recital by Claire Coci, under Guild auspices at the Cathedral of All Saints. Mr. Morris requests that any Albany music lovers who may desire to assist in furthering these worth-while musical events, address him at 75 Elk street.

* * *

The Siena Opera forum, Rev. J. B. Carol, O. F. M., president, announces an address in February by Arthur Sherburne of the Schenectady Symphony orchestra, on the development of orchestration in the history of opera. The date will be announced later.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

JAN 21 1946

The Symphony at Cushing

One night last week the Boston Symphony Orchestra went to Cushing General Hospital in Framingham and played a program before a cheering audience of one thousand soldier patients. It was the 500th concert given by the orchestra, or groups from the orchestra, in Army and Navy hospitals in Massachusetts.

There is something heart-warming about the readiness of this excellent, distinguished (and not inexpensive) orchestra to devote itself thus to entertainment of wounded and ill members of the armed forces. Almost anybody, to be sure, would gladly contribute to that entertainment, given the talent and the ability to make a place in the daily schedule, but not everybody with the necessary talent gets down to the business of making time for the work by throwing other obligations aside. The Boston Symphony, its conductors and its players, deserve the thanks not only of the soldiers themselves, thanks fervently expressed, but of the general public. The concerts have given more than ordinary entertainment. There probably is no finer music in the world than that of the Boston orchestra, and it is pleasant indeed to hear that the hospital audiences appreciate it with enthusiasm.

The need for entertainment and cheer in Army and Navy hospitals did not stop with the war. The men recovering from wounds and illnesses incurred during years of combat are, some of them, going to occupy hospital beds for a long time; and as the sense of war's suffering becomes less marked in the civilian consciousness, good entertainment in the hospitals may be a bit harder to get.

It is hoped the Boston Symphony's example, and the example of many other individuals and organizations who have been so generous with their time and talent during war years in camps and hospitals, will be a continuing incentive to provide abundant and excellent diversion to war sufferers as long as the need lasts.

This Clipping From
CHARM
NEW YORK, N. Y.

AN - - 1946

The chances are you never heard, or heard of, a twenty-four-year-old tenor, Mario Lanza. But you almost certainly will, because this son of an Italian-born six-day bicycle rider—"and a champ, too," Mario will tell you proudly—is almost certain to be the Enrico Caruso of the next generation. Just discharged from the Army after three years, the one-time South Philadelphia High School half-back has never appeared, as of this writing, in opera or concert; he did appear in the Army Air Corps production of Winged Victory. He was helping to move pianos into the famous Philadelphia Academy of Music—his uncle owns a moving concern—for a concert by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra when he was overheard singing at his work by one of the concert's sponsors, who promptly arranged for an audition with Koussevitzky after the concert. Lanza rushed home ~~to take a~~ bath and clean up from his odd-job moving before appearing in front of the maestro. In the artist's dressing-room across the corridor from the conductor's room, Lanza nervously began to warm up with his "lucky aria"—the "Vesti la Giubba" from Pagliacci, which he learned to sing by listening to Caruso recordings. Before he had finished, Koussevitzky rushed in, still in an undershirt, a towel around his shoulders. "It is a truly great voice," he said. And it certainly is. Wait and hear for yourself.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JAN 21 1946

Symphony Conductor

Sir Adrain Boult, who will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, when it plays here in the Community Concert series, Tuesday evening. Sir Adrain is one of the best known English conductors.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JAN 21 1946

Boston Symphony To Rehearse Here

Boston Symphony Orchestra, to play at the Community Concert tomorrow evening in the Auditorium, will hold two morning rehearsals here. The Auditorium has been engaged for rehearsals both tomorrow and Wednesday morning by Adrian Boult, English conductor, directing the orchestra while on tour.

A luncheon will be held in honor of Sir Adrian at the Colony Club, Wednesday noon by the Junior League.

Vet On the Kettles

Roman Szulc, tympani player of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, gave Pfc. Armando Grassi of Roxbury a lesson in beating it out on the kettle drums. The interlude occurred during the recent 500th concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for disabled veterans in the Greater Boston area, at Cushing General Hospital, Framingham, Mass.

1/21/46

This Clipping From
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

JAN 22 1946

Boston Orchestra Breaks Tradition In Concert Here

Sir Adrian Boult Is Guest Conductor in Place of Serge Koussevitsky. Program Is Partly Disappointing

Tradition was broken several times at John M. Greene hall last night when the Boston Symphony orchestra presented its annual concert. For one thing, the orchestra, whose arrival is traditionally one of the first signs of spring in Northampton, was here in the dead of winter as the fourth rather than the final event of the college concert series. Secondly, Serge Koussevitsky, rarely absent from his place at the helm of the orchestra, was replaced by a guest conductor, the eminent Briton, Sir Adrian Boult. Thirdly, the program, which could always be relied upon in the past for a major item of solid classical fare, was largely a disappointment.

Listing of the first two departures from tradition is not intended in any disparaging se e. The Boston Symphony orchestra would be welcome here regardless of the date of arrival. And Sir Adrian Boult is a skilled conductor, eminently well equipped to lead what may be the world's greatest orchestra. The failure of the program to come up to the standard set by the same orchestra in its previous visits here was the natural consequence of Sir Adrian's not inexcusable patriotic intention: To play the works of British composers.

With its accustomed brilliance and responsiveness the orchestra applied itself to Purcell's trumpet tune and air, Ireland's "The Forgotten Rite," Elgar's "Enigma Variations" and Vaughan Williams' "Job: A Masque for Dancing." Of these, the Purcell work was the only totally satisfying piece. Its liveliness and charm, and the ringing trumpet solo by Mager, made it seem altogether too brief.

Elgar's variations, in which he sketched the characteristics of 14 of his friends, provided many moments of genuine musical inspiration, of which the fifth and tenth variations were notable examples. Ireland's work was murky and hollow. The long suite by Williams, apparently the major item of the evening, had measures of beauty in it but not nearly enough of them to mitigate the many more measures of ugliness and tedium.

Knowing that the orchestra is playing Brahms instead of Williams tonight in Springfield makes the disappointment all the keener. One feels that a wait of a whole year for this superlative group of musicians is not sufficiently rewarded by the program we heard. It is unjust to college students, who should have every opportunity to hear the best of [illegible] it is like- [illegible] have

---

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JAN 22 1946

BOSTON ORCHESTRA AT SMITH COLLEGE

Sir Adrian Boult Conducts Famed Symphony—Williams's Music for 'Job Masque' Is Feature of Program

By VICTOR PRAHL

Northampton, Jan. 21—The Boston Symphony orchestra, with its distinguished guest conductor, Sir Adrian Boult, was heard in a concert devoted entirely to the works of English composers on the Smith college series tonight. The first half, the same as will be played on the Community concert at Springfield tomorrow night, consisted of Henry Purcell's "Trumpet Tune and Ayre," John Ireland's "The Forgotten Rite," and the "Enigma Variations" by Sir Edward Elgar. The longest and in certain respects the most interesting composition was that of the versatile and gifted Vaughn Williams whose "Job, a Masque for Dancing in Nine Scenes" occupied the second half.

Although inspired by William Blake's set of black and white engravings for the "Book of Job," the composer has not attempted to follow literally the order or the content of the poet's designs, but rather to give a musical expression to their religious, spiritual and dramatic aspects, in relation to a stage presentation. Fortunately the program carried directions for the ballet, which was of help in following the different scenes.

It is an impressive score, vigorously dynamic, vital, dramatic and at times exalted. Its musical substance is rich, varied, and one is struck with its originality. Yet, played in its entirety as a symphonic work, it is long and tedious and cries for the visual pageantry which is intended to go with it (it was danced by the Denishawn dancers at the Lewissohn stadium in 1931). The dignified "Saraband of the Sons of God" of the opening scene, and the "Pavane of the Sons of the Morning" were pages of glorious music, superbly realized by the composer, as well as the orchestra in performance.

Sir Adrian is the tallest conductor of the season and decidedly English of mien. As a conductor he is modest and gentle, achieving the desired results with a minimum of gesture, further proof that it is not necessary to wear oneself out if the orchestra understands the technic involved. He has a decisive beat, and is conservative with his left hand, using it from time to time to reinforce the down beat or to achieve a bit of color. That the gentlemen of the orchestra understood him was evident in one of the most finished performances we have heard in some time. And we understand that the difficult "Job" score was new to them. Although this work was a heavy dose for many in the audience, they rewarded the gifted conductor and the orchestra with enthusiastic and obviously sincere applause.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

JAN 23 1946

Guest Conductor Leads Symphony At Springfield

(By a Staff Writer)

Sir Adrian Boult, conductor of the British Broadcasting Corp. orchestra, was guest conductor at the concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Springfield municipal auditorium last night. The concert was the second in the community series sponsored by the Springfield Junior league.

Appropriately, the first half of the program consisted of the works of three English composers. The second half was devoted to Brahms' symphony No. 1 in C minor. The combination was very satisfying, and the performance was, as one always expects from this orchestra, superb.

It was refreshing to hear the English music that is not often played by orchestras visiting this area. Opening with Purcell's Trumpet Tune and Air, arranged by Leslie Woodgate, Sir Adrian led the orchestra precisely through the bright but stately measures that were originally written for the harpsichord.

Then followed a sharp contrast in "The Forgotten Rite", by John Ireland. Whereas the first piece had something of the martial beef-eater about it, this pastoral work was frankly mystic, combining the strident weirdness that one senses in pagan Stonehenge with a sweet melodic line.

Further variety was provided in the Elgar "Variations on an Original Theme", in which the composer wittily describes in musical terms his wife, himself, and twelve friends. This is clever program music, and the orchestra under its guest conductor brought out all the composer's versatility and charm.

Of the Brahms symphony one can say only that it is a privilege to hear the Boston orchestra play one of the great musical works of all time. Our ear is not acute enough to know to what extent the performance was different under Sir Adrian's baton than it would have been under Dr. Koussevitzky's. The remarkable wealth of melody was all there, undulating and weaving through the various instrumental sections, and nothing more stirring can be imagined than the oboe solo or the dearly loved chorale. There is no lovelier work of music than a Brahms symphony, and we do not think any orchestra can play it better than the Boston symphony.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

Boult Enjoys American Tour

Finds Food Plenty Compared With England's Scanty Rations; Clothing Shortage Acute

Food is "still horribly drab and short in England and new clothes are almost impossible to get," asserted Sir Adrian Boult, guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, during an interview here this morning. Sir Adrian who will conduct the orchestra when it plays at the Community Concert this evening spent the morning conducting a rehearsal at the Auditorium of the 105 men and one woman who make up the orchestra.

"Bread and potatoes are the only food commodities which are not rationed in England," commented Sir Adrian who came to this country from London shortly after Christmas. "We get one egg a month and a few bananas every two months. We never see a grapefruit and our butter ration is very slim. If we are lucky, we may get two chops a week. There's a lot of sausage in the market, but it is made largely of bread."

Sir Adrian said that one's clothes ration for a year is exhausted through the purchase of one suit and a shirt. Coats, ties, socks and handkerchieves can't be bought for another year. One finds that his wardrobe gets pretty short in view of such stringent rationing, he commented.

He said tht the food rationing is especially hard on the people in the cities. Those in the country district who have a few hens and who raise vegetables, are better off.

There is tremendous interest in music in England, Sir Adrian pointed out. During the war, he said, people weren't able to play golf and indulge in other sports and so remained at home and "cultivated an interest in music." he believes that radio did much before the war to lay the foundation for this growing musical interest. Small towns are asking for more musical attractions now than ever before, he declared.

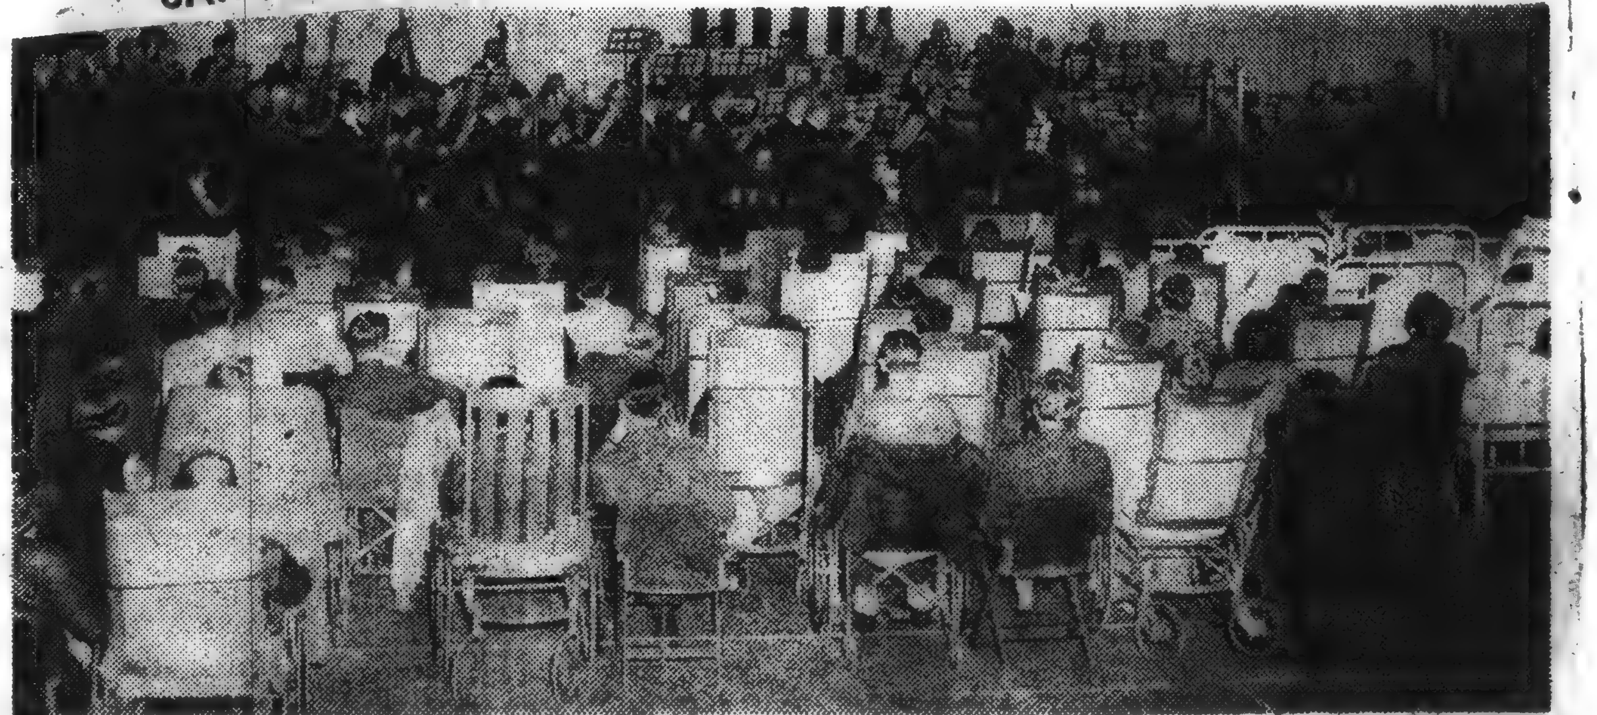
Sir Adrian, who is the director of the BBC orchesetra and who has conducted the London Symphony and the London Philharmonic, is a tall, lean gentleman with a quiet, decisive manner. He says that he is greatly enjoying taking the Boston Symphony on tour and regards it as "one of the world's finest orchestras."

"It was very exciting playing at Smith College last evening," he said. "Smith College students are so responsive."

He expects to return to England at the close of his three weeks' tour with the Boston Symphony. He has directed other orchestras in this country, but this is the first time that he has been on tour with the Boston group.

This Clipping From
FRAMINGHAM, MASS.
NEWS

JAN 23 1946



WOUNDED VETS AT SYMPHONY CONCERT—The 120 members of the famous Boston Symphony orchestra on the stage ot Cushing General hospital gym Friday night in the 500th concert given by members of the orchestra to army and navy hospitals during the past year, while wounded veterans in wheel chairs and on hospital beds listen with great interest.

[74]

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JAN 2 3 1946

Boston Symphony Pleases Capacity Audience Here

Famous Orchestra Is Directed by Sir Adrian Boult, British Conductor

The Community Concert Association and its perennial attraction, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, regularly offer the music lovers of Springfield a program of the finest caliber. Last night's performance before the usual capacity audience in the Municipal Auditorium was notable in that it offered the orchestra under the direction, for the first time here, of Sir Adrian Boult, the distinguished British conductor, who devoted the first half of the program to the works of his countrymen.

The Brahms First Symphony (C Minor) was given a glowing reading to conclude a program that made braving the cold weather well worth while. Both the orchestra and Sir Adrian were warmly greeted by the audience and, at the end, given an ovation that might ordinarily have required an encore to another program, less well organized.

Sir Adrian, lknown hitherto in these parts only through his BBC broadcasting and Victor recording fame, chose to open the evening with the Leslie Woodgate arrangement of the Henry Purcell "Trumpet Tune and air." It was not only dfelightful music. It was a neat bit of programming, providing our customary latecomers a change to be seated without interrupting the continuity of a symphony or concerto. The trumpet soloist drew applause even from the grateful conductor. He deserved it.

The John Ireland Prelude, "The Forgotten Rite," was a remarkable piece of tone painting while the Elgar "Variations on an Original Theme," known as the "Engima" Variations were as delightful as they were unfamiliar. Intended to sktech friends of the composers, they possess charity, clarity and a quiet humor. The orchestra gave the conductor unfailing support in his unostentatious, authoritative conducting. It was, indced, a treat to hear this good music. Too many of our visiting orchestras coast along the tried and tattered three "B's".

The Boult interpretation of the Brahms symphony was a rewarding one, though for some, it may have been more subdued than the Koussevitzky reading. Sir Adrian seemed content to let the music speak for itself. He resorted rarely to those thunderous fortissimos that are the delight of the regular conductor. Yet the Brahms had a unity and inner fire that were enhanced by his felicitous choice of tempos. The andante of the first movement was just that, while the exalted notes of the chorale in the final movement were sublime indeed.

Sir Adrian conducts easily, without the posturings of the ballet school, yet with the authority of a man who knows a good orchestra and how to get the most from it. The tall, balding Britisher who resembles Sir Thomas Beecham, minus the goatee, was a welcome visitor to the city. While the titled Britisher seems now an unlikely candidate for the Koussevitzky post, the orchestra deserves a director at least as gifted as he.

Last night, the audience balloted on concert choices for next season. Vladimir Horowitz comes Feb. 19.

J. D. D.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JAN 2 3 1946

Symphony Draws Capacity Crowd

The Community Concert Association and its perennial attraction, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, regularly offer the music lovers of Springfield a program of the finest caliber. Last night's performance before the usual capacity audience in the Municipal Auditorium was notable in that it offered the orchestra under the direction, for the first time here, of Sir Adrian Boult, the distinguished British conductor, who devoted the first half of the program to the works of his countrymen.

The Brahms First Symphony (C Minor) was given a glowing reading to conclude a program that made braving the cold weather well worth while. Both the orchestra and Sir Adrian were warmly greeted by the audience and, at the end, given an ovation that might ordinarily have required an encore to another program, less well organized.

Sir Adrian, lknown hitherto in these parts only through his BBC broadcasting and Victor recording fame, chose to open the evening with the Leslie Woodgate arrangement of the Henry Purcell "Trumpet Tune and air." It was not only dfelightful music. It was a neat bit of programming, providing our customary latecomers a change to be seated without interrupting the continuity of a symphony or concerto. The trumpet soloist drew applause even from the grateful conductor. He deserved it.

The John Ireland Prelude, "The Forgotten Rite," was a remarkable piece of tone painting while the Elgar "Variations on an Original Theme," known as the "Engima" Variations were as delightful as they were unfamiliar. Intended to sktech friends of the composers, they possess charity, clarity and a quiet humor. The orchestra gave the conductor unfailing support in his unostentatious, authoritative conducting. It was, indced, a treat to hear this good music. Too many of our visiting orchestras coast along the tried and tattered three "B's".

The Boult interpretation of the Brahms symphony was a rewarding one, though for some, it may have been more subdued than the Koussevitzky reading. Sir Adrian seemed content to let the music speak for itself. He resorted rarely to those thunderous fortissimos that are the delight of the regular conductor. Yet the Brahms had a unity and inner fire that were enhanced by his felicitous choice of tempos. The andante of the first movement was just that, while the exalted notes of the chorale in the final movement were sublime indeed.

Sir Adrian conducts easily, without the posturings of the ballet school, yet with the authority of a man who knows a good orchestra and how to get the most from it. The tall, balding Britisher who resembles Sir Thomas Beecham, minus the goatee, was a welcome visitor to the city. While the titled Britisher seems now an unlikely candidate for the Koussevitzky post, the orchestra deserves a director at least as gifted as he.

Last night, the audience balloted on concert choices for next season. Vladimir Horowitz comes Feb. 19.

J. D. D.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JAN 2 3 1946

Boston Symphony Orchestra Here With Sir Adrian Boult On Podium

Each year brings the Boston Symphony to delight subscribers to the Community Concert series. Last evening's concert in the Municipal Auditorium was one of the more unusual in recent years in that it was one of the few not conducted by Serge Koussevitzky.

The guest conductor, Sir Adrian Boult, chose a program comprising a pleasant blend of the more and less familiar from the orchestral repertoire, the first half being devoted to English composers.

The orchestra was superb as we are accustomed to find it and it was an interesting experience to hear the subtle differences resulting from a change in conductor. Starting with Henry Purcell's "Trumpet Tune and Air," arranged by Leslie Woodgate, a sprightly and vigorous melody which affords an opportunity for the D trumpet to come to the fore, the program continued with the lovely and imaginative prelude of John Ireland, "The Forgotten Rite."

Sir Edward Elgar's "Enigma Variations" which have not been heard here in recent years gave charm and lightness to the program. Sir Adrian extracted from them every bit of the affectionate humor which is suggested in the program notes.

Concluding the program with Brahms' first Symphony in C Minor, the orchestra played with simplicity and grace which are admirable in themselves, but were mainly interesting because of the absence of that dynamic drive that has seemed usual on other occasions.

Whether it is Sir Adrian's British reserve or a certain unfamiliarity with the musical and spiritual resources of the orchestra is an open question. In any case, last evening's performance showed us a different but equally admirable Boston Symphony.

Voting for next year's artists took place during intermission and the program listed the next concert on February 19 when Vladimir Horowitz, pianist, will be presented.

R. L. D.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JAN 2 3 1946

Finds Bassoon Playing Is Full Time Job With Boston Symphony

In last night's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the second row from the back, directly in front of Sir Adrian Bault, the conductor, was the only woman player among more than 100 men comprising this peer of musical organizations. She was Anne de Guichard of Boston, one of the most proficient bassoon players living today. Fo r nearly 20 years now, two with the present organization, she has been playing the bassoon, one of the most difficult of instruments to master.

The bassoon is a double reed instrument, bass member of the oboe family, with an air passage eight feet long, made possible through the folding back of half the instrument. The mouthpiece has a diameter of only three-sixteenths of an inch with a one and three-fourths inch bell on the other end. There are seven holes and from 16 to 19 keys to play. The fingering is very intricate and difficult and the player must rely on ear to keep in tune. The bassoon was a favorite with all the old masters, Beethoven, Bach, Mozart and Weber all having written one or more concertos for this instrument.

Asked if she ever played a bassoon concerto with orchestra, Miss de Guichard replied: "No, I never have and do not want to, as I do not care to do solo work." Asked further if she would recommend bassooon playing as a career for a young girl, she said: "No, it takes too long to become proficient, and furthermore, when proficiency is once attained, it is a nerve-racking job to keep on being proficient." Asked if she did anything else for a living besides playing the bassoon she said: "Ha, playing for the Boston Symphony is a full-time job, there is hardly a moment for anything else." Asked about a hobby, she said she was interested in Egyptology. Whether this meant collecting old mummies or what, the inquiring photographer forgot to ask.

Anyway, he thinks she was not only a very pleasant and interesting woman to meet, but she also is a very brave woman, for after the performance, when the men of the orchestra were downstairs putting on their street clothes and were all in a more or less state of undress, Miss de Guichard pulled her bassoon into five pieces, put them away in her trunk, and midst the good-natured "yoo hoos" of a hundred males walked right through them out of the building. Just before leaving she shook hands with the inquiring reporter, said she enjoyed her stay in Springfield and hoped all would meet again.

ANNE DE GUICHARD

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

JAN 2 3 1946

New Prokofieff Work Presented by String Quartet

By ELENA DE SAYN.

With some changes in its personnel, the Chamber Music Guild String Quartet presented a noteworthy American premiere of Prokofieff's "String Quartet, No. 2, Op. 92" last night at the Statler Hotel. The performance surpassed their previous appearances by the truly professional character of their playing, perfection of ensemble and attention to details. The artists, Mishel Piastro and Harold Kohon, violins; Leon Frengut, viola, and Isadore Gusikoff, cello, were assisted in the presentation of Schumann's "Quintet" in the second half of the program by Shirley Effenbach, pianist and 1944 guild audition winner.

It was with much interest that one looked forward to hearing the latest opus, in this form, from the ingenious pen of Soviet Russia's foremost composer. His last, "Symphony No. 5, Op. 100," received its American and Washington premiere only recently, being played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The dissimilarity of the two works was already apparent in the opening measures, the vigorous and robust beginning of which unmistakably suggested its national character. If the symphony, international in scope, dealt "with the spirit of men," the quartet, full of bold dissonnance, suggested chaotic realism, expressed in broad, detached strokes of the bow.

The most appealing movement of the four was, possibly, the second, with its plaintive theme in the cello, and later by the entire ensemble, with tenderness and sympathy. Breaking into a reckless dance, with the first violin taking prominence, the players excelled in teamwork, giving their full-hearted support in the spirited pizzicato accompaniment and bouncing effects of the bow. Bizzare harmonies, with a quaint tinge of the Orient and the lovely cadenza for the cello in the fourth movement, awakened sufficient interest in the work to invite further study and another opportunity to hear it.

The recital was concluded by an artistic performance of Schumann's celebrated opus for strings and piano, in which Miss Effenbach's sensitive nuances added to the beauty of the work. Excellently schooled and developed musically beyond her years, Miss Effenbach gave a notable reading to the exacting piano part, which she played with artistic restraint and a touch which impressed by its lovely quality.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JAN 2 3

Springfield Union Photo

AND ONE WOMAN—When Boston Symphony Orchestra, which played here last night and which is described as being composed of [illegible] men and one woman, is mentioned, everyone wonders how the woman got in. Well, here's Miss Anne De Guichard, who is now in her third season with the famed orchestra and who stays on because she is one of the best instrumentalists in the country. She plays the bassoon, with which she is pictured, the alto saxophone and the piano.

News Ja 25

Flaw in Stravinsky is Found In Unintelligible Sentiment

by Dr. G. K. Daghlian

[illegible] ordinary music, considered objectively, can be analyzed into the following three elements: sequence of notes of same or different pitch, varied duration of [illegible] and pauses between and varied intensity of notes. What we [illegible] in this, are agreeable [illegible] notes, [illegible] contrasted to noise or [illegible].

[illegible] other, the above [illegible] variations of objective physical nature do produce certain subjective sensations [illegible] listener by virtue of which [illegible] is declared good or bad, [illegible] a disagreeable. How [illegible] sensations are [illegible] by the simple tangible [illegible] stated above is not [illegible] physicist to try and answer.

Use of Percussion

[illegible] substitute in the [illegible] schemes noise or percussion [illegible] agreeable notes, the [illegible] will be a production of which Capriccio is an excellent example. This statement must be [illegible] exclusively. Everybody knows that in standard music occasionally noise or percussion take the place of regular notes. Likewise in Capriccio not all the notes are noise or percussion [illegible].

Going into the realm of parables, a good tool of a teacher, agreeable musical notes can be likened to a flock of lambs, and it is easy to conduct and manipulate them. Noise and percussion can be likened to wolves, lions, and leopards and the person who undertakes to guide and manipulate a pack of them has a real hard job.

So I expect that the composition of music like Capriccio must be very difficult compared to ordinary music. And the performance of the same must be even harder.

I see in this music the picture of Soviet Russia's attitude towards the outside world in the late twenties. At that time USSR was very sensitive to any outsider poking into her affairs, or even turning a glance in her direction. Such outside intrusions were met with sharp resentment, very much like lions or polar bears who would grunt loudly at any intruder. I kept hearing such grunts so masterfully produced by the various musical instruments through the entire performance.

Audience's Reaction

According to the above analysis, Capriccio cannot be evaluated by emotional and sentimental reactions in the listener. These would be noted for their absence. A poll among the listeners would likely show that they did not like it, that it was synchronized and organized noise, etc.

Due to the flexibility to human nature, people can and shall learn to tolerate or even enjoy music like this if they are exposed to it long enough. Our Mr. Quimby has said just this in his article in the News.

But to my mind Stravinsky's product and others like it that may follow are not intended for our sentiments and feelings. I don't believe that music of this type will ever draw tears from the listeners. People will admire the workmanship exhibited in it like when we stand face to face with a radar equipment, even when we understand it.

Boston Symphony Orchestra is Lauded for Fine Performance

by Rita Hursh '48

The Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky paid their annual visit to Connecticut college on January 9. The subscribers look forward to this concert more perhaps than to any other, and they have never been disappointed. This year was no exception. Once again the listener was conscious of the greatness of Koussevitzky, the conductor: greatness in his deep emotional insight into the various styles of music; greatness in his ability to convey this understanding to the musicians of the orchestra.

Program Balanced

The program itself was very well balanced, a characteristic of Koussevitzky's programs. The Bach Overture (Suite) No. 3 was presented first. This Overture, so called because of the importance of the first movement, is really a suite consisting also of an Air, two Gavottes, Bourree, and Gigue. With the exception of the grave overture, the work is light, but as always in Bach, the lightness is devoid of frivolity. It is a happiness of the soul rather than an external one. The familiar Air was presented in all its loveliness by the strings. The intense singing of the unison violins against a background of soft downward plucking is indeed one of the most inspiring experiences in all music.

Koussevitzky is well known as a pioneer in presenting modern works and has many first performances to his credit. The second work on the program was one of these modern compositions, the Stravinsky Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra with Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist. The work itself is a product of the later Stravinsky, a far cry from the tone color of The Firebird and Petrouchka. The neoclassicism in this composition naturally results in heated controversy. A piano concerto in free form, the string quartet is used as part of the accompanying orchestra. There are no pauses between movements, giving it a driving quality. There are constantly changing rhythms, fragmentary themes, and several dialogues between the soloist and other members of the orchestra. Whether one prefers this style or not, he could not fail to recognize the brilliance and sincerity of the performance on Tuesday night. Soloist, conductor, and orchestra were in perfect coordination, for exact timing is essential in the execution of this work. In the piano solo there is more demand for technique than for feeling, and mastery of technique is Sanroma's forte.

The piece de resistance of the evening was the Symphony No. 4 by Brahms. This extremely popular composition was given a dynamic interpretation by Koussevitzky. No matter how often one hears Brahms, he never loses consciousness of the power of this composer — and the mystery. Brahms' music never is lowered to the level of banality; it is the music of life of which we never grow tired. There are always the eternal questions of life and death, the endless struggles toward truth and beauty; questions and struggles that are fearful and yet fascinating. In the 4th Symphony as in his other works there is constant movement, usually an undercurrent below the melody. In the first movement this is especially impressive with the dialogue between the strings and woodwinds above the surging of the accompaniment. The second movement was extremely moving as presented by the orchestra. Here again is the distinctive Brahms melody, a long flowing line, simple and yet impressive. The following third movement was vigorous and light, a contrast to the slow movement. The final movement, a passacaglia, contains a basic motive of power, a scale passage sounded triumphantly at first in the bass and then taken by various voices. Brahms was the first to use this form in a symphony, and it is well suited to a final movement where the reiteration of the basic theme gives unity to the composition.

See "Symphony"—Page 5

Harold Stein

Sir Adrian Boult

Guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the last three weeks of January.

Stravinsky Indicates a Spirit Of Great Change in Our Day

by Arthur W. Quimby

You didn't like the "Capriccio" which the Boston Orchestra played the other night? The performance was exciting but you did not understand the music? Too dissonant, no form, just noise—is that it? And yet you suspect that there may be something in it if only you had the right approach, so you have asked me to write something which might help you in understanding Stravinsky and perhaps give you a point of view regarding modern music. Is that right? Well, I could do a better job if you were here in Holmes hall where I could illustrate certain points at the piano, but I will do what I can with the printed word.

World Changing

Let me start with a few general statements. The first of these is that the world is in a constant state of change. Not even our concepts of truth and right remain absolutely fixed, and only stagnation would result if they were. This state of change is certainly evident to you young people of 1946 when the whole world is seething around us in a series of cataclysmic eruptions which may well give birth to a new world in our day.

Music Reflects Times

Now if the music of our day is to have any validity it must somehow reflect these changes or at least express the spirit behind them. I remember hearing in 1929 a program of new works by a young Frenchman, and yet every one of them was modeled on works of Debussy written thirty or more years before and the effect was one of utter futility. No creation can result from mere imitation, no matter how worthy the model. The composer must write of today; if he does not, then he becomes that most tragic of human beings, the man who has lived beyond his time (witness Richard Strauss).

The next general statement is that the truly creative artist must be in advance of his time and will probably not be widely appreciated by his contemporaries. Listen to what Gyrowetz said when he bought the new Opus 59 quartets by Beethoven—"Pity to have wasted the money." Or Radicati, an Italian violinist, to Beethoven about the same quartets—"Surely you do not consider these works to be music?" Or the critics of Wagner—"He has no melody." Or Gounod of the Franck symphony—"The affirmation of incompetence pushed to dogmatic lengths." We smile commiseratingly; but beware lest the next generation look at you in the same way. Yes, the leader must be in advance of his time and we as educated people must try to understand him.

Close to Modern Music

Two other statements now, with apologies to you in Music 9 for the repetition. First, it is exceedingly difficult to appraise justly the worth of any modern work, because we are to close to it. Certainly not all modern works are great, and many a sincere critic has failed to distinguish the great from the near great in his day. Second, no one has a right to a final opinion until he knows well the work in question. I often quote the words of Theodore Thomas, that "Popular Music is Familiar Music." Stated in another way, no music of importance ever reveals itself completely to the listener at first hearing. If it did he would soon tire of it. He must know a work well, whether it is old or new, before he likes it with comprehension, and particularly is this true in modern music where so many unfamiliar devices are present.

See "Music"—Page 4

With all this in mind let us look at Stravinsky. Cut off by the revolution, he was forced to sever his connection with his native Russia and take up his home in France. Once more dislodged by war, he has now come to this country where he has, in the last days of 1945, become a citizen with us. His music falls into two periods, the first largely composed of ballets based on the colorful life of Russia, and the second referred to as neo-classic because it returns for its style to the 18th century where form takes precedence over expression.

You say that his music is too dissonant, harsh, only noise. Well, harmony has changed through the ages, and it is still changing. Time was when our staff of life, the major third, was not admitted as a concord but was considered offensive to the ear. But the major triad came nevertheless, then seventh chords, the chromaticism of the 19th century, new chords of Debussy, then the more biting sonorities of the 20th century and even on occasion more than one harmony at the same time. Stravinsky's harmonies are not new; they are extensions of the old.

Basic Forms Present

But you also say that there is no form in this modern stuff. My answer is that the forms of the 18th and 19th centuries are obviously not present in their pure form, but that the basic proced-

---

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

JAN 25 1946

LEONARD LYONS

Loose-Leaf Notebook

New York, Jan. 24.—Sir Herbert Morrison was discussing the Labor government with a group of American political writers, economists and diplomats. He heard them offer explanations of why the Labor Party had won in Britain . . . "You must bear in mind," Morrison told them, "that not all the people who voted for us were Socialists. Many of them weren't. This is why they voted for us," said Morrison. "They wanted more State control and less Government interference."

Patrick J. Hurley

Col. Frank Clark, who is Churchill's host in Miami Beach, has taken every precaution against harm befalling the former Prime Minister. He's even had the cocoanuts cut from the palm trees at his estate, to prevent the possibility of any dropping on his guest's head . . . Chiang Kai-shek gave a birthday party for former Ambassador Pat Hurley in Washington last week. The generalissimo cabled his embassy to give the party and charge it to him.

When General Eisenhower was based in Frankfurt, he had a number of disagreements with Marshal Zukhov. The Soviet marshal sometimes made demands which Eisenhower considered unreasonable, said things which perhaps he should not have said, or did things which were regrettable. Some of Eisenhower's advisers suggested that he meet these actions by withdrawing, by canceling scheduled meetings with the marshal, etc. "We finally got along fine, because I disregarded this advice," Eisenhower later reported. "Otherwise I'd have been widening the breach, which only would have made it tougher eventually for us to get together. My job was to effect cooperation. By keeping the breach as narrow as possible, I made it easier."

Drew Pearson is writing a book for fall publication, to be called "The Washington Merry-Go-Round Goes Round Again." Simon & Schuster will publish it . . . Gen. Skinny Wainwright may take a new command in the Southwest . . . Robert Briffault, the author of "Europa," who was sent to a concentration camp by the Nazis, emerged alive and now is en route to America with his wife. They will live in Connecticut . . . Melvyn Douglas will record Aaron Copland's "Abraham Lincoln," with Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony, for Victor records. The screen star-producer also will do a radio series for Squibbs.

While Herman Mankiewicz was writing the screen play for the Lou Gehrig picture "Pride of the Yankees," he stayed at his office until 9 p. m. one night, finishing a scene needed for the next day's shooting. Then he received a phone call from Variety, about an unpaid bill intended for his brother. This phone conversation lasted for 10 minutes. As soon as it was over, the phone rang again. The caller was Sam Goldwyn, the producer, who had been getting a busy signal. Mankiewicz explained that the line had been busy because of a petty matter . . . "Herman, you've worked so hard on this picture, and you've been so cooperative," said Goldwyn, "that I think I should do something for you." . . . "Yes?" said the writer, in eager anticipation . . . "To show you how I feel about you," said Goldwyn, "I'll take the phone out of your office."

[76]

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR JAN. 26 1946

Vaughan Williams' 'Job' Music–

'Masque for Dancing' Has First Boston Performance

By L. A. Sloper

The British musical tradition was emphasized again in Sir Adrian Boult's program for the fourteenth pair of Boston Symphony concerts, the first of which was given in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. Three British pieces were performed for the first time in Boston: Walton's "Scapino" Overture, Purcell's Trumpet Tune and Air as arranged by Leslie Woodgate, and Vaughan Williams' "Job: A Masque for Dancing," founded on Blake's Illustrations to The Book of Job. The other item on the list was Haydn's Symphony in D major, No. 86.

William Walton's Comedy Overture, "Scapino," was written about a character of the "Commedia dell'arte," but like his "Portsmouth Point" Overture it is Hogarthian in spirit and style; lively, noisy, and perhaps over-orchestrated. Purcell's Trumpet Tune and Air and Woodgate's arrangement of it are faithful to the memory of the seventeenth century and the pomp and circumstance of the Stuart period.

* * *

Vaughan Williams' "Job" is representative of other and simpler English traits which have their roots deep in English history, traits of the people themselves, their sturdiness of character and their devotional fervor. Ralph Vaughan Williams is the chief musical spokesman in modern times for this tradition. His use of the modal style is singularly suited to the expression of this spirit, and particularly to the tonal picturing of William Blake's Illustrations to The Book of Job.

This score was written to accompany a dance presentation, and such performances have been given in London and New York. Often, music written for use in the theater loses its meaning and its appeal in the concert hall. Not so with this work, which makes a powerful impression both as a musical embodiment of Blake's engravings and as music. Not only the harmonies but the musical material and the contrapuntal texture engage and hold the attention.

Especially moving are the Introduction, with the Pastoral Dance and Saraband of the Sons of God; the Minuet of the Sons and Daughters of Job, Job's Dream, Elihu's Dance of Youth and Beauty, the Pavane of the Heavenly Host, the Galliard of the Sons of the Morning, the Altar Dance and Heavenly Pavane, and the Epilogue. The score is not of equal value throughout. Satan's Dance of Triumph, for example, and some of the other measures descriptive of violence, are theatrical. But the total effect is eloquent.

* * *

Since Dr. Koussevitzky, by report, feels little affinity to the music of Vaughan Williams, we are fortunate to hear this score from Sir Adrian, to whom the composer dedicated it. He secured a magnificent performance, making full use of the willing co-operation of the superb orchestra.

Sir Adrian also gave great pleasure to his audience with the Haydn Symphony in D major, which he played with an orchestra reduced to chamber size, to the benefit of the music. Haydn differs from most composers in never having written anything that wasn't good, but this symphony taken as a whole is not one of his best efforts. The first movement is not of plenary inspiration, and the Capriccio could be more enchanting; but the Trio of the Minuetto has charm and the Finale is a swiftly variegated delight, Mozartean in flavor. Sir Adrian gave it the right style, and the orchestra played it with a marvelous unanimity and expressiveness.

RDAY, JANUARY 26, 1

MUSIC

BOSTON HERALD

Symphony Concert

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The 14th regular concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Sir Adrian Boult conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows:

"Scapino," a Comedy Overture...Walton
Symphony in D major No. 86......Haydn
Trumpet Tune and Air, arranged by Leslie Woodgate ......Purcell
"Job, A Masque for Dancing" ......Vaughan Williams

This concert began better than it ended. Walton's is probably the freshest and most vigorous talent in England today. His "Scapino" Overture is brisk, bustling and witty music. It is thoroughly alive and very easy to enjoy even at a first hearing. I should think it would make fairly regular appearances on orchestral programs. This attractive new piece was followed by one of those Haydn symphonies which abound in happy and original turns of invention. It was an unalloyed delight. Sir Adrian conducted it with reduced orchestra, a beautifully neat and clean performance.

Purcell's Trumpet Tune and Air turned out to be a short and cheerful piece arranged for orchestra from a book of harpsichord pieces. Mr. Mager, the veteran trumpeter of the Boston Symphony, acquitted himself admirably and was singled out by Sir Adrian for special applause.

Vaughan Williams as a composer has never greatly thrilled me, which I am free to admit is very possibly an aesthetic deficiency. I cannot bring myself to string along with the late Lawrence Gilman who went completely overboard over this "Job" music to the extent of writing two lengthy and ecstatic reviews in the daily Herald Tribune on it when it was played 10 years ago. On the other hand I have a higher opinion of Vaughan Williams than had A. E. Housman. An officious friend played him some records of Vaughan Williams' settings of some of his verses and was obliged to report: "I was oblivious of the effect until two of them had been played, and then turning in my chair I beheld a face wrought and flushed with torment, a figure tense and bolt upright as though in an extremity of controlling pain or anger, or both."

There are fine and imaginative passages in these depictions of the Blake illustrations to the Book of Job. There are many pages of evocative beauty. But equally there are monotonous pages. Some of the scenes seem to have been extended merely to fit the action on the stage. A little of the music sounds trite. It is in no sense a difficult score to grasp at a first hearing, for Vaughan Williams is no Berg or Bartok. In fact I found it hard to keep my attention from wandering. It is possible that the composer's lack of rhythmic vitality is the reason for this, for one expects that quality in music designed for the dance. Whatever the cause, I was disappointed in the work as a whole.

The concert will be repeated tonight. Next week Sir Adrian will conduct Bax's "Tintagel," Mozart's Symphony in D major known as the "Prague" and Holst's "The Planets."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JAN 26 1946

RACHMANINOFF CONCERT

Boston Symphony Will Launch Benefit Series Here Feb. 12

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, with Vladimir Horowitz, pianist, as assisting artist, on Tuesday evening, Feb. 12, will give the first of a series of concerts at Carnegie Hall by leading orchestras as benefits for the Rachmaninoff Fund, Inc., The proceeds will be used to assist young American pianists, conductors and composers who aspire to professional careers.

The Lincoln's Birthday concert will include Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait," with Melvyn Douglas as narrator; Mr. Horowitz playing Rachmaninoff's Third Piano Concerto in D minor and the orchestra offering Tchaikovsky's Sixth (Pathétique) Symphony in B minor.

A few tickets still are available, at $10, $15 and $20 each, at the Burden Littell Bureau, Bonwit Teller. The Chicago Symphony Orchestra will give a similar concert in the near future.

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
CHRONICLE

JAN 27 1946

RACHMANINOFF: THE ISLAND OF THE DEAD. Recorded by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Three 12-inch records in album: $3.63. Victor set No. 1024.

PERHAPS it would take a social psychologist to explain why, in the early years of the 20th century, so many composers turned to somber, long-drawn, romantic meditations on death. The persistence of this sort of thing in Rachmaninoff, Mahler, Sibelius and others of their time might be explained from the music historians' point of view on the ground that these men, creative to a degree but not freely or totally creative, were under the pall of Wagner, Brahms, Tchaikowsky, and other 19th century giants just behind them, but this is far from a complete analysis of their case.

Anyhow, it remains that such themes are very common in the period 1900-15, and "The Island of the Dead" is one of the foremost examples of this tendency. It is one of Rachmaninoff's best works—somber, rich, luxurious, at its heart only feebly creative, but brought off with impeccable craftsmanship. That last clause applies also to Koussevitzky's performance.

This Clipping From
HOLLYWOOD, CALIF.
CITIZEN NEWS

JAN 26 1946

in "Something's Going to Henry," KNX at 6. . . . radium substitute, discussed over KNX at 6:30. . . . Sir Adrian Boult directs the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Vaughan Williams' "Job" and the Purcell-Woodgate "Trumpet Tune and Air," KECA at 6:30

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
CALL

JAN 27 1946

Realm of Music

Koussevitzky Will Direct Boston Orchestra in Two Concerts at Mosque

By NEAL C. COCCHIA

For Serge Koussevitzky it was either the doub [illegible] ence in the small, central Russian province of Tver. [illegible] lovers, the Russian conductor chose the strange instrument [illegible] preference to the other. Koussevitzky will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in two concerts in the Mosque for Griffith Music Foundation—February 14 and April 11.

There was no musical life in Tver when Koussevitzky was born in 1874, except for small, visiting theatrical companies. His [illegible] opposed a career remote from the experience of their own community, and the son left for the Philharmonic School in Moscow.

In Moscow Koussevitzky found the school term started with a full enrollment and only one scholarship—student for double bass—open for the penniless young applicant. He took it.

In a short time Koussevitzky was able to get a lovely cello-like tone and delicate melody from his huge, cumbersome bass, with its fist-wise bow. This quality was later apparent in his conducting, when he was able to achieve a transcendent tone from a body of strings. He was soon known in Europe as a double-bass virtuoso.

He left the double-bass for the richest of instruments—the hundredfold orchestra—making his first trial in Berlin. He assembled his own orchestra in Moscow, giving a series of concerts there and in St. Petersburg. He chartered a steamer to take the orchestra the entire length of the Volga river, playing the "first symphony concert" for many of his countrymen in provincial towns.

Koussevitzky conducted for a while after the Bolshevist revolution, but left because of restrictions to establish his famed "Concerts Koussevitzky" with his own orchestra in Paris. These concerts, coupled with guest performances in London, broadened his reputation as a conductor in Europe.

This was the conductor who came to America in 1924 to direct the Boston Orchestra, a job he has held for 21 years, covering a quarter of the symphonic unit's history. His brilliance has been proved over this period, testing his scope in new and old music, the extent of his vision and his ability to refine the orchestra into a perfect instrument.

All this was possible because Koussevitzky chose the double-bass—a most fortunate selection.

Ellen Ballon, Canadian pianist, will be soloist with the New Jersey Symphony Orchestra at its third pair of concerts of the current season. The first concert will be given tomorrow night in Orange High School and the second Tuesday night in Mt. Hebron Junior High School, Montclair. Miss Ballon, who made her debut with Walter Damrosch and the New York Symphony when she was 10, will play Chopin's F Minor concerto.

Dr. Frieder Weismann will conduct the orchestra in Violin Concerto in A minor by Bach, with the violin solo played by Mrs. Joan Kelsey, concertmaster. Other selections will be Mozart's G Minor Symphony and the "Witches Dance" and "Waltz" from "Hansel and Gretel" by Humperdinck.

Artur Rubinstein, pianist, has scheduled the following program for his Griffith Music Foundation recital in the Mosque this afternoon:

Sonata, op. 31 No. 3, Allegro, Allegretto vivace, Minuetto, Presto con fuoco .... Beethoven
Carnaval, op. 9 .... Schumann
Ballade G minor, Two Mazurkas, Scherzo op. 39, Berceuse, Valse A flat....Chopin

Notes: The first Jewish opera to be written, "Hechalutz," will be presented in the Newark YM-YWHA next Sunday night. In leading roles of the Jacob Weinberg opera will be Doris Doree, Sidor Belarsky and Nat Spencer. The orchestra and chorus will be directed by Mark Silver . . . The fourth vesper hour in the current series sponsored by Prospect Presbyterian Church of Maplewood will be given this afternoon. Music by Bach and Mozart, written for organ and strings, will be included in the program. Artists will be Isabelle Herziger and Kenneth Deane, violinists; Carl Wegman, violoncellist, and Walter N. Hewitt, organist.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

JAN [illegible] 1946

JUDGE WILKINS ON BOSTON SYMPHONY BOARD

BOSTON (U.P.)— Associate Judge Raymond S. Wilkins of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, only judge ever to lead the Boston Symphony orchestra, ~~has been elected a trustee~~ of the orchestra, it was announced today.

Wilkins, who lives in Winchester, graduated from Harvard university in 1912 and at a 1937 class reunion was persuaded by classmates to conduct the Symphony Players. He is a pianist and an amateur composer.

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Variety is a boon to any musical season and there has been a generous measure of it provided by guest conductors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this Winter. Sir Adrian Boult, who conducted the third concert of the Sunday afternoon series yesterday, in the course of his three weeks. stay here, offers a variation to be valued on the theme of the Boston orchestra.

The visiting English conductor contributes an intelligent, orderly and subtly-detailed leadership, with no apparent superimposing of his personality on the material he presents. In his dealings with Brahms he is polite enough to let Brahms speak for himself.

Sir Adrian's Brahms is unhurried. It is literal in the sense that tempi and dynamics proceed strictly in accordance with the score. It is not colorful. The sonorities are balanced, but not rich. It is painstaking, but not pedestrian.

Conducting with an unopened score, Sir Adrian initiates and registers orchestral detail with precise hands. Facially neither condemns nor congratulates, but his fingers, particularly the left forefinger is quick to modify raggedness. A single motion of the wrist will indicate that a section of the orchestra is tending to be ahead of the beat.

A curious pair of symbolisms constituted the English portion of the program after the Purcell harpsichord air arranged as a pronouncement for trumpet by Leslie Woodgate, Ireland's mystical "The Forgotten Rite" and Elgar's solidly built "Enigma". Variations are both descriptive and deliberately obscure as to explanation, but their music is poles apart. Ireland's prelude deals diffusely with occult matters. Elgar's Variations concern people and are beguilingly melodic.

The Variations, which offer a full challenge to an orchestra whether they are dealing with Gloucester squires or artists in the absorption of an argument, were not evenly performed. There was a bad opening attack from the first violins and there were helter-skelter places which the musicians could have spared themselves by concentrating on their guest conductor's quiet, neat signals. P. W.

Judge Wilkins Named Trustee of Symphony

Justice Raymond S. Wilkins of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, who enjoys nothing better than moments he spends composing at his piano, has been elected a trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The justice, an appointee of former Gov. Leverett Saltonstall, with whom he served in France in World War I, has always regarded music as his second best interest in life. His first, of course, is the law.

The justice is adept at the xylophone as well as the piano. He has done considerable composing. He wrote the score of the show his Harvard class of 1912 gave at its 25th reunion. During the same reunion he was successfully persuaded by his classmates to conduct the Pops Orchestra—and made a hit.

A custom at the Wilkins home in Winchester is for Mr. Wilkins to play the piano in the evening while his wife and their three sons join in singing. Justice Wilkins was appointed to the Supreme Bench in 1940. He was the youngest man ever given that honor.

Symphony trustees also include Philip R. Allen, John Nicholas Brown, Alvan T. Fuller, Jerome D. Green, N. Penrose Hallowell, M. A. DeWolfe Howe, Jacob J. Kaplan, Roger I. Lee, Bentley W. Warren, and Oliver Wolcott. The president is Henry B. Cabot; vice president, Henry B. Sawyer; treasurer, Richard C. Paine.

Wilkins Is Elected Symphony Trustee

Associate Justice Raymond S. Wilkins of the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court has been elected a Trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He is a resident of Winchester. He plays the piano and the xylophone and composed the score for a show performed by his Harvard classmates of 1912, at their 25th reunion.

In World War I, he served in France as Captain in the 301st Massachusetts Field Artillery, the regiment in which Senator Leverett Saltonstall (R) of Massachusetts was a lieutenant.

Keenly interested in military affairs Mr. Justice Wilkins became a specialist in the history of the Civil War, especially from the Confederacy point of view. At the time of his appointment he had nearly completed a book on the subject of Abraham Lincoln.

A good deal of leisure he spends in music at home, with Mrs. Wilkins, the former Mary Louisa Aldrich, and their three sons. He was a member of the Governor's Council under the Saltonstall regime.

This Clipping From
DES MOINES, IA.
TRIBUNE

FEB 1 1946

Sir Adrian Boult, British conductor, will conclude his current series of guest appearances with the Boston Symphony orchestra, 8:30 p. m. Saturday over KRNT-WNAX.

This Clipping From
EDITOR & PUBLISHER
NEW YORK, N. Y.

2 1946

In Defense of Sponsors

BEFORE the Cincinnati Ad Club the other day, Mark Woods, president of American Broadcasting Company, made a defense of commercial sponsorship of symphony, opera, forum and theater programs. Radio's only source of revenue, he said, is the advertiser. And the advertiser directly or indirectly pays the cost of all public service as well as sustaining programs.

"There is nothing immoral, degrading or indecent about commercial sponsorship," he argued. "The Boston Symphony's performance is every bit as excellent when the Allis-Chalmers Company is paying the bill as when ABC signs the check."

This Clipping From
SALEM, MASS.
NEWS

JAN 30 1946

Justice Wilkins Elected Trustee Boston Symphony

Justice Raymond S. Wilkins of Salem, member of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, who enjoys nothing better than moments he spends composing at his piano, has been elected a trustee of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

RAYMOND S. WILKINS

The justice, an appointee of former Gov. Leverett Saltonstall, with whom he served in France in World War One, has always regarded music as his second best interest in life. His first, of course, is the law.

The justice is adept at the xylophone as well as the piano. He has done considerable composing. He wrote the score of the show his Harvard class of 1912 gave at its 25th reunion. During the same reunion he was successfully persuaded by his classmates to conduct the Pops orchestra — and made a hit.

Justice Wilkins was appointed to the Supreme bench in 1940. He was the youngest man ever given that honor.

Symphony trustees also include Philip R. Allen, John Nicholas Brown, Alvan T. Fuller, Jerome D. Green, N. Penrose Hallowell, M. A. DeWolfe Howe, Jacob J. Kaplan, Roger I. Lee, Bentley W. Warren, and Oliver Wolcott. The president is Henry B. Cabot; vice president, Henry B. Sawyer; treasurer, Richard C. Paine.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

FEB 3 1946

Rachmaninoff Fund Concert

A few boxes and a limited number of seats remain to be sold for the benefit concert for the Rachmaninoff Fund, Inc., which the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will give in Carnegie Hall, Tuesday evening, Feb. 12. The concert is the first in a series being given by leading symphonies to raise funds for a contest to discover America's outstanding young pianist.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

FEB 6 - 1946

SYMPHONY COUGHER

Memphis Commercial Appeal

The technicalities of arranging microphones for a satisfactory pickup of a symphony orchestra for broadcast are a sealed mystery to us, but we still wonder if it is necessary to have a cougher within range.

The Philharmonic cougher is one of the subdued but indomitable sort. At every pause in the program, and every time the music is soft, one can hear him or her hacking away. The cougher with the Boston Symphony is a far more aggressive and unpredictable type. One never knows when he will let go, but when he does, it is with clarity, volume and authority. The NBC Symphony doesn't seem to have a cougher, which persuades us to hope that the others can eventually arrange to get along without theirs.

It may be, of course, that the presence of a cougher is intentional, so that the radio listener will feel more as though he were present in the hall. If a change in microphones is impossible, surely the radio chains could furnish cough drops and handkerchiefs.

This Clipping From
BURLINGTON, VT.
NEWS

JAN 30 1946

Judge Is Elected Symphony Trustee

BOSTON. (UP)—Associate Justice Raymond S. Wilkins of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, only judge ever to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been elected a trustee of the orchestra, it was announced today.

Wilkins, who lives in Winchester, graduated from Harvard University in 1912 and at a 1937 class reunion was persuaded by classmates to conduct the symphony players. He is a pianist and an amateur composer.

This Clipping From
ST. ALBANS, VT.
MESSENGER

JAN 31 1946

Judge Is Elected Symphony Trustee

BOSTON. (UP)—Associate Justice Raymond S. Wilkins of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, only judge ever to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been elected a trustee of the orchestra, it was announced today

Wilkins, who lives in Winchester, graduated from Harvard University in 1912 and at a 1937 class reunion was persuaded by classmates to conduct the symphony players. He is a pianist and an amateur composer.

MILLBURN, N.J
ITEM
2/7/46

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will bring his famous Boston Symphony Orchestra to the Mosque Theatre for their annual appearance on two Thursday evenings—February 14th and April 11th, under auspices of the Griffith Music Foundation.

For the first program on February 14th, the orchestra will play compositions of Berlioz, Moussorgsky, Prokofieff, and Cesare Franck.

Before his orchestra stand, Serge Koussevitzky is at one and the same time the engineer who raises the sound-edifice of a modern score, the hypnotizer of crowds imbues them with his own varying emotions, and the teacher who constantly improves the powers of execution of his instrumentalists—for daily drill is, after a fashion, the indispensable prose of music.

For Koussevitzky, symphonic performance is like architectural creation. Starting out with the style of chamber music—that is, focussing his attention on what would be the requirements of a small space—he gradually amplifies the style with respect to conditions of both form and space paying particular attention to details, whether assigned to a flute a single violin, or a group of instruments. He ends by seeming to suggest the dissolution of the three dimensions and the liberation of music from their confining framework in order that it may soar into a space that is limitless.

This Clipping From
WOBURN, MASS.
TIMES

JAN 30 1946

Judge Wilkins Symphony Trustee

Associate Justice Raymond S. Wilkins of the Massachusetts Supreme Court has been elected a trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. His fellow trustees are Philip R. Allen, John Nicholas Brown, Alvan T. Fuller, Jerome D. Green, N. Penrose Hallowell, M. A. De Wolfe Howe, Jacob J. Kaplan, Roger I. Lee, Bentley W. Warren and Oliver Wolcott. The president is Henry B. Cabot; vice-president, Henry B. Sawer; treasurer, Richard C. Paine.

A resident of Winchester, where he is a member of the Country Club, Judge Wilkins spends much of any available leisure in pursuing his musical interests at home with Mrs. Wilkins and their three sons.

N. ARLINGTON, N.J
LEADER
2/7/46

Koussevitzky's Orchestra to Play

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will bring his famous Boston Symphony Orchestra to the Mosque Theatre for their annual appearance on two Thursday evenings—February 13 and April 11, under the auspices of the Griffith Music Foundation.

For the first program on February 14, the orchestra will play compositions of Berlioz, Moussorgsky, Prokofieff, and Cesare Franck.

Before his orchestra stand, Serge Koussevitzky is at one and the same time the engineer who raises the sound-edifice of a modern score, the hypnotizer of crowds who imbues them with his own varying emotions, and the teacher who constantly improves the powers of execution of his instrumentalists—for daily drill is, after a fashion the indispensable prose of music.

For Koussevitzky, symphonic performance is like architectural creation. Starting out with the style of chamber music—that is, focussing his attention on what would be the requirements of a small space—he gradually amplifies that style with respect to conditions of both form and space, paying particular attention to details, whether assigned to a flute, a single violin, or a group of instruments. He ends by seeming to suggest the dissolution of the three dimensions and the liberation of music from their confining framework in order that it may soar into a space that is limitless. When he reaches this point, everything seems inadequate to him, all the units of measurement fall by the wayside, he wishes the music to be breathed forth in ever broader and broader phrases, the resonance to become ever more and more powerful; it is this which explains his characteristic skill in building up climaxes and his attraction towards monumental forms. In this kind of interpretation, one sees how the sensuous lyricism of his youth has become transformed, in the course of the years, into a grand lyrico-dramatic style. One might say that this style, apparently spontaneous but always carefully thought out and at times bearing the impress of meditation and even of pathos, strongly marks the three great schools of the symphony—the Russian, the French and the German—of which he is equally a master.

BOSTON GLOBE -30

Judge Wilkins Named Trustee of Symphony

Justice Raymond S. Wilkins of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, who enjoys nothing better than moments he spends composing at his piano, has been elected a trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The justice, an appointee of former Gov. Leverett Saltonstall, with whom he served in France in World War I, has always regarded music as his second best interest in life. His first, of course, is the law.

The justice is adept at the xylophone as well as the piano. He has done considerable composing. He wrote the score of the show his Harvard class of 1912 gave at its 25th reunion. During the same reunion he was successfully persuaded by his classmates to conduct the Pops Orchestra—and made a hit.

A custom at the Wilkins home in Winchester is for Mr. Wilkins to play the piano in the evening while his wife and their three sons join in singing. Justice Wilkins was appointed to the Supreme Bench in 1940. He was the youngest man ever given that honor.

Symphony trustees also include Philip R. Allen, John Nicholas Brown, Alvan T. Fuller, Jerome D. Green, N. Penrose Hallowell, M. A. DeWolfe Howe, Jacob J. Kaplan, Roger I. Lee, Bentley W. Warren, and Oliver Wolcott. The president is Henry B. Cabot; vice president, Henry B. Sawyer; treasurer, Richard C. Paine.

Wilkins Is Elected Symphony Trustee

Associate Justice Raymond S. Wilkins of the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court has been elected a Trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He is a resident of Winchester. He plays the piano and the xylophone and composed the score for a show performed by his Harvard classmates of 1912, at their 25th reunion.

In World War I, he served in France as Captain in the 301st Massachusetts Field Artillery, the regiment in which Senator Leverett Saltonstall (R) of Massachusetts was a lieutenant.

Keenly interested in military affairs Mr. Justice Wilkins became a specialist in the history of the Civil War, especially from the Confederacy point of view. At the time of his appointment he had nearly completed a book on the subject of Abraham Lincoln.

A good deal of leisure he spends in music at home, with Mrs. Wilkins, the former Mary Louisa Aldrich, and their three sons. He was a member of the Governor's Council under the Saltonstall regime.

MONITOR JAN 29, 46

This Clipping From
DES MOINES, IA.
TRIBUNE

FEB 1 1946

Sir Adrian Boult, British conductor, will conclude his current series of guest appearances with the Boston Symphony orchestra, 8:30 p. m. Saturday over KRNT-WNAX.

This Clipping From
EDITOR & PUBLISHER
NEW YORK, N. Y.

FEB 2 - 1946

In Defense of Sponsors

BEFORE the Cincinnati Ad Club the other day, Mark Woods, president of American Broadcasting Company, made a defense of commercial sponsorship of symphony, opera, forum and theater programs. Radio's only source of revenue, he said, is the advertiser. And the advertiser directly or indirectly pays the cost of all public service as well as sustaining programs.

"There is nothing immoral, degrading or indecent about commercial sponsorship," he argued. "The Boston Symphony's performance is every bit as excellent when the Allis-Chalmers Company is paying the bill as when ABC signs the check."

This Clipping From
SALEM, MASS.
NEWS

JAN 30 1946

Justice Wilkins Elected Trustee Boston Symphony

Justice Raymond S. Wilkins of Salem, member of the Massachusetts Supreme court, who enjoys nothing better than moments he spends composing at his piano, has been elected a trustee of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

RAYMOND S. WILKINS

The justice, an appointee of former Gov. Leverett Saltonstall, with whom he served in France in World War One, has always regarded music as his second best interest in life. His first, of course, is the law.

The justice is adept at the xylophone as well as the piano. He has done considerable composing. He wrote the score of the show his Harvard class of 1912 gave at its 25th reunion. During the same reunion he was successfully persuaded by his classmates to conduct the Pops orchestra — and made a hit.

Justice Wilkins was appointed to the Supreme bench in 1940. He was the youngest man ever given that honor.

Symphony trustees also include Philip R. Allen, John Nicholas Brown, Alvan T. Fuller, Jerome D. Green, N. Penrose Hallowell, M. A. DeWolfe Howe, Jacob J. Kaplan, Roger I. Lee, Bentley W. Warren, and Oliver Wolcott. The president is Henry B. Cabot; vice president, Henry B. Sawyer; treasurer, Richard C. Paine.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

FEB 3 - 1946

Rachmaninoff Fund Concert

A few boxes and a limited number of seats remain to be sold for the benefit concert for the Rachmaninoff Fund, Inc., which the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will give in Carnegie Hall, Tuesday evening, Feb. 12. The concert is the first in a series being given by leading symphonies to raise funds for a contest to discover America's outstanding young pianist.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

FEB 6 - 1946

SYMPHONY COUGHER

Memphis Commercial Appeal

The technicalities of arranging microphones for a satisfactory pickup of a symphony orchestra for broadcast are a sealed mystery to us, but we still wonder if it is necessary to have a cougher within range.

The Philharmonic cougher is one of the subdued but indomitable sort. At every pause in the program, and every time the music is soft, one can hear him or her hacking away. The cougher with the Boston Symphony is a far more aggressive and unpredictable type. One never knows when he will let go, but when he does, it is with clarity, volume and authority. The NBC Symphony doesn't seem to have a cougher, which persuades us to hope that the others can eventually arrange to get along without theirs.

It may be, of course, that the presence of a cougher is intentional, so that the radio listener will feel more as though he were present in the hall. If a change in microphones is impossible, surely the radio chains could furnish cough drops and handkerchiefs.

This Clipping From
BURLINGTON, VT.
NEWS

JAN 30 1946

Judge Is Elected Symphony Trustee

BOSTON. (UP)—Associate Justice Raymond S. Wilkins of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, only judge ever to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra, [illegible] the orchestra, it was announced today.

Wilkins, who lives in Winchester, graduated from Harvard University in 1912 and at a 1937 class reunion was persuaded by classmates to conduct the symphony players. He is a pianist and an amateur composer.

This Clipping From
ST. ALBANS, VT.
MESSENGER

JAN 31 1946

Judge Is Elected Symphony Trustee

BOSTON. (UP)—Associate Justice Raymond S. Wilkins of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, only judge ever to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been elected a trustee of the orchestra, it was announced today.

Wilkins, who lives in Winchester, graduated from Harvard University in 1912 and at a 1937 class reunion was persuaded by classmates to conduct the symphony players. He is a pianist and an amateur composer.

MILLBURN, N.J
ITEM
2/7/46

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will bring his famous Boston Symphony Orchestra to the Mosque Theatre for their annual appearance on two Thursday evenings—February 14th and April 11th, under auspices of the Griffith Music Foundation.

For the first program on February 14th, the orchestra will play compositions of Berlioz, Moussorgsky, Prokofieff, and Cesare Franck.

Before his orchestra stand, Serge Koussevitzky is at one and the same time the engineer who raises the sound-edifice of a modern score, the hypnotizer of crowds imbues them with his own varying emotions, and the teacher who constantly improves the powers of execution of his instrumentalists—for daily drill is, after a fashion, the indispensable prose of music.

For Kousseviktzky, symphonic performance is like architectural creation. Starting out with the style of chamber music—that is, focussing his attention on what would be the requirements of a small space—he gradually amplifies the style with respect to conditions of both form and space, paying particular attention to details, whether assigned to a flute, a single violin, or a group of instruments. He ends by seeming to suggest the dissolution of the three dimensions and the liberation of music from their confining framework in order that it may soar into a space that is limitless.

This Clipping From
WOBURN, MASS.
TIMES

JAN 30 1946

Judge Wilkins Symphony Trustee

Associate Justice Raymond S. Wilkins of the Massachusetts Supreme Court has been elected a trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. His [illegible] are Philip R. Allen, John Nicholas Brown, Alvan T. Fuller, Jerome D. Green, N. Penrose Hallowell, M. A. De Wolfe Howe, Jacob J. Kaplan, Roger I. Lee, Bentley W. Warren and Oliver Wolcott. The president is Henry B. Cabot; vice-president, Henry B. Sawer; treasurer, Richard C. Paine.

A resident of Winchester, where he is a member of the Cauntry Club, Judge Wilkins spends much of any available leisure in pursuing his musical interests at home with Mrs. Wilkins and their three sons.

N. ARLINGTON, N.J
LEADER
2/7/46

Koussevitzky's Orchestra to Play

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will bring his famous Boston Symphony Orchestra to the Mosque Theatre for their annual appearance on two Thursday evenings—February 13 and April 11, under the auspices of the Griffith Music Foundation.

For the first program on February 14, the orchestra will play compositions of Berlioz, Moussorgsky, Prokofieff, and Cesare Franck.

Before his orchestra stand, Serge Koussevitzky is at one and the same time the engineer who raises the sound-edifice of a modern score, the hypnotizer of crowds who imbues them with his own varying emotions, and the teacher who constantly improves the powers of execution of his instrumentalists—for daily drill is, after a fashion the indispensable prose of music.

For Koussevitzky, symphonic performance is like architectural creation. Starting out with the style of chamber music—that is, focussing his attention on what would be the requirements of a small space—he gradually amplifies that style with respect to conditions of both form and space, paying particular attention to details, whether assigned to a flute, a single violin, or a group of instruments. He ends by seeming to suggest the dissolution of the three dimensions and the liberation of music from their confining framework in order that it may soar into a space that is limitless. When he reaches this point, everything seems inadequate to him, all the units of measurement fall by the wayside, he wishes the music to be breathed forth in ever broader and broader phrases, the resonance to become ever more and more powerful; it is this which explains his characteristic skill in building up climaxes and his attraction towards monumental forms. In this kind of interpretation, one sees how the sensuous lyricism of his youth has become transformed, in the course of the years, into a grand lyrico-dramatic style. One might say that this style, apparently spontaneous but always carefully thought out and at times bearing the impress of meditation and even of pathos, strongly marks the three great schools of the symphony—the Russian, the French and the German—of which he is equally a master.

Judge Wilkins Named Trustee of Symphony

Justice Raymond S. Wilkins of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, who enjoys nothing better than moments he spends composing at his piano, has been elected a trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The justice, an appointee of former Gov. Leverett Saltonstall, with whom he served in France in World War I, has always regarded music as his second best interest in life. His first, of course, is the law.

The justice is adept at the xylophone as well as the piano. He has done considerable composing. He wrote the score of the show his Harvard class of 1912 gave at its 25th reunion. During the same reunion he was successfully persuaded by his classmates to conduct the Pops Orchestra—and made a hit.

A custom at the Wilkins home in Winchester is for Mr. Wilkins to play the piano in the evening while his wife and their three sons join in singing. Justice Wilkins was appointed to the Supreme Bench in 1940. He was the youngest man ever given that honor.

Symphony trustees also include Philip R. Allen, John Nicholas Brown, Alvan T. Fuller, Jerome D. Green, N. Penrose Hallowell, M. A. DeWolfe Howe, Jacob J. Kaplan, Roger I. Lee, Bentley W. Warren, and Oliver Wolcott. The president is Henry B. Cabot; vice president, Henry B. Sawyer; treasurer, Richard C. Paine.

Wilkins Is Elected Symphony Trustee

Associate Justice Raymond S. Wilkins of the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court has been elected a Trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He is a resident of Winchester. He plays the piano and the xylophone and composed the score for a show performed by his Harvard classmates of 1912, at their 25th reunion.

In World War I, he served in France as Captain in the 301st Massachusetts Field Artillery, the regiment in which Senator Leverett Saltonstall (R) of Massachusetts was a lieutenant.

Keenly interested in military affairs Mr. Justice Wilkins became a specialist in the history of the Civil War, especially from the Confederacy point of view. At the time of his appointment he had nearly completed a book on the subject of Abraham Lincoln.

A good deal of leisure he spends in music at home, with Mrs. Wilkins, the former Mary Louisa Aldrich, and their three sons. He was a member of the Governor's Council under the Saltonstall regime.

This Clipping From
DES MOINES, IA.
TRIBUNE

FEB 1 1946

Sir Adrian Boult, British conductor, will conclude his current series of guest appearances with the Boston Symphony orchestra, 5:30 p. m. Saturday over KRNT-WNAX.

This Clipping From
EDITOR & PUBLISHER
NEW YORK, N. Y.

In Defense of Sponsors

BEFORE the Cincinnati Ad Club the other day, Mark Woods, president of American Broadcasting Company, made a defense of commercial sponsorship of symphony, opera, forum and theater programs. Radio's only source of revenue, he said, is the advertiser. And the advertiser directly or indirectly pays the cost of all public service as well as sustaining programs.

"There is nothing immoral, degrading or indecent about commercial sponsorship," he argued. "The Boston Symphony's performance is every bit as excellent when the Allis-Chalmers Company is paying the bill as when ABC signs the check."

This Clipping From
SALEM, MASS.
NEWS

JAN 30 1946

Justice Wilkins Elected Trustee Boston Symphony

Justice Raymond S. Wilkins of Salem, member of the Massachusetts Supreme court, who enjoys nothing better than moments he spends composing at his piano, has been elected a trustee of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

RAYMOND S. WILKINS

The justice, an appointee of former Gov. Leverett Saltonstall, with whom he served in France in World War One, has always regarded music as his second best interest in life. His first, of course, is the law.

The justice is adept at the xylophone as well as the piano. He has done considerable composing. He wrote the score of the show his Harvard class of 1912 gave at its 25th reunion. During the same reunion he was successfully persuaded by his classmates to conduct the Pops orchestra — and made a hit.

Justice Wilkins was appointed to the Supreme bench in 1940. He was the youngest man ever given that honor.

Symphony trustees also include Philip R. Allen, John Nicholas Brown, Alvan T. Fuller, Jerome D. Green, N. Penrose Hallowell, M. A. DeWolfe Howe, Jacob J. Kaplan, Roger I. Lee, Bentley W. Warren, and Oliver Wolcott. The president is Henry B. Cabot; vice president, Henry B. Sawyer; treasurer, Richard C. Paine.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

FEB 3 - 1946

Rachmaninoff Fund Concert

A few boxes and a limited number of seats remain to be sold for the benefit concert for the Rachmaninoff Fund, Inc., which the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will give in Carnegie Hall, Tuesday evening, Feb. 12. The concert is the first in a series being given by leading symphonies to raise funds for a contest to discover America's outstanding young pianist.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

FEB 6 - 1946

SYMPHONY COUGHER

Memphis Commercial Appeal

The technicalities of arranging microphones for a satisfactory pickup of a symphony orchestra for broadcast are a sealed mystery to us but we still wonder if it is necessary to have a cougher within range.

The Philharmonic cougher is one of the subdued but indomitable sort. At every pause in the program, and every time the music is soft, one can hear him or her hacking away. The cougher with the Boston Symphony is a far more aggressive and unpredictable type. One never knows when he will let go, but when he does, it is with clarity, volume and authority. The NBC Symphony doesn't seem to have a cougher, which persuades us to hope that the others can eventually arrange to get along without theirs.

It may be, of course, that the presence of a cougher is intentional, so that the radio listener will feel more as though he were present in the hall. If a change in microphones is impossible, surely the radio chains could furnish cough drops and handkerchiefs.

This Clipping From
BURLINGTON, VT.
NEWS

JAN 30 1946

Judge Is Elected Symphony Trustee

BOSTON. (UP)—Associate Justice Raymond S. Wilkins of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, only judge ever to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been elected a trustee of the orchestra, it was announced today.

Wilkins, who lives in Winchester, graduated from Harvard University in 1912 and at a 1937 class reunion was persuaded by classmates to conduct the symphony players. He is a pianist and an amateur composer.

This Clipping From
ST. ALBANS, VT.
MESSENGER

JAN 31 1946

Judge Is Elected Symphony Trustee

BOSTON. (UP)—Associate Justice Raymond S. Wilkins of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, only judge ever to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been elected a trustee of the orchestra, it was announced today

Wilkins, who lives in Winchester, graduated from Harvard University in 1912 and at a 1937 class reunion was persuaded by classmates to conduct the symphony players. He is a pianist and an amateur composer.

MILLBURN, N.J
ITEM
2/7/46

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will bring his famous Boston Symphony Orchestra to the Mosque Theatre for their annual appearance on two Thursday evenings—February 14th and April 11th, under auspices of the Griffith Music Foundation.

For the first program on February 14th, the orchestra will play compositions of Berlioz, Moussorgsky, Prokofieff, and Cesare Franck.

Before his orchestra stand, Serge Koussevitzky is at one and the same time the engineer who raises the sound-edifice of a modern score, the hypnotizer of crowds imbues them with his own varying emotions, and the teacher who constantly improves the powers of execution of his instrumentalists—for daily drill is, after a fashion, the indispensable prose of music.

For Koussevitzky, symphonic performance is like architectural creation. Starting out with the style of chamber music—that is, focussing his attention on what would be the requirements of a small space—he gradually amplifies the style with respect to conditions of both form and space paying particular attention to details, whether assigned to a flute a single violin, or a group of instruments. He ends by seeming to suggest the dissolution of the three dimensions and the liberation of music from their confining framework in order that it may soar into a space that is limitless.

This Clipping From
WOBURN, MASS.
TIMES

JAN 30 1946

Judge Wilkins Symphony Trustee

Associate Justice Raymond S. Wilkins of the Massachusetts Supreme Court has been elected a trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. His fellow trustees are Philip R. Allen, John Nicholas Brown, Alvan T. Fuller, Jerome D. Green, N. Penrose Hallowell, M. A. De Wolfe Howe, Jacob J. Kaplan, Roger I. Lee, Bentley W. Warren and Oliver Wolcott. The president is Henry B. Cabot; vice-president, Henry B. Sawer; treasurer, Richard C. Paine.

A resident of Winchester, where he is a member of the Country Club, Judge Wilkins spends much of any available leisure in pursuing his musical interests at home with Mrs. Wilkins and their three sons.

N. ARLINGTON, N.J
LEADER
2/7/46

Koussevitzky's Orchestra to Play

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will bring his famous Boston Symphony Orchestra to the Mosque Theatre for their annual appearance on two Thursday evenings—February 13 and April 11, under the auspices of the Griffith Music Foundation.

For the first program on February 14, the orchestra will play compositions of Berlioz, Moussorgsky, Prokofieff, and Cesare Franck.

Before his orchestra stand, Serge Koussevitzky is at one and the same time the engineer who raises the sound-edifice of a modern score, the hypnotizer of crowds who imbues them with his own varying emotions, and the teacher who constantly improves the powers of execution of his instrumentalists—for daily drill is, after a fashion the indispensable prose of music.

For Koussevitzky, symphonic performance is like architectural creation. Starting out with the style of chamber music—that is, focussing his attention on what would be the requirements of a small space—he gradually amplifies that style with respect to conditions of both form and space, paying particular attention to details, whether assigned to a flute, a single violin, or a group of instruments. He ends by seeming to suggest the dissolution of the three dimensions and the liberation of music from their confining framework in order that it may soar into a space that is limitless. When he reaches this point, everything seems inadequate to him, all the units of measurement fall by the wayside, he wishes the music to be breathed forth in ever broader and broader phrases, the resonance to become ever more and more powerful; it is this which explains his characteristic skill in building up climaxes and his attraction towards monumental forms. In this kind of interpretation, one sees how the sensuous lyricism of his youth has become transformed, in the course of the years, into a grand lyrico-dramatic style. One might say that this style, apparently spontaneous but always carefully thought out and at times bearing the impress of meditation and even of pathos, strongly marks the three great schools of the symphony—the Russian, the French and the German—of which he is equally a master.

BOSTON GLOBE 1-30

Judge Wilkins Named Trustee of Symphony

Justice Raymond S. Wilkins of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, who enjoys nothing better than moments he spends composing at his piano, has been elected a trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The justice, an appointee of former Gov. Leverett Saltonstall, with whom he served in France in World War I, has always regarded music as his second best interest in life. His first, of course, is the law.

The justice is adept at the xylophone as well as the piano. He has done considerable composing. He wrote the score of the show his Harvard class of 1912 gave at its 25th reunion. During the same reunion he was successfully persuaded by his classmates to conduct the Pops Orchestra—and made a hit.

A custom at the Wilkins home in Winchester is for Mr. Wilkins to play the piano in the evening while his wife and their three sons join in singing. Justice Wilkins was appointed to the Supreme Bench in 1940. He was the youngest man ever given that honor.

Symphony trustees also include Philip R. Allen, John Nicholas Brown, Alvan T. Fuller, Jerome D. Green, N. Penrose Hallowell, M. A. DeWolfe Howe, Jacob J. Kaplan, Roger I. Lee, Bentley W. Warren, and Oliver Wolcott. The president is Henry B. Cabot; vice president, Henry B. Sawyer; treasurer, Richard C. Paine.

Wilkins Is Elected Symphony Trustee

Associate Justice Raymond S. Wilkins of the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court has been elected a Trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He is a resident of Winchester. He plays the piano and the xylophone and composed the score for a show performed by his Harvard classmates of 1912, at their 25th reunion.

In World War I, he served in France as Captain in the 301st Massachusetts Field Artillery, the regiment in which Senator Leverett Saltonstall (R) of Massachusetts was a lieutenant.

Keenly interested in military affairs Mr. Justice Wilkins became a specialist in the history of the Civil War, especially from the Confederacy point of view. At the time of his appointment he had nearly completed a book on the subject of Abraham Lincoln.

A good deal of leisure he spends in music at home, with Mrs. Wilkins, the former Mary Louisa Aldrich, and their three sons. He was a member of the Governor's Council under the Saltonstall regime.

MONITOR JAN 29, 46

This Clipping From
DES MOINES, IA.
TRIBUNE

FEB 1 1946

Sir Adrian Boult, British conductor, will conclude his current series of guest appearances with the Boston Symphony orchestra, 8:30 p. m. Saturday over KRNT-WNAX.

This Clipping From
EDITOR & PUBLISHER
NEW YORK, N. Y.

FEB 2 - 1946

In Defense of Sponsors

BEFORE the Cincinnati Ad Club the other day, Mark Woods, president of American Broadcasting Company, made a defense of commercial sponsorship of symphony, opera, forum and theater programs. Radio's only source of revenue, he said, is the advertiser. And the advertiser directly or indirectly pays the cost of all public service as well as sustaining programs.

"There is nothing immoral, degrading or indecent about commercial sponsorship," he argued. "The Boston Symphony's performance is every bit as excellent when the Allis-Chalmers Company is paying the bill as when ABC signs the check."

This Clipping From
SALEM, MASS.
NEWS

JAN 30 1946

Justice Wilkins Elected Trustee Boston Symphony

Justice Raymond S. Wilkins of Salem, member of the Massachusetts Supreme court, who enjoys nothing better than moments he spends composing at his piano, has been elected a trustee of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

RAYMOND S. WILKINS

The justice, an appointee of former Gov. Leverett Saltonstall, with whom he served in France in World War One, has always regarded music as his second best interest in life. His first, of course, is the law.

The justice is adept at the xylophone as well as the piano. He has done considerable composing. He wrote the score of the show his Harvard class of 1912 gave at its 25th reunion. During the same reunion he was successfully persuaded by his classmates to conduct the Pops orchestra — and made a hit.

Justice Wilkins was appointed to the Supreme bench in 1940. He was the youngest man ever given that honor.

Symphony trustees also include Philip R. Allen, John Nicholas Brown, Alvan T. Fuller, Jerome D. Green, N. Penrose Hallowell, M. A. DeWolfe Howe, Jacob J. Kaplan, Roger I. Lee, Bentley W. Warren, and Oliver Wolcott. The president is Henry B. Cabot; vice president, Henry B. Sawyer; treasurer, Richard C. Paine.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

FEB 8 - 1946

Rachmaninoff Fund Concert

A few boxes and a limited number of seats remain to be sold for the benefit concert for the Rachmaninoff Fund, Inc., which the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will give in Carnegie Hall, Tuesday evening, Feb. 12. The concert is the first in a series being given by leading symphonies to raise funds for a contest to discover America's outstanding young pianist.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

FEB 6 - 1946

SYMPHONY COUGHER

Memphis Commercial Appeal

The technicalities of arranging microphones for a satisfactory pickup of a symphony orchestra for broadcast are a sealed mystery to us, but we still wonder if it is necessary to have a cougher within range.

The Philharmonic cougher is one of the subdued but indomitable sort. At every pause in the program, and every time the music is soft, one can hear him or her hacking away. The cougher with the Boston Symphony is a far more aggressive and unpredictable type. One never knows when he will let go, but when he does, it is with clarity, volume and authority. The NBC Symphony doesn't seem to have a cougher, which persuades us to hope that the others can eventually arrange to get along without theirs.

It may be, of course, that the presence of a cougher is intentional, so that the radio listener will feel more as though he were present in the hall. If a change in microphones is impossible, surely the radio chains could furnish cough drops and handkerchiefs.

This Clipping From
BURLINGTON, VT.
NEWS

JAN 30 1946

Judge Is Elected Symphony Trustee

BOSTON, (UP)—Associate Justice Raymond S. Wilkins of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, only judge ever to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been elected a trustee of the orchestra, it was announced today.

Wilkins, who lives in Winchester, graduated from Harvard University in 1912 and at a 1937 class reunion was persuaded by classmates to conduct the symphony players. He is a pianist and an amateur composer.

This Clipping From
ST. ALBANS, VT.
MESSENGER

JAN 31 1946

Judge Is Elected Symphony Trustee

BOSTON, (UP)—Associate Justice Raymond S. Wilkins of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, only judge ever to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been elected a trustee of the orchestra, it was announced today

Wilkins, who lives in Winchester, graduated from Harvard University in 1912 and at a 1937 class reunion was persuaded by classmates to conduct the symphony players. He is a pianist and an amateur composer.

MILLBURN, N.J
ITEM
2/7/46

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will bring his famous Boston Symphony Orchestra to the Mosque Theatre for their annual appearance on two Thursday evenings—February 14th and April 11th, under auspices of the Griffith Music Foundation.

For the first program on February 14th, the orchestra will play compositions of Berlioz, Moussorgsky, Prokofieff, and Cesare Franck.

Before his orchestra stand, Serge Koussevitzky is at one and the same time the engineer who raises the sound-edifice of a modern score, the hypnotizer of crowds imbues them with his own varying emotions, and the teacher who constantly improves the powers of execution of his instrumentalists—for daily drill is, after a fashion, the indispensable prose of music.

For Koussevitzky, symphonic performance is like architectural creation. Starting out with the style of chamber music—that is, focussing his attention on what would be the requirements of a small space—he gradually amplifies the style with respect to conditions of both form and space, paying particular attention to details, whether assigned to a flute, a single violin, or a group of instruments. He ends by seeming to suggest the dissolution of the three dimensions and the liberation of music from their confining framework in order that it may soar into a space that is limitless.

This Clipping From
WOBURN, MASS.
TIMES

JAN 30 1946

Judge Wilkins Symphony Trustee

Associate Justice Raymond S. Wilkins of the Massachusetts Supreme Court has been elected a trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. His fellow trustees are Philip R. Allen, John Nicholas Brown, Alvan T. Fuller, Jerome D. Green, N. Penrose Hallowell, M. A. De Wolfe Howe, Jacob J. Kaplan, Roger I. Lee, Bentley W. Warren and Oliver Wolcott. The president is Henry B. Cabot; vice-president, Henry B. Sawer; treasurer, Richard C. Paine.

A resident of Winchester, where he is a member of the Country Club, Judge Wilkins spends much of any available leisure in pursuing his musical interests at home with Mrs. Wilkins and their three sons.

N. ARLINGTON, N.J
LEADER
2/7/46

Koussevitzky's Orchestra to Play

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will bring his famous Boston Symphony Orchestra to the Mosque Theatre for their annual appearance on two Thursday evenings—February 13 and April 11, under the auspices of the Griffith Music Foundation.

For the first program on February 14, the orchestra will play compositions of Berlioz, Moussorgsky, Prokofieff, and Cesare Franck.

Before his orchestra stand, Serge Koussevitzky is at one and the same time the engineer who raises the sound-edifice of a modern score, the hypnotizer of crowds who imbues them with his own varying emotions, and the teacher who constantly improves the powers of execution of his instrumentalists—for daily drill is, after a fashion the indispensable prose of music.

For Koussevitzky, symphonic performance is like architectural creation. Starting out with the style of chamber music—that is, focussing his attention on what would be the requirements of a small space—he gradually amplifies that style with respect to conditions of both form and space, paying particular attention to details, whether assigned to a flute, a single violin, or a group of instruments. He ends by seeming to suggest the dissolution of the three dimensions and the liberation of music from their confining framework in order that it may soar into a space that is limitless. When he reaches this point, everything seems inadequate to him, all the units of measurement fall by the wayside, he wishes the music to be breathed forth in ever broader and broader phrases, the resonance to become ever more and more powerful; it is this which explains his characteristic skill in building up climaxes and his attraction towards monumental forms. In this kind of interpretation, one sees how the sensuous lyricism of his youth has become transformed, in the course of the years, into a grand lyrico-dramatic style. One might say that this style, apparently spontaneous but always carefully thought out and at times bearing the impress of meditation and even of pathos, strongly marks the three great schools of the symphony—the Russian, the French and the German—of which he is equally a master.

ORANGE, N.J
TRANSCRIPT
2/7/46

Music Necessary For A Full Life

Koussevitzky Tells Feelings Of Artist

"Great music is a necessity of life. Nothing less—a necessity."

The words were spoken in tones of deep conviction by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with which he will appear at the Mosque Theater, Newark, on Thursday night, February 14, under auspices of the Griffith Music Foundation. His eyes flashed as he went on to say:

"Great music makes life complete. It combines with something else. Do you know, I am convinced that what makes a life full is the experience of tragedy in some form, and rising to its challenge. The great composers all have had their trials by tragedy. Their greatest music is the utterance which that experience has drawn from their souls. And very often the music itself is not tragic. It may be quite the opposite, because the composer has had the greatness of soul not to expose his private concerns to the world.

"In great music there is the bond of the most profound sympathy between genius and the rest of humanity. The genius expresses what is in the souls of the rest, better than they can. We musicians draw out what the great composers have attempted to express within the limitations of musical notes printed on paper. We sense, and we continually develop, what we sense there. Through the intermediary of the conductor, if you please, the composer, the musicians, and the listeners are brought together in communion with life."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
FEB 8 - 1946

The New Records

Rachmaninoff's 'Isle of the Dead' Reissued—Orchestral Singles—Encore by Stevens.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

One of the more venerable albums in the Victor catalogue has been retired to the museum shelves with the appearance of the Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony version of Rachmaninoff's "Isle of the Dead." Gone now is the performance in which the composer directed the Philadelphia Orchestra (V-75), which was, since its appearance in 1930, standard for the work.

On rehearing the score after a longish separation, it assumes a place a little apart from most of the familiar Rachmaninoff. The dark coloration throughout gives it a rather Wagnerian quality, of the nature of the Waltraute episode in "Dusk of the Gods," in which the downfall of Valhalla is foreshadowed, and the earlier Norn scene. Also the method of building on a long crescendo to a single impassioned climax and then subsiding to quietness again is considerably akin to the Wagner method in the "Lohengrin" prelude, on a scale more than twice as imposing. And the chromatics of "Parsifal" may also be heard.

However, the construction of the entire work on the "Dies Irae" motive (in this version D flat, C, D flat, B flat) is very much Rachmaninoff's own and remarkably accomplished. At first only the two initial notes are used, then four, and finally the whole majestic phrase which has come down to us from the sixteenth century emerges.

The values of the score have been recreated with impressive directness and truth in the magnificent performance of Koussevitzky and his men. It has also been reproduced with splendid richness of sound. As in the earlier album, the odd-side of the six contains Rachmaninoff's lovely "Vocalise" in the orchestration made, originally, for Koussevitzky in Russia. (V-Set 1024.)

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
NEWS
FEB 8 - 1946

Serge Koussevitzky directs the Boston Symphony in the Rachmaninoff "Isle of the Dead" and the "Vocalise" op. 34, No. 14 in Victor Album M-1024, both of them exceptional performances. And you get the same high standard of performance and recording in the Victor pressing of the Haydn Symphony No. 98 in B Flat, op. 20 by Maestro Toscanini and the NBC Symphony, with the Scherzo from the Mendelssohn E Flat Octet tossed in for good measure. (Victor M-1025.)

• • •

THERE'S fine artistry and broad conception in the Beethoven Sonata No. 5 in D Major for Cello and Piano as recorded by Gregor Piatogorsky, famous cellist, and Ralph Berkowitz, pianist. (Columbia X-258.) Its slow movement is particularly entrancing. And while not in the same mood, but distinctly artistic in its archaic conception the Elizabethan Suite waxed by the Bartlett and Robertson piano duo has a charm all its own. It is music of the time of Shakespeare arranged by Ethel Bartlett. (Columbia X-256.)

Quite contrasty is the Harl McDonald Symphonic Suite, "My Country At War," as recorded by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy, (Columbia M-592). It is music descriptive of World War II, the second movement, "Bataan," being the best known. It is stirring music given a fine performance.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
FEB 9 - 1946

Rachmaninoff Fund Concert

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Vladimir Horowitz, pianist, and Melvyn Douglas, screen star, will combine their talents Tuesday at Carnegie Hall in a benefit concert for the Rachmaninoff Fund, Inc. Proceeds from the event will be used to help launch the Fund's forthcoming contest to "discover America's outstanding young pianist." Because the concert takes place on Lincoln's Birthday, the program has been arranged to honor him as well as Rachmaninoff.

Horowitz is to play Rachmaninoff's Third Piano Concerto, and Mr. Douglas will do the narration in the performance of Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait." Dr. Koussevitsky will also perform Tschaikowsky's "Symphony No. 6 in B Minor."

The two-fold aim of the Fund is to encourage exceptional talent among young American pianists, conductors and composers and to foster an interchange of young artists between Russia and America.

President Truman, rapidly becoming renowned as our music-loving Chief of State, has been elected an Honorary Member of the Philharmonic Society of New York. The President will receive the honor formally in April, when members of the Board of Directors will go to Washington to make the official presentation at the White House.

The Philharmonic's current program at Carnegie Hall on Thursday at 8:45 and Friday at 2:30, features Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait," with Kenneth Spencer, Negro baritone, as narrator, and the Szymanowski Violin Concerto performed by the Society for the first time with John Corigliano, concertmaster, as soloist; Brahms Symphony No. 1 in C Minor, and the Enesco Roumanian Rhapsody, No. 1, in A Major, complete the compositions to be performed.

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
GLOBE DEMOCRA
FEB 10 194

BOSTON SYMPHONY, R
g to New York for the th series of five Hunter C roadcasts this season Dr.
oussevitzky will conduct.
in D-Minor ...... Cesar oman Carnival" overture ......

This Clipping From
THINK
NEW YORK CIT
FEB - 1946

The A

SOME n is a pro impressiv

WHEN our he w number and t tras. The best in the world, ond decade of half a dozen the East, the Orchestra, the harmonic-Sym peers overseas.
tras, all of th
zations still in from coast to of the pictur fifty second-country whic of representa springing up the training allied institut tras of high s constitute the phonic organ is transpiring

T come duc is a w litt more, t he routi
the orchestra pr indisp the ensemble ican orchestr ditions whic
the conduct which holds wielder of t leading con here, and we States a hav
the world.

As far ba
so. The Eu genial surro ences in his side of the balance of a further fa

FEBRUA

MUSIC

Boston Herald 2/9/46

Symphony Concert

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The 16th regular concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Th program was as follows:

Symphony No. 6 in F major, Op. 68, "Pastoral" .... Beethoven
Symphony No. 6 in B minor, Op. 74, "Pathetique" .... Tchaikovsky

Mr. Koussevitzky returned to his post in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon to conduct a program of music which has certainly not been gathering dust on the shelves in recent years. I don't know that it was quite cricket to our recollections of Sir Adrian Boult for Mr. Koussevitzky to come back full of zest and trot out two of the greatest war-horses in the symphonic repertoire. But at any rate that is what he did and naturally he reaped the full measure of applause from a delighted public.

The Beethoven Pastoral Symphony was most beautifully done. This it needs, for otherwise its discussion of country emotions can be long-winded. It must be played with the utmost freshness, as though it were being disclosed for the first time. Not every conductor can work this miracle, but it has always been one of Mr. Koussevitzky's virtues. Yesterday he recreated the Symphony in all its spring-like glory.

Having read Tchaikovsky's diaries it is easy to understand why he was so often in a mood of doleful dumps. In the French phrase he had a perpetual "cafard," or in the words of the British soldier he was continually "browned off." With the 6th Symphony he turned this melancholia to great artistic profit. The Symphony is, if you like, the ultimate in self-pity, but it is nonetheless a triumph of art. Tchaikovsky, it is safe to say at this distance, had enough of the scrupulous craftsman in him not to allow the intensity of the emotional feeling in his Symphony to get out of hand.

The Pathetic Symphony yesterday was received with tremendous enthusiasm. We critics can sigh all we like about having to hear so much Tchaikovsky and Chopin, but there is no shadow of doubt of their immense popular appeal. Nor is there as yet any sign that their vogue is waning. The symphony was given by Mr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra a thoroughly dramatic reading. Here was no routine or humdrum performance but the "works," so to speak.

The concert will be repeated tonight. Next week the Boston Symphony is out of town. The concerts of Feb. 22 and 23 will be conducted by Igor Stravinsky and will be devoted entirely to his works.

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
NEWS
FEB 9 - 1946

★ ★ Dr. Serge Koussevitzky directs the Boston Symphony in the Tschaikowsky Sixth Symphony, the "Pathetique," WJW at 9:30.

This Clipping From TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
FEB 9 - 1946

• • Dr. Serge Koussevitzky resumes his post as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight at 9:30 over WTOL when the Sixth Symphony by Tschaikowsky will be heard.

This Clipping From
CINCINNATI, OHIO
POST
FEB 9 - 1946

Those rumors that Dmitri Mitropoulos would leave the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra and take on the Boston Symphony are just so much scuttlebutt. It would be interesting to trace the rumor to its source, though.

SYMPHONY CONCERT

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Yesterday afternoon's Symphony Concert was just what its three predecessors were not: a program made wholly of familiar music and brought to altogether remarkable performance. In other words, Dr. Koussevitzky was back on the job (he had already conducted last Monday) and for the occasion he had caparisoned two of his favorite war-horses, the "Pastoral" Symphony of Beethoven and Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique."

This pairing of the two Sixth Symphonies was no new trick on Koussevitzky's part. It is an interesting study in symphonic contrasts. The two works are united by the number six and by the fact that each has a program. There all resemblance stops. With titles and subtitles, Beethoven told us just what was on his mind. The Russian admitted that there was plenty there, but never divulged a bit of it. And nine days after the first performance he was dead. Ernest Newman, by the way, has lately added the weight of his opinion to the old legend that the composer deliberately drank that glass of cholera-polluted water.

Nor are these the only differences. Supercharged with amiability, the "Pastoral" perfectly realizes the ideal of a sound mind in a healthy body. The "Pathetique," on the contrary, is more than pessimistic. It is positively pathological. Ernest Newman, to quote him again, once declared that what went on within its pages was something that should not be aired in public.

We had the "Pastoral" from Dr. Koussevitzky a matter of 28 months ago. He gave us the "Pathetique" last on Feb. 8 and 9, 1945; and that is getting it down pretty fine. There was no reason to be astonished, then, at the superlative fashion in which these so dissimilar works were interpreted and performed. There are some things, however, that you never really get used to, no matter how many times you are confronted with them. You are always amazed to find it happening all over again and, if anything, just a little better than before. Quite obviously this was just the way yesterday's audience felt about it, and after three weeks of having its horizon broadened, it was probably entitled to that special satisfaction.

BOSTON POST FEB 9

MUSIC

GLOBE FEB. 1

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

By CYRUS DURGIN

If there were a symphonic equivalent of a royal standard, one emblazoned with a large K should be flying this morning over the red-brick temple at Massachusetts and Huntington avs. For after a month's absence in the South, Serge Koussevitzky, the liege lord of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is in residence again at Symphony Hall.

His return was observed yesterday afternoon by the Friday subscribers with that especial blend of respect, enthusiasm and affection mustered only for him. What was a warm reception at first became a fiery demonstration by the time Mr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra had traversed the program consisting of but two sixth symphonies: the "Pastoral" of Beethoven and the "Pathetic" of Tchaikovsky.

It is no miracle that the Boston Symphony responds to Mr. Koussevitzky as to no other gentleman, however gifted or amiable, who stands before it. Why should matters be otherwise? For 20 years and more, after all, Mr. Koussevitzky has moulded, drilled and ruled this orchestra until it has become unequalled. Therefore, yesterday, there were the familiar and treasurable richness and luminosity in the orchestra's tone, and what the late W. J. Henderson used to call its "oceanic depths."

Everything was delicate and precise, or robust and stirring. Everything proceeded according to carefully calculated effect, and yet gained by that indefinable artistic dividend caused when a great interpreter excites a great orchestra to spontaneous prodigies of execution.

Were you not used to the range and the details of Mr. Koussevitzky's interpretive powers, you could have gained a notion of them just from these magnificent performances of the "Pastoral" and "Pathetic".

He takes Beethoven's evocation of peasant life amid a gentle nature delicately, but with no loss of essential vigor.

With Tchaikovsky it is a totally different matter: the "Pathetic" is made to sing its lamentations and its neurotic fears with heart-rending intensity and yet without making the expression seem forced or the texture coarse. That is true even of the third movement march which Mr. Koussevitzky takes as if the spirit of doom were closing in at a gallop.

Knowing the unstable psychic background of Tchaikovsky, you become, after a while, progressively less moved by the grave-side hysteria of the "Pathetic". But one could not fail to be moved by the sheer power and beauty of the sounds produced by Mr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra. That ability to create emotion from the outside in, so to speak, is one mark of genius.

ymanowski Violin Concerto med by the Society for the ime with John Corigliano, tmaster, as soloist: Brahms ony, No. 1, in C Minor, and esco Roumanian Rhapsody, in A Major, complete the sitions to be performed.

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
GLOBE DEMOCRAT

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

FEB 10 1946

Cesar Franck's D Minor Symphony and Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" Overture are programmed or the Boston Symphony broadcast which Serge Koussevitzsy vill conduct at 8:30 Saturday night on KXOK.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
Sunday Union & Republican

FEB 10 1946

BOSTON SYMPHONY RELEASES DETAILS FOR TANGLEWOOD

Fobert Shaw Joins Faculty of Music Center—Chamber Concerts to Precede Annual Berkshire Festival

Boston, Feb. 9—Returning to his post as conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra after his mid-season vacation, Dr Serge Koussevitzky has announced his plans for the 1946 season of the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. July 1-August 10.

The school catalog which is about to be circulated will disclose two new musical activities at Tanglewood. With the cooperation of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge foundation four concerts of chamber music have been arranged, and preceding the festival concerts Dr Koussevitzy and the instrumental faculty composed of more than 30 members of the Boston symphony will give two Bach-Mozart programs.

Dr Koussevitzky's assistants at the center in the orchestral conducting department and for the advanced orchestra will be Leonard Bernstein. Richard Burgin and Stanley Chapple.

The opera department will be under the direction of Dr Herbert Graf and Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design scenery and costumes. Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," commissioned by the Koussevitzky music foundation, composed especially for Tanglewood, and produced in England with outstanding success, will receive its first Ameri-

---

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

FEB 10 1946

Stravinsky Chosen Guest Conductor

Following a week's visit to New York and other cities, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will have Igor Stravinsky as its guest composer and conductor at Symphony Hall Friday afternoon and Saturday night, Feb. 22 and 23. Stravinsky will also conduct the concert in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on Wednesday, Feb. 20.

Stravinsky's program for his Boston concerts consists entirely of music either newly revised or new hereabouts. He will present his Symphony in Three Movements, which recently had its first performance in New York under his direction, and his "Scenes de Ballet," which was composed for a Billy Rose production and thus performed in 1945.

The second portion of the program will consist of the opening scene from the Ballet "Petrouchka" and the more familiar final scene. He will present his new second revision of his ballet "The Fire Bird." This version restores each movement used in the original version and connects the movements.

The concert in Cambridge will consist of the "Fireworks," the new Symphony, and the complete suite from "The Fire Bird."

This Clipping From
THINK
NEW YORK CITY

The American Musical Scene

By OLIN DOWNES

OLIN DOWNES

SOME notes on orchestras, conductors and audiences . . . "There is a process of musical integration at work which augurs impressively for the musical development of the nation."

WHEN the historian in the future looks at our American musical scene of the present he will be impressed most of all with the number and the quality of our symphony orchestras. The best of these are not equalled anywhere else in the world, and have not been since about the second decade of this century. At that time there were half a dozen orchestras, including the big three of the East, the Boston Symphony, the Philadelphia Orchestra, the Philharmonic Society (now the Philharmonic-Symphony) of New York, which had no peers overseas. Today there are sixteen such orchestras, all of the first rank, with the Eastern organizations still in the lead, functioning in as many cities from coast to coast. But this is only the highlight of the picture. There are over three hundred and fifty second-rank orchestras distributed over the country which are capable of high class performance of representative symphonic music, and more are springing up year by year. Nor is this all. We have the training orchestras of our music schools, and allied institutions, and remarkable amateur orchestras of high schools, colleges and universities which constitute the surest guarantee that the famous symphonic organizations are only the symbols of what is transpiring musically in the body of the nation.

* * *

THEN come th nductors. The art of the conductor is a whol n itself. A century ago, or a little more, this ot the case. The conductor was then a routine n and time-beater who kept the orchestra t . Today he is a supreme interpreter indispens o the effective functioning of the ensemble. B of the number of good American orchestras, he particularly favorable conditions which r them offer for the exercise of the conductor's America has become the place which holds ou greatest inducements to the wielder of the As a consequence most of the leading conduct f the period have gravitated here, and were fore the wars made the United States a haven ists as well as the oppressed of
the world.

As far back turn of the century it was not so. The Europ nductor found his most congenial surroun nd his most intelligent audiences in his ow or adjacent places on the other side of the wat here is now a completely new balance of mu power. And not only this, but a further fact shing to the species of European mind which still harbors the conception that Indians and alligators live on Broadway, is that we have in America the most receptive and informed audiences for symphonic music.

Our orchestral public expects and receives richer and more variegated programs of orchestral music than any audiences of the Continent; this because we never have been chauvinistic or narrowly national in our attitude toward art. In Europe, music performed has been somewhat limited in its scope because of national tastes and traditions which operated to the exclusion of a certain percentage of foreign music. The program suitable for Paris was not precisely suitable for Berlin and vice versa. American audiences have always maintained the international viewpoint. We want to hear all interesting music, regardless of its period or origin. This does not, however, interfere with national musical development.

* * *

THAT is coming on inevitably, and with ever-increasing speed. The European-born conductor, in the great majority of cases, becomes the American citizen, in whole-hearted allegiance to our social purposes and artistic ideals. His life and his work is now a part of ours. We still have, perhaps, lingering vestiges of reverence for a foreign name in music, and hesitate to give our native musicians an exactly even chance. But that is changing as our musicians, performers and conductors alike are developing. Especially among the smaller orchestras American conductors are showing their ability.

In the ranks of the symphony orchestras themselves the change is profoundly felt. There was a time when the Boston Symphony Orchestra selected almost all its players from abroad. Now, as Dr. Koussevitzky has told me, this is neither practicable nor necessary. The best young artists are here, emerging annually from the sources of orchestral training and experience that have been noted. There is a process of musical integration at work, especially in this field, which augurs impressively for the musical development of the nation.

Finally there is the stimulating effect of the situation upon the native composer. The goods of the native composer are in demand as never before, in a period when America must take a leading part in advancing the musical culture of the world.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

FEB 10 1946

TANGLEWOOD LISTS TWO INNOVATIONS

Two new musical activities have been announced by Serge Koussevitzky for the 1946 season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., which will open on July 1. With the cooperation of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation, four concerts of chamber music have been arranged and, before the regular festival concerts, Dr. Koussevitzky and the instrumental faculty of the center, comprising more than thirty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will give two Bach-Mozart programs.

Besides having opportunities for participation in actual performance of music, students will be able to attend special assemblies. Aaron Copland, the composer, will be moderator of the forum meetings. Olin Downes will give four lectures on the "Art of Criticism," and special guest lecturers will include Howard Hanson, William Schuman and Edward Weeks.

In the orchestral-conducting department of the center, Dr. Koussevitzky will be assisted by Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin and Stanley Chapple. The opera department will be under the direction of Herbert Graf and Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design the scenery and costumes.

The composition department will be in charge of Mr. Copland, who is assistant director of the center. Hugh Ross and Robert Shaw will hold classes in choral conducting and will direct the student chorus. Mr. Shaw also will prepare the festival chorus for the performance of Beethoven's Ninth (choral) symphony, which will close the Berkshire Festival concerts. Chamber music groups will work under Gregor Piatigorsky, with the assistance of the principals of the Boston Symphony.

Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and composed especially for Tanglewood, will have its first American presentation. The opera has been given in England with outstanding success. Mr. Ross will train the chorus and Mr. Bernstein will conduct the performance.

Dr. Koussevitzky will announce next month a summary of the festival programs, which will include nine concerts from July 25 to Aug. 11 on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons. Information about the center, including the festival, may be obtained by writing Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
GLOBE DEMOCRAT

FEB 10 1946

—BOSTON SYMPHONY. Returning to New York for the third in a series of five Hunter College broadcasts this season Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct.

Symphony, in D-Minor ......Cesar Franck
"Roman Carnival" overture ....Berlioz

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

FEB 10 1946

Cesar Franck's D Minor Symphony and Berlioz' "Roman Carnival" Overture are programmed for the Boston Symphony broadcast which Serge Koussevitzky will conduct at 8:30 Saturday night on KXOK.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
Sunday Union & Republican

FEB 10 1946

BOSTON SYMPHONY RELEASES DETAILS FOR TANGLEWOOD

Fobert Shaw Joins Faculty of Music Center—Chamber Concerts to Precede Annual Berkshire Festival

Boston, Feb. 9—Returning to his post as conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra after his mid-season vacation, Dr Serge Koussevitzky has announced his plans for the 1946 season of the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. July 1-August 18.

The school catalog which is about to be circulated will disclose two new musical activities at Tanglewood. With the cooperation of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge foundation four concerts of chamber music have been arranged, and preceding the festival concerts Dr Koussevitzky and the instrumental faculty composed of more than 30 members of the Boston symphony will give two Bach-Mozart programs.

Dr Koussevitzky's assistants at the center in the orchestral conducting department and for the advanced orchestra will be Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin and Stanley Chapple.

The opera department will be under the direction of Dr Herbert Graf and Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design scenery and costumes. Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," commissioned by the Koussevitzky music foundation, composed especially for Tanglewood, and produced in England with outstanding success, will receive its first Ameri-

---

NEW [illegible]
STANDARD-TIMES

FEB 10 1946

Stravinsky Chosen Guest Conductor

Following a week's visit to New York and other cities, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will have Igor Stravinsky as its guest composer and conductor at Symphony Hall Friday afternoon and Saturday night, Feb. 22 and 23. Stravinsky will also conduct the concert in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on Wednesday, Feb. 20.

Stravinsky's program for his Boston concerts consists entirely of music either newly revised or new hereabouts. He will present his Symphony in Three Movements, which recently had its first performance in New York under his direction, and his "Scenes de Ballet," which was composed for a Billy Rose production and thus performed in 1945.

The second portion of the program will consist of the opening scene from the Ballet "Petrouchka" and the more familiar final scene. He will present his new second revision of his ballet "The Fire Bird." This version restores each movement used in the original version and connects the movements.

The concert in Cambridge will consist of the "Fireworks," the new Symphony, and the complete suite from "The Fire Bird."

---

nowski Violin Concerto by the Society for the with John Corigliano, ster, as soloist; Brahms ny, No. 1, in C Minor, and o Roumanian Rhapsody,
A Major, complete the tions to be performed.

This Clipping From
THINK
NEW YORK CITY

FEB - 1946

The American Musical Scene

By OLIN DOWNES

SOME notes on orchestras, conductors and audiences . . . "There is a process of musical integration at work which augurs impressively for the musical development of the nation."

OLIN DOWNES

WHEN the historian in the future looks at our American musical scene of the present he will be impressed most of all with the number and the quality of our symphony orchestras. The best of these are not equalled anywhere else in the world, and have not been since about the second decade of this century. At that time there were half a dozen orchestras, including the big three of the East, the Boston Symphony, the Philadelphia Orchestra, the Philharmonic Society (now the Philharmonic-Symphony) of New York, which had no peers overseas. Today there are sixteen such orchestras, all of the first rank, with the Eastern organizations still in the lead, functioning in as many cities from coast to coast. But this is only the highlight of the picture. There are over three hundred and fifty second-rank orchestras distributed over the country which are capable of high class performance of representative symphonic music, and more are springing up year by year. Nor is this all. We have the training orchestras of our music schools, and allied institutions, and remarkable amateur orchestras of high schools, colleges and universities which constitute the surest guarantee that the famous symphonic organizations are only the symbols of what is transpiring musically in the body of the nation.

❧ ❧ ❧

THEN come the conductors. The art of the conductor is a whole art in itself. A century ago, or a little more, this was not the case. The conductor was then a routine musician and time-beater who kept the orchestra together. Today he is a supreme interpreter indispensable to the effective functioning of the ensemble. Because of the number of good American orchestras, and the particularly favorable conditions which most of them offer for the exercise of the conductor's art, America has become the place which holds out the greatest inducements to the wielder of the baton. As a consequence most of the leading conductors of the period have gravitated here, and were here before the wars made the United States a haven for artists as well as the oppressed of the world.

As far back as the turn of the century it was not so. The European conductor found his most congenial surroundings and his most intelligent audiences in his own land or adjacent places on the other side of the water. There is now a completely new balance of musical power. And not only this, but a further fact, astonishing to the species of European mind which still harbors the conception that Indians and alligators live on Broadway, is that we have in America the most receptive and informed audiences for symphonic music.

Our orchestral public expects and receives richer and more variegated programs of orchestral music than any audiences of the Continent; this because we never have been chauvinistic or narrowly national in our attitude toward art. In Europe, music performed has been somewhat limited in its scope because of national tastes and traditions which operated to the exclusion of a certain percentage of foreign music. The program suitable for Paris was not precisely suitable for Berlin and vice versa. American audiences have always maintained the international viewpoint. We want to hear all interesting music, regardless of its period or origin. This does not, however, interfere with national musical development.

❧ ❧ ❧

THAT is coming on inevitably, and with ever-increasing speed. The European-born conductor, in the great majority of cases, becomes the American citizen, in whole-hearted allegiance to our social purposes and artistic ideals. His life and his work is now a part of ours. We still have, perhaps, lingering vestiges of reverence for a foreign name in music, and hesitate to give our native musicians an exactly even chance. But that is changing as our musicians, performers and conductors alike are developing. Especially among the smaller orchestras American conductors are showing their ability.

In the ranks of the symphony orchestras themselves the change is profoundly felt. There was a time when the Boston Symphony Orchestra selected almost all its players from abroad. Now, as Dr. Koussevitzky has told me, this is neither practicable nor necessary. The best young artists are here, emerging annually from the sources of orchestral training and experience that have been noted. There is a process of musical integration at work, especially in this field, which augurs impressively for the musical development of the nation.

Finally there is the stimulating effect of the situation upon the native composer. The goods of the native composer are in demand as never before, in a period when America must take a leading part in advancing the musical culture of the world.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

FEB 10 1946

TANGLEWOOD LISTS TWO INNOVATIONS

Two new musical activities have been announced by Serge Koussevitzky for the 1946 season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., which will open on July 1. With the cooperation of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation, four concerts of chamber music have been arranged, and, before the regular festival concerts, Dr. Koussevitzky and the instrumental faculty of the center, comprising more than thirty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will give two Bach-Mozart programs.

Besides having opportunities for participation in actual performance of music, students will be able to attend special assemblies. Aaron Copland, the composer, will be moderator of the forum meetings. Olin Downes will give four lectures on the "Art of Criticism," and special guest lecturers will include Howard Hanson, William Schuman and Edward Weeks.

In the orchestral-conducting department of the center, Dr. Koussevitzky will be assisted by Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin and Stanley Chapple. The opera department will be under the direction of Herbert Graf and Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design the scenery and costumes.

The composition department will be in charge of Mr. Copland, who is assistant director of the center. Hugh Ross and Robert Shaw will hold classes in choral conducting and will direct the student chorus. Mr. Shaw also will prepare the festival chorus for the performance of Beethoven's Ninth (choral) symphony, which will close the Berkshire Festival concerts. Chamber music groups will work under Gregor Piatigorsky, with the assistance of the principals of the Boston Symphony.

Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and composed especially for Tanglewood, will have its first American presentation. The opera has been given in England with outstanding success. Mr. Ross will train the chorus and Mr. Bernstein will conduct the performance.

Dr. Koussevitzky will announce next month a summary of the festival programs, which will include nine concerts from July 25 to Aug. 11 on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons. Information about the center, including the festival, may be obtained by writing Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

BOSTON POST FEB 10

DIFFERS WITH DUFAUW

Dr. Koussevitsky Comments on List to Form Basis for Understanding All Music

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

At last it was possible to interview Dr. Koussevitsky on the subject of Desire Dufauw's list of the 10 pieces which would "form a basis for the understanding and appreciation of all music." Seen in his new Brookline home shortly after his return from the South, the Boston conductor would have none of his Chicago colleague's idea and, granting the possibility of any such narrowing down of the world's great music, he still broke with him both in the matter of composers and of compositions.

It will be recalled that Mr. Dufauw's entire orchestral list consisted of Bach's Suite in B minor for flute and strings, Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony, Beethoven's First, the Third of Schumann, the First of Brahms, the Franck D minor, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," Debussy's Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun," Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" and the Fifth Symphony of Shostakovitch. "Where is 'Carmen'? asked Dr. Koussevitsky. "A great masterpiece. And Bach's B minor Mass?" He agreed that the omission of Wagner was a mistake and suggested that "Tristan und Isolde" could hardly be left out. As to a single excerpt, he admitted that the "Meistersinger" Prelude which "puts so much in a small space" would do very well, but he made a special plea for the Prelude to "Lohengrin," dilating upon its many beauties.

No more than some of the rest of us could he see the Symphony of Franck in this exalted company. Freely admitting its qualities, he nevertheless could not regard it as a great masterpiece. A masterpiece, he explained, must be perfect from every point of view, unassailable both as to form and content.

On this last point there may be two opinions. Are there not flawed masterpieces?

How about the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven? The first movement, according to Dr. Koussevitsky, is "the greatest single movement in symphonic music." He was willing to grant almost equal stature to the ensuing scherzo, but would go no further. Many critics, of course, have looked upon the choral finale as a magnificent failure. Taken as a whole, Beethoven's "Eroica" is, for Koussevitsky, not only supreme among the master's nine, but "the greatest of all symphonies."

Although he did not attack each and every one of Mr. Dufauw's choices, Dr. Koussevitzky had other objections to make. He would certainly find room in any such list for Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique." He deplored the absence of Berlioz and indicated his fondness for the "Fantastic," which he conducts so compellingly. He does not believe that an acquaintance with Debussy's "Faun" would condition the listener for a full appreciation of the much greater "La Mer," Debussy's "orchestral masterpiece." He feels that Strauss reached his peak in "Death and Transfiguration," more particularly the final section, and that the Fourth, not the First (which occurs more frequently on his programs), is the most characteristic of the symphonies of Brahms. He would set the romantic Piano Concerto of Schumann above any of his symphonies, in which matter he has considerable backing, but among the latter he was sure that in the "Rhenish" Mr. Dufauw had picked the weakest of them. Again, Mozart's G minor or E-flat would, for him, come ahead of the "Jupiter." But here, as elsewhere, he found comparisons difficult, since each work illustrates a different aspect of Mozart's genius.

"I have a very special feeling for Brahms," he said. "I like very much to conduct his music. But when people claim for him the highest originality, I beg leave to differ. In his symphonies you will find echoes of all of his important predecessors: Schumann, Schubert, Beethoven, Bach—even Rossini." And he hummed a passage from the first movement of the First which comes straight out of the "William Tell" Overture. Such borrowings, he made haste to add, are not important so long as the spirit of the music is different.

In anticipating his reaction a fortnight ago I suggested that he would include Sibelius "at any cost." I was therefore quite surprised to find him adopting a rather condescending attitude toward the Finnish symphonist, to whom he devotes so much attention. In most of the symphonies he finds weak passages, and he instanced the lack of true development in the finale of No. 2 (with which he always both raises the roof and brings down the house.) The Fourth, the particular pet of the rabid Sibelians, he finds "experimental." "Twenty-five years from now," he declared, "only one of these symphonies will still be played. Do you know which one it will be?" I suggested the Second, now the reigning favorite. He shook his head and held up his right hand, fingers outstretched.

The sum and substance of his attitude was, however, that few of the great composers could be fittingly represented by any one composition. And in that he is absolutely right.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

FEB 12 1946

Boston Symphony Canceled

The concert scheduled for tonight by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the benefit of the Rachmaninoff Fund, Inc., has been postponed indefinitely.

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD AMERICAN

FEB 10 1946

RETURNING TO his post as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra after his midseason vacation, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky announces plans for the 1946 season of the Berkshire Music Center at "Tanglewood" in Lenox, Mass., July 1-Aug. 10, With the cooperation of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation four concerts of chamber music have been arranged. Preceding Festival concerts Dr. Koussevitzky and the instrumental faculty of more than 30 members of the Boston Symphony will give two Bach-Mozart programs. While the emphasis at "Tanglewood" is on student participation in the actual performance of music, students have opportunity to attend special assemblies. Aaron Copland as moderator will conduct forums. Olin Downes will give four lectures on "Art of Criticism." Special guest lecturers will include Howard Hanson, conductor of the Rochester Symphony; William Schuman, Edward Weeks and others to be announced.

Dr. Hanson

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY'S assistants at the Center in the Orchestral Conducting Department and for the advanced orchestra will be Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin and Stanley Chapple. The Opera Department will be under direction of Dr. Herbert Graf and Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design scenery and costumes. Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and composed especially for "Tanglewood and produced in England with outstanding success, will receive its first American presentation. Hugh Ross will train the chorus and Leonard Bernstein will conduct.

THE COMPOSITION Department will be in charge of Aaron Copland, assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center. Hugh Ross and Robert Shaw will have classes in choral conducting, and also direct the student chorus—Mr. Shaw preparing the Festival chorus for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, which will close the Berkshire Festival concerts. Chamber music groups will work under direction of Gregor Piatigorsky, famed 'cellist, with the assistance of the principals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"It is nature who forces us to break forth into singing when our heart is moved by great and sudden emotion—in the wail of grief, in the exaltation of joy, in the sigh of melancholy longing."—Cicero

AT THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Symfonia Choral Society held recently in the Polish Community Home in Park av., Mrs. George Grabowski, 101 Russet Lane, was reelected president for 1946. Other officers: Vice president, Mrs. Henry Trzpis; treasurer, Miss Irene Dobrowolski; recording secretary, Mrs. Chester Stempinski; financial secretary, Miss Pauline Glowacki. The music committee: Mrs. Edmund B. Tyminski, Mrs. Joseph Tomon and Miss Ruth Prybylski. Miss Dorothy Hubbard is director and Miss Ruth Prybylski is accompanist of the singing group. Plans are being made for a card party on Feb. 23 and for the annual concert May 19.

Mrs. Grabowski

"Music produces like effects in the mind as good medicine on the body."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

FEB 11 1946

Eugene List to Replace Ailing Horowitz at Benefit

Eugene List

Associated Press

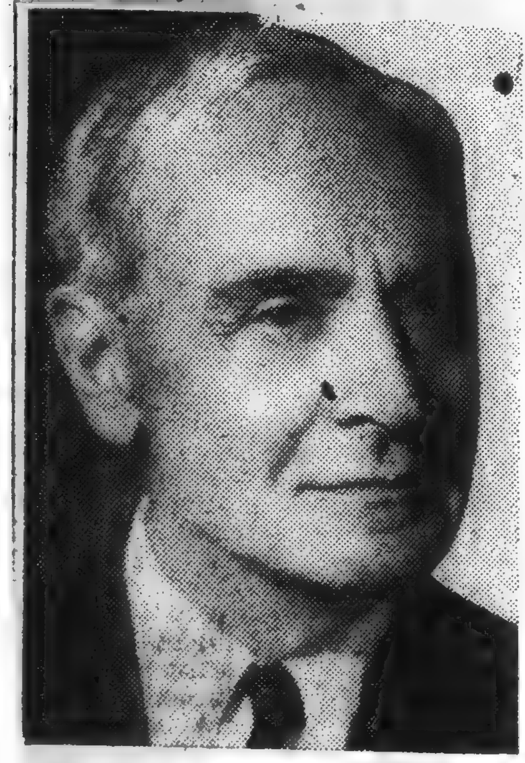
Eugene List, former staff sergeant in the Special Service Division of the United States Army, will substitute for Vladimir Horowitz as soloist in the benefit concert for the Rachmaninoff Fund to be given tomorrow evening in Carnegie Hall by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, it was announced yesterday. The substitution is made necessary by Mr. Horowitz's illness with influenza, which is so severe that his doctor has forbidden him to play.

Informed of this, Mr. List offered yesterday to donate his services for the concert. This will be Mr. List's first appearance with orchestra since he returned from a European tour, during which he played for President Truman, Winston Churchill and Premier Stalin at the Potsdam Conference.

Minor changes in the program of tomorrow's concert have been necessitated by this substitution. Mr. List will play the Second Rachmaninoff Concerto with orchestra instead of the Third, which Mr. Horowitz had intended to perform, and the program will open with Rachmaninoff's own orchestral version of his "Vocalise." The other numbers will be Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait," with Melvyn Douglas as narrator, and Tchaikovsky's "Symphonie Pathetique."

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
STAR-LEDGER

FEB 11 1946



MAESTRO — Serge Koussevitzky, who brings the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the Mosque Thursday evening for a concert under Griffith Music Foundation auspices.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

FEB 12 1946

Horowitz Ill, List to Play

Change in Tonight's Boston Symphony Program Announced

Former Technical Sergeant Eugene List will replace Vladimir Horowitz as soloist in tonight's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky's direction at Carnegie Hall for the benefit of the Rachmaninoff Fund. He will play Rachmaninoff's second piano concerto, in C minor, instead of the same composer's originally announced third concerto. Mr. Horowitz, who is president of the Rachmaninoff Fund, is unable to appear owing to influenza.

Mr. List, who played for President Truman, Premier Joseph Stalin and Former Premier Winston Churchill at the Potsdam Conference last summer, is contributing his services.

This Clipping From
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

FEB 12 1946

TANGLEWOOD TO OPEN ON JULY 1

Returning to his post as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra after his mid-season vacation, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky has announced that four concerts of chamber music have been arranged and preceding the Festival Concerts Dr. Koussevitsky and the instrumental faculty composed of more than 30 members of the Boston Symphony will give two Bach-Mozart programmes.

The season at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., will be from July 1 to August 10th.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

FEB 13 1946

Cuban Music Scholarship

The American Steel Corporation of Cuba and the American Tropical Products Corporation of Cuba are sponsoring a scholarship in advanced composition at this summer's session of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., for a Cuban composer under thirty years old. This includes transportation, room and board and admission to all lectures, concerts and general activities of this summer's session, including the nine festival concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A preliminary committee composed of Jose Ardeval, conductor of the Havana Chamber Orchestra; Maria Munoz de Quevedo, conductor of the Havana Choral Society, and Dr. Diego Bonilla, director of the Havana Municipal Conservatory, will examine manuscripts sent to the Havana offices of the two sponsoring companies before March 15. The works which they choose will be submitted to a New York committee designated by the Cuban-American Music Group, and the winner will be notified by May 15.

ORK, N.Y.
TIMES

EB 11 1946

List to Replace
Horowitz at Benefit

Eugene List
Associated Press

List, former staff ser-he Special Service Divie United States Army, tute for Vladimir Horoloist in the benefit cone Rachmaninoff Fund to omorrow evening in Carl by the Boston Symhestra under Dr. Serge
, it was announced
The substitution is ssary by Mr. Horowitz's h influenza, which is so t his doctor has forbid-o play.
d of this, Mr. List oferday to donate his serve concert. This will be first appearance with since he returned from n tour, during which he r President Truman, Churchill and Premier
he Potsdam Conference. hanges in the program
ow's concert have been d by this substitution.
will play the Second noff Concerto with orstead of the Third, which vitz had intended to per-the program will open manfnoff's own orchesn of his "Vocalise." The bers will be Aaron Cop-Lincoln Portrait," with ouglas as narrator, and ky's "Symphonie Pathé-

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

FEB 12 1946

Tanglewood SummerPlans Announced

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Has Broad Musical Program

Boston, Feb. 12.—Returning to his post as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra after his mid-season vacation, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky announces his plans for the 194 season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., July 1—August 10.

The School catalogue which is about to be circulated will disclose two new musical activities at Tanglewood. With the cooperation of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation four concerts of chamber music have been arranged, and preceding the Festival concerts Dr. Koussevitzky and the instrumental faculty composed of more than thirty members of the Boston Symphony will give two Bach-Mozart programs.

Dr. Koussevitzky's assistants at the Center in the Orchestra Conducting Department and for the advanced orchestra will be Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin and Stanley Chapple.

The Opera Department will be under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf and Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design scenery and costumes. Benjamin Britten's opera "Peter Grimes," commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, and composed especially for Tanglewood, and produced in England with outstanding success, will receive its first American presentation. Hugh Ross will train the chorus and Leonard Bernstein will conduct the performance. The composition department will be in charge of Aaron Copland, who is the assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center.

Choral conducting will be under the direction of Hugh Ross and Robert Shaw, both of whom will have classes in choral conducting and also direct the student chorus —Mr. Shaw preparing the Festival chorus for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, which will close the Berkshire Festival concerts.

Chamber music groups will work under the direction of Gregor Piatigorsky with the assistance of the principals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

While the emphasis at Tanglewood is on student participation in the actual performance of music students will also have the opportunity, as before, to attend special assembles. Aaron Copland as moderator will conduct forum meetings. Olin Downes will give four lectures on the Art of Criticism. Special guest lecturers will include Howard Hanson, William Schuman, Edward Weeks, and others to be announced.

Next month Dr. Koussevitzky will announce a summary of the Festival programs—nine concerts July 25-August 11, Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons. Those who wish fuller information about the School or the Festival should address Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER

FEB 12 1946

Last Night's Concert

By E. C. R.

Boston Symphony Brilliantly Closes Woolsey Series

The seventh and final concert in the Woolsey Hall Series was heard last evening at Woolsey Hall, with every seat filled and standing room sold out far in advance of the performance. The Boston Symphony Orchestra was again the attraction, and this, their second performance of the season, seemed even more memorable than their last. Serge Koussevitzky was at his best, bringing out the personal and human quality of the music. He has the power to shade, tint, and give all those delicate touches which are free expressions of artistic ideals.

The concert opened with Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C Major, Op. 21. This first symphony follows Haydn's habit of a slow introduction, and the opening notes by full orchestra sounded like a proclamation. The opening tune is repeated in the second part, followed by a contrasting movement treated in many interesting ways, while the Coda is elaborate and brilliant. The violin-horn dialogue features the second movement; while the third is a minuet going right up the scale. The Finale starts with a musical joke: after striking a G octave it goes up the scale softly, three notes, then four, five, six and seven. After the completion of this scale he starts his first tune, lively and cheerful With the conventional ending Beethoven's First Symphony ends.

Next was heard the Passacaglia and Four Sea Interludes from the Opera "Peter Grimes," Op. 33, by Benjamin Britten. This opera was commissioned by Serge Koussevitzky to be played at the Berkshire Music School at Tanglewood. Its irregular theme seemed at times to be at cross purposes with itself. The wierd inharmonies kept the audience practically breathless, waiting for what would come next in this altogether difficult and different number.

Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 5, in D. Major was one of six written by this great composer. In this selection the piano was heard in a solo part which was followed by a trio between the flute and violin. Only a very small part of the orchestra performed this number—a few of the strings, the flute and the grand piano, giving the effect which must have been pretty much the way Bach himself intended. The solo parts were performed by Lukas Foss, at the piano; Richard Burgin, the violin; and Georges Laurent, the flute. Particularly delightful and intricate in pattern was the brilliant piano solo as performed by young Mr. Foss. After this selection one felt anew the depth and beauty of the old compared with the more modern compositions.

Symphony No. 2 by Dmitri B. Kabalevsky was a work which the Boston Symphony Orchestra played last week for the first time in Boston. Kabalevsky is one of a group of Soviet composers who have contributed heavily to the effective music being produced in modern times. This number was composed in 1934. A loud introductory chord opens the symphony. The clarinet, woodwind and then the strings pick up and continue the song, joined finally by the drum. The tempo is lively and vibrant. The slow movement is also opened by the flute, followed by the strings in full play, and this part closes with the trombone and clarinet giving the final call. Koussevitzky's hands, body and face all seemed to work together with amazing powers of expression. Every nerve was keyed to the mood, and the personal magnetism of this most able director was infused into every individual artist himself. At times he became so excited his voice could be heard by those nearest the stage, so tense and enraptured was he in the development of the pattern of this symphony. The number closed on a happy air, the melody being tossed back and forth between the various instruments. A march melody with a military air started feet tapping and heads joining the conductors in nodding this way and that. This was indeed a fitting selection to bring to a close a most successful season for the Woolsey Hall Concert Series.

ALLIS CHALMERS STRIKES

LAPORTE, Ind., Feb. 7 (AP)—Representatives of CIO unions at seven plants of the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Company, including Boston, voted tonight to call a strike effective March 4.

Benefit for the Rachmaninoff Fund, Inc.
Carnegie Hall—Tonight at 8:30
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY,
CONDUCTOR
MELVYN DOUGLAS, NARRATOR
Eugene List, Soloist in Rachmaninoff
2nd piano concerto substituting for Vladimir Horowitz because of Mr. Horowitz' illness.
Tickets, Burden Littell Bureau—Bonwit Teller

Symphony Cancels N. Y. Concert, to Give One Tonight

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, 110 men strong, had a bad day yesterday.

They were scheduled to take the 10 a. m. train for New York to play for a Rachmaninoff Fund benefit last night and they are further scheduled for another concert tonight. When Mayor O'Dwyer closed the city up tight, Symphony officials hurriedly warned the men not to make the trip.

Late last night, Manager George E. Judd announced tonight's performance would go on as scheduled. The musicians will leave Boston today.

SYMPHONY OFF PITCH IN N. Y. STRIKE OCTAVE

FEB. 13

The Boston Symphony Orchestra missed its first scheduled concert in 58 years last night, when 12 artists including Dr. Serge Koussevitzky arrived in New York to find their Carnegie Hall engagement off-again on-again, while the remainder were "bumped off" trains in Boston before Mayor O'Dwyer's meetings ban was lifted

The orchestra was scheduled for a special Lincoln's birthday performance in New York, featuring "A Lincoln Portrait," and the advance group had left before the ban on assembly in public places was announced. The remainder of the company was hustled from railroad trains in the South and Back Bay stations by officials and railroad officers when it was learned here that the performance had been called off.

When the restrictions in New York were lifted at 6 P. M. the dozen musicians were authorized to play as scheduled, but the 98 in Boston had scattered to their homes with orders to await instructions this morning. There had been an advance sale of $20,000 for the concert, which will be held at a later date, according to Manager George E. Judd who was among those "marooned" in New York.

Reached by telephone in New York, Judd announced the remainder of the group would leave Boston today to fill other engagements this week at Carnegie Hall and in New Jersey.

The last time the orchestra missed a scheduled performance, Judd explained ruefully, was during the blizzard of 1888 when it was snowbound in Connecticut en route to New York.

The performance in New York last night was booked for the benefit of the Rachmaninoff fund for young musicians. Ex-Army Sgt. Eugene List, who played at Potsdam for President Truman and Prime Minister Churchill, was scheduled for a Rachmaninoff piano concerto, but Judd promised he would get his opportunity later.

HUB SYMPHONY KEPT AT HOME

Musicians' Concert in New York Cancelled

Boston and New England began yesterday to feel the effects of New York's paralyzing business blackout, and then as suddenly saw the situation relieved as Mayor O'Dwyer's stoppage edict was rescinded last night. But the news did not come soon enough to save the Boston Symphony Orchestra from cancelling a concert scheduled for Carnegie Hall last night.

One of the largest motor transportation concerns in New England revealed that only two of 30 trucks which made the over-the-road trip to New York Sunday night, had been unloaded there yesterday. Word that the edict had been rescinded came in time for many trucking concerns to proceed with normal movements.

Nearly all of 110 members of the Symphony had boarded a train for New York to keep the concert engagement and had to be notified at the Back Bay station that the concert had been cancelled. A few of the members, including Conductor Serge Koussevitzky, had gone on ahead by train or car, and could not be recalled. The concert, for which hundreds of tickets had been sold at $50 apiece, was to be for the benefit of the Rachmaninoff Fund in memory of the famous composer.

NEW YORK TIMES
13, 1946. FEB. 13, 1946

THEATRES REOPEN AS BAN IS LIFTED

All But 2 of Legitimate Houses Resume Operation and Most of City's 650 Movies

The majority of New York's 600 motion picture theatres and all but two of the thirty-four legitimate theatres turned on their lights again at 6 P. M. yesterday and resumed full operation following the lifting of the fuel order by Mayor O'Dwyer, which had closed all places of amusement at midnight Monday.

Broadway movie theatres featuring stage entertainment were able to resume almost immediately after the lifting of the ban as a result of stand-by orders issued by managements to entertainers and house staffs earlier in the day.

The nine-hour suspension of operations put a severe dent into theatre box-office receipts in the five boroughs. Several executives estimated that the loss, if theatres had been forced to remain closed throughout the day, would have totaled approximately $1,000,000 as holiday prices normally would have prevailed yesterday. They were reluctant to hazard a guess last night as to the percentage of actual loss on the day's receipts.

Attendance Off Last Night

A survey of first-run theatres in the midtown area disclosed that attendance last night ranged from one-half to capacity. The Radio City Music Hall reported a line of some 1,200 persons when it opened at 6:30 P. M. Although the management could not present its stage show, the film feature, "Adventure," and several short subjects were enough to draw capacity crowds. General admission was 90 cents as compared with the normal $1.25. As the only house with reserved seats, the management was called on to refund approximately $5,000 in those admissions purchased for the afternoon shows.

The Paramount's stage show starring Danny Kaye as well as its film attraction, "Miss Susie Slagle's," drew near capacity attendances. The Roxy with "Fallen Angel" on the screen and Carmen Miranda heading the stage show played to half capacity. A spokesman for the theatre estimated that normally the house would have grossed about $25,000. The Capitol which is presenting the musical "The Harvey Girls," also played to about half capacity.

According to spokesmen for several neighborhood theatre chains business ranged from "poor" to "pretty good," although nearly all reported that business "was not normal."

Only Two Houses Dark

Resorting to the radio, telephone and wire services, the legitimate theatre producers and their company managers, assisted by secretaries and others who were available, succeeded in reaching casts stagehand crews, box-office treasurers and ushers and by 9 P. M. only the Biltmore, housing Walter Huston in "Apple of His Eye," and the New York City Center, the city's own playhouse where "Desert Song" has been playing, were dark.

The scheduled premiere of "The Duchess Misbehaves," at the Adelphi, however, was moved back until tonight as a result of the inability to get scenery hung in time. Work had begun on Tuesday but had to be suspended yesterday on the Mayor's original order. Producer A. P. Waxman took advantage of the day's delay, moving his players over to the Claridge Hotel for rehearsals.

At several theatres the uncertainty of a performance kept box-offices and customers in a state of suspension. However, a spirit of opportunism seemed to prevail on both sides of the cage. One treasurer announced that with so many entertainment seekers coming to Broadway a performance would be given if he had to take a role himself. Patrons, meanwhile, flocked to various hits and profited from cancellations, the box-office at "Harvey," anwsering all queries with the remark that the best opportunity to see the show in months was at hand.

On the whole the theatre operators seemed to think that their efforts had been worth the trouble. Although business naturally was affected, there was a feeling that something had been rescued from the shambles. Those that had sold out in advance were best off. By 9:30 P. M. "Show Boat," at the Ziegfeld; "Dream Girl," at the Coronet; "The Glass Menagerie," at the Playhouse; "Harvey," at the Forty-eighth Street, and "Pygmalion," at the Barrymore, which had been taken over by a theatre party benefit, were able to report that they had sold out. Most of the other playhouses were from half to three-quarters filled.

The organizations faced with the toughest problem were the Theatre Guild and Michael Todd, each sponsor of four productions. Mr. Todd used his time on five radio stations to summon his cast and staff. Probably the easiest lot fell to Alfred de Liagre Jr., producer of the three-part "The Voice of the Turtle," at the Morosco, and Eddie Dowling and Louis J. Singer, co-producers of the four-role, "The Glass Menagerie."

NE [illegible] 2/13/46

BOSTON SYMPHONY CANCELS CONCERT

Deferment of Rachmaninoff Fund Benefit Is Orchestra's First Here Since 1888

For the first time since the blizzard of 1888, the Boston Symphony Orchestra was obliged last night to call off a scheduled concert in New York. The concert, arranged as a benefit for the Rachmaninoff Fund, was not held because of Mayor O'Dwyer's emergency shutdown order. When the order was rescinded at 6 P. M. it was too late for the orchestra to reach New York and the postponement remained in effect. In 1888, the orchestra was snowed in at a railroad station in Connecticut on its way to New York.

The Rachmaninoff Fund benefit concert, which was to have been conducted by Serge Koussevitzky with Eugene List as piano soloist, will be held at a date to be announced. Carnegie Hall had already been sold out. It was announced yesterday that tickets will be good for the substitute date.

Mr. Koussevitzky and George E. Judd, the manager of the Boston Symphony, were in town yesterday, but the members of the orchestra remained in Boston. A telephone call yesterday morning from Mr. Judd reached the men just before they were to leave. The orchestra's instruments and music arrived at Carnegie Hall, however, late Monday night.

The Boston Symphony is scheduled to give concerts tonight and Saturday afternoon at Carnegie Hall, and in Brooklyn on Friday evening.

At the Metropolitan Opera House a scheduled performance of "Rigoletto" was postponed, and it was announced that this opera would be done on Feb. 26. Tickets for last night will be honored for the new date. Tonight the Metropolitan is scheduled to perform "The Tales of Hoffmann."

Symphony Cancels N. Y. Concert, to Give One Tonight

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, 110 men strong, had a bad day yesterday.

They were scheduled to take the 10 a. m. train for New York to play for a Rachmaninoff Fund benefit last night and they are further scheduled for another concert tonight. When Mayor O'Dwyer closed the city up tight, Symphony officials hurriedly warned the men not to make the trip.

Late last night, Manager George E. Judd announced tonight's performance would go on as scheduled. The musicians will leave Boston today.

Sylvia Dickler, a young pianist, who was due to make her debut at Town Hall yesterday afternoon, will play at a later date. Her representative said that Miss Dickler was so preoccupied with her preparations for the recital that she did not find about the shutdown order until late yesterday morning.

The Metropolitan Opera House, Town and Carnegie Halls and all other music halls in town were closed yesterday. The Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, which rehearses in Carnegie Hall, did not hold its regular workout yesterday. There will be additional rehearsals later in the week.

Some Metropolitan Opera rehearsals were held at private homes of conductors and singers, but those scheduled in the theatre were called off.

There was other confusion resulting from the shutdown order. Extensive dinner and supper parties had been arranged in connection with the Rachmaninoff Fund concert. Hostesses were facing this dilemma in various ways.

One of the most embarrassed persons in town was a young musician who was to be a guest of honor, before and after his performance, at dinner and supper parties last night.

"Imagine being a guest of honor without playing," he said sadly.

[82]

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

FEB 13 1946

BOSTON SYMPHONY CANCELS CONCERT

Deferment of Rachmaninoff Fund Benefit Is Orchestra's First Here Since 1888

For the first time since the blizzard of 1888, the Boston Symphony Orchestra was obliged last night to call off a scheduled concert in New York. The concert, arranged as a benefit for the Rachmaninoff Fund, was not held because of Mayor O'Dwyer's emergency shutdown order. When the order was rescinded at 6 P. M. it was too late for the orchestra to reach New York and the postponement remained in effect. In 1888, the orchestra was snowed in at a railroad station in Connecticut on its way to New York.

The Rachmaninoff Fund benefit concert, which was to nave been conducted by Serge Koussevitzky with Eugene List as piano soloist, will be held at a date to be announced. Carnegie Hall had already been sold out. It was announced yesterday that tickets will be good for the substitute date.

Mr. Koussevitzky and George E. Judd, the manager of the Boston Symphony, were in town yesterday, but the members of the orchestra remained in Boston. A telephone call yesterday morning from Mr. Judd reached the men just before they were to leave. The orchestra's instruments and music arrived at Carnegie Hall, however, late Monday night.

The Boston Symphony is scheduled to give concerts tonight and Saturday afternoon at Carnegie Hall, and in Brooklyn on Friday evening.

At the Metropolitan Opera House a scheduled performance of "Rigoletto" was postponed, and it was announced that this opera would be done on Feb. 26. Tickets for last night will be honored for the new date. Tonight the Metropolitan is scheduled to perform "The Tales of Hoffmann."

Sylvia Dickler, a young pianist, who was due to make her debut at Town Hall yesterday afternoon, will play at a later date. Her representative said that Miss Dickler was so preoccupied with her preparations for the recital that she did not find about the shutdown order until late yesterday morning.

The Metropolitan Opera House, Town and Carnegie Halls and all other music halls in town were closed yesterday. The Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, which rehearses in Carnegie Hall, did not hold its regular workout yesterday. There will be additional rehearsals later in the week.

Some Metropolitan Opera rehearsals were held at private homes of conductors and singers, but those scheduled in the theatre were called off.

There was other confusion resulting from the shutdown order. Extensive dinner and supper parties had been arranged in connection with the Rachmaninoff Fund concert. Hostesses were facing this dilemma in various ways.

One of the most embarrassed persons in town was a young musician who was to be a guest of honor, before and after his performance, at dinner and supper parties last night.

"Imagine being a guest of honor without playing," he said sadly.

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS

FEB 14 1946

CONDUCTOR

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, leading the Boston Symphony in Griffith Music Foundation concert tonight at 8:40 at the Mosque Theater.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST

FEB 14 1946

Words and Music

Koussevitzky Program Offers Beethoven and Prokofieff

By Edward O'Gorman

On Serge Koussevitzky's Carnegie Hall program with the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night, Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture and "Pastoral" Symphony came first and Prokofieff's Symphony No. 5 came last, a fairly clear example, I think, of feinting with the right and hitting with the left.

Dr. Koussevitzky, a conductor who is prone to hammer away valiantly at what he believes to be right—a service he performed not so many years ago for the new Shostakovich of the Fifth Symphony—had already introduced the Prokofieff Fifth Symphony at these concerts less than two months ago. Last night's repetition, an affirmation of faith that paid off, found the Doctor in lively fettle, the orchestra in good voice, and the subscribers unanimously in the mood to hear a stimulating score through to the bitter end, even though the echoes of the recent premiere may still have been vibrating somewhere in the backs of their minds.

The "Pastoral"

There were two diverse worlds of musical tone painting uncovered at this concert, the stringent modernity of Prokofieff and the sunny moods of the "Pastoral" Symphony; and I think that Dr. Koussevitzky, when he thumbed idly through the pages of the "Pastoral" score lying before him on the conductor's stand, must have looked at it much as a director might have regarded a pleasant little piece destined to serve as a curtain-raiser for something bigger and bolder to follow.

With gentle gestures and disarming smiles, he conducted a reading of the "Pastoral" that was placid and serene, easy-going and ingenuous, a performance entirely innocent of the nervous energy and drive that were such important ingredients in the performance of the Prokofieff symphony.

It was a neat, letter-perfect performance except for some improvisational decorating the solo horn unexpectedly contributed in the last movement — not once, not twice, but for a grand total of three times. But these were minor blemishes, nothing to jar the bemused listeners, of which I was admittedly one, out of an extremely pleasant reverie. No burble or extemporaneous instrumental flourish could have disturbed the even flow and rosy moods of this reading. It was so tidy, and its tonal and emotional scope so agreeably modest, that there was something of the character of chamber music about it.

Even the stormy fourth movement (there are five), while it was more than a storm in a teacup, or at least a storm in a big teacup, allowed frequent glimpses of the sun.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
PM

FEB 14 1946

New Music Society To Meet Saturday

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has announced that the first meeting of the new American-Soviet Music Society will be held on Saturday evening, 11 p.m., at Times Hall.

The new society will be nationwide, with membership open to all musicians interested in "promoting musical interchange between the U. S. A. and the USSR."

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

FEB 15 1946

Koussevitzky Will Conduct Third Brooklyn Concert

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its third Brooklyn concert of the season this evening at 8:30 at the Academy of Music. The guest soloist will be Alexander Borovsky, celebrated Russian pianist, who will perform Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 5. Also featured in the program will be Cesar Franck's Symphony in D minor. The concert will open with Beethoven's Overture to "Coriolan," Op. 62, the only other work scheduled.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

FEB 14 1946

MUSIC

By VIRGIL THOMSON

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, concert last night at Carnegie Hall. The program:

Overture to "Coriolanus" .... Beethoven
Symphony No. 6, in F major (Pastoral) .... Beethoven
Symphony No. 5, Op. 100 .... Prokofieff

Serge Koussevitzky

Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra

Going Contemporary

PROKOFIEFF'S Fifth Symphony, which the Boston Symphony Orchestra played here for the second time this season at last night's concert in Carnegie Hall, remains on second hearing chiefly interesting to this listener as a neo-Romantic work by a formerly neo-Classic-and-Impressionist composer. Its more picturesque sections, which are the second and fourth movements, present no novelty of any kind, though they are good Prokofieff, the first of these being a sort of Soviet-style blues, or Muscovik one-step, and the other a standard finale in the composer's best calisthenic vein. Both are brightly, if a little weightily, orchestrated. The last has even more reminders than mere coloration of Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel."

* * *

The first and third movements, which are less striking, deal with a more difficult problem, namely, making a piece of some length out of pliable material. The third movement, a lament, or elegy, is less successfully developed than the first. Slow movements have never been Prokofieff's forte, and of late years he has taken more and more to conceding their lack of expressivity (and of rhythmic variety) under an overlay of cinema sentiment.

The first movement, however, is as neat a piece of symphonic workmanship as has been exposed to us locally in many a day. The rounded, graceful theme of it is no theme at all in a classical sense. It is a motif that generates a flow of music. This is not made up of themes or of formal melodies; it is rather a constant outpouring, an oratorical discourse that never repeats itself but that springs always from the original motif, or source, and that returns constantly to it for refreshment.

* * *

The movement is a neo-Romantic work because it faces the central problem of neo-Romanticism, which is the making of sustained music out of non-angular material. This is a technical statement of the neo-Romantic meaning-problem, which is that of sustained personal lyricism. But the two problems are one. The neo-Classicists of the 1920's used angular or motionless material. Any neo-Classicist who, knowingly or unawares, has got involved with rounded or flowing material has found himself up to his neck in personal lyricism, the most treacherous of contemporary esthetic currents. That Prokofieff has not, in this work, found himself out beyond his depth either technically or emotionally is proof that he is not an old man yet. That he has walked out after one movement on all the serious difficulties presented proves also that he is not quite at home in contemporary waters.

* * *

The concert began with Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture and "Pastoral" Symphony. Both sounded to perfection instrumentally, but as meaning they were poor and thin. The first was overdramatized till it resembled Dargomijsky. The second was overcorseted rhythmically till all the jollity went out of it. The slow movement, scored in twelve-eight time, was conducted in six-eight. And quantitative meter was consistently mistaken for accentual. As a result, two hundred years' evolution of the German pastoral style, of which this work is the apex and flower, came to nothing but beautiful tone.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

FEB 14 1946

MUSIC

By Miles Kastendieck

Koussevitzky Repeats Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony in Carnegie Hall

Evidently Serge Koussevitzky believes so strongly in Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony that ~~he is~~ determined to make others like it by exposing them to it as much as possible. In the third Wednesday evening concert of the Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall last night he repeated the work which had its first performance here at the first Wednesday evening concert back in November. The virtue of rehearing was apparent and one welcomed the opportunity, but it was hardly fair to bring it back in the same series which only totals five events in a single season. People walked out, a circumstance not usually noted at Bostonians' concerts.

A second hearing brought little change in this critic's first impressions. The symphony is a fine piece of work, interesting to follow, entertaining and disturbing. Again the second and fourth movements which have the stamp of the composer's idiom offered the most satisfactory listening. The first movement gave more than the third. The perplexing part came in the continuous feeling that Prokofieff has yielded too readily to the influence of other composers, Richard Strauss, Moussorgsky and Shostakovich in particular. That impression persists to discredit the value of the symphony, for it makes the listener think of other things such as documentary films, etc. Koussevitzky made one believe in the work because he put so much into the performance, but that fact was noted on the occasion of the first performance.

The concert opened with a stunningly dramatic reading of Beethoven's Overture to "Coriolanus." This was followed by a surprisingly pale, even enervating account of Beethoven's Sixth Symphony. The performance had no lift. The music brought solace in a soothing, therapeutic way. It was set forth in entirely too refined a style. The orchestra did some astoundingly suave playing, except for a horn mishap, but it was too smooth. The picture was not so much of the great outdoors as of an especially fine rural stage setting.

No announcement was forthcoming about the postponed concert of Feb. 12 for the Rachmaninoff Fund except that two dates in March were being considered.

[93]

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

FEB 14 1946

PROKOFIEFF'S FIFTH PLAYED HERE AGAIN

Koussevitzky Offers Symphony for Second Time in New York —Boston Orchestra Scores

By OLIN DOWNES

With a fine courtesy to his audiences and to the art of modern music, Dr. Koussevitzky repeated Prokofieff's Fifth symphony, which he had introduced here earlier in the season, at the concert given by the Boston Symphony last night in Carnegie Hall. The symphony is certainly one of the most interesting and probably the best, that has come from Russia in the last quarter-century. It is unquestionably the richest and most mature symphonic score that the composer has produced. There are new spiritual horizons in the serenity of the opening movement and wonderful developments that come later.

Prokofieff is quoted as having said that it is "a symphony about the spirit of man." Robert Magidoff wrote in THE TIMES of its Moscow premiere that the music has but a "quasi-gaiety," that "something ominous seems always to lurk round the corner. The awareness of brutal warfare broods over it and comes forth in sharp dissonance—as at the end." But it is hard to justify such a conclusion.

The symphony is considerably less dissonant than other representative works of Prokofieff—for example, those of the Sixth and Seventh Piano Sonatas, which are harsher, grimmer and more warlike. The Fifth symphony, composed in 1944, impresses us as being another story. The opening theme, which recurs in the introduction of the finale, is an index to the loftiness of the whole conception. It is quite possibly extravagant, after what was for the writer a first hearing, to say that the slow movement, very emotional and grandly planned, reminded him of passages—one would almost say "processes"—in certain slow movements of Beethoven.

More Genuine Emotion

But we forget, and are due for a sharp reminder from that advanced school of thought which busily informs the public today that no really distinguished music has any definite emotional implications, when we claim that this very element, plus the strength of the form, make the Fifth symphony superior to other of Prokofieff's scores. His emotion is deeper and more genuine. His harmonic scheme and his key-relationship are more transparent. His forms are classic.

When the progression of the musical thought leads naturally and inevitably to it there is as much dissonance, and no more, as the logic of masterly part writing requires. But that is not new. It is as old as Mozart and older. The "forms," we have said, are classic. This does not mean that they are slavish copies of formulas. The opening movement—in case that matters a hoot—is in the age-old "sonata form"—and is splendid music.

The scherzo, which is very exciting and picturesque along immediately recognizable lines, varies the ancient procedure in a striking way—as, for example, in successive transformations of the main idea of the movement instead of the mere repetition of phrases and section as in the Mozart-Haydn model. There is also an extra theme in the first part of this movement, etc., etc., etc. No doubt our "absolute musicians" and our apostles of "pure music" would be pleased to read more of this kind of thing as a commentary upon this art-work. We suspect, however, that the ordinarily intelligent reader would finally collapse if it were long continued.

Has Wealth of Ideas

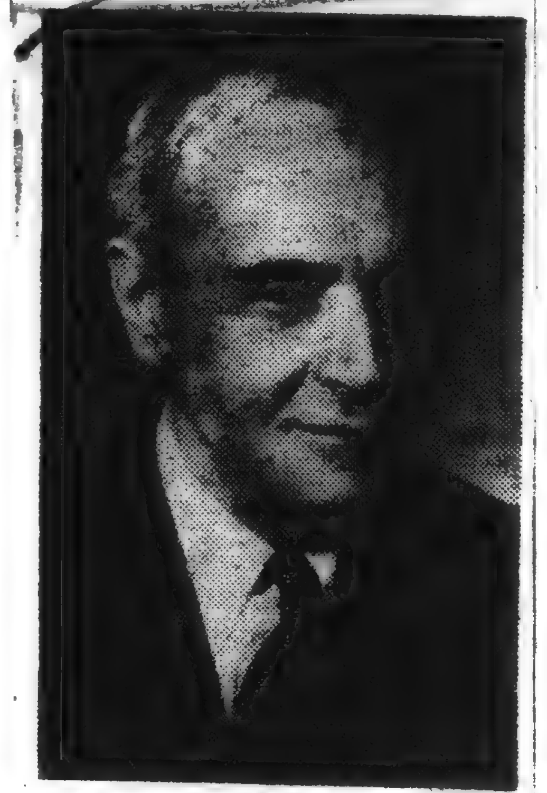
The [illegible] movement, an unusual [illegible] passacaglia and free development, is important for its [illegible] and emotional content, its wealth of ideas, its variety and resource, yet fundamental unity in their treatment, again real pulsing music that never once descends from its emotional heights and never once flags in the continuity and strength of its inspiration.

The finale has the fine introduction that brings back the Olympian mood of the opening, with the theme itself. Then comes the rondo movement, a variant of the old practice. A main theme near in character to the initial motives alternates with various dance motives and fragments of joyous song which are flung into the pot, as the movement sweeps along to its climax. Then a trombone—if memory serves us where the instrumentation is concerned—shouts a variant of the earlier theme in counter rhythm to all the whirling dance figures. It is a finale by a composer who has no hesitation whatsoever to speaking in popular musical parlance, who here writes holiday music for a rejoicing people—and how!

The performance was one of superb virtuosity and much more: it seemed to pierce to the innermost possibilities of the score as it is written. The remainder of the program requires no particular comment here. The Beethoven "Pastoral" symphony is a chef d'oeuvre of this conductor and orchestra, and a never-ending delight for its music. The Coriolanus overture fittingly introduced the occasion.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER

FEB 14 1946



Dr. Serge Koussevitzky (above) Morton Gould, Olin Downes, Elie Siegmeister and Dr. Margaret Grant will be among those to address the first public meeting this Saturday evening, Feb. 16, of the new American-Soviet Music Society of which Dr. Koussevitzky is chairman. Aaron Copland will preside over the meeting which will be held at 11 p.m. at the New York Times Hall, 240 W. 44 St., New York, N. Y. All musicians and music lovers have been invited to attend this initial meeting and become charter members of the organization which will be devoted to "promoting musical interchange between the U.S.A. and the USSR." The new society, an outgrowth of the Music Committee of the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, will be nation-wide in character. It has just been set up following the recent Conference on American-Soviet Cultural Cooperation that was attended by 1,000 people.

This Clipping From
TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD

FEB 18 1946

To Salute Petroleum

A salute to the petroleum industry will be made by Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing company, Milwaukee, Wis., over the Boston Symphony Orchestra on March 23, so Fred E. Cooper, the world distributor of A. C. heavy duty pulling and oil service equipment, was informed.

The tribute to the oil men will be an intermission feature of the program, that will mark the third anniversary of Allis-Chalmers support of the Boston organization now in its 65th year, and 22nd for Dr. Serge Kousevitsky, the conductor.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK N.Y.
NEWS

FEB 19 1946

New Concert Date

The postponed Lincoln's Birthday benefit concert at Carnegie Hall for the Rachmaninoff Fund has been rescheduled for March 12. This one features the Boston Symphony with pianist Vladimir Horowitz as guest soloist.

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS

FEB 15 1946

Boston Symphony

Koussevitzky Elicits Ovations in Concert Sponsored by Griffith at Mosque

BY ALAN BRANIGAN

A completely successful orchestral concert, that rare event in the concert halls, was given last night at the Mosque Theater by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction. The performance drew ovations from the capacity audience of about 3,700, who were gathered together under the auspices of Griffith Music Foundation.

As a musical outpouring, the evening was of such a caliber as to permit the Foundation to pin laurels upon itself. Bringing the Bostonians, as well as other first rate artists to our midst, entails an enormous amount of forethought and labor and Newark should cherish an organization that does it not only often but also exceedingly well.

On the purely social side, the concert held many charms. Present were many musicians of the county as well as civic leaders and persons prominent in the professions. It was notable that only a few uniformed men were in attendance, in contrast to recent seasons, and many remarked on the number of citizens who broke out evening gowns and starched shirts for the occasion.

High Spirits

Among the multitude who enjoyed themselves must be listed most prominently Dr. Koussevitzky. Although just recovered from an illness the venerable sage of Symphony Hall was in excellent spirits, enacting out each piece of music and, as it were, modeling it so that all could see its contours. For sheer orchestral witchery, his performance was matchless.

The program, which for once stayed strictly away from the Middle European masters, included Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" overture, the prelude to Moussorgsky's "Khovantschina," a suite from Prokofieff's ballet, "Romeo and Juliet," and Cesar Franck's Symphony in D Minor.

As the sole really unfamiliar work in the list, Prokofieff's music was the most newsworthy. Written a decade ago, the Russian's score is, as might be expected, a marvel of clever orchestrations, harmonic adventures and slightly cockeyed humor, elements which enter into all his compositions. The piece is carried off successfully mainly by the brilliancy of its musical language, which utilizes all the tricks of the modern orchestra.

To this reviewer, the opening section depicting the Montagues and the Capulets was the most interesting, especially in a tune that recalled the old spook theme of early movie mood music. There followed two rapid numbers, and then as concluding piece done in an atmosphere of mock tragedy. The connection with Shakespeare's play of all this whimsical cleverness was hard to distinguish. Probably like all ballets, this one needs dancers.

The Berlioz and Moussorgsky piece made a neat bracketing. Both painted cities—Berlioz delineating with tremendous effect the rather brusque vigors of Rome and the Russian bending his many talents to showing how the dawn rising over Moscow might sound in music. The effect of each was exhilarating, the pieces were so much alike and yet so startlingly different. The playing throughout the difficult measures of both works was not less than inspired.

The Franck Symphony provided as satisfying a conclusion as one could have wished. Its Gothic grandeurs towered in the full beauty of the orchestra's tone and the familiar themes seemed to undergo transformation into something rich and strange. Dr. Koussevitzky's interpretation followed traditional lines, encompassing the formidable task in 40 minutes, which indicated a rather quick pace had been taken. His personal approach was apparent mostly in the speeding up of passages leading to climaxes, which gave the music a good deal of force.

Between the beauties of the unique composition and the stirring manner of the orchestra's playing, the audience could not resist raising storms of applause and shouts of "Bravo."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK N.Y.
NEWS

FEB 17 1946

Listening In

With Ben Gross

The Notebook . . . For the first time, an agent (Annie Laurie Williams), will attempt to sell a script to the movies by means of television, tonight at 8, when Richard P. McDonagh's play, "Laughter in Paris," is telecast by NBC's visual station WNBT. It is a full-length original drama for the video medium . . . Upton Close, the commentator, returns to the air via WINS at 10:15 P. M., Tuesday. His remarks will also be carried by a 50-station Mutual hook-up. . . . Louisiana's singing Governor Jim Davis and a five-piece hillbilly band will be featured on Frank Sinatra's WABC show, Feb. 20, at 9 P. M.

* * *

Pass In Review. . . . That the unassuming civilian who merely did his daily job during the war may also be a hero, was proved in for CBS Workshop drama, "Just a Plain Blue Suit," by David Lesan (WABC-2:30) yesterday afternoon. A well-written play with heart appeal; but the production was on the uncertain side. . . . There were some lilting tunes in the Met's airing of "Der Rosenkavalier" (WJZ-2). The orchestra, directed by George Szell, played brilliantly. . . . And speaking of fine music, I hope you heard the Boston Symphony's glowing performance of Cesar Franck's symphony in D minor, under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky (WJZ-9:30 to 10:30).

* * *

What's Novik Doing? . . . The answer is: "Plenty." Morris Novik, formerly managing director of WNYC and now in charge of former Mayor LaGuardia's broadcasting enterprises, has launched himself as a public service radio consultant with a bang. The International Ladies Garment Workers' Union has hired him to supervise its public service features on six prospective radio stations: New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Chattanooga, Tenn., St. Louis and Los Angeles. Morris, who created a brilliant record with his program building on WNYC, has been offered similar work with three upstate commercial outlets. The union's studios, Novik points out, will not be controlled by the labor organization itself. The ILGW will merely loan the money for their construction to private organizations which will conduct them as community stations on a commercial, but non-profit basis. The garment workers will retain only 49 per cent. of the stock. "One of our chief aims," says Novik, "will be the development of new types of experimental programs." . . . Radio badly needs such experimentation, and this reporter is all for it.

* * *

Watch This! . . . The Overseas Press Club of America, numbering among its four hundred members almost every internationally known radio commentator and newspaper correspondent, will soon go on the air. It is planning a round-table type of program, with the panels chosen from the distinguished membership. Bruno Show, veteran radio and newsreel commentator, is in charge of the arrangements. As long as the program is on a sustaining basis, the fee paid by the network presenting it will go to the benefit fund of the organization. Both Shaw and Commentator W. W. Chaplin, president of the Club, are lining up a series of discussions by outstanding authorities on world affairs.

The cheers of the bobby-soxers for singer Johnny Desmond on the "Teen Timers'" show (WEAF-11 A. M.) prove that Sinatra and Como have at last some real competition. . . . Former Governor Harold E. Stassen of Minnesota, chairman of Brotherhood Week, presented a citation of distinguished merit to Helen Hayes for her performance in Carl Ewald's "My Little Boy," last night (WABC-7). She repeated the broadcast of this touching play. . . . The Harry Savoy show (WOR-8:30) bowed in with a lively melange of fun and melody. The gags, however, are obvious. The songs of Vera Holly and of the Muphy Sisters and the music of John Gart's band contributed greatly to the enjoyment of listeners. . . . Jerome Kern's operetta, "Roberta," with Penny Perry and John Herrick (WOR-10), again made the Chicago Theatre of the Air a "must" place for operetta lovers. . . . The way Charles Jordan sang "Oh, What It Seemed To Be" (WJZ-5:45) caused me to think that this is by far the most beautiful of the current Tin Pan Alley hit songs.

News Around The Clock
WNEW 1130 ON THE DIAL
900 1000 1100 1200 1300
Daily News broadcast schedule: REGULAR editions 24 times a day on the half hour. WAKEUP editions weekdays at 6, 7 and 8 A.M. EXTRA editions on the hour, whenever news is urgent. BULLETINS at once.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

FEB 16 1946

4 Chamber Music Concerts On Tanglewood Schedule

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announcing plans for the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., July 1-Aug. 10, disclosed two new musical activities.

With the co-operation of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation, four chamber music concerts have been arranged; and preceding the festival concerts, Dr. Koussevitzky and the instrumental faculty of more than 30 members of the Boston Symphony will give two Bach-Mozart programs.

Dr. Koussevitzky's assistants in the orchestral conducting department and for the advanced orchestra will be Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin and Stanley Chapple. Dr. Herbert Graf and Boris Goldovsky will direct the opera department. Richard Rychtarik will design scenery and costumes.

Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and composed especially for Tanglewood, will have its first American presentation.

Aaron Copland, assistant director of the Center, will be in charge of the composition department. Hugh Ross and Robert Show will be in charge of choral conducting. Special lecturers include Olin Downes, who will give four lectures on the Art of Criticism; Dr. Howard Hanson, William Schuman and Edward Weeks.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

FEB 17 1946

Stravinsky to Lead Boston Symphony

Igor Stravinsky, who now is in the East from his home in California, will be the guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for concerts in Symphony Hall Friday afternoon and Saturday night and in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on Wednesday night.

At his Boston concerts he will present his new Symphony in Three Movements and his Ballet Scenes. In the second portion of the program Mr. Stravinsky will present suites from his earlier ballets, "The Fire Bird" and "Petrouchka," each in a new version.

The fourth concert in Providence by the orchestra this season will take place in the Metropolitan Theater Tuesday night. Richard Burgin, the concert master and associate conductor, will conduct Berlioz' overture, "The Roman Carnival," Haydn's Symphony in B-flat major, No. 102, and the Symphony by Cesar Franck in D minor.

This Clipping From
BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

FEB 17 1946

Boy, 12, Marvel As Pianist

BY W. G. ROGERS
Associated Press Arts Reporter

NEW YORK, Feb. 16—(AP)—A little boy and his music teacher came in to see me. Pupil Richard Korbel claimed to be 12½ years old, but when Teacher Hedy Spielter pointed out that his birthday came only about a month before, he settled for 12 1-12.

He has long black hair, eyes that twinkle, a shy but ready smile. He wears glasses.

He's no ordinary boy, however. He has been guest star on radio shows and has just made a movie. He has just given his second piano recital in Carnegie Hall. He had already done two in Town Hall and 25 out of town. Carnegie was nearly filled. Many in the audience were his own age, but there were grownups, too. The program was enough to stump an adult musician, but Richard got through handsomely, as the critics agreed the next day.

* * *

THE BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass., will be open this year from July 1 to Aug. 10. Two new activities are planned, says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky: Four concerts of chamber music, with the cooperation of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation, and, preceding the festival, two Bach-Mozart programs conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky.

Under direction of Dr. Herbert Graf and Boris Goldovsky, the opera department will give the first American presentation of Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes," which was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and composed especially for Tanglewood.

* * *

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

FEB 19 1946

RACHMANINOFF EVENT SET

Benefit Concert Postponed by Mayor's Order to Be Held Mar. 12

The Rachmaninoff Fund benefit concert, postponed from last Tuesday night because of the emergency shutdown ordered by Mayor O'Dwyer, will take place on Tuesday evening, March 12, Raymond Kendall, executive director of the fund, announced yesterday. Proceeds will be used to finance the fund's forthcoming contest to discover America's most talented young pianist.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Serge Koussevitzky, will give the program, with Vladimir Horowitz as assisting artist playing Rachmaninoff's Third (D minor) Piano Concerto. Tchaikovsky's Sixth ("Pathétique") Symphony and a composition, to be announced, by Aaron Copland will complete the program.

Tickets sold for the Feb. 12 concert will be good for the March event. A few tickets that were turned back and standing-room tickets may be obtained, beginning on Friday, at the Burden Littell Bureau of Gourielli, Inc., 16 East Fifty-fifth Street.

This Clipping From
CHATTANOOGA, TENN.
TIMES

FEB 19 1946

BOY PIANIST SEEKS TO APPEAR OLDER

Critics Praise Concert in Carnegie Hall

BY W. G. ROGERS
Associated Press Arts Reporter.

NEW YORK, Feb. 18—A little boy and his music teacher came in to see me. Pupil Richard Korbel claimed to be 12½ years old, but when Teacher Hedy Spielter pointed out that his birthday came only about a month before, he settled for 12 and a twelfth.

He has long black hair, eyes that twinkle, a shy but ready smile. He wears glasses.

He's no ordinary boy, however. He has been guest star on radio shows and has just made a movie. He has just given his second piano recital in Carnegie Hall—He had already done two in Town Hall and 25 out of town. Carnegie was nearly filled. Many in the audience were his own age, but there were grownups, to. The program was enough to stump an adult musician, but Richard got through handsomely, as the critics agreed the next day.

The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass., will be open this year from July 1 to Aug. 10. Two new activities are planned, says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky: Four concerts of chamber music, with the co-operation of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation, and, preceding the festival, two Bach-Mozart programs conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky.

Under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf and Boris Goldovsky, the opera department will give the first American performance of Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes," which was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and composed especially for Tanglewood.

March Book Club offerings are: Literary Guild, "David the King," by Gladys Schmitt; Book-of-the-Month Club, "The Autobiography of William Allen White"; Book Find Club, "North Star Country," by Meridel Lesueur.

"The Associated Press News Annual: 1945," edited by Russell Landstrom, AP staff writer and war correspondent, will be published in April by Rinehart. Containing text and pictures, it is the first of a series.

Presidents in bedroom slippers are the subject of "Starling of the White House" (Simon & Schuster), by the late Col. E. W. Starling of the Secret Service detail which guarded Wilson, Harding, Coolidge, Hoover and Roosevelt.

Starling got a lot of inside information, of which some samples are: "From the time of our second arrival in Paris the President (Wilson) had little use for Col. House's opinions or advice." Harding "never did anything more reprehensible than cuss mildly at a golf ball" and at the famed poker games "the stakes were modest." Mrs. Roosevelt told her husband, who was apt to ignore Starling's safety rules: "I think it is only fair for you to promise him that you will adhere rigidly in the future to the itineraries he approves." Starling's first words to F.D.R. after Hoover left were: "Well you never can tell who's going to turn up in the White House."

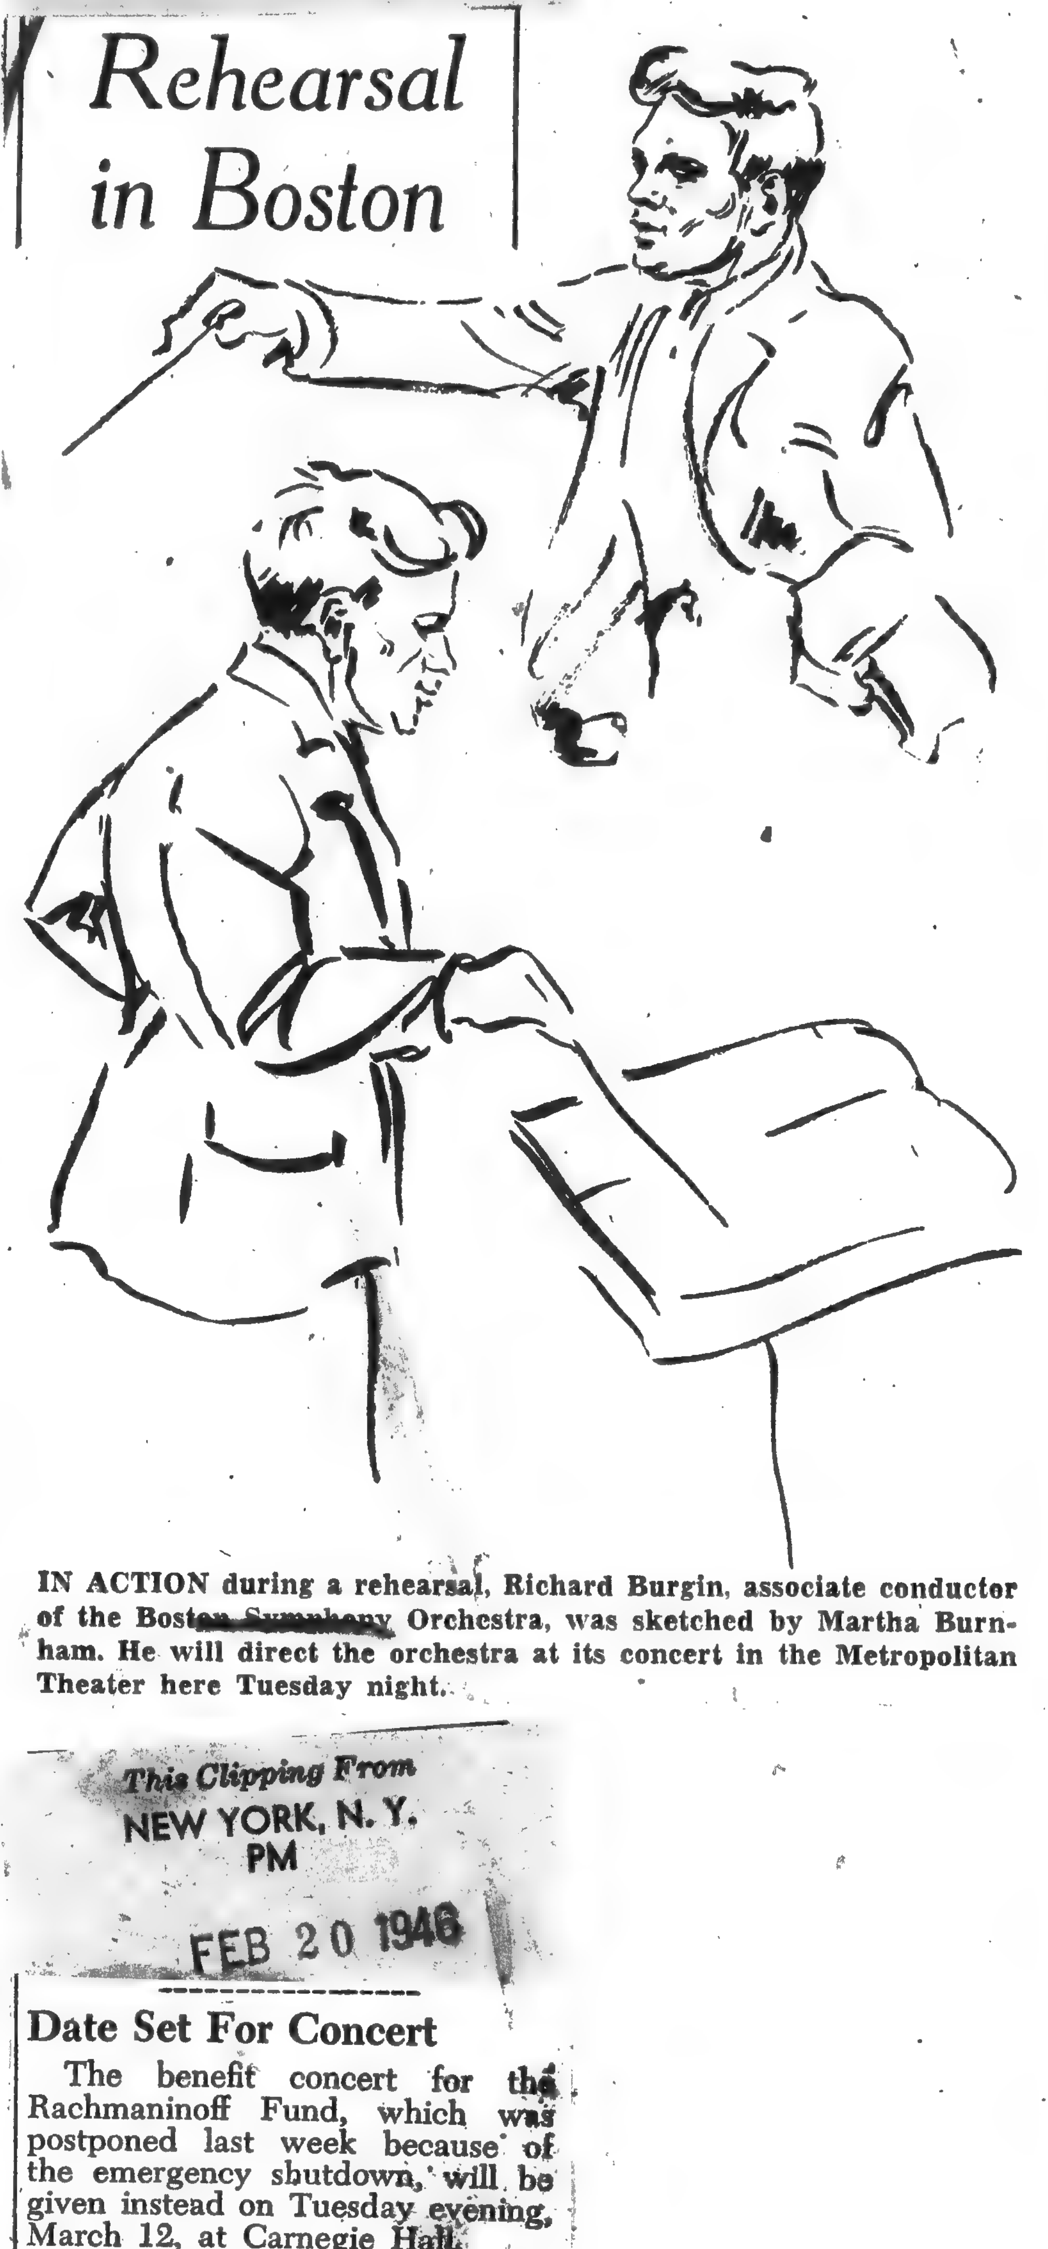
One of Starling's general conclusions about all Presidents is that "they think the title of President is a magic wand which changes them into great horsemen, great fishermen, great hunters, etc."

A second book about Gen. George S. Patton Jr. will be published Feb. 26 by Dodd, Mead. Using the general's name as title, James Wellard got the book together after being with him from November, 1942, to May, 1945.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

FEB 17 1946

Rehearsal in Boston



IN ACTION during a rehearsal, Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was sketched by Martha Burnham. He will direct the orchestra at its concert in the Metropolitan Theater here Tuesday night.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
PM

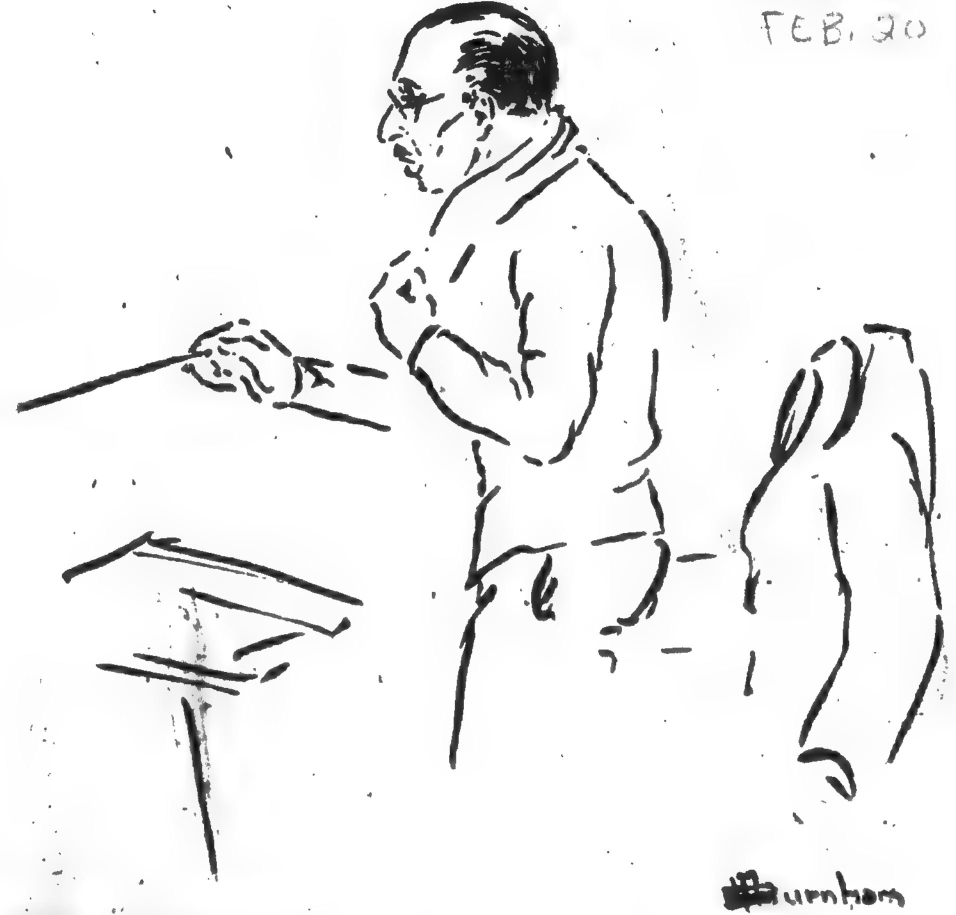
FEB 20 1946

Date Set For Concert

The benefit concert for the Rachmaninoff Fund, which was postponed last week because of the emergency shutdown, will be given instead on Tuesday evening, March 12, at Carnegie Hall.

As originally planned, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, and Vladimir Horowitz as soloist, will present the program. Tickets purchased for the Feb. 12 concert will be good.

C. S. MONITOR
FEB. 20



Drawn by Martha Burnham

Igor Stravinsky

Who will conduct the Boston Symphony tonight in Cambridge and Friday and Saturday in Symphony Hall.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

FEB 20 1946

Music

Richard Burgin Conducts Boston Symphony in Concert at the Met

BY WILLIAM PLACE

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Richard Burgin conducting, attracted the usual capacity audience to the Metropolitan Theater last evening.

The program:

Berlioz . Overture "The Roman Carnival"
Haydn .... Symphony in B flat, No. 102
  I Largo; Allegro Vivace.
  II Adagio.
  III Menuetto: Allegro; Trio.
  IV Finale: Presto.
Franck .... Symphony in D minor
  I Lento: allegro non troppo.
  II Allegretto.
  III Allegro non Troppo.

The program, almost historical in content, was one of those pleasant musical menus in which the finer things of yesteryear found contrast with a work of the past generation. Perhaps inadvertently an illustration of the change which the public musical appetite undergoes in the passing of time.

The Berlioz "Roman Carnival" was gay, colorful and sparkling; and well it might be, for in its descriptive development the composer has utilized many a striking and unusual combination. That such a work can, in this day of brilliant hue and tint in composition, still continue to hold its place amid the startling creations of our time, bears evidence of the genius of the man who conceived many of the possibilities of orchestral color, passing them on to later generations who are certainly painting with a new musical pallette.

In composition that is dignified without being austere, Haydn certainly excels in small orchestration. His B flat "Symphony" contains several motifs reminiscent of his string quartet forms, which when transcribed into terms of orchestration are perfectly delightful listening. Such was the treatment which Mr. Burgin accorded the work.

Strings brought to the delicacy of a single voice; wood-winds at a whisper in a forest of muted strings, yet each articulate in expression of the composer's idea. Haydn may never be majestic, but his music comes close to the heart.

It's a broad jump, indeed, from Haydn to Franck, but today with the musical experiences in orchestration which the ultra moderns are giving us, Cesar Franck appears quite orthodox.

Last evening Mr. Burgin brought his players to the heights of the program via the Franck "Symphony."

Stupendous as the work probably appeared in its day, it still retains by modern standards every earmark of perpetual popularity, for it contains development in which no detail is overlooked until an idea has been fulfilled.

It is seldom that the Boston Symphony Orchestra expresses itself more fluently than under Mr Burgin's hand throughout this work. Master of detail, he built prodigious crescendos without blatant tone from the brasses, and yet he was equally cognizant of the delight which comes from pizzicato strings, mellow harp, and the pastoral quality of the English horn.

So, as we enjoy in retrospect the music of last evening which in its day was called extreme and unorthodox let us keep our hide-bound preconceptions from becoming a boomerang [illegible] possibly catch up with us [illegible] roll by. Is it not well, perhaps, to appreciate some of the [illegible] excursions of the composers of our own day, before it is too late to accord them more than posthumous recognition."

[85]

...ing From
...NCE R. I.
...ETIN

...0 1946

usic rgin Conducts nphony in the Met

...LIAM PLACE

...Symphony Orchestra, ... Burgin conducting, ...sual capacity audi- ...etropolitan Theater

... "The Roman Carnival"
...phony in B flat, No. 102
... Vivace.
...llegro; Trio.
...o.
... Symphony in D minor
... non troppo.
... Troppo.

... almost historical in ...ne of those pleasant ... in which the finer ...ryear found contrast ... the past generation. ...ertently an illustra- ...ge which the public ...e undergoes in the ... "Roman Carnival" ...l and sparkling; and ...e, for in its descrip- ...nt the composer has ... striking and unusual ...hat such a work can, ...rilliant hue and tint ... still continue to hold ...he startling creations ...ears evidence of the ...man who conceived ...ssibilities of orches- ...ing them on to later ...o are certainly paint- ... musical pallette. ...n that is dignified ... austere, Haydn cer- ... small orchestration. ...phony" contains sev- ...niniscent of his string ... which when trans- ...rms of orchestration ... delightful listening. ...treatment which Mr. ...d the work.

...ht to the delicacy of ...; wood-winds at a ...rest of muted strings, ...late in expression of ...s idea. Haydn may ...stic, but his music ...the heart.

... jump, indeed, from ...k, but today with the ...nces in orchestration ... moderns are giving ...nck appears quite

... Mr. Burgin brought ...e heights of the pro- ...ranck "Symphony."

...s the work probably ...day it still retains by ...ds every earmark of ...arity, for it contains ... which no detail is ...il an idea has been

...hat the Boston Sym- ...ra expresses itself ...han under Mr. Bur- ...oughout this work. ..., he built prodigious ...thout blatant tone ...sses, and yet he ...gnizant of the delight ...rom pizzicato strings, ...nd the pastoral qual- ...sh horn.

...joy in retrospect the ...vening which in its ... extreme and unor- ...ep our hide-bound ... from becoming a ...hich may possibly ...s as the years roll by ...erhaps, to appreciate ...nusual excursions of ...of our own day, be- ...late to accord them ...humous recognition?

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
OKLAHOMAN

FEB 21 1946

Wives Nor Food Can Transform Musical Artists

By ALICE HUGHES

NEW YORK—Mrs. Arthur Rodzinski, charming wife of the ...resent conductor of our Philharmonic symphony orchestra, spoke a little piece recently. She ...aid, for publication, that the ...liques and castes of the big ...and had been dissolved by the ...ocial geniality of the 100 wives ...f the sawers and tootlers.

That sounds lovely, and I hope it ... true, but to one who knows even ... little about symphony orchestras ...s I do, it sounds suspiciously like ...alami, cut any thickness. "Democ-racy" is impossible in a big band.

The husband of my eldest sister is ...fiddler in the great Boston symphony orchestra, one of the best, if not ...he very best, in the nation. I have ...een present at many of its concerts ...nd its rehearsals, and I know many ...f its artists personally.

And I tell you frankly that all the ...fforts of all the wives, food and drink ...nd conversation included, can never ...ake a great orchestra anything but ...n authoritarian institution.

The brilliant Koussevitski, as you ...now, conducts the Boston band, and ...e is considered practically a musical ...od in his home city, and even more ... here.

The Frenchmen of the Boston band ...ften gather at my sister's house in ...rookline, Mass., and while many are ...rsonally attractive, socially they are ... difficult lot to a non-professional. They talk music shop exclusively, ... French, and consider anyone who ...esents a musical opinion as a down-...ght intruder.

"Democracy" in a symphony orch-...tra? A pretty thought, Mrs. Rod-...nski, and a good story from a "wo-...an's angle." But—if you will kindly ...rdon the expression—nuts!

...HE DID IT—The ridiculously ... pompous Westminster Kennel club ...g shows, tops in the country's ca-...ne expositions, was run off at Madi-...n Square Garden a few nights ago ...d the scroot named "best in show" ...s a wire fox terrier named "Cham-...on Hetherington Model Rhythm," ...obably called "Sport" by his owner, ... hope. Dog shows are silly to me, ...t because I dislike dogs, but be-...use they have a phony, artificial ...mosphere.

...EXPENSIVE—They have now ...ured out what the 18 hour paraly-... of New York cost business people. ... happened, you remember, because ... an unnecessary fuel shortage ...sed by a tugboatmen's strike, now ...led. The garment industry, our ...est business, lost at least $5 mil-...s in that one day shutdown, while ...oundup of the department stores ... the figure of what they missed ...$3 millions. Our second biggest ...ustry, commercial entertainment; ..."fun", computes its loss at a mil-..., a conservative guess. See what ... happen here?

...HAT TUMMY—All sorts of wo-...s fashions, from the most elegant ...ing gowns to the skimpiest play-...hes, are featuring what is so ...ely called "the bare midriff." But ...ur midriffs are to be fashionably ...ed, we must exercise and diet to ... it under control.

...O. 1 GIRL—In spite of her mar-...e to Tex McCrary, newspaperman ... former soldier, that beauteous ...nequin and movie player, Jinx ...enburg, still visits us profession-... now and then. My poor wretch ... husband was made ecstatically ...py by a recent picture of Jinx ...ng off her shoes to give to the ...ery Clothing Drive.

MUSIC: DEWISH TIMES FEB21
Moses Smith

The Boston Symphony

Two-thirds of the current Boston Symphony season has passed. Out of sixteen week-end pairs of concerts in Symphony Hall, Serge Koussevitzky has conducted eight, exactly one half. Of the others, three have been conducted by the Englishman, Sir Adrian Boult, two by the Frenchman, Paul Paray, one by Fritz Reiner, conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, and two by the Boston Orchestra's concert master and associate conductor, Richard Burgin. The Koussevitzky ratio may be increased for the remainder of the season, but I wouldn't lay any odds on that contingency. For Stravinsky is to conduct the concerts of this week-end, "Boston's own" Leonard Bernstein is to come a little later, and presumably Mr. Burgin will be handed the reins for at least another week or two.

Gradually the condition has come about, then, that Koussevitzky conducts about half the season, while the rest is given over to guests. Nor could this policy be ascribed to casual accident this season, since, with the exception of Burgin, the guests had to be engaged long in advance; while if the title of Burgin as Associate Conductor means much it means that he occasionally takes over the orchestra. The implication to be drawn is strengthened by the fact that during the present season Koussevitzky has officially been ill or indisposed far less than in recent seasons before.

Meanwhile, the details that continue to be announced about the resumption of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival next summer and the surrounding Berkshire Music Center indicate that the schedule will be no lighter than it was during the summers immediately preceding Pearl Harbor, when Koussevitzky was busier than the proverbial one-arm paper hanger. The activities at the Center, which is Koussevitzky's pet baby, will, indeed, be greater. For this reason and because Koussevitzky is getting no younger — he will be 72 in July — it may safely be assumed that Boston subscription audiences will watch Koussevitzky conduct no more than half the Boston concerts for the rest of his tenure. As to the last, it will apparently go on indefinitely, since, by the evidence of the audiences' behavior during the past season, his vogue here is greater, not less.

It also remains, unfortunately, that the set-up to which the orchestra has drifted is bad for the orchestra. It would be bad even if the guest conductors were more distinguished than they were during the past season. It might well have been worse, because, whatever the excitement the guest appearance of great conductors may impart to the audiences, a lot of them during the season can well wreck an orchestra, as the oft-cited case of the New York Philharmonic demonstrates.

CO-CONDUCTOR

Far better, as I have remarked before, would be a frank acknowledgement of the existing circumstances by appointing a single conductor to share equally Koussevitzky's burden. The orchestra would then have to play under two conductors, perhaps of differing styles and temperaments; but two are better than half a dozen or more. The corollary would be that the second conductor, because of the length of his tenure, would have authority as to discipline and the making of programs which short-term guests are not given.

Perhaps, indeed, the trustees of the orchestra have been preparing for such an eventuality and the rash of guest conductors during the present season and past is to be regarded as a sweepstakes for the choice of such a man. If so, guessing is in order. If you want to pin me down, I'll say that my preference for the post is Dimitri Mitropoulos, conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra. As to the likeliest candidate — hold your breath! — my guess is Leonard Bernstein.

I'll try to tell you why in a subsequent article.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

FEB 23 1946

Dates have been set for the two concerts postponed as a result of the Mayor's shutdown on Lincoln's Birthday. Sylvia Dickler, young pianist, will make her Town Hall debut Sunday evening, April 14. The benefit concert of the Rachmaninoff Fund, with the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky, will be given March 12. As originally scheduled, Vladimir Horowitz will be piano soloist. Another work of Copland will be given in place of "A Lincoln Portrait," which would have been timely on February 12.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

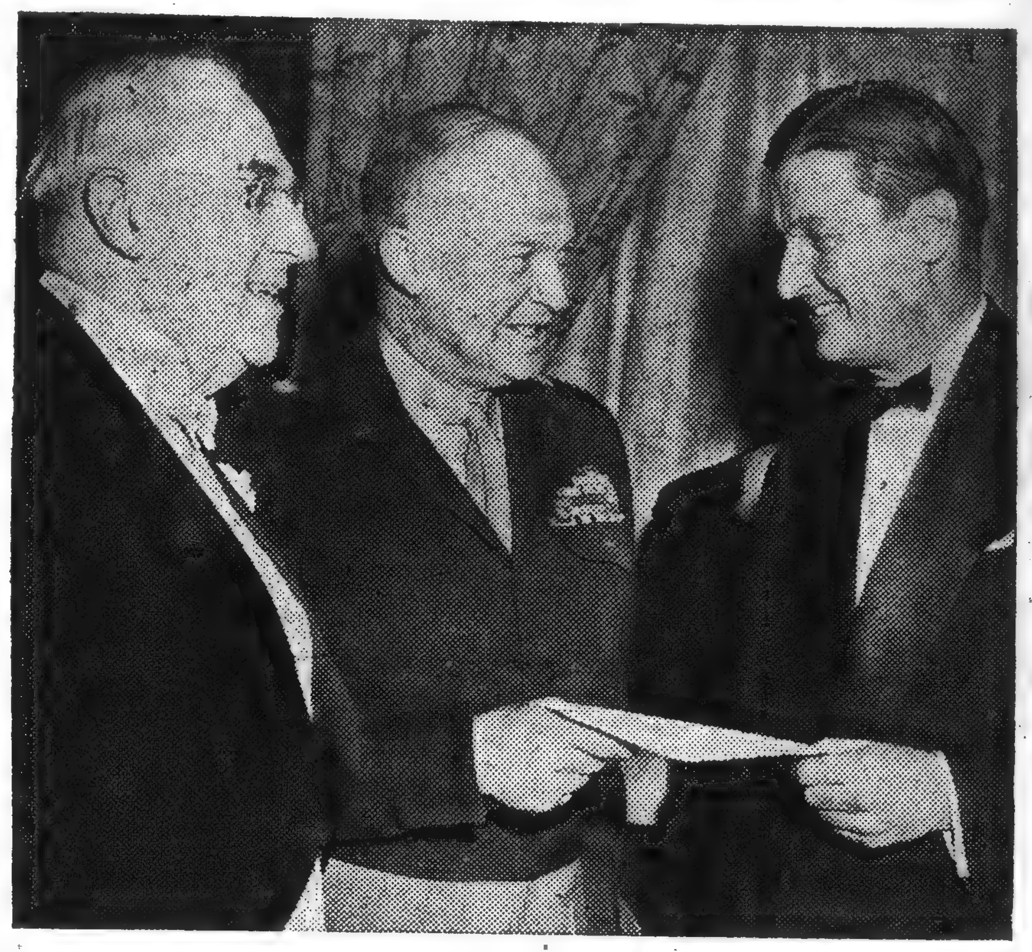
FEB 24 1946

Persistent reports that Serge Koussevitzky was going to resign his post of conductor of the Boston Symphony after this season, and be succeeded by Dimitri Mitropoulos, are not true. In answer to our query, Dr. Koussevitzky reports that his present contract with the orchestra runs through the season of 1946-47.

ROZBURY, MASS
GAZETTE
2/22/46

Opening Meeting of 1946 Red Cross Drive at Symphony Hall Thursday

One of the most dramatic stories ever told of Red Cross service will highlight the opening meeting, kickoff of the 1946 Red Cross Fund for Greater Boston, at Symphony Hall, Thursday evening, at 7:45 o'clock. More than 3,000 campaign volunteers from Boston and 39 surrounding communities are expected to attend.



BEST WISHES for the 1946 Red Cross Fund for Greater Boston are extended by General "Ike" Eisenhower, to Francis W. Hatch, right, campaign chairman, while Daniel L. Marsh, President of Boston University and chairman of the Red Cross Speakers' Bureau looks on.

"The Story of Pfc. Sidney Svedrofsky," written by John P. Marquand and narrated by Raymond Massey, stage and screen star, will be the feature of the opening meeting. The story will tell of Red Cross service to a wounded man, from the battlefield, through the hospital to his return to civilian life.

Leland Stowe, noted war correspondent, who has covered every major battlefront throughout the world during the war, will be the evening's speaker. Music will be furnished by the Radcliffe Choral Society and Harvard Glee Club, totaling 250 voices, under the Direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, and the Zimbler String Quartet, composed of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Governor Maurice J. Tobin, Mayor James M. Curley, Major-General Sherman Miles, USA (retired) and Francis W. Hatch, campaign chairman, will speak.

Red Cross budget estimates are pared to a minimum consistent with adequate service, chairman Hatch pointed out. National expenditures for 1946 will actually exceed the campaign goal by $25,000,000, the difference being made up from funds previously collected in the belief war would continue into 1946.

The 1946 Red Cross Fund for Greater Boston, combining Boston and 39 surrounding communities, gets underway March 1 when upwards of 25,000 solicitors will canvass every home and office for $1,901,150, Greater Boston's share of the national quota of $100,000,000, necessary to carry on Red Cross services at home and abroad.

Hundreds of veterans, many of whom have received Red Cross service overseas, have rallied to the cause and are among those who have volunteered as solicitors in this great postwar campaign. Advance solicitation in some areas is already underway.

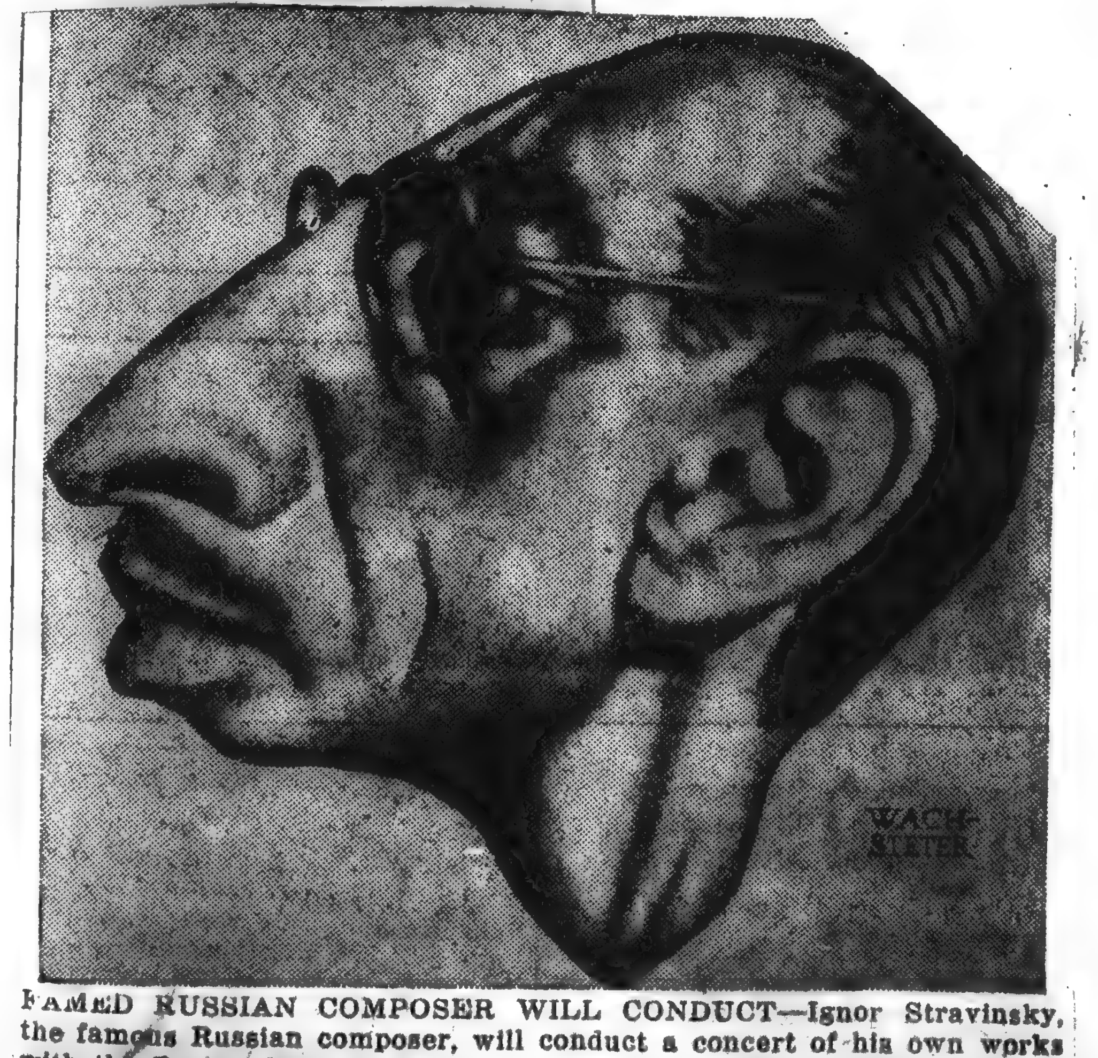
The month of March has been designated as Red Cross Month by President Truman, who, in his proclamation called for the fullest support of the organization.

Roxbury's quota of the Fund has set at $8,000, it was announced this week by Mrs. Lloyd P. Starratt, Roxbury district chairman while the South End's quota is $4,000, according to Mrs. Josephine Walker, South End district chairman.

[illegible] Father

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

FEB 23 1946



FAMED RUSSIAN COMPOSER WILL CONDUCT—Ignor Stravinsky, the famous Russian composer, will conduct a concert of his own works with the Boston Symphony orchestra tonight over WSUN, from 9:30 to 10:30 p.m. The cartoon, above, was drawn by the New York artist, George Wachsteter.

This Clipping From
BATON ROUGE, LA.
ADVOCATE

FEB 24 1946

George Humphrey, skilled violist of the Boston Symphony orchestra working with enviable craftsmanship at his hobby making violas and viola bows. The Boston Symphony is heard over WJBO Saturday evenings, 8:30-9:30 p. m.

86

[87]

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

FEB 24 1946

Rachmaninoff Fund Concert Scheduled

The benefit concert for the Rachmaninoff Fund, Inc., which was postponed by the emergency shutdown ordered by Mayor O'Dwyer, will be given on Tuesday evening, March 12, at Carnegie Hall. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play the benefit here as originally planned with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting and Vladimir Horowitz, pianist, as soloist.

Horowitz, who is president of the Fund, will play Rachmaninoff's third piano concerto and the symphonic number will be Tschaikowsky's "Pathetique." A composition by Aaron Copland will complete the program. This number will be substituted for his "A Lincoln Portrait," which had been planned as a special feature for Lincoln's Birthday, with Melvyn Douglas as narrator.

Tickets purchased for the Feb. 12 concert will be good for the March 12 event. This will be the first in a series of benefits for the Fund by leading orchestras of the country.

This Clipping From
ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES

FEB 24 1946

TWENTY-ONE YEARS brings maturity and voting privileges, but to George Humphrey, member of the Boston Symphony orchestra, it also brought the realization that his hands were now too large for his violin.

Forthwith, he learned to play the viola with such virtuosity that he met the strict artistic requirements of the Boston Symphony and earned participation in the quartet and chamber music ensemble programs. George also makes violas—not as a business, but as a hobby with an objective of perfection that is a never-ending quest. What is a rarer hobby—for quite a few musicians try their hands at making instruments—he makes viola bows. For that pursuit he has a wonderful model to follow—a bow made by Francois Tourte who was to bow-making what Stradivarius was to violin-making. He has spent untold hours in seeking to copy its virtues of balance, spring, and resistance to atmospheric changes. Following the example of Tourte, he uses the tough and tricky Pernambucco wood from Brazil.

The Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is heard Saturday evenings, 9:30-10:30 p. m., over Station WSLS.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
PM
FEB 25 1946

CRITICAL and AMUSEMENTS

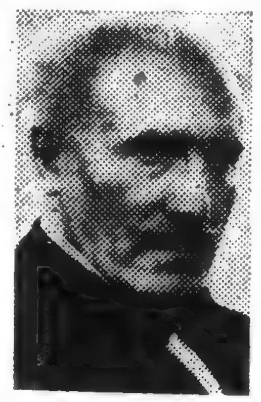
PM's Nostradamus on the Conductor—Fraud or Mystic?

This is the sixth of a series of Monday morning appraisals of the artists and activities in the world of music.

The two most general opinions held about conducting are:

¶ The job is a lot of nonsense and could be done by anybody since the musicians in an orchestra know what they're playing anyway, and all the marks for expression and dynamics are in the music in front of them.

¶ The conductor is a mystical being with occult powers who, through concentration and nobility of soul, creates a divine tapestry of sound.



Toscanini

I think the truth of the matter is not, as is so often said, somewhere in between, but is contained rather in both statements! Certainly no other performing art offers as much opportunity for fakery and charlatanism. We know that to give a piano recital, no matter how weak or inadequate, the artist must have at least spent some time in front of a keyboard exercising his fingers in painstaking scales and études. We know that the least interesting singer has to have done some vocalizing, that the poorest ballet dancer has spent thousands of hours getting up on toes, flexing muscles, and turning in circles.

But what about a conductor? Well, to be honest about it, with good looks, a certain amount of savoir faire, elegance, a good tailor and bravura, he can get by without even really knowing how to read a score. I don't say that this is often the case, I only say that it is possible.

That takes care of the first point; the second point is more subtle. But it does seem to be true that knowledge of scores, understanding of music, perception, and baton technique are not enough to put a conductor into the first ranks. There is some indefinable quality which is the secret of the rapport between the music, the musicians, the conductor, and the audience. There are conductors who have all of the necessary musical qualifications but lack this one quality. And, conversely, there are conductors who have the "touch" but who are lacking in musicianship. When all of these points converge, you have a great conductor, which is to say Arturo Toscanini.

The "evil" and the "good" of the art of conducting come together in the word "personality." It is a serious philosophical question as to whether the personality of a conductor should take precedence over the music (even if this were entirely possible), or whether a conductor is wholly an interpreter with all of the rights implied by that word. Yet, certain conductors who have sworn themselves to self-effacement and modesty turn out to be simply dull and insipid; while other conductors, giving full reign to all of their personal whims and emotional convolutions, end up as hysterical narcissists.

Without my mentioning names, you have probably already thought of candidates for these various types, but let's look at a handful of conductors and see how they may be analyzed:

¶ Toscanini: Called, and not without reason, the greatest. His musicianship is practically unquestionable, and certainly his hold over orchestras and audiences is phenomenal. If he has any fault, it is in program-making where his taste is not always impeccable; but he is one of the few performers in the world who makes nearly anything he plays worth listening to.

¶ Koussevitzky: The perfect pictorial representation of a conductor. He has elegance, style, fire, a sense of adventure, and exquisite taste. His faults all have to do with his surface approach to music, with the emphasis on the emotionally obvious.

Stokowski

¶ Stokowski: One of the greatest talents ever to appear before the public in the art of producing sheer beauty of sound. Tragically, his egocentric concepts of music have led him into an impossible morass of interpretive vulgarity, and, like an overdressed and overcosmeticked once - beautiful old lady, the music he now produces is too heavily perfumed, too exaggerated, and somewhat degraded by artificiality.

¶ Bruno Walter: A serious musician and a wonderful one; but he is too often colored by weltschmerz or a stodgy romanticism.

¶ Reiner: Technically, the greatest living conductor. No other conductor can match him for baton technique, precision, and orchestra-building. He has not yet found the exactly right key with the public, but when he does, he will be a conductor in the Toscanini class.

¶ Rodzinski: Alternately serious and flirtatious with music. Like the little girl with the curl—when he is good, he is very, very good, but when he is bad he is horrid.

Mitropoulos

¶ Mitropoulos: Exciting, and the prototype of the mystical, all-emotional conductor. A thoughtless program maker but a musician of tremendous personal magnetism. He must be his own watch-dog; for the public will accept anything he does on the basis of his personal appeal. They will accept his erraticisms—therefore he must check them himself for his own sake.

¶ Ormandy: A clever and businesslike conductor, but needs a wider cultural point of view to achieve more dynamic results.

These are, of course, not all of the conductors, and not even all of the important ones; but if there's any interest, we'll go through the whole list.—NOSTRADAMUS.

Burgin Conducts Symphony

Tchaikovsky 'Pathétique' On Program

Richard Burgin directed the music of the fourth program of the Monday series of Boston Symphony Concerts in Symphony Hall last evening, appearing in his capacity of associate conductor. The works which he presented were the Overture (Suite) No. 5 in D major for Orchestra, by Bach; the Prelude to "Khovanstchina," by Moussorgsky; the Overture, "Roman Carnival," by Berlioz; and the Symphony No. 6 in B minor, "Pathétique," by Tchaikovsky.

Mr. Burgin has an excellent way with the orchestra whenever he takes charge, treating it as far as may be like a single instrument rather than 100 or so individual players, and handling it more or less in the fashion of a violin, which as the concertmaster, he knows plenty about. Strangely enough, he discloses this character particularly in his management of the woodwind and the brass, making these two elements of the ensemble perform in a violin-like style. The strings he seems to take more or less for granted, as though they were one with him anyway in the idea.

His phrasing and his shading of passages where flute and horn and other voices of their class are prominent bear a violinistic mark and quality which proves both successful as a method and agreeable as something to hear. This trait in his conducting asserted itself with especially good effect last night in the delicately scored music of the "Khovanstchina" Prelude. Happily the executants in the inside choirs gave their best response to the signs and indications of his hands, as possibly all the better they could because he conducts without baton. It must be easier for a clarinetist, for example, to breathe and carry a melody fluently and smoothly along when it is the fall of a hand instead of the descent of a sharply whittled stick that times the attack on a note.

A conductor has to do but little to make himself pleasantly remembered. But he must do that little with high distinction; and that is how Mr. Burgin came off in the Moussorgsky piece. Perhaps it is fair to say that the rest of the program for the most part sped along in a highly commendable Boston Symphony manner. The Bach Overture had a plentude of scholarliness in its presentation; the Berlioz "Roman Carnival," somewhat to its disadvantage, was cut up into blocks of big and little sonority, and of contrasting episodes, thus tending to fall apart rather than to hold together. Here the percussion, for example, went its way independently and lent service that was more mechanical than artistic.

The Tchaikovsky Symphony "Pathétique" — well, the man seems a long time coming who will swing that main melody of the opening movement into the full glory of sound that belongs to it. In this case, the necessary command of the chorus of French horns is attained perhaps only in employment of the baton. Something more, too, than gentle persuasion is wanted. The requirement here is power.

That, again, applies to a mere moment. Mr. Burgin and the Symphony men will take care of the rest of the work any time to high praise.

W. P. T.

POST FEB [illegible]

WILL REMAIN AT SYMPHONY

Koussevitzky to Conduct 13 Weeks Next Season

The persistent rumors that Dr. Serge Koussevitzky was planning to retire at the close of the present season were spiked yesterday at the Symphony Hall meeting of the Society of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees, said that the conductor had requested of the trustees that his term of service in Boston for the season of 1946-47 be limited to 13 weeks. There are 24 weeks in all.

He announced that Bruno Walter would appear as guest conductor for two periods of two weeks each. Of late Mr. Walter has appeared here as one of the conductors of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Following the business meeting there was a brief musical program.

HERALD... FEB 27

13 Weeks Are Limit For Koussevitsky

The Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra held their annual meeting yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall and elected Oliver Wolcott as their next year's chairman. Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees, announced that Dr. Koussevitzky's contract had been renewed for next season, with the proviso that he would conduct only 13 weeks out of the 24. This was done, Mr. Cabot explained, on the principle that it was better to have Dr. Koussevitzky for the 13 weeks than the alternative of not at all. Guest conductors will fill in for the remainder of the season, and Bruno Walter will be one of them for four weeks. These announcements were applauded by the gathering, as was also the satisfactory financial position of the orchestra.

Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra then came onto the stage and played the early Mozart Symphony in E flat and gave a rousing performance of Berlioz's Roman Carnival Overture.

The surprise of the meeting was announced by Dr. Koussevitzky as a new singer, "a potential successor to Dorothy Maynor" who had been similarly launched on her career, Carol Brice, for this was the name of the Negro soprano so honored, then came forward and sang two lengthy arias by Handel, some German Lieder and other songs. Her voice has possibilities, for it is good in the lower register. Her upper notes and her technique are still insecure, however, so that she had difficulty in managing the second and very difficult Handel aria. Still it is not easy for any singer, no matter how mature, to be at her best under such circumstances.

A. W. W.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

FEB 28 1946

KOUSSEVITZKY CUTS TERM

Signs for Only 13 Weeks With Boston Symphony Next Season

BOSTON, Feb. 27 (AP)—Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since September, 1924, has renewed his contract for only thirteen weeks of Saturday-Sunday concerts in Boston next season, Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra trustees, said today.

Mr. Koussevitzky, who is 71 years old, also will make some appearances with the orchestra on tour, Mr. Cabot said, disclosing that Bruno Walter, last here with the Boston Orchestra in 1923, would appear as guest conductor next season for two periods of two weeks each.

Oliver Wolcott, symphony trustee, reported the orchestra ended the 1944-45 season, which cost $1,148,347, with a deficit of $40,504—later wiped out by a $48,000 contribution from the Orchestra's Society of Friends. This year, Mr. Wolcott said, the society has contributed $47,294.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

FEB 28 1946

Koussevitzky Signs with Boston

By the United Press.

BOSTON, Feb. 28.—Conductor Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be relieved of some of his duties next year at his own request, according to symphony trustees who made the announcement to quell rumors that the famed musician was planning to retire.

The 73-old Koussevitzky signed a contract for the 1946-47 season calling for him to conduct only 13 weeks during the 24-week orchestra schedule in Boston. Guest conductors will fill the other engagements and Koussevitzky will appear with the orchestra on tours.

Koussevitzky conducted most of the concerts here this season, his 22nd with the Boston orchestra.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

FEB 28 1946

Koussevitzky Limits Contract

BOSTON, Feb. 27 (AP).—Serge Koussevitzky, seventy-one-year-old conductor of the Boston Symphony since September, 1924, has renewed his contract for only thirteen weeks of Saturday-Sunday concerts in Boston next season, Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra trustees, said today.

This Clipping From PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS

FEB 28 1946

Koussevitzky's Contract Renewed

BOSTON, Feb. 28 (AP)—Henry B Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees, reports that Sergé Koussevitzky, 71-year-old conductor, has renewed his contract for only 13 weeks of Saturday-Sunday concerts in Boston next season. Koussevitzky will make some appearances on tour and Bruno Walter, who was with the orchestra in 1923, will serve as guest conductor next season for two periods of two weeks each.

[87]

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE
FEB. 24 1946

Rachmaninoff Fund Concert Scheduled

The benefit concert for the Rachmaninoff Fund, Inc., which was postponed by the emergency shutdown ordered by Mayor O'Dwyer, will be given on Tuesday evening, March 12, at Carnegie Hall. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play the benefit here as originally planned with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting and Vladimir Horowitz, pianist, as soloist.

Horowitz, who is president of the Fund, will play Rachmaninoff's third piano concerto and the symphonic number will be Tschaikowsky's "Pathetique." A composition by Aaron Copland will complete the program. This number will be substituted for his "A Lincoln Portrait," which had been planned as a special feature for Lincoln's Birthday, with Melvyn Douglas as narrator.

Tickets purchased for the Feb. 12 concert will be good for the March 12 event. This will be the first in a series of benefits for the Fund by leading orchestras of the country.

This Clipping From
ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES
FEB 24 1946

TWENTY-ONE YEARS brings maturity and voting privileges, but to George Humphrey, member of the Boston Symphony orchestra, it also brought the realization that his hands were now too large for his violin.

Forthwith, he learned to play the viola with such virtuosity that he met the strict artistic requirements of the Boston Symphony and earned participation in the quartet and chamber music ensemble programs. George also makes violas—not as a business, but as a hobby with an objective of perfection that is a never-ending quest. What is a rarer hobby—for quite a few musicians try their hands at making instruments—he makes viola bows. For that pursuit he has a wonderful model to follow—a bow made by Francois Tourte who was to bow-making what Stradivarius was to violin-making. He has spent untold hours in seeking to copy its virtues of balance, spring, and resistance to atmospheric changes. Following the example of Tourte, he uses the tough and tricky Pernambucco wood from Brazil.

The Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is heard Sat[illegible]y [illegible]30-10:30 p. m., over Station WSLS.

Burgin Conducts Symphony

Tchaikovsky 'Pathétique' On Program

Richard Burgin directed the music of the fourth program of the Monday series of Boston Symphony Concerts in Symphony Hall last evening, appearing in his capacity of associate conductor. The works which he presented were the Overture (Suite) No. 5 in D major for Orchestra, by Bach; the Prelude to "Khovanstchina," by Moussorgsky; the Overture, "Roman Carnival," by Berlioz; and the Symphony No. 6 in B minor, "Pathétique," by Tchaikovsky.

Mr. Burgin has an excellent way with the orchestra whenever he takes charge, treating it as far as may be like a single instrument rather than 100 or so individual players, and handling it more or less in the fashion of a violin, which as the concertmaster, he knows plenty about. Strangely enough, he discloses this character particularly in his management of the woodwind and the brass, making these two elements of the ensemble perform in a violin-like style. The strings he seems to take more or less for granted, as though they were one with him anyway in the idea.

His phrasing and his shading of passages where flute and horn and other voices of their class are prominent bear a violinistic mark and quality which proves both successful as a method and agreeable as something to hear. This trait in his conducting asserted itself with especially good effect last night in the delicately scored music of the "Khovanstchina" Prelude. Happily the executants in the inside choirs gave their best response to the signs and indications of his hands, as possibly all the better they could because he conducts without baton. It must be easier for a clarinetist, for example, to breathe and carry a melody fluently and smoothly along when it is the fall of a hand instead of the descent of a sharply whittled stick that times the attack on a note.

A conductor has to do but little to make himself pleasantly remembered. But he must do that little with high distinction; and that is how Mr. Burgin came off in the Moussorgsky piece. Perhaps it is fair to say that the rest of the program for the most part sped along in a highly commendable Boston Symphony manner. The Bach Overture had a plentude of scholarliness in its presentation; the Berlioz "Roman Carnival," somewhat to its disadvantage, was cut up into blocks of big and little sonority, and of contrasting episodes, thus tending to fall apart rather than to hold together. Here the percussion, for example, went its way independently and lent service that was more mechanical than artistic.

The Tchaikovsky Symphony "Pathétique" — well, the man seems a long time coming who will swing that main melody of the opening movement into the full glory of sound that belongs to it. In this case, the necessary command of the chorus of French horns is attained perhaps only in employment of the baton. Something more, too, than gentle persuasion is wanted. The requirement here is power.

That, again, applies to a mere moment. Mr. Burgin and the Symphony men will take care of the rest of the work any time to high praise.

W. P. T.

POST FEB. 27

WILL REMAIN AT SYMPHONY

Koussevitzky to Conduct 13 Weeks Next Season

The persistent rumors that Dr. Serge Koussevitzky was planning to retire at the close of the present season were spiked yesterday at the Symphony Hall meeting of the Society of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees, said that the conductor had requested of the trustees that his term of service in Boston for the season of 1946-47 be limited to 13 weeks. There are 24 weeks in all.

He announced that Bruno Walter would appear as guest conductor for two periods of two weeks each. Of late Mr. Walter has appeared here as one of the conductors of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Following the business meeting there was a brief musical program.

HERALD...FEB 27.

13 Weeks Are Limit For Koussevitsky

The Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra held their annual meeting yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall and elected Oliver Wolcott as their next year's chairman. Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees, announced that Dr. Koussevitzky's contract had been renewed for next season, with the proviso that he would conduct only 13 weeks out of the 24. This was done, Mr. Cabot explained, on the principle that it was better to have Dr. Koussevitzky for the 13 weeks than the alternative of not at all. Guest conductors will fill in for the remainder of the season, and Bruno Walter will be one of them for four weeks. These announcements were applauded by the gathering, as was also the satisfactory financial position of the orchestra.

Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra then came onto the stage and played the early Mozart Symphony in E flat and gave a rousing performance of Berlioz's Roman Carnival Overture.

The surprise of the meeting was announced by Dr. Koussevitzky as a new singer, "a potential successor to Dorothy Maynor" who had been similarly launched on her career. Carol Brice, for this was the name of the Negro soprano so honored, then came forward and sang two lengthy arias by Handel, some German Lieder and other songs. Her voice has possibilities, for it is good in the lower register. Her upper notes and her technique are still insecure, however, so that she had difficulty in managing the second and very difficult Handel aria. Still it is not easy for any singer, no matter how mature, to be at her best under such circumstances.

A. W. W.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
FEB 28 1946

KOUSSEVITZKY CUTS TERM

Signs for Only 13 Weeks With Boston Symphony Next Season

BOSTON, Feb. 27 (AP)—Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since September, 1924, has renewed his contract for only thirteen weeks of Saturday-Sunday concerts in Boston next season, Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra trustees, said today.

Mr. Koussevitzky, who is 71 years old, also will make some appearances with the orchestra on tour, Mr. Cabot said, disclosing that Bruno Walter, last here with the Boston Orchestra in 1923, would appear as guest conductor next season for two periods of two weeks each.

Oliver Wolcott, symphony trustee, reported the orchestra ended the 1944-45 season, which cost $1,148,347, with a deficit of $40,504—later wiped out by a $48,000 contribution from the Orchestra's Society of Friends. This year, Mr. Wolcott said, the society has contributed $47,294.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
FEB 28 1946

Koussevitzky Signs with Boston

By the United Press.

BOSTON, Feb. 28.—Conductor Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be relieved of some of his duties next year at his own request, according to symphony trustees who made the announcement to quell rumors that the famed musician was planning to retire.

The 73-old Koussevitzky signed a contract for the 1946-47 season calling for him to conduct only 13 weeks during the 24-week orchestra schedule in Boston. Guest conductors will fill the other engagements and Koussevitzky will appear with the orchestra on tours.

Koussevitzky conducted most of the concerts here this season, his 22nd with the Boston orchestra.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
FEB 28 1946

Koussevitzky Limits Contract

BOSTON, Feb. 27 (AP).—Serge Koussevitzky, seventy-one-year-old conductor of the Boston Symphony since September, 1924, has renewed his contract for only thirteen weeks of Saturday-Sunday concerts in Boston next season, Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra trustees, said today.

This Clipping From PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS
FEB 28 1946

Koussevitzky's Contract Renewed

BOSTON, Feb. 28 (AP)—Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees, reports that Serge Koussevitzky, 71-year-old conductor, has renewed his contract for only 13 weeks of Saturday-Sunday concerts in Boston next season. Koussevitzky will make some appearances on tour and Bruno Walter, who was with the orchestra in 1923, will serve as guest conductor next season for two periods of two weeks each.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
PM
FEB 25 1946

CRITICAL and AMUSEMENTS

PM's Nostradamus on the Conductor—Fraud or Mystic?

This is the sixth of a series of Monday morning appraisals of the artists and activities in the world of music.

The two most general opinions held about conducting are:

¶ The job is a lot of nonsense and could be done by anybody since the musicians in an orchestra know what they're playing anyway, and all the marks for expression and dynamics are in the music in front of them.

¶ The conductor is a mystical being with occult powers who, through concentration and nobility of soul, creates a divine tapestry of sound.

I think the truth of the matter is not, as is so often said, somewhere in between, but is contained rather in both statements! Certainly no other performing art offers as much opportunity for fakery and charlatanism. We know that to give a piano recital, no matter how weak or inadequate, the artist must have at least spent some time in front of a keyboard exercising his fingers in painstaking scales and études. We know that the least interesting singer has to have done some vocalizing, that the poorest ballet dancer has spent thousands of hours getting up on toes, flexing muscles, and turning in circles.

Toscanini

But what about a conductor? Well, to be honest about it, with good looks, a certain amount of savoir faire, elegance, a good tailor and bravura, he can get by without even really knowing how to read a score. I don't say that this is often the case, I only say that it is possible.

That takes care of the first point; the second point is more subtle. But it does seem to be true that knowledge of scores, understanding of music, perception, and baton technique are not enough to put a conductor into the first ranks. There is some indefinable quality which is the secret of the rapport between the music, the musicians, the conductor, and the audience. There are conductors who have all of the necessary musical qualifications but lack this one quality. And, conversely, there are conductors who have the "touch" but who are lacking in musicianship. When all of these points converge, you have a great conductor, which is to say Arturo Toscanini.

The "evil" and the "good" of the art of conducting come together in the word "personality." It is a serious philosophical question as to whether the personality of a conductor should take precedence over the music (even if this were entirely possible), or whether a conductor is wholly an interpreter with all of the rights implied by that word. Yet, certain conductors who have sworn themselves to self-effacement and modesty turn out to be simply dull and insipid; while other conductors, giving full reign to all of their personal whims and emotional convolutions, end up as hysterical narcissists.

Without my mentioning names, you have probably already thought of candidates for these various types, but let's look at a handful of conductors and see how they may be analyzed:

¶ Toscanini: Called, and not without reason, the greatest. His musicianship is practically unquestionable, and certainly his hold over orchestras and audiences is phenomenal. If he has any fault, it is in program-making where his taste is not always impeccable; but he is one of the few performers in the world who makes nearly anything he plays worth listening to.

¶ Koussevitzky: The perfect pictorial representation of a conductor. He has elegance, style, fire, a sense of adventure, and exquisite taste. His faults all have to do with his surface approach to music, with the emphasis on the emotionally obvious.

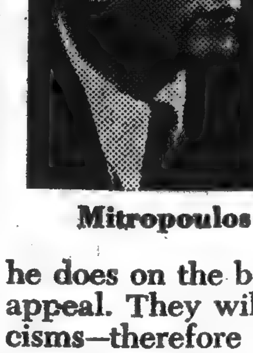
Stokowski

¶ Stokowski: One of the greatest talents ever to appear before the public in the art of producing sheer beauty of sound. Tragically, his egocentric concepts of music have led him into an impossible morass of interpretive vulgarity, and, like an overdressed and overcosmeticked once-beautiful old lady, the music he now produces is too heavily perfumed, too exaggerated, and somewhat degraded by artificiality.

¶ Bruno Walter: A serious musician and a wonderful one; but he is too often colored by weltschmerz or a stodgy romanticism.

¶ Reiner: Technically, the greatest living conductor. No other conductor can match him for baton technique, precision, and orchestra-building. He has not yet found the exactly right key with the public, but when he does, he will be a conductor in the Toscanini class.

¶ Rodzinski: Alternately serious and flirtatious with music. Like the little girl with the curl—when he is good, he is very, very good, but when he is bad he is horrid.



Mitropoulos

¶ Mitropoulos: Exciting, and the prototype of the mystical, all-emotional conductor. A thoughtless program maker but a musician of tremendous personal magnetism. He must be his own watch-dog; for the public will accept anything he does on the basis of his personal appeal. They will accept his erraticisms—therefore he must check them himself for his own sake.

¶ Ormandy: A clever and businesslike conductor, but needs a wider cultural point of view to achieve more dynamic results.

These are, of course, not all of the conductors, and not even all of the important ones; but if there's any interest, we'll go through the whole list.—NOSTRADAMUS.

BOSTON TEA PARTY, WORDS AND MUSIC

By RUDOLPH ELIE, JR.

HERALD FEB 27

You will read elsewhere of the business transacted at the Meeting of the Friends of the Boston Symphony orchestra yesterday afternoon so I will tell you about the tea party afterwards. There was a little business transacted there, too.

Of course the meeting itself is not without its special ritual. This consists in the appearance on the stage, precisely at four, of the president of the trustees (in this case Mr. Henry B. Cabot) and the chairman of the Friends (Mr. Oliver Wolcott), who address the audience on such intimate details of symphonic finance as how much money was taken in, how much went out and how much was left over. Inasmuch as the Boston orchestra's working budget considerably exceeds a million dollars a year—which is $200,000 more than either the New York or the Philadelphia orchestras have to worry about—this is pretty complicated and nobody really listens.

AT THE SOUND OF YOUR VOICE

Everybody, however, can tell by the tone of voice employed in the recitation of these figures whether he will have to dig down deep to help the orchestra or merely dig down a little. Four or five years ago the voices were very glum indeed and everybody listened carefully and worried (and, of course, crashed through, for a Friend would sooner perish himself than see the orchestra go down). Yesterday the voices were as optimistic as financially minded men's can ever be, so the Friends sat comfortably back and awaited the music.

After the figures there comes The Election. This consists of someone popping up in his chair, and renominating the current office-holder. Three seconds later, all the Friends having shouted "aye," the election is over. No one recalls anyone ever shouting "nay." Indeed, this is so unthinkable that if someone did, the Friends would not be more astonished if the Beethoven placque on the proscenium arch replied, "Sit down!"

The business over, the orchestra assemblies, and at last Dr. Koussevitzky who considers the Friends somehow his favorite children, appears smiling from ear to ear. The atmosphere is so warm and cordial and spontaneous that everybody feels like rushing up and kissing him, but this being Boston, everybody applauds a little less discreetly than usual. Then Dr. Koussevitzky gives a little speech. Nobody really understands this, either, but somehow you seem to know just what he said, and then the music begins, and here you don't miss a syllable of the idiom of which he is the consummate master. Well, as you have read, yesterday he presented a contralto named Carol Brice, and so I went up to the tea after the concert to ask Dr. Koussevitzky how he'd found her and where.

Seeing him under such circumstances takes a little time, as all the Friends, balancing tea-cups, back him into a corner and tell him—as indeed they should—how much they admire him. But finally he had a moment for me, and he was so enthusiastic over his new protege he even told me how old she was. (She later told me herself she was 28, that she was born in Indianapolis, reared in North Carolina, sang in the chorus of the all-colored show "The Hot Mikado" in which she met and married Neil Scott, studied singing at Juilliard, and still couldn't believe that Dr. Koussevitzky had noticed her.)

COMPOSER WANTED

I asked him how it had come about, and he said that Mrs. Nicholas Berezowsky, the author of "Duet with Nicky," had heard her in Philadelphia, and had urged him to hear her. He had at last consented and had been so struck by her great potentialities he determined to introduce her to Boston. And he couldn't think of any better way than to do it at the annual meeting of the Friends.

Listening to her yesterday he was again so impressed he decided to commission a composer to write a symphony with contralto obbligato just for her. Could anybody think of a suitable text? The Friends put their heads together and in a moment Dr. Koussevitzky had a slip of yellow paper suggesting a poem by Walt Whitman. So now he's looking for the right composer to do the job. He'll find him, too.

This Clipping From
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
CALL

FEB 28

Koussevitzsky Signs Up For Only 13 Week Period

BOSTON—(AP)—Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony orchestra trustees, reports that Serge Koussevitzky, 71-year-old conductor, has renewed his contract for only 13 weeks of Saturday-Sunday contracts in Boston next season. Koussevitzky will make some appearances on tour and Bruno Walter, who was with the orchestra in 1923, will serve as guest conductor next season for two periods of two weeks each.

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS

FEB

KOUSSEVITZKY TO HEAD BOSTON SYMPHONY AGAIN

BOSTON, Feb. 28, (INS)—Serge Koussevitzky, now 71 years old planned today to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra for only 13 weeks of the regular concerts in Boston next year.

The famous conductor has been reducing his activities with the orchestra for the past two years. His new contract announced by President Henry B. Cabot of the orchestra's trustees, ends speculation over his retirement.

This Clipping From
ST. ALBANS, VT.
MESSENGER

FEB 8

Koussevitzky to Take It Easier

BOSTON. (UP) — Conductor Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be relieved of some of his duties next year at his own request according to symphony trustees who made the announcement to quell rumors that the famed musician was planning to retire.

The 73-year-old Koussevitzky signed a contract for the 1946-47 season calling for him to conduct only 13 weeks during the 24-week orchestra schedule in Boston. Guest conductors will fill the other engagements and Koussevitzky will appear with the orchestra on tours.

This Clipping From
WILLIMANTIC, CONN.
CHRONICLE

FEB 28 1946

Boston, Feb. 28 — Conductor Serge Koussevitzy of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be relieved of some of his duties next year at his own request, according to symphony trustees who made the announcement to quell rumors that the famed musician was planning to retire. The 73-year-old Koussevitzyk signed a contract for the 1946-'47 season calling for him to conduct only 13 weeks during the 24-week orchestra schedule in Boston. Guest conductors will fill the other engagements and Koussevitzky will appear with the orchestra on tours. Koussevitzky conducted most of the concerts here this season, his 22nd with the Boston Orchestra.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

FEB 28 1946

KOUSSEVITZKY SIGNS

Boston, Feb. 28—(AP)—Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees, reports that Serge Koussevitzky, 71-year-old conductor, has renewed his contract for only 13 weeks of Saturday-Sunday contracts in Boston next season. Koussevitzky will make some appearances on tour and Bruno Walter, who was with the orchestra in 1923, will serve as guest conductor next season for two periods of two weeks each.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

FEB 28 194

KOUSSEVITZKY SIGNS

Will Lead Boston Symphony 13 Weeks Next Year

Boston, Feb. 28.—(INS)—Serge Koussevitzky, now 71 years old, planned today to lead the Boston Symphony, Orchestra for only 13 weeks of the regular concerts in Boston next year.

The famous conductor has been reducing his activities with the orchestra for the past two years. His new contract announced by President Henry B. Cabot of the orchestra's trustees, ends speculation over his retirement.

This Clipping From
SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS.
NEWS

FEB 28 1946

Koussevitzky Signed For Limited Season

BOSTON, Feb. 28—(UP)—Conductor Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be relieved of some of his duties next year at his own request according to symphony trustees who made the announcement to quell rumors that the famed musician was planning to retire.

The 73-year-old Koussevitzky signed a contract for the 1946-47 season calling for him to conduct only 13 weeks during the 24-week orchestra schedule in Boston. Guest conductors will fill the other engagements and Koussevitzky will appear with the orchestra on tours.

Koussevitzky conducted most of the concerts here this season, his 22nd with the Boston orchestra.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

FEB 28 1946

Koussevitzky Easing Work as Conductor

Boston—(UP)—Conductor Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be relieved of some of his duties next year at his own request, according to symphony trustees who made the announcement to quell rumors that the famed musician was planning to retire.

The 73-year-old Koussevitzky signed a contract for the 1946-47 season calling for him to conduct only 13 weeks during the 24-week orchestra schedule in Boston. Guest conductors will fill the other engagements and Koussevitzky will appear with the orchestra on tours.

Koussevitzky conducted most of the concerts here this season, his 22nd with the Boston orchestra.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

FEB 28 1946

Koussevitzky Back For Only 13 Weeks

This Clipping From
WINSTED, CONN.
CITIZEN

FEB 28 1946

KOUSSEVITZKY SIGNS ANOTHER CONTRACT, PLANS NO RETIREMENT

Boston, Feb. 28—Conductor Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony orchestra will be relieved of some of his duties next year at his own request according to symphony trustees who made the announcement to quell rumors that the famed musician was planning to retire.

The 73-year-old Koussevitzky signed a contract for the 1946-47 season calling for him to conduct only 13 weeks during the 24-week orchestra schedule in Boston. Guest conductors will fill the other engagements and Koussevitzky will appear with the orchestra on tours.

Koussevitzky conducted most of the concerts here this season, his 22nd with the Boston orchestra.

This Clipping From
BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE-TIMES

FEB 28 1946

SERGE TO EASE UP

BOSTON, Feb. 28.—(UP)—Conductor Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be relieved of some of his duties next year at his own request according to Symphony trustees who made the announcement to quell rumors that the famed musician was planning to retire. The 73-year-old Koussevitzky signed a contract for the 1946-1947 season calling for him to conduct only 13 weeks during the 24-week orchestra schedule in Boston. Guest conductors will fill the other engagements and Koussevitzky will appear with the orchestra on tours.

This Clipping From
PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

FEB 28 1946

Koussevitzky Cuts Terms Of Contract

BOSTON (AP)—Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees, reports that Serge Koussevitzky, 71-year-old conductor, has renewed his contract for only 13 weeks of Saturday-Sunday contracts in Boston next season. Koussevitzky will make some appearances on tour and Bruno Walter, who was with the orchestra in 1923, will serve as guest conductor next season for two periods of two weeks each.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

FEB 28 1946

Koussevitzky Renews Contract for 13 Weeks

BOSTON, Feb. 28 (AP)—Serge Koussevitzky, 71-year-old conductor of the Boston Symphony since September 1924, has renewed his contract for only 13 weeks of Saturday-Sunday concerts in Boston next season, Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra trustees, said Wednesday.

Oliver Wolcott, symphony trustee, reported the orchestra ended the 1944-45 season, which cost $1,148,347, with a deficit of $40,504—later wiped out by a $48,000 contribution from the orchestra's society of friends. This year, Mr. Wolcott said, the society has contributed $47,294.

BOSTON GLOBE FEB 27

Koussevitzky Cuts His New Contract to Only 13 Weeks

By his own request, the contract of Serge Koussevitzky as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been renewed for only 13 weeks of the regular Friday-Saturday concerts in Boston next season. He will also make some appearances with the orchestra on tour.

This was announced by Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's trustees, at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon during the annual meeting of the Society of the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Koussevitzky, who was 71 last July, has been reducing his activity with the orchestra over the past two seasons, and there has been speculation over his possible voluntary retirement.

Koussevitzky's decision will bring more guest conductors. Among them will be Bruno Walter for two periods of two weeks each. Walter last appeared here with the Boston Symphony in 1923.

Wolcott Elected Chairman.

Oliver Wolcott, trustee of the orchestra, was unanimously elected chairman of the Society of Friends for the ensuing year. Wolcott, in his financial report, revealed that in the season of 1944-45, at a comparable date, 2115 members of the society had contributed $48,000 toward the annual operating deficit. This year 2214 members have contributed $47,294.

The total expense for 1944-45, printed in the program books earlier in the season, was $1,148,347.75. Total income was $1,107,843.53, which left a deficit of $40,504.22. Contributions from the Society of Friends and income from the endowment fund, however, wiped out this deficit and left a surplus of $34,234.49, which has been transferred to the emergency fund.

The business meeting was followed by a concert in which Koussevitzky led the orchestra in Mozart's little E-flat Symphony (K. 184), by Mozart, and the "Roman Carnival" Overture by Berlioz.

Then Koussevitzky led upon the stage the "surprise" of the afternoon: Negro contralto Carol Brice, who, the conductor said, was a discovery of Pres. Cabot.

Miss Brice, a winner of the 1944 Walter W. Naumberg Prize, made her professional debut in New York nearly a year ago, but yesterday was her first appearance in Boston. She displayed a lustrous voice and sound musicianship in two airs, "My Father" and "How Shall I Fly?" from an obscure opera of Handel, "Hercules"; Schubert's "Litany for the Feast of All Souls" and "Seligkeit," and pieces by Dunhill, Carpenter and Hall Johnson. She was accompanied by her brother, Jonathan Brice.

This Clipping From
FITCHBURG, MASS.
SENTINEL

FEB 28 1946

Koussevitzky Re-signed

BOSTON, Feb. 28 (AP)—Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony orchestra trustees, reports that Serge Koussevitzky, 71-year-old conductor, has renewed his contract for only 13 weeks of Saturday-Sunday contracts in Boston next season. Koussevitzky will make some appearances on tour and Bruno Walter, who was with the orchestra in 1923, will serve as guest conductor next season for two periods of two weeks each.

This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
PRESS HERALD

FEB 28 194

Koussevitzky Alters Contract With Boston

Boston, Feb. 27—(AP)—Serge Koussevitszy, 71-year-old conductor of the Boston Symphony since September, 1924, has renewed his contract for only 13 weeks of Saturday-Sunday concerts in Boston next season, Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra trustees, said today.

Koussevitzky also will make some appearances with the orchestra on tour, Cabot said, disclosing that Bruno Walter, last here with the Boston orchestra in 1923, would appear as guest conductor next season for two periods of two weeks each.

Oliver Wolcott, symphony trustee, reported the orchestra ended the 1944-45 season, which cost $1,148,347, with a deficit of $40,504 — later wiped out by a $48,000 contribution from the orchestra Society of Friends. This year, Wolcott said, the society has contributed $47,294.

C.S. MONITOR FEB. 28, 1946

Symphony Preview

Excerpts From 'Peter Grimes' To Have American Premiere

By Winthrop P. Tryon

Benjamin Britten's Passacaglia, op. 33b, and Four Sea Interludes, op. 33a, compiled into a Suite from the opera, "Peter Grimes," figure as a novelty on the program of this week's concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. But they signify more than something new introduced into the repertory of the Boston Symphony and more than something offered for the momentary favor of the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening subscribers. They represent that enterprise dear to the heart of Dr. Koussevitzky, Tanglewood in the Berkshire Hills, being a set of pieces drawn from a music drama billed to be performed there in the summer.

Success, in the nature of things, is preciously desired for the Passacaglia and Four Sea Interludes as an encouragement to Dr. Koussevitzky's associates in their production of the original opera out in Lenox, Mass., come August. But even so, the pieces have to be considered for the time being as concert material; and if it should chance that they fail to make a profound impression in that character, there is no telling but that in their true context as orchestral episodes in the stage work, "Peter Grimes," they may be perfectly appropriate and effective.

* * *

In regard to promise, the music of Britten looks indeed good; for the showing of the opera in the United States has been anticipated by a showing in England, where decided commendation has been expressed. Let us take a glance, however, inside the published folios containing the Passacaglia and the Interludes from which Dr. Koussevitzky has been rehearsing the Symphony players for tomorrow and next day.

As for the movement entitled Passacaglia, a rapid turning over of the leaves of the score furnishes unquestionable evidence that listeners who confess to ignorance as to just what that form is, will suffer disadvantage no longer. For definition inheres in every page. A brief theme in the bass, sharply accented, runs through the whole thing; and, the duration of the Passacaglia being 17 minutes, the jerky melody becomes so many times repeated that it cannot, fair attentiveness presumed, miss its point.

Over the steady, uninterrupted pulse of the theme of a half-dozen notes, all sorts of tunes and decorative passages move along at a generally moderate pace. As for the instruments that carry the ground theme, they are necessarily those of low voice—now the doublebasses and the violoncellos, now the big brass, and now the harp. Any passacaglia, from its very construction, is pretty sure to possess dignity; and here is one that seems to border on the pompous. At the close, a little device of perspective in sound is worked in, by employment of front and rear desks of strings, the intermediate ones remaining silent—an interesting idea, if it comes through.

* * *

Now the Interludes, though they are four, while the Passacaglia is one, have shorter duration in performance, requiring, by the editor's calculation, but 15 minutes. Movement No. 1, "Dawn," holds a slow course, Lento, and maintains for the most part a subdued sonority; the picture, obviously, being of daylight growing, and of creatures awakening.

Movement No. 2 carries the caption, "Sunday Morning," and the tempo designation, Allegro Spiritoso. Evidently a bright day is here ushering in, the wind instruments telling it at first and the strings presently joining to elaborate the description. The trumpets cut a bright glitter of sound into the midst of string and wood vibrancy and palpitation. Bell and gong bring to view the church tower. Without pause, the music passes to an Andante movement, the caption over which is "Moonlight." The somber tones of the double bassoon help the illusion, apparently, of mystery and dimness, and the harp contributes to the shadowiness of the scene. All the while, the strings keep up a low murmur, giving an illusion, without doubt, of eeriness.

No. 4, "Storm," represents, supposedly, the seashore lashed by whatever gale it is that the libretto of "Peter Grimes" wants imagined. Like Wagnerian and Verdian tempests, it rages impressively and keeps up its fury to the finish. A hint of tragedy is caught from the very aspect of the notes in the long column of staves. Someone once said that what the American opera public hopes for in the way of something new is something indeed quite old. It yearns for another "Pagliacci." Britten's music right here prompts the surmise that "Peter Grimes" may be just the bill.

Alexander Bender

Benjamin Britten

C.S. MONITOR FEB. 28, 1946

Koussevitzky

Will Conduct 13 Programs Next Season

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, continues in his position next season, his contract having been renewed for 1946-47, and his service to cover 13 weeks, according to announcement made yesterday afternoon by Henry B. Cabot, president of the Trustees. Dr. Koussevitzky will also direct concerts on tour.

Concerts of the remaining weeks of the season will be under the direction of visiting conductors, among whom Mr. Cabot named Bruno Walter. Mr. Walter will have four weeks in all, divided into two engagements of a fortnight each. Other conductors are to have brief visiting tenure, but none of them was named by Mr. Cabot, who gave the information at the annual meeting in Symphony Hall of the Society of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Oliver Wolcott, reporting on the financial condition of the Orchestra, spoke of a surplus, which will be assigned to the emergency fund. He told the members of the Society, who formed an audience of considerable size in the Hall, that they had contributed some $48,000 in the year gone, which represented an advance over the year before. At a brief voting session, Mr. Wolcott was nominated for chairman the coming year and was chosen to the honor by general assenting voice.

After the business meeting of the Friends, Dr. Koussevitzky directed the orchestra in Mozart's early Symphony in E flat and the Berlioz "Roman Carnival" Overture. He then introduced a new Negro contralto, Carol Brice, winner of the 1944 Naumberg Prize. She sang two Handel arias, some German Lieder and other songs, to the accompaniment of her brother, Jonathan Brice.

MONITOR ... MARCH

Berkshire Festival

Serge Koussevitzky, announcing the Berkshire Festival programs to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under his direction at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., next summer, mentions nine concerts which will extend over a period of three weeks, on Thursday evenings, Saturday evenings, and Sunday afternoons.

The music of the first week (July 25, 27, 28) will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 ("Eroica"), a symphony of Haydn, Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony, Sibelius' Second Symphony, Rachmaninov's Second Piano Concerto, Wagner's Prelude to "Meistersinger," Stravinsky's "Pétrouchka" Suite, Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony, and Copland's "Suite, "Appalochian Spring."

That of the second week (Aug. 1, 3, 4) is wholly from the works of Brahms, and includes the "Tragic" Overture, Symphonies Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4, the First Piano Concerto, the Haydn Variations, the Alto Rhapsody, and the Concerto for Violin and Cello.

That of the third week (Aug. 8, 10, 11) comprises Berlioz's "Fantastic" Symphony, Schumann's Cello Concerto, Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel," Moussorgsky's "Khovanstchina" Prelude, Prokofiev's Fifth Symphony, Martinû's Violin Concerto, Thompson's "Testament of Freedom," and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Subscription inquiries, the management notes, should be addressed to Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

POST 2/28

SYMPHONY CONCERT

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Save for Beethoven's First, and it was not on the original list, this week's Symphony program was made up entirely of operatic excerps and from two composers, Benjamin Britten and Richard Wagner.

It looks as though there was again an important opera in the world and, moreover, one written to an English text. Britten's "Peter Grimes," which was brought out in London last July and will be heard at Tanglewood next summer, is the work in question. By evidence of the Passacaglia and Four Sea Interludes, played yesterday for the first time in this country, this young Englishman has what seems to be the rarest of musical gifts, a true sense of the theatre.

Mr. Britten has pretty much his own musical speech. Yet everything must have an ancestry and it is quite obvious that this music does not stem from Wagner or Strauss or the later Italians but from the "Boris" of Moussorgsky and the "Otello" of Verdi. The music is stark, spare, vivid, incisive, abundantly pictorial. "Peter Grimes," a very somber tale, by the way, and a truly dramatic one, is by report and indication an "orchestral" opera. But it is not a symphonic one, and there is a deal of difference.

With the Wagner of the "Lohengrin" Prelude, the "Forest Murmurs" from "Siegfried," the Funeral Music from "Goetterdaemmerung" and the Introduction to Act III and Prelude to Act I of "Die Meistersinger" we were ushered yesterday into another operatic world entirely. With rare exceptions the dramas of Wagner live not so much upon the stage as in the orchestra. In the Funeral music of Siegfried you come close to getting the "Ring" in a nutshell, while the essence of "Siegfried" resides in the rather arbitrary synopsis known as the "Forest Murmurs." Not so much a man of the theatre was Wagner as an orchestral tone poet who found himself in the opera house. Anyway, these numbers, most of which had not been heard at the Symphony Concerts in a long time, were eloquently played and very good to have again. They do not sound that way in the theatre, or over the radio or from a phonograph. So many thanks to Dr. Koussevitzky. The conductor seems to have grasped the spirit of Britten's music also.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

MAR 1 - 1946

[From Late Edition of Yesterday's TIMES.]

KOUSSEVITZKY CUTS TERM

Signs for Only 13 Weeks With Boston Symphony Next Season

BOSTON, Feb. 27 (AP)—Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since September, 1924, has renewed his contract for only thirteen weeks of Saturday-Sunday concerts in Boston next season, Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra trustees, said today.

Mr. Koussevitzky, who is 71 years old, also will make some appearances with the orchestra on tour, Mr. Cabot said.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

MAR 1 - 1946

Serge Koussevitzky Signs New Contract

Boston, Reb. 28—(UP)—Conductor Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be relieved of some of his duties next year at his own request according to symphony trustees who made the announcement to quell rumors that the famed musician was planning to retire.

The 73-year-old Koussevitzky signed a contract for the 1946-47 season calling for him to conduct only 13 weeks during the 24-week orchestra schedule in Boston. Guest conductors will fill the other engagements and Koussevitzky will appear with the orchestra on tours. Koussevitzky conducted most of the concerts here this season, his 22d with the Boston Orchestra.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

MAR 1 - 1946

Music Fund Concert March 12

Boxholders for the postponed benefit concert for the Rachmaninoff Fund, Inc., to be given March 12 at Carnegie Hall, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Vladimir Horowitz and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, are again arranging dinner parties to precede the event, which was originally scheduled for Feb. 12, the day of the city-wide shut-down. Among those giving dinners are Mmes. Chester Dane, Busch Greenough, Walter Naumburg, Otto H. Kahn, Bernard F. Gimbel and Lionel Perera jr. and Mr. and Mrs. Albert Spalding.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

MAR 1 - 1946

Mrs. Olive Mead Green

Concert Violinist Was Former New York Resident

Special to the Herald Tribune

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Feb. 28.—Mrs. Olive Mead Green, seventy-one, a concert violinist who played under her maiden name of Olive Mead, died yesterday in the Wyman House of Cambridge Hospital. A former resident of New York, Mrs. Green had lived at the Hotel Commander here. She was the wife of Merrill Holden Green, a New York realtor, who died in 1918.

Mrs. Green studied under Frank Kneisel, concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and appeared as a soloist with that group and with the New York Symphony Society under Walter Damrosch, the St. Louis Choral Symphony Society under Alfred Ernst, and many others. She made her first foreign appearance in London in 1900 and was acclaimed for her excellent rendition of Beethoven's Concerto, known as a very difficult violin selection.

She organized one of the first all-woman string quartets in Boston in 1900, and appeared in New York at many concerts. She lived in New York from 1900 to 1926, and retired in 1914.

Surviving are two sons, Edwin Thurston Green and Oliver Holden Green, and a sister, Mrs. Eugene Holden.

TANGLEWOOD NOTES
Feb., Mar.

This Clipping From
GALVESTON, TEXAS
TRIBUNE

FEB 22 1946

The World of Music

New York. (UP) The Metropolitan Opera Company has announced that its first postwar tour next season will take in more cities than at any time since 1910.

Ten cities are on the list: Baltimore, Boston, Cleveland, Bloomington, Ind., Minneapolis, Chicago, St. Louis, Dallas, Memphis and Chattanooga. Of these, Chattanooga will be visited for the first time and Memphis for the first time since 1901.

The company will close its subscription season in New York on March 30 and entrain for Baltimore for performances on April 1 and 2. A ten-day stay will be made in Boston from April 4 to 13, during which the company will mark its 400th performance in that city. The tour will be broken for post-season performances in New York during Holy Week, plus a visit to Philadelphia the same week.

The company will be in Cleveland from April 22 to 27 and at the University of Indiana in Bloomington on April 29 and 30. Minneapolis will be host from May 2 to 4 and Chicago from May 6 to 11. St. Louis will be visited on May 13, 14 and 15 for the first time since 1910. The remaining dates are May 17 in Dallas, May 20 and 21 in Memphis, and May 22 in Chattanooga.

Plans for the 1946 season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., have been announced by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The festival will consist of nine concerts from July 25 to Aug. 11. The programs will be announced shortly. Preceding the festival concerts, Koussevitzky and the instumental faculty of the school, consisting of more than 30 members of the Boston Symphony, will give two Bach-Mozart programs. Four concerts of chamber music also have been arranged during the school session, with the co-operation of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation.

The opera department will be under the direction of Herbert Graf and Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rycrtariff will design scenery and costumes. Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes," commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and composed especially for Tanglewood, will be given its first American presentation. It has been produced in England with great success.

Bela Bartok's last composition, a concerto for piano and orchestra completed in New York just before the composer's death last September, will be given its first New York performance at the Philadelphia Orchestra's concert in Carnegie Hall. Gyorgy Sandor, a fellow Hungarian and pupil of Bartok, will be soloist. The performance follows the world premiere of the work in Philadelphia last week.

Presentation of the concerto is one of several tributes to the composer arranged by Conductor Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Orchestra for this month, which is the period chosen by many conductors in this country for a memorial to Bartok.

At the end of this season's tour, which includes a final New York Appearance at Carnegie Hall, Robert Casadesus will go to France with his family. It will be the pianist's first visit home since the nazi invasion of 1940.

Casadesus plans a series of benefit concerts in his native France and will play also in Belgium and Holland. In September he will appear at the Lucerne Festival in Switzerland. His American tour next season will open on Dec. 1.

Artur Rubinstein has returned from the West Coast part of his annual concert tour and is appearing in the eastern part of the United States and Canada during this month. He will play with the Boston and Chicago symphonies during his second Carnegie Hall appearance of the season.

Christopher Lynch, young Irish protege of the late John McCormack, will come to this country for the first time next October, under the auspices of Columbia Concerts. He has been signed ~~to a long~~-term contract covered appearances in the United States, Canada, Cuba and Hawaii.

Lynch was described by McCormack as "the one most likely to succeed me."

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

FEB 2 4 1946

Tanglewood Festival to Offer 9 Concerts

Plans for the 1946 season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., have been announced by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The festival will consist of nine concerts from July 25 to Aug. 11. The programs will be announced shortly. Preceding the festival concerts, Koussevitzky and the instrumental faculty of the school, consisting of more than 30 members of the Boston Symphony, will give two Bach-Mozart programs. Four concerts of chamber music also have been arranged during the school session, with the co-operation of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation.

The opera department will be under the direction of Herbert Graf and Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rycrtariff will design scenery and costumes. Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes," commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and composed especially for Tanglewood, will be given its first American presentation. It has been produced in England with great success.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

FEB 9 - 1946

Nine Concerts Planned In Music Festival At Lenox

The Berkshire Music Festival conducted by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston ~~Symphony Or~~chestra will be held at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., from July 25 to August 11, it has been announced.

Nine concerts will be given on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons. The programs will be announced soon.

Other plans for the Berkshire Music Center include two new activities at Tanglewood. With the cooperation of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation, four concerts ~~of chamber~~ music have been arranged, and preceding the festival concerts, Dr. Koussevitzky and the instrumental faculty, composed of some 30 members of the Boston Symphony, will give two Bach-Mozart programs.

Dr. Koussevitzky's assistants at the center in the orchestral conducting department and for the advanced orchestra will be Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin and Stanley Chapple. The opera department will be under direction of Dr. Herbert Graf and Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design scenery and costumes. The composition department will be in charge of Aaron Copland, assistant director of the center. Hugh Ross and Robert Shaw will have classes in choral conducting, and will direct the student chorus. Mr. Shaw will prepare the festival chorus for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony which will be directed by Gregor Piatigorsky, with the assistance of principals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," commissioned by the Koussevitsky Music Foundation and composed especially for Tanglewood, will receive its first American performance. It has already been done in England. Mr. Ross will train the chorus and Mr. Bernstein will conduct the performance.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

FEB 9 - 1946

CITY NEWS

NINE CONCERTS AT TANGLEWOOD

Dr. Koussevitzky Reveals Summer Plans

Returning to his post as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra after his midseason vacation, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky announces his plans for the 1946 season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in Lenox, July 1-August 10.

The school catalog which is about to be circulated will disclose two new musical activities at Tanglewood. With the co-operation of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation four concerts of chamber music have been arranged, and preceding the Festival concerts Dr. Koussevitzky and the instrumental faculty composed of more than 30 members of the Boston Symphony will give two Bach-Mozart programmes.

Dr. Koussevitzky's assistants at the center in the orchestral conducting department and for the advanced orchestra will be Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin and Stanley Chapple.

The opera department will be under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf and Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design scenery and costumes. Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, and composed especially for Tanglewood, and produced in England with outstanding success, will receive its first American presentation. Hugh Ross will train the chorus and Leonard Bernstein will conduct the performance.

The composition department will be in charge of Aaron Copland, assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center.

Choral conducting will be under the direction of Hugh Ross and Robert Shaw, both of whom will have classes in choral conducting, and also direct the student chorus—Mr. Shaw preparing the Festival chorus for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, which will close the Berkshire Festival concerts.

Chamber music groups will work under the direction of Greor Piatigorsky with the assistance of the principals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

While the emphasis at Tanglewood is on student participation in the actual performance of music, students will also have the opportunity, as before, to attend special assemblies. Aaron Copland as moderator will conduct forum meetings. Olin Downes will give four lectures on the art of criticism. Special guest lecturers will include Howard Hanson, William Schuman, Edward Weeks, and others to be announced.

Next month Dr. Koussevitzky will announce a summary of the festival programmes—nine concerts July 25-August 11, Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons. Those who wish fuller information about the school or the festival should address Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Massachusetts.

This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEXAS
MORNING STAR-TELEGRAM

FEB 17 1946

Boy of 12 Gives Adult Piano Recital and Critics Like It

BY W. G. ROGERS.

NEW YORK, Feb. 16 (AP).—A little boy and his music teacher came in to see me. Pupil Richard Korbel claimed to be 12½, but when Teacher Hedy Spielter pointed out that his birthday came only about a month before, he settled for 12 and a twelfth.

He has long black hair, eyes that twinkle, a shy but ready smile. He wears glasses.

He's no ordinary boy, however. He has been guest star on radio shows and has just made a movie. He has just given his second piano recital in Carnegie Hall. He had already done two in Town Hall and 25 out of town. Carnegie was nearly filled. Many in the audience were his own age, but there were grownups, too. The program was enough to stump an adult musician, but Richard got through handsomely, as the critics agreed the next day.

The Berkshire music center at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass., will be open this year from July 1 to Aug. 10. Two new activities are planned, says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky: Four concerts of chamber music, with the co-operation of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation, and, preceding the festival, two Bach-Mozart programs conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky.

Under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf and Boris Goldovsky the opera department will give the first American presentation of Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes," which was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation ~~and composed~~ especially for Tanglewood.

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

FEB 10 1946

Koussevitzky Selects Faculty For Tanglewood

BOSTON, Mass., Feb. 9.—Serge Koussevitzky Saturday announced his plans and faculty for the 1946 season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., July 1.-Aug. 10.

Koussevitzky's assistants in the orchestra conducting department will be Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin and Stanley Chapple. The opera department will be under the supervision of Dr. Herbert Graf and Boris Goldovsky. The American premiere of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, will be given at Tanglewood this summer.

In charge of the composition department will be Aaron Copland. Robert Shaw and Hugh Ross will have classes in choral conducting. Mr. Shaw will prepare the chorus for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Gregor Piatigorsky will work with the chamber music groups. With the co-operation of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation, four concerts of chamber music have been arranged and preceding the festival concerts Koussevitzky and the instrumental faculty composed of thirty members of the Boston Symphony will give two Bach-Mozart programs.

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

FEB 19 1946

Dr. Hanson to Be Lecturer At Berkshire Music Festival

Dr. Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music, will be a special guest lecturer at the 1946 season of the Berkshire Musical Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., it was announced today.

Dr. Hanson was invited to participate by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of ~~the Boston Symphony~~ Orchestra and director of the Berkshire Festival. The season opens July 1 and continues through Aug. 10.

Leonard Bernstein, who has been a guest director of the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra on several occasions, will be one of Dr. Koussevitsky's assistants at the center in the orchestral conducting department.

Highlights of the musical program, which, before the war resulted in temporary closing of the festival, annually attracted thousands of vacationers from throughout the East, will be presentation of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony by the Boston Symphony with a special Festival Chorus joining in the great fourth movement.

Other musical events on the festival's calendar will be announced by Dr. Koussevitsky in March.

Dr. Hanson will share the lecture platform with Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, who will speak on the "Art of Criticism."

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

FEB 17 1946

Berkshire School To Operate Again This Summer

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces the resumption next July of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. of which Dr. Serge Koussevitsky is the director ~~and Aaron Copeland~~ recently ~~appointed assistant~~ director. The school, instituted in 1940, was suspended for two years due to war conditions and will now operate again on the original plan with the principals of the orchestra and other notable musicians on the faculty.

The following will be in charge of the different departments; Orchestral conducting and advanced orchestra, Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin and Stanley Chapple; Opera, Dr. Herbert Graf and Boris Goldovsky; Composition, Aaron Copeland; Choral conducting, Hugh Ross and Robert Shaw; Chamber music, Gregor Piatigorsky.

Another student section will consist of those with less specific qualifications who wish to increase their knowledge of music and its interpretation. All students will have access to concerts, and lectures to be given by Olin Downes, Howard Hanson, William Schuman, Edward Weeks and others. The term consists of six weeks beginning July 1 with the last three weeks coinciding with the Berkshire festival.

TANGLEWOOD NOTES
Feb. - Mar.

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD AMERICAN

MAR 3 - 1946

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY has planned the programs for the Berkshire Festival to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra next summer under his direction in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. There will be nine concerts over a period of three weeks on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons. The three programs of the first week (July 25, 27, 28) will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 (Eroica), a symphony of Haydn, Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony, Sibelius' Second Symphony, Rachmaninoff's Second Piano Concerto, Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger," Stravinsky's Petrouchka Suite, Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony, and Copland's Suite, "Appalachian Spring."

Koussevitzky

THE SECOND week (Aug. 1, 3, 4) will consist of a Brahms Festival, the programs to include the Tragic Overture, all four symphonies, the First Piano Concerto, the Haydn Variations, the Alto Rhapsody, and the Double Concerto for violin and 'cello. The third week (Aug. 8, 10, 11) Berlioz' Fantastic Symphony, Schumann's 'Cello Concerto, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," Moussorgsky's "Khovanstchina" Prelude, Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony, Martinu's Violin Concerto, Thompson's "Testament of Freedom," and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
MAR 2 - 1946

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL LISTS NINE PROGRAMS

The programs for the Berkshire Festival to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra next summer under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., have been announced by Dr. Koussevitzky. Nine concerts will be given over a period of three weeks, on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons.

The three programs of the first week, July 25, 27 and 28, will include Beethoven's Third symphony ("Eroica"), a symphony by Haydn, Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony, Sibelius' Second symphony, Rachmaninoff's Second Piano Concerto, the Prelude to Wagner's "Die Meistersinger," Stravinsky's "Petruchka" suite. Shostakovich's Fifth symphony and Copland's "Appalachian Spring" suite.

In the second week, Aug. 1, 3 and 4, a Brahms Festival will be presented, the programs including the "Tragic Overture," all four symphonies, the First Piano Concerto, the Haydn Variations, the "Alto" Rhapsody and the Double Concerto for Violin and 'Cello.

The third week, Aug. 8, 10 and 11, will offer Berlioz's "Fantastic" Symphony, Schumann's 'Cello Concerto, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," Mussorgsky's "Khovanstchina" Prelude, Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony, Martinu's Violin Concerto, Thompson's "Testament of Freedom" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS

MAR 2 - 1946

Tanglewood Plans

Serge Koussevitzky, head of the Berkshire Festival to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Summer at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will lead nine concerts over a period of three weeks.

The program of the first week (July 25, 27, 28) will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, a symphony by Haydn, Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony and Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony. The second week (August 1, 3, 4) will consist of a Brahms Festival. The third week (August 8, 10, 11) will include Berlioz's Fantastic Symphony, Martinu's Violin Concerto, Thompson's "Testament of Freedom" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

MAR 4 - 1946

MUSIC AWARD TO CUBAN

U. S. Firms in Havana Offer Scholarship in Composition

A scholarship in advanced composition at the Berkshire Music Center of Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., has been announced by the American Steel Corporation of Cuba and the American Tropical Products Corporation of Cuba. It will be given this summer to a Cuban composer less than 30 years old.

The offer includes transporta- from Cuba and back and living expenses during the session from July 1 to Aug. 10. Manuscripts sent to the offices of the two American companies in Havana will be examined by a preliminary committee there, and a New York committee will select the winners.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

MAR 3 - 1946

Berkshire Festival

Returning to its pre-war festival schedule, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give nine concerts in the 1946 Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, July 25, 27, 28, Aug. 1, 3, 4, 8, 10 and 11. One of the programs under Serge Koussevitzky's direction will include Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, with the Berkshire Music Center's chorus trained by Robert Shaw. Subscriptions for each of the series of three concerts may be obtained by application to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass. Seats for single concerts will be available after June 1.

This Clipping From
PEEKSKILL, N. Y.
EVENING STAR

MAR 4 - 1946

Berkshire Festival Programs Listed

Serge Koussevitzky has planned ~~the programmes for the~~ Berkshire Festival to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Summer under his direction at Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts. There will be nine concerts over a period of three weeks on Thursday evenings, Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons.

The three programmes of the first week (July 25, 27, 28) will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 (Eroica), a symphony of Haydn, Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony, Sibelius' Second Symphony, Rachmanoff's Second Piano Concerto, Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger,"' Stravinsky's Petrouchka Suite, Shostakovitch's Fifthy Symphony, and Copland's Suite, "Appalachian Spring."

The second week (August 1, 3, 4) will consist of a Brahms Festival, the programmes to include the Tragic Overture, all four symphonies, the First Piano Concerto, the Haydn Variations, the Alto Rhapsody, and the Double Concerto for Violin and 'Cello.

The third week (August 8, 10, 11) Berlioz' Fantastic Symphony, Schumann's 'Cello Concerto, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," Moussorgsky's "Khovanstchina" Prelude, Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony, Martinu's Violin Concerto. Thompson's "Testament of Freedom" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

MAR 4 - 1946

Berkshire Festival Programs Listed

Nine Concerts Over Three-Week Period

TANGLEWOOD

Koussevitzky Announces Concerts for July 25, 27, 28, Aug. 1, 3 and 4 and Aug. 8, 10 and 11.

Serge Koussevitzky has planned ~~the programs for the~~ Berkshire festival to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra next summer under his direction at Tanglewood. Lenox. There will be nine concerts over a period of three weeks on Thursday evenings, Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons.

The three programs of the first week (July 25, 27, 28) will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 (Eroica), a symphony of Haydn, Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony, Sibelius' Second Symphony, Rachmaninoff's Second Piano Concerto, Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger," Stravinsky's Petrouchka Suite, Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony, and Copland's Suite, "Appalachian Spring."

The second week (August 1, 3, 4) will consist of a Brahms Festival, the programs to include the Tragic Overture, all four symphonies, the First Piano Concerto, the Haydn Variations, the Alto Rhapsody, and the Double Concerto for Violin and 'Cello.

The third week (August 8, 10, 11) —Berlioz' Fantastic Symphony, Schuman's 'Cello Concerto, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," Moussorgsky's "Khovanstchina" Prelude, Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony, Martinu's Violin Concerto, Thompson's "Testament of Freedom," and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Subscription inquiries should be addressed to Symphony hall, Boston 15, Massachusetts.

This Clipping From
WILLIMANTIC, CONN.
CHRONICLE

FEB 22 1946

World Of Music ++

New York, Feb. 22, (U.P.)—The Metropolitan Opera Company has announced that its first post-war tour next season will take in more cities than at any time since 1910.

Ten cities are on the list—Baltimore, Boston, Cleveland, Bloomington, (Ind.), Minneapolis, Chicago, St. Louis, Dallas, Memphis and Chattanooga. Of these, Chattannooga will be visited for the first time and Memphis for the first time since 1901.

The company will close its subscription season in New York on March 30 and entrain for Baltimore for performances on April 1 and 2. A ten-day stay will be made in Boston from April 4 to 13, during which the company will mark its 400th performance in that city. The tour will be broken up for post-season performances in New York during Holy Week, plus a visit to Philadelphia the same week.

The company will be in Cleveland from April 22 to 27 and at the University of Indiana in Bloomington on April 29 and 30. Minneapolis will be host from May 2 to 4 and Chicago from May 6 to 11. St. Louis will be visited on May 13, 14 and 15 for the first time since 1910. The remaining dates are May 17 in Dallas, May 20 and 21 in Memphis, and May 22 in Chattanooga.

* * *

Plans for the 1946 season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood ~~in Lenox, Mass.~~, have been announced by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The festival will consist of nine concerts from July 25 to Aug. 11. The programs will be announced shortly. Preceding the festival concerts, Koussevitzky and the instrumental faculty of the school, consisting of more than 30 members of the Boston Symphony, will give two Bach-Mozart programs. Four concerts of chamber music also have been arranged during the school session, with the co-operation of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation.

The opera department will be under the direction of Herbert Graf and Boris Goldovsky. Richarn Rycrtariff will design scenery and costumes. Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes," commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and composed especially for Tanglewood, will be given its first American presentation. It has been produced in England with great success.

* * *

Bela Bartok's last composition, a concerto for piano and orchestra completed in New York just before the composer's death last September, will be given its first New York performances at the Philadelphia Orchestra's concert in Carnegie Hall on Feb. 26. Gyorgy Sandor, a fellow Hungarian and and pupil of Bartok, will be soloist. The performance follows the world premiere of the work in Philadelphia last week.

Presentation of the concerto is one of several tributes to the composer arranged by Conductor Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Orchestra for this month, which is the period chosen by many conductors in this country for a memorial to Bartok.

* * *

At the end of the season's tour, which includes a final New York appearance at Carnegie Hall on Feb. 20, Robert Casadesus will go to France with his family. It will be the pianist's first visit home since the Nazi invasion of 1940.

Cassadesus plans a series of benefit concerts in his native France and will play also in Belgium and Holland. In September he will appear at the Lucerne Festival in Switzerland. His American tour next season will open on Dec. 1.

* * *

Artur Rubinstein has returned from the West Coast part of his annual concert tour and is appearing in the Eastern part of the United States and Canada during this month. He will play with the Boston and Chicago Symphonies during his second Carnegie Hall appearance of the season on Feb. 24.

* * *

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

FEB 27 1946

SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL SUBSCRIPTIONS SOUGHT

Membership in Music Center Organization Offered

Berkshire Symphonic Festival subscribers who renew their subscriptions before the end of this week will be entitled to become members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, it was ~~announced today in Pittsfield.~~

So far more than 1,000 former subscribers have renewed as the result of more than 22,000 announcements recently sent out. Renewals and new subscriptions will continue to be received but those sending them in after Saturday will not win membership in the Music Center organization.

[91]

C + +

York just before
th last Septem-its first New at the Phila-
's concert in
Feb. 26. Gyorgy
Hungarian and
, will be soloist.
ollows the world
ork in Philadel-

the concerto is utes to the com-
Conductor Eu-
the Philadelphia month, which is by many con-ntry for a me-

he season's tour,
nal New York
rnegie Hall on asadesus will go s family. It will rst visit home
asion of 1940.
a series of bens native France in Belgium and mber he will aprne Festival in American tour pen on Dec. 1.

n has returned oast part of his ur and is appear-rn part of the l Canada during ill play with the ago Symphonies
Carnegie Hall ap-eason on Feb. 24.

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

By CYRUS DURGIN

Once again it is Igor Stravinsky Week at the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts in Symphony Hall. The diminutive Russian composer, who now is a naturalized American [illegible] is guest conductor in a program of his own music.

The program begins with the "Scenes de Ballet," parts of which were incorporated in Billy Rose's Broadway production of 1945, "The Seven Lively Arts." This, like the Symphony in Three Movements, which follows, is new to Boston. The other pieces are excerpts from the ballet scores "Petrouchka" and "The Firebird."

As the aforementioned Mr. Rose has been called "The Mighty Atom of Show Business," Mr. Stravinsky might be called "The Mighty Atom of Music." Certainly he has one of the great brains, if not one of the great hearts, of modern music. His has been without doubt the most far-reaching influence in music after that of Richard Wagner. "The Firebird," "Petrouchka" and "Le Sacre du Printemps" unquestionably are among the highest masterpieces of the art in just about the first half of the 20th Century.

Yet, listening to the "Scenes de Ballet" and the new Symphony, it is possible to wonder if Stravinsky has not passed his creative peak. "The Scenes de Ballet" are rhythm and action music of no great imagination or distinction and written in a strange mixture of styles, ranging from characteristic strong dissonance to the most innocuous sort of arpeggios and string passages.

I simply couldn't find a tune anywhere.

The total effect, however, is pleasantly trivial and you can listen without the slightest exertion of mental effort.

There is more juice in the Symphony in Three Movements than in Stravinsky's last Symphony, the one in C major that he introduced here in 1941 and repeated two seasons ago. The new one is not founded on conventional symphonic principles but, says Ingolf Dahl in his program book analysis: "It is a formal principle which conceives of music as the succession of clearly outlined blocks, or planes, which are unified and related through the continuity of a steadily and logically evolving organic force.

"This, of course, is the exact opposite of classic and romantic symphonic thought, just as the comparable additive principle of romanesque architecture is differentiated from the interlacing connectivity of the gothic or baroque." There, now, isn't that clear and simple?

Well, anyway, the new Symphony is strong and vigorous, rhythmic from start to finish, mostly of a rough-woolen texture in regard to dissonance. In the second movement is a melodic fragment associated with the impersonation of Don Basilio by Almaviva in Rossini's "The Barber of Seville." But what the whole work signifies, at least on one hearing, is more than this reviewer is prepared to state.

At these concerts the first and fourth scenes of "Petrouchka" are performed, and "The Firebird" is heard in the re-orchestration of 1919, with a couple of scenes added, together with connecting passages. Mr. Stravinsky's conducting is smoother than it used to be, but it still concentrates on rhythm rather than on the quality of sonorities.

MUSIC

HERALD
2/23

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

Symphony Concert

The 17th regular concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Igor Stravinsky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows:

"Scenes de Ballet"	Stravinsky
Symphony in Three Movements	Stravinsky
[illegible] Scenes from "Petrouchka"	Stravinsky
Suite complete from L'Oiseau de Feu"	Stravinsky

It can hardly be denied that popular approval was reserved for the last half of Mr. Stravinsky's program yesterday and only tentatively manifested itself for the first two numbers. Coming upon "Petrouchka" and "The Fire Bird" after the astringency of the new Symphony was almost like a dose of Tchaikovsky, for the pre-World War I ballets are established and welcome old friends in the concert hall.

But who is to say that Stravinsky's latest works will not similarly find a place for themselves? His Symphony of Psalms is not an early work and yet has won wide esteem. It is only that his Symphony in C major, which he conducted here in 1941, is vastly to be preferred to the new Symphony. The new work, which was performed for the first time in Boston, is also wry and austere, with an occasional touch of archaism. But it is less of a symphonic monument. It has many strange and fascinating things about it, curiosities of orchestration and the handling of the matic material. But there is too much of the laboratory about it. It lacks the bold imagination, for which Stravinsky has justly been celebrated, and it has none of the wit with which the composer imbued so much of his ballet music.

The "Scenes de Ballet," also heard for the first time here, is a singularly disappointing suite. It is a string of rather thin pieces, now and then fleetingly interesting but for the most part still-born. Written on order for that versatile impresario Mr. Billy Rose, we might have expected a wittier and more charming score, something on the order of the composer's own "Apollon Musagete," "Le Baiser de la Fee" or "Jeu de Cartes." The last named was not well received critically in New York, but it turned out when heard here to be a deft and amusing work. The "Scenes de Ballet" is a falling-off from that.

I do not mean, as perhaps the foregoing seems to imply, that I subscribe to the view that Stravinsky's art has gone sterile, an adjective with which he has been often belabored. Setting aside the "Scenes de Ballet," there is certainly much more to the new Symphony than sterile re-workings of old material or futile groping after the original. Set it down merely that the Symphony is an interesting failure.

After the intermission the customers were treated to a generous helping of the ballet music from "Petrouchka" and "The Fire Bird." The former had the first tableau added to the suite that is usually played in the concert hall, and a most attractive addition it is. "The Fire Bird" was performed in a new version whereby the scenes are linked, together, making for a closer knit work. The performance of both ballets was, as always with Mr. Stravinsky's conducting his own works, very precise and unromantic. The music nevertheless sounded fine and sent the audience out of the hall in a much better mood than that with which they enjoyed the intermission.

The concert will be repeated tonight. Next week Mr. Koussevitzky will conduct music from Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," and devote the last half of the program to Wagner.

SYMPHONY CONCERT

FEB. 23

Igor Stravinsky, no stranger to Symphony Hall, is this week again conducting the orchestra in a program of his own compositions. With an entire- [illegible] disregard for the proper chronology, the first part of this list consists of two of his latest works, the "Scenes de Ballet" and the Symphony in Three Movements, while the early "Firebird" and "Petrouchka" Suites bring up the rear.

Mr. Stravinsky is very much on the job. Nevertheless, the "Firebird" and "Petrouchka" already belong to music's past. Which does not mean that they are not very much alive today. To hear them yesterday, after the recently completed pieces, was to wonder whether the latter would seem as fresh [illegible] years from now, or whether [illegible] would be played at all.

The [illegible] Stravinsky, as we all know, is not always approachable. He is accused by many of dealing with dry [illegible] abstractions, reproached with his indifference to the sensuous side of music. Pathos, to be sure, has never been his strong point, but there are other ways in which music can appeal and Mr. Stravinsky is master of some of them.

The Ballet Scenes, which were commissioned by Billy Rose and which figured in the latter's "The Seven Lively Arts," make very easy listening. Collectively, these 11 numbers may be described as brilliant, deft, enticing. There is even a "big tune" to silence those who say that Mr. Stravinsky has no melodic gift. Altogether pleasant, too, is the middle movement of the Symphony. Here there is not the conventional sentiment, but an intermezzo with enough rhythmic interest to ally it with the Ballet Scenes aforesaid. The first and last movements reveal the Stravinsky that appeals so strongly to some and leaves others cold. There is no real dearth of thematic interest, but the rhythm element is of far more importance. This is music for the mind rather than the emotions.

The familiar "Firebird" and "Petrouchka" excerpts are each presented in new guise. This is a third version of the "Firebird" Suite and it ends, like the first, with the charming Berceuse and the plangent Finale. The first scene of "Petrouchka" has been rearranged for smaller orchestra and is now presented in its entirety. It and the fourth were heard yesterday.

GLOBE... 3/2/46

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Interludes from Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes," an opera commissioned by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, came home to Boston for its first American performance. The opera, which makes its stage debut at Tanglewood in August, is represented in its concert version by a "Passacaglia" and "Four Sea Interludes." The young English composer made the arrangements himself.

The first reaction to yesterday afternoon's performance by Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra was a compelling desire to hear the entire opera. That is precisely what interlude music should do, but it was as tantalizing to hear snatches from a dramatic score followed by intermission instead of a rising curtain, as to stop at the end of a George Bernard Shaw preface.

Mr. Britten's music has a shrewd, angular quality. Lively invention and a keen ear for contrasting rhythmical motions give the second act, "Passacaglia," a propulsive force which the more obvious storm music from the first act misses.

Given the problem of setting the stage for "a cold, gray morning" in a Suffolk fishing village, suggested by tightly compact string passages in a thin, high register, Mr. Britten finds adroit solution with sparse effects. When he is working in hard textures his music suggests Aaron Copeland's. When he reaches out for rich instrumental effects his technic is less secure.

The fullsome Sunday morning episode subsides with a kind of relief into the night music of the second act. It is difficult to get at the essentials of the fragments performed by an orchestra amplified to double the size of the 56 pieces specified in the acting score. Ernest Newman, whose London Times report on the opera and concert arrangement is reprinted in the program, credits the interludes with summing up, "the emotional significance of what has gone before" and preparing "us for what is to come." Apart from "rare lyrical outpourings, Mr. Newman maintains that, "the main burden of intense emotional expression is laid on the orchestra."

After the condensed music of Britten, Wagner's Prelude to "Lohengrin," Forest Murmurs from "Siegfried," Death Music from "Gotterdamerung," and Prelude and Introduction to Act III of "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg," seemed to take a long time saying things. The motion was there, but it proceeded in measured fashion with time for analysis on the way.

Beethoven's First Symphony in C major with its 18th Century good manners was the curtain raising comedy for the tragic material of Britten and Wagner. Dr. Koussevitzky made the most of the clearly cut themes, the wind instruments in full sail, the brisk progress of the scherzo-like minuet, and the ingratiating finale. So doing, he prepared for his contrasts in the operatic half of the program with the skill of a first-rate dramatist.—P. W.

3/1 Concert

MUSIC

Herald 3/2/46

Symphony Concert

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The 18th regular concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows:

Symphony No. 1 in C major Op. 21	Beethoven
Passacaglia and Four Sea Interludes from the Opera, "Peter Grimes", Op. 33	Britten
Prelude to "Lohengrin"; Forest Murmurs from "Siegfried"; Death Music of Siegfried from "Goetterdaemmerung"; introduction to Act III of and Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nuernberg	Wagner

This was a curiously lumped together program and only completely aceptable if you are prepared to swallow large doses of Wagner in the concert hall. People wise in the ways of conductors would eye such a program with grave suspicion. I am not prepared to back it up with book and verse, but I would wager that Mr. Koussevitzky has used the charming First Symphony of Beethoven more often to introduce dubious moderns than any other familiar classic.

If anyone looked askance beforehand, then, on the evidence at Mr. Britten's music, sandwiched as it was between early Beethoven and a half program of Wagner, the excerpts from his opera, "Peter Grimes", proved in the hearing to be thoroughly rewarding. The Passacaglia is an interesting piece, the theme of which was announced so softly that it was some time before I, at least, could catch on to what it was all about. But once the scheme is grasped there is no difficulty about following Mr. Britten's interesting variations.

The Four Sea Interludes are also music of considerable originality and interest and certainly lead to a lively curiosity as to what the opera as a whole is like, something we shall know next summer in Tanglewood. Mr. Britten's Sunday Morning sketch is far more cheerful than any British Sabbath that I ever experitenced. His Storm is realistic and imaginative without having recourse to such aids as the wind machine which Strauss used in his "Don Quixote." All in all Mr. Britten's music has a freshness and a novelty that were most welcome on yesterday's program.

I am not one of those who like to hear large chunks of Wagner in the concert hall, unless singers are engaged and something like Act I of "Die Walkuere" is produced. Many of the numbers, such as the Forest Murmurs from "Siegfried" and the funeral music from "Goetterdaemmerung" are either travesties or suffer frightfully from being wrenched out of their context. Only over base wages paid in 1941, and two of the selections yesterday, the Preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger," properly belong on a symphony program. And I am afraiod I am not yet in the mood to appreciate the second of these with its celebration of the cerxer of Teutonism and the amiable qualities of the jolly Germans.

Sir Donald Tovey referred, in a most penetrating essay on Wagner in the Concert-room, to the Forest Murmurs as a piece of "grovelling imbecility". He also resented the 'Goetterdaemmerung" funeral music out of its context as "nonsense". I would add that the bare introduction to Act III of "Die Meistersinger" is also unsatisfactory out of the opera. I have always wondered why dyed-in-the-wool Wagnerians did not more actively remonstrate with conductors for thus abusing the master. But they don't, and here am I, of all people, taking up the cudgels for them. So I shall call a halt and hold my fire until I find something that I myself consider a worthier cause.

The concert will be repeated tonight. Next week Mr. Koussevitzky will conduct music by David Diamond, Henry Cowell, Howard Hanson (4th Symphony), Sibelius (6th Symphony) and Dmitri Kabalevsky (2nd Symphony).

POST 3/2/46

SYMPHONY CONCERT

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Save for Beethoven's First, and it was not on the original list, this week's Symphony program was made up entirely of operatic excerps and from two composers, Benjamin Britten and Richard Wagner.

It looks as though there was again an important opera in the world and, moreover, one written to an English text. Britten's "Peter Grimes," which was brought out in London last July and will be heard at Tanglewood next summer, is the work in question. By evidence of the Passacaglia and Four Sea Interludes, played yesterday for the first time in this country, this young Englishman has what seems to be the rarest of musical gifts, a true sense of the theatre.

Mr. Britten has pretty much his own musical speech. Yet everything must have an ancestry and it is quite obvious that this music does not stem from Wagner or Strauss or the later Italians but from the "Boris" of Moussorgsky and the "Otello" of Verdi. The music is stark, spare, vivid, incisive, abundantly pictorial. "Peter Grimes," a very somber tale, by the way, and a truly dramatic one, is by report and indication an "orchestral" opera. But it is not a symphonic one, and there is a deal of difference.

With the Wagner of the "Lohengrin" Prelude, the "Forest Murmurs" from "Siegfried," the Funeral Music from "Goetterdaemmerung" and the Introduction to Act III and Prelude to Act I of "Die Meistersinger" we were ushered yesterday into another operatic world entirely. With rare exceptions the dramas of Wagner live not so much upon the stage as in the orchestra. In the Funeral music of Siegfried you come close to getting the "Ring" in a nutshell, while the essence of "Siegfried" resides in the rather arbitrary synopsis known as the "Forest Murmurs." Not so much a man of the theatre was Wagner as an orchestral tone poet who found himself in the opera house. Anyway, these numbers, most of which had not been heard at the Symphony Concerts in a long time, were eloquently played and very good to have again. They do not sound that way in the theatre, or over the radio or from a phonograph. So many thanks to Dr. Koussevitzky. [illegible] conductor seems to have grasped the spirit of Britten's music also.

[92]

Stravinsky as Our Guest; Still a Controversial Figure?

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

Igor Stravinsky will be with us again this week when he conducts the Boston Symphony at the next regular pair of concerts and also that in Cambridge Wednesday night. As in New York a few weeks ago he will perform two of his latest works, his new Symphony and the Scenes de Ballet, for the first time in Boston. To me this is very good news indeed, not only because I have not heard any of Stravinsky's music for four years (except a performance of the "Sacre" in Brussels), but also because I have always liked his later scores.

This is not an opinion that is by any means universally held. The old controversy arose after the performance of the new Symphony, with the Herald-Tribune going to bat for Mr. Stravinsky and the Times batting him. Mr. Downes of the latter paper paid the customary tribute to the early Stravinsky and then added: "But it is impossible for this observer to say as much for his late music and especially of the new symphony. It is sterile stuff, at best a reworking of the ideas expressed much more vitally in preceding scores."

Some such criticism has invariably appeared after almost every one of the post-Petrouchka ballets, after the Symphony of Psalms and again after the Symphony in C major. I do not know Mr. Downes' opinin today of the Symphny of Psalms, but I remember the cry that the hostile critics raised when it was first performed back in 1930. "Meretricious" was the watchword then, and I have no doubt but that "sterile" was also freely bandied about. Now, wherever the Symphony of Psalms has been heard with reasonable frequency it has established itself. The emotion does not appear to many contemporaries as false nor the inspiration dried up. I also recall both the later Symphony in C major and the "Persephone" (to Gide's lovely verses) with a great deal of interest and pleasure.

Since I do not feel that Stravinsky's genius was sterile in those works, I refuse to worry about the possibility of its appearing in the new Symphony. But I shall be prepared for a change, for a different approach. That is one of the things that has irritated critical listeners about Stravinsky. He won't stay put; he won't be labelled with a ticket which describes him stylistically till the end of his life.

With contemporary artists it is for some reason resented when they change the manner of their expression or their thought itself. Yet, when an artist is dead, he is not approached with this prejudice. Verdi is not today condemned because he so radically changed his style in his last operas. The implied reproach with Stravinsky is that the austerity of the Symphony of Psalms is not consistent with the physical violence of the Sacre du Printemps or the flippancy of "Le Baiser de la Fee." Well. we all know what Emerson thought of consistency!

Stravinsky has always been in hot water critically since the performance of the Sacre in 1913, possibly since "Petrouchka" two years earlier; and he has alway been in the public eye. His later works have in their own way found favor, but it has been common critical practice to belabor these with the early ballets as cudgel. I imagine in this case that the public which listens without too much advanced bias is wiser than the man who has a theory he wants to air in tomorrow's newspaper. I do not think that the later Stravinsky should be scrapped in favor of his first three masterpieces.

The cases of composers whose art has degenerated are rare, unless they are one-work men. And even when they do so deteriorate it is because they are written out and have gone on too long saying the same thing. This cannot be said of Stravinsky. He has sometimes written inferior or not very important scores, but by and large his standards have been high and his fertility and ingenuity remarkable. Perhaps with the idea of letting the public judge for itself on this issue, he has placed on the last half of the program the first and last tableaux from "Petrouchka" and the complete "First Bird" Suite. Both the theorists and the public should have an entertaining time!

Symphony Hall has kindly sent down a few notes on next week's program which the public ought to know in advance. The "Scenes de Ballet" was composed for that lively impresario, Bill Rose, who included portions of it in a ballet inserted in his show, "The Seven Lively Arts." The "Fire Bird" includes two numbers omitted in the first revision and integrates the whole with connecting passages. From "Petrouchka" the entire first scene will be heard, which has never been done here as a concert piece in its entirety, in addition to the final scene.

Britten's 'Grimes' Music

MONITOR...2/2/46

Excerpts From Opera Heard For First Time in America

By L. A. Sloper

The Passacaglia and Four Sea Interludes from Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," had their first American performance at yesterday afternoon's Boston Symphony concert, under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky. These excerpts constitute the central number of the eighteenth program of the season. The other items listed are Beethoven's Symphony No. 1, in C major, and these gleanings from Wagner's music dramas: the Prelude to "Lohengrin," Forest Murmurs from "Siegfried," Siegfried's Death Music from "Götterdämmerung," the Introduction to Act II and the Prelude from "Meistersinger."

Britten's opera, commissioned by Dr. Koussevitzky, will have its first American performance at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood next August. Its premiere was given at the Sadler's Wells Theater in London, June 7, 1945, and that performance was reviewed by two articles in this newspaper. The opera has been heard 24 times in London and four European productions are scheduled.

In listening to these interludes, it is necessary to remember that they were written for the theater. That no doubt is why the Dawn and the Moonlight sections seem rather heavily orchestrated. It is also why the suite, although descriptive, is not narrative. But remembering its purpose, it is easy to believe that the music would have a powerful impact in the theater.

Indeed, it made a strong impression on me yesterday in Symphony Hall. It is an intense score, closely knit, beautifully organized and built, alive with the atmosphere of an English fishing town in the early nineteenth century, with the harsh and the gentle manifestations of nature, and with the violence and the boisterousness and the passion and the tenderness of the people.

Britten's style is his own. He has learned from the old masters of the lyric theater, but there is no place in the score of this suite on which one could place a finger and say with confidence, "This is from Mozart, or Verdi, or Wagner, or Debussy." He employs the resources of the thorough musician to depict, to characterize, and to suggest dramatic conflict.

One recognizes here the elements of music drama, and the hearing whets the appetite to see and hear the stage production. With so rich an orchestral score, one feels certain that full advantage has been taken of Wagner's teachings, but Britten has supplied his own type of melodic lines, his own rhythmic patterns, his own harmonic scheme.

The performance was eloquent. The conductor was recalled twice.

BOSTON HER

Berkshire Festival Programs Announced

Serge Koussevitzky has planned the program for the Berkshire Festival to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra next summer under his direction at Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts. There will be nine concerts over a period of three weeks on Thursday evenings, Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons.

The three programs of the first week (July 25, 27, 28) will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 (Eroica), a symphony of Haydn, Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony, Sibelius' Second Symphony, Rachmaninoff's Second Piano Concerto, Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger," Stravinsky's Petrouchka Suite, Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony, and Copland's Suite, "Appalachian Spring."

The second week (August 1, 3, 4) will consist of a Brahms Festival, the programs to include the Tragic Overture, all four symphonies, the First Piano Concerto, the Haydn Variations, the Alto Rhapsody, and the Double Concerto for Violin and 'Cello.

The third week (August 8, 10, 11) Berlioz' Fantastic Symphony, Schumann's 'Cello Concerto, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," Moussorgsky's "Khovanstchina" Prelude, Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony, Martinu's Violin Concerto, Thompson's "Testament of Freedom," and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Subscription inquiries should be addressed to Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Massachusetts.

Boston Symphony

Koussevitzky Elicits Ovations in Concert Sponsored by Griffith at Mosque

BY ALAN BRANIGAN

A completely successful orchestral concert, that rare event in the concert halls, was given last night at the Mosque Theater by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction. The performance drew ovations from the capacity audience of about 3,700, who were gathered together under the auspices of Griffith Music Foundation.

As a musical outpouring, the evening was of such a caliber as to permit the Foundation to pin laurels upon itself. Bringing the Bostonians, as well as other first rate artists to our midst, entails an enormous amount of forethought and labor and Newark should cherish an organization that does it not only often but also exceedingly well.

On the purely social side, the concert held many charms. Present were many musicians of the county as well as civic leaders and persons prominent in the professions. It was notable that only a few uniformed men were in attendance, in contrast to recent seasons, and many remarked on the number of citizens who broke out evening gowns and starched shirts for the occasion.

High Spirits

Among the multitude who enjoyed themselves must be listed most prominently Dr. Koussevitzky. Although just recovered from an illness the venerable sage of Symphony Hall was in excellent spirits, enacting out each piece of music and, as it were, modeling it so that all could see its contours. For sheer orchestral witchery, his performance was matchless.

The program, which for once stayed strictly away from the Middle European masters, included Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" overture, the prelude to Moussorgsky's "Khovantschina," a suite from Prokofieff's ballet, "Romeo and Juliet," and Cesar Franck's Symphony in D Minor.

As the sole really unfamiliar work in the list, Prokofieff's music was the most newsworthy. Written a decade ago, the Russian's score is, as might be expected, a marvel of clever orchestrations, harmonic adventures and slightly cockeyed humor, elements which enter into all his compositions. The piece is carried off successfully mainly by the brilliancy of its musical language, which utilizes all the tricks of the modern orchestra.

To this reviewer, the opening section depicting the Montagues and the Capulets was the most interesting, especially in a tune that recalled the old spook theme of early movie mood music. There followed two rapid numbers, and then as concluding piece done in an atmosphere of mock tragedy. The connection with Shakespeare's play of all this whimsical cleverness was hard to distinguish. Probably like all ballets, this one needs dancers.

The Berlioz and Moussorgsky piece made a neat bracketing. Both painted cities—Berlioz delineating with tremendous effect the rather brusque vigors of Rome and the Russian bending his many talents to showing how the dawn rising over Moscow might sound in music. The effect of each was exhilarating, the pieces were so much alike and yet so startlingly different. The playing throughout the difficult measures of both works was not less than inspired.

The Franck Symphony provided as satisfying a conclusion as one could have wished. Its Gothic grandeurs towered in the full beauty of the orchestra's tone and the familiar themes seemed to undergo transformation into something rich and strange. Dr. Koussevitzky's interpretation followed traditional lines, encompassing the formidable task in 40 minutes, which indicated a rather quick pace had been taken. His personal approach was apparent mostly in the speeding up of passages leading to climaxes, which gave the music a good deal of force.

Between the beauties of the unique composition and the stirring manner of the orchestra's playing, the audience could not resist raising storms of applause and shouts of "Bravo."

GLOBE 2/4/4

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Sunday afternoon was a prime day atmospherically speaking for the Beethoven Sixth or "Pastoral" Symphony. Apparently members of the audience for the fourth in the Sunday series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra were of the frame of mind expressed by the old adage, "The better the day the better the deed."

The house was sold out, in spite of the fact that the double-six combination of the Beethoven and Tchaikovsky sixth symphonies has been heard twice in three weeks, and the Tchaikovsky a third time.

Whether the listener is of the school which insists on reading literal imitations of quails, cuckoos, and nightingales, thunderstorms and rainbows, brooks and rustics into the score, or is content to follow his own images and Beethoven's title page warning, "More an expression of feeling than painting," the symphony makes for easy listening.

If a figure in the strings or a theme in the horns is missed once, the listener may sit back comfortably and plan to pay more attention the next time because it is sure to come round again.

There is a certain hypnotism which a good performance exerts—and yesterday's performance belonged in that category—a certain drowsiness and sense of well being induced by the familiar material, which goes with being out of doors on a fine afternoon.

As Beethoven would have been the first to admit the locale of that out-of-doors sensation can be Hingham as well as Heiligenstadt.

Judging by the audience reaction. the Tchaikovsky "Pathetique" was as welcome to many of them as the Beethoven "Pastoral." There was a great settling down and leaning of heads on the backs of the seats for the subjective music, with its alternating moods of passive despair and assertive protest. Serge Koussevitzky gave the symphony his characteristically intense reading. P. W.

POST-WAR FESTIVAL

Boston Symphony Orchestra to Resume Summer Shows at Tanglewood in July

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra's activities in the Berkshires will be resumed next summer on a pre-war scale. The Music Centre will reopen with a distinguished faculty. The full orchestra will again participate in the Berkshire Festival, July 25-Aug. 11. There will be weekly concerts by the school orchestra, productions by Boris Goldovsky's opera workshop and, most interesting of all, the American premiere of Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes."

Had we not already received such favorable reports from London, the orchestral excerpts from "Peter Grimes," performed at the last pair of symphony concerts but one, would have proclaimed the essentially dramatic character of Britten's score. As was said at the time, this music is not, Wagnerian, being neither lush, heroic nor elaborately symphonic. Rather does it seem to favor the swifter, harder-hitting Verdi of "Otello" with some of the starkness and earthiness of Moussorgsky's "Boris."

Dr. Koussevitzky followed these fragments with a Wagner miscellany that included the Funeral Music from "Goetterdaemmerung" and the Forest Murmurs from "Siegfried." This was the signal for the purists to protest afresh that these last should not be wrested from their context. Though since they welcomed Britten with open arms, they were in the position of straining at a gnat after having swallowed a fairly sizable camel. In such things as these, Wagner's orchestra is itself the drama, and the doings on the stage merely serve to illuminate what is going on in the pit. Per contra, it would appear that Britten's orchestra, like that of Verdi or any ordinary opera composer, provides a tonal commentary on the drama and when transplanted to the concert hall is at more or less of a disadvantage.

* * *

With "Peter Grimes," however, novelty at the Berkshire Festival will both begin and end. The orchestral programs will come from the standard repertory, plus such already tested new works as Assistant Director Copland's "Appalachian Spring," Martinu's Violin Concerto, Randall Thompson's choral "Testament of Freedom" and the Fifth Symphony of Prokofieff. A festival within a festival will take place in the second week when the three programs will be given over to the music of Brahms. Besides the more usual numbers, Dr. Koussevitzky will proffer the Tragic Overture, the Double Concerto for Violin and Cello, and the rhapsody for alto and male chorus. We could do with these in Boston and will probably get one or another of them. This season, for example, we have had quite a little rare Mozart passed on from the Bach-Mozart Festival of last summer.

* * *

And speaking of Dr. Koussevitzky's programs, it has been announced that he will prepare but 13 of them next season, at least for the Friday-Saturday concerts. The manner in which this announcement was made may have led some to suspect that the conductor was suddenly relinquishing the major portion of his labors. Actually, the situation next season will be very little different from that of this season or even last. Nineteen of the 24 pairs of concerts have now taken place with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting only 10 of them, the others having fallen to Messrs. Paray, Reiner, Boult, Burgin and Stravinsky, while Leonard Bernstein will take over the concerts of next week.

Dr. Koussevitzky has worked hard and he's getting along. No one begrudges him this new-found leisure. He is still in charge enough to keep his impress on the band, and that distinctive quality is everywhere much prized. When he retires for good and —as we hope—a worthy successor takes over, it will still be a great orchestra, but it is bound to be a slightly different one. However, in Dr. Koussevitzky's absence the public is surely entitled to have substitutes of something like comparable stature. There was no complaint a year ago of Messrs. Mitropoulos and Szell. Most people this season were quite satisfied with Fritz Reiner, and if Stravinsky is not the best interpreter of his own works, it is very much to the point to have him conduct them. Paray and Boult are excellent musicians, and the latter gave us a lot of new and unfamiliar music, some of which was well worth hearing. But neither is exactly a Koussevitzky.

* * *

Happily, next season we are to have Bruno Walter and for four weeks all told. The other guests have not been announced. In every season Richard Burgin fills in very nicely as associate conductor, and we have been in his debt for a lot of music that for one reason or another Dr. Koussevitsky has not seen fit to play. In particular, he has been a great comfort to the local Mahlerites, and this is also where Walter should also fit. The latter is an acknowledged specialist in both Mahler and Bruckner and we have had no Bruckner these many years. In four weeks Walter should give us a taste of each. And whatever he plays, we are glad to have him.

* * *

This afternoon's recitals will be those of Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, at Symphony Hall and Cecile La Veille, pianist and composer, at Jordan Hall. Original compositions by Alan Hovhaness will be presented by a string orchestra and various instrumental soloists at Symphony Hall this evening. Louis Kaufmann, villist, will play at Jordan Hall tomorrow evening, and Alexander Borovsky, pianist, will appear there on Saturday afternoon. Next Sunday's Symphony Hall concerts will consist of an afternoon recital by Eio Pinza, bass, and an evening program of Irish music by Danny O'Neil, tenor, and Ruby Newman's orchestra.

* * *

Wednesday evening at Paine Hall, Harvard University, Ralph Kirkpatrick, pianist, will give a free recital featuring Ives' "Concord" Sonata and compositions by MacDowell and Gottschalk.

[93]

This Clipping From
PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

I DARE SAY—

Lennie and Eddie, Maestros of Jazz

By FLORENCE FISHER PARRY

I asked my daughter-in-law, who knows Leonard Bernstein well and [illegible] school (Curtis School of [illegible]) to tell me what she knows about this young exuberant friend, and this is what she [illegible]

[illegible] simple [illegible] 28, who's [illegible] like other boys his age [illegible] and [illegible] for life [illegible] I think [illegible] He went to the Boston Latin School and put him through Harvard, [illegible] in the class of '39, majoring in music. But Lennie always believed [illegible] musician should have a fine educational background and he worked hard at college to get as he [illegible] "larning." Always he was writing for school and college [illegible] at Harvard, of course, it was the "Hasty Pudding" shows; and wherever he went he was the life of the party playing Boogie Woogie—he was a true Boogie Woogie expert.

[illegible] that he was terribly serious about music didn't take [illegible] from his natural love of jazz; as a matter of fact, among the real [illegible] long-haired guys) [illegible] the best of them devoted [illegible] jazz. Why, all you need [illegible] to watch Fritz Reiner conduct Robert Russell Bennett's arrangement of "Porgy and Bess" to see how he succumbs to jazz rhythm on the podium!

"You'll remember how long after Lennie's symphony, "Jeremiah," was given its first performance here, he lectured at your Carnegie [illegible] on American Jazz and Boogie Woogie and their place in American music.

* * *

"But Lennie always was intensely serious about music; and himself earned a marvelous chance to learn it the best way! He studied under Dr. Fritz Reiner. Then he was selected among hundreds of aspirants to be one of the six or eight to study conducting under Koussevitsky, and in the summer even conducted his orchestra. About this time he wrote his famous "Fancy Free" ballet, which was produced at the Met, and shortly after composed his great symphony. "Jeremiah," which Pittsburghers were the first to hear.

"But he never lost touch with the musical idiom of his generation. Benny Goodman, Tommy Dorsey, Duke Ellington were exciting to him, too, and it wasn't long before he wrote the score to 'On the Town,' filling it with the most melodious yet the most jazzy tunes! He told me what great fun it was to be in on the rehearsals; [illegible] great time they all had together—[illegible] youngsters like himself, [illegible] vastly talented, but taking their talents in stride and never feeling [illegible] or superior or the least bit [illegible]

"It's fun to be a musician; it's fun to sense life and give it free young expression through whatever medium happens to be your gift. That's the kind of composer Lennie [illegible] just the way that your Dr. Reiner is that kind of conductor. [illegible] afraid of being natural [illegible] and speak, not just [illegible] diction of 'good' [illegible] the picturesque slang of [illegible]

Maestros

Dear Editor:

[illegible] Nostradamus [illegible] conductors, and [illegible] will continue, [illegible] response. [illegible] will repeat it [illegible]

[illegible] with what he [illegible] Koussevitsky [illegible] rather inadequate [illegible] and Mozart. [illegible] is extraordinarily good or [illegible] magnificent Saturday [illegible] of Stravinsky music but [illegible] week his Bartok was [illegible] when one would naturally have expected him to do extra well [illegible] Hungarian music. Rodzinski was fine in the Shostakovich last Sunday, but is often very heavy and uninteresting. I have not heard Sir Thomas Beecham as often as Toscanini, but find him just as exhilarating . . . Toscanini has become so polished in his Beethoven that one almost feels it is more Toscanini than it is Beethoven. . .

Toronto MRS. A. B. HALL

• • •

May my husband and I compliment you on your very enjoyable article, Conductor—Fraud or Mystic. We would like very much to have you continue this column.

MRS. MARTIN L. WACHTEL
Red Bank, N. J.

• • •

I hope you will give us additional evaluations of conductors. Give use the dope on Sir Thomas Beecham, Pierre Monteux, Georg Szell, Wilhelm Furtwaengler (and don't let politics interfere with your musical opinion in the case of Furtwaengler).

New York RALPH COKAIN

• • •

. . . The remarks on Stokowski, for all the well-known aversion among professional musicians toward him, seemed unendurably snotty and must be resented by many thousands of music-lovers who, like myself, came to regard him above all others, including the hypnotic, but, I think, vastly overrated "Little Tuscan."

There was no mention of Stokowski's vast knowledge of music, nor of his thorough knowledge of the physics of sound and the science of electronics. And Stokowski has been an indefatigable pioneer: whether it was the revitalization of the music of Bach and his predecessors through his transcriptions, or his incessant labors in the field of contemporary music, or his transcontinental tours and his work on Fantasia, he has, I think, more than any other artist of his time, made music where there was none before—and brought it to vastly more people. . . .

DANIEL KRUPP BRADLEY
Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

• • •

I thought your short and incisive remark about Rodzinski hit the nail squarely on the head, except I have heard him when I thought that he was "very, very good." He either seems to be just good or terrible. And I think it is a shame that a man of Stokowski's marked abilities and gifts has so completely prostituted them that he has become a cheap and almost vulgar musician.

Newark CHESTER E. HODGSON

• • •

Your article on conductors is very interesting. Please go through the whole list. . .

Richmond, Va. MARION H. JONES

[illegible]
TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES

MAR 3 - 1946

SHARPS AND FLATS

By FREDERICK KOUNTZ

IN LAST Sunday's New York Times appeared the following bit of information: 'Persistent reports that Serge Koussevitzky was going to resign his post of conductor of the Boston Symphony after this season, and be succeeded by Dimitri Mitropoulos, are not true. In answer to our query, Dr. Koussevitzky reports that his present contract with the orchestra runs through the season of 1946-47.

To the interested onlooker that report tells little. It may fairly be presumed that, considering the length and preeminence of Dr. Koussevitzky's tenure in Boston, he might be allowed to disregard his contract should he, for reasons good and sufficient to himself and to the directors of the orchestra, desire to do so. Moreover it seems entirely unreasonable that, after his years of accomplishment with the Boston Orchestra, such an artistically small matter as the terms of a contract should be in any way indicative of what the continuing span of his term in Boston may be.

It appears that the musical news compilers of the New York Times are not yet prepared to make any disclosures of Dr. Koussevitzky's future.

This Clipping From
RALEIGH, N. C.
NEWS-OBSERVER

MAR 3 - 1946

Rachmaninoff: "Isle of the Dead"; Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzy; Victor Album DM 1024. $3.50.

It is most fitting that the Boston Symphony has recorded this composition of weirdly beautiful music by Rachmaninoff, since the orchestra gave the composition its first American performance back in 1909, not long after it was written.

The recording is excellent, and the performance up to the mark that usually is associated with the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzy's baton. The album contains three records, five side of which are used for "Isle of the Dead," and the sixth for Rachmaninoff's "Vocalise."

"Isle of the Dead" is a symphonic tone poem based on Boecklin's painting of the same title. The picture shows a lonely figure in a row boat approaching the awesome "Isle of the Dead." The music opens with a dull, relentless throbbing as of muffled drums, and flows into the tranquil undulations of the waters that lap unceasingly around the isle. A solo horn gives a dispairing cry, and the melody soars with the violin's mournful sweetness. The cry is repeated by the various voices of the orchestra. The source of the cry is a fragment from the liturgical melody of Dies Irae, the great hymn of the Last Judgment.

Then, comes the sounds of the death march, and again the melancholy song of the shades of the dead. There is silence, and then the sound of water lapping ceaselessly on the shores of the "Isla of the Dead."

JEWISH TIMES 3/7/46

MUSIC:

Moses Smith

The announcement last week that Serge Koussevitzky had renewed his contract with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the condition that he was to conduct but thirteen of the twenty-four pairs of subscription concerts in Boston simply makes official and public what has been the actual condition during the presant season. By implication the announcement indicated that Koussevitzky would conduct the other six weeks of the season on the road—five in and around Manhattan, one on the annual tour of the mid-West.

The accompanying news that Bruno Walter would return to conduct as guest during four weeks of the season is welcome, indeed, the more so since his return is long overdue. So far as the effect on the Orchestra, the public and presumably Mr. Walter is concerned, it would have been better to combine the four weeks into a single visit instead of, as indicated, two fortnights. This is a small point, though. The important thing is that we are again to have an opportunity to abserve in action before our Orchestro one of the great conductors of our time.

The fact that identity of the other guest conductors — and there will be some — was withheld at this time gives me pause in fulfilling the promise, made here a couple of weeks ago, to discuss prospects of Dimitri Mitropoulos and Leonard Bernstein to be the next conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. I confess I expected the announcement to contain an item it did not have; and the omission affects my ability to discuss the matter further without indulging in public speculation amounting to gossip which I have neither the right nor desire to indulge in. Let's skip it, for the time being.

* * *

The recent extensive article about Mitropoulos in LIFE magazine was a deserved recognition that he is one of the top-flight conductors on the American scene. As was unfortunately to be expected, however, the article, despite (not, as is many cases, because of) its laudatory tone, was an injudicious mixture of truth and half-truth, fact and mis-statement, and faulty emphasis. I have given up hoping that when American editors and feature-writers attempt a portrait of a well known artist they will abondon this procedure. They'll do it every time.

One of the assumptions of this technique is that the public is interested in the artist's personal life, not in an assayal of his artistry in terms of that life. I can understand the public's natural desire to know something of that life. At it's worst, of course, the desire comes to snooping; at its best, it is a legitimate interest in what makese the artist tick. But the emphasis, it seems to me, so far as public discussion is concerned, at any rate, should be on the man's artistry. The other things ought wise, they are indeed snooping. to be subordinated to that. Other-

And so, with admirable inconsistency, I shall tell a little story about Mitropoulos I have not yet seen in print. The time was a couple of months aga, when Mitropoulos was in the midst of his guest engagement with the NBC Symphony Orchestra. The place was some salon or other, where Mitropoulos was one of the guests. Another guest, as it happened, was Maggie Teyte, the Engfilish singer. When she was introduced to Mitropoulos she didn't quite catch the name. Obviously she didn't recognize it. Mitropoulos carefully repeated it. and Miss Teyte still seemed a little at a loss, he said half- humorously. "You know, the Greek." "Oh," said Miss Teyte. "do you run a restaurant here?"

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
Sunday Union & Republican

MAR 3 - 1946

N. Y. Concert the 12th For Rachmaninoff Fund

New York, March 2—The benefit concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra for the Rachmaninoff Fund, inc., which was postponed from February 12 owing to the general emergency shutdown on that day, will be given at Carnegie hall on Tuesday night, the 12th. Vladimir Horowitz will be the soloist in Rachmaninoff's third piano concert, in D minor. Tchaikovsky's Pathetic symphony and a work of Aaron Copland will complete the program.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

MAR 8 - 1946

HEDDA HOPPER

LOOKING AT HOLLYWOOD

Line Up Super Cast For "Carnegie Hall"

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., March 7.—Hollywood again performs a miracle, bringing to millions the greatest musical artists of the day. Boris Morros and Bill Le Baron have lined up the biggest cast in history for their Technicolor musical "Carnegie Hall," which will be released through United Artists. Already signed are John Charles Thomas, Mischa Elman, Vladimir Horowitz, Jose Iturbi, Lauritz Melchior, Bruno Walter and the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony, Walter Damrosch, Alec Templeton, Lily Pons, and Artur Rubinstein. On the popular side will be Tommy Dorsey, Vaughn Monroe, and Benny Goodman with their orchestras. All of the above have appeared in Carnegie Hall. Morros is leaving soon for Rome, where with special permission, he'll film and record the Vatican choir against a setting of Carnegie Hall built for the purpose. The picture begins with the opening of the hall in [illegible] comes down to the present. It'll center around a love [illegible] known stars, who have not yet been picked.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
PM

MAR 6 - 1946

[94]

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

MAR 7 - 1946

Pop-Concert Series Planned In Carnegie Hall

Refreshments at Tables in Boxes Is Feature; Concerts Start May 4

A series of pop concerts featuring classical and light classical music and refreshments at tables in the boxes will be inaugurated in May at Carnegie Hall, it was announced yesterday.

Modeled after concerts which have been an annual feature at Boston's Symphony Hall and London's Albert Hall, the new series at Carnegie Hall will begin May 4 and continue through June 22. There will be six evening concerts a week in the seven-week period.

Tables for six persons each will be set up in sixty-two boxes, where music lovers may sit and partake of light refreshments and liquors while they listen to their favorite music. To forestall any possible noise that might annoy the performers, paper cups and plates will be substituted for glassware and china.

Table service will be restricted to before and after the performance and to the two intermissions. Waiters will stop taking orders ten minutes before the music starts and there will be no table service while the music is being played.

For listeners who wish to eat and drink while the concert is in progress, tables and chairs will be available in the art gallery and bar, where the music may be heard over loudspeakers.

An orchestra composed of seventy members of the New York Philharmonic Symphony, which closes its season in April, will play at the concerts, according to Daniel Rybb, a double-bassist for the Philharmonic, who said last night that he has been trying to organize the pop concerts for two years.

The names of guest conductors and soloists for the first concerts of the series will be announced next week, Mr. Rybb said last night.

"The Carnegie pop concerts are planned to fill a long neglected form of entertainment in New York, which has been so successfully carried out in Boston, where the Boston pop concerts have become an institution," Mr. Rybb said.

Admission prices will range from $1 to $3, plus tax, with the $3 tickets entitling the holders to seats at a box table. Other persons may obtain refreshments at tables, to be set up in the lobbies or in the art galleries. For the time being it is not planned to tear out seats and put in tables on the parquet floor of Carnegie Hall, although this may be done later, it was said.

—Kabalevsky's Symphony

C.S. MONITOR MAR. 9

Russian Composer's Work For First Time in Boston

By L. A. Sloper

Dmitri Kabalevsky's Second Symphony, op. 19, was introduced to Boston by Dr. Koussevitzky as the concluding number of the nineteenth Friday concert of the Symphony season. The program otherwise read: Bach, Brandenburg Concerto No. 4 in G, for violin, two flutes and string orchestra; Hanson's Symphony No. 4, and the Sixth Symphony of Sibelius. Three symphonies on a single program; an unusual arrangement.

Kabalevsky's symphony was well received, and may become popular, for it has the qualities which make an immediate appeal to listeners. The composer is an artistic descendant of Tchaikovsky. With the addition of some modern rhythms, his style is that of the master. He has the robust lyricism, the sentiment, the exuberance, the lush orchestration.

This symphony recalls again and again the characteristics which have endeared Tchaikovsky to a large public. It displays also something of the structural power of the older master, and this may help to prolong its life. It is very Russian, very emotional, very resounding, and Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra gave it everything.

The Sibelius Sixth is the favorite of the composer's most faithful disciples. Compared with some of his other works, it is perhaps somewhat austere. Yet it is not essentially different, merely more restrained. The grim emotion is still in evidence, though sternly held in hand. The material is odd but characteristic. The handling of it is equally typical.

The work consists of fragments, treated episodically and spasmodically. It is like a conversation conducted in gasps. Themes of folk nature are employed, and dance rhythms are often relied on. Crescendos are recurrent, and sequences are interrupted by dramatic pauses, abrupt transitions, and sudden dynamic contrasts. These devices are not without effectiveness, and it is quite possible that they may lead eventually to a wider acceptance of this rather forbidding work. The symphony was brilliantly played yesterday, and was received with moderate warmth.

Bernstein Guest Leader

Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest on its return from the March tour of New York and other cities which will occupy the week to come. He will direct the concerts of Friday and Saturday, March 22 and 23, in Symphony Hall, and the concert in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, on Wednesday, March 20. His program will consist on Hindemith's "Konzertmusik" for brass and strings (composed for this orchestra on its fiftieth anniversary), Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" and his recently composed "Danzon Cubano," and Schumann's Overture to "Manfred" and Second Symphony.

HE BOSTON HERALD, SUNDAY, MARCH 10, 1946

KOUSSEVITZKY RECEIVES CITATION—The conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, receives from Miss Mary Seaver of Middlebury, Vt., president of the New England Conservatory of Music chapter of Sigma Alpha Iota, a musical fraternity, a certificate "of appreciation for his great service in music and for his marked contribution toward the interests of American music."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
THE PEOPLE'S VOICE

MAR 9 - 1946

Carol Brice's Voice Called Universal

Carol Brice, contralto, who holds the 1944 Naumburg Award, was dubbed as "The Universal Voice" by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky of the Boston Symphony. The director is commissioning a symphony to be written especially for Miss Brice. The Symphony will be called the "Universal Symphony" and will be premiered in Boston next season by Miss Brice and the Boston Symphony.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

MAR 10 1946

KOUSSEVITSKY LISTENS TO JAZZ ON AIRWAVES

Says It Provides Source of Much Contemporary Symphonic Music — Much Virtuosity

Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, writing in a recent magazine article, reveals that he often listens to jazz music on the air.

"I think I find enjoyment in it for wo reasons," he explains, "first, beause jazz is the source of much conmporary symphonic music. Copland nd Carpenter are examples of this.

[15]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

This Clipping From
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD

MAR 1 46

DISTINGUISHED MAESTRO: Serge Koussevitzky, who brings his famous Boston Symphony to the Academy Thursday under Philadelphia ~~Forum~~ auspices.

POST 3/9/46

SYMPHONY CONCERT

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

As heard yesterday afternoon, the current Symphony program failed to find much favor, though this or that work undoubtedly appealed to one or the other listener. An exception should be made in the case of the first number, Bach's Brandenburg Concerto, No. 4, for violin, two flutes and strings, with Messrs, Burgin, Laurent and Pappoutsakis to carry the solo parts. Yet another legacy from last summer's Bach-Mozart festival at Tanglewood, it had not been heard at the regular concerts since 1929. The program book, by the way, still contained notes on two new pieces, Henry Cowell's Hymn and Fuguing Tune and David Diamond's Rounds for Strings, which at the last moment gave way to the Concerto aforesaid. Will they still be done, or are they to be dropped for this season? The rest comprised three symphonies, the elegiac Fourth of Howard Hanson, which the composer conducted here in December, '43, the rarely-performed Sixth of Sibelius and, as the one novelty on the revised list, the Second of Kabalevsky.

There seemed little excuse for the Hanson Symphony in the first place and still less for its repetition this week. It is a sincere and earnest piece, to be sure, and the work of an experienced draftsman, but it is so prevailingly undistinguished, so derivitive, particularly in its constant suggestion of Sibelius. As for that master's Sixth, while the rabid Sibelians prize it, for others it is the dreariest, emptiest, most perfunctory of the lot. Dr. Koussevitzky has abandoned his intention of playing them all this year, in honor of the composer's 80th birthday, but either No. 3 or No. 4, which he skipped, is worth a dozen of this one.

And as for Kabalevsky, this particular Soviet composer appears to be a vendor of musical commonplaces. The Overture to the opera "Colas Bruegnon," presented here two years ago, had verve and sparkle but the Piano Concerto heard at the Pops last season and the Symphony of yesterday are both very ordinary works. There is, however, a certain surface excitement in the Symphony's finale that won for it a fairly good hand from yesterday's generally listless audience.

MUSIC

HERALD
MAR. 9

Symphony Concert

The 19th regular concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows:

Brandenburg Concerto No. 4 in G for violin, 2 flutes and strings......Bach
Symphony No. 4, Op. 34........Hanson
Symphony No. 6 in D minor Op. 104 Sibelius
Symphony No. 2 Op. 19......Kabalevsky

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

Had it not been for good old Bach some of us in the audience, at least, would have found little cause for rejoicing yesterday afternoon. Since the 4th Brandenburg Concerto came first on the program we did our rejoicing early and remained to pray that the rest of the concert might be better than anticipated. For my part it was not.

Bach's Brandenburg Concertos are an everlasting joy in the concert hall. The 4th, for some reason, is infrequently heard. Yet it is a thoroughly fresh and ingenious work. The contrast of the solo instruments, the two flutes and the violin, with the strings is of technical interest, and the invention is so bubbling and lucid as to enchant the listener. The performance was delightful, with special honors to Messrs. Burgin, Laurent and Pappoutsakis.

It is always irritating when we are told about a contemporary work of art that "it is a highly personal and emotional expression," to which the obvious retort is "what decent work of art isn't?" The commentator for Dr. Hanson's 4th Symphony, for he it was who introduced the work with this piece of banality, then went on to admire its conciseness, "taking barely twenty minutes to perform." Since Dr. Hanson, moreover, wrote the 4th Symphony in memory of his father, all critical guns would seem to be spiked.

But there are some twenty minutes that are longer than the average hour, and Dr. Hanson has provided an instance of this phenomenon. I recall his 3d Symphony as being excructiatingly dull. This one is gloomy into the bargain. In the big forms Dr. Hanson has never written anything that is not imitative and labored. The 4th Symphony is no exception.

It was hardly a compliment to Dr. Hanson to follow his Symphony with one of Sibelius, with whose music the professor's has such surprising affinity. But Sibelius' 6th is not one of his most powerful or attractive works. It has its points, doubtless, particularly for a student of Sibelius' development. It is a dry work, revealing most of those typically Sibelian characteristics which, with constant repetition of his music, are beginning to grow tedious.

Finally, there was the Symphony No. 2 of Dimitri Kabalevsky. At first its forthright rhythms and noisy climaxes came as something of a relief, but in the end they too began to pall. His slow movement gets nowhere and the two fast movements are obvious, if reasonably effective, banging and slashing. At a first hearing Kabalevsky is not even up to Shostakovitch among the younger Soviets. And they all have a long way to go before they can compete with Prokofieff on equal terms.

Mr. Koussevitzky lavished his utmost care and an intensity of devotion on this ill-fitting program. The performances, regarded merely as orchestral playing, had little that could be criticized. But, save for Bach, both old music of abiding interest and new works with stimulating and arresting qualities were absent yesterday from Symphony Hall.

The program will be repeated tonight. Next week the Boston Symphony is out of town. The 20th concert will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein and will offer music by Hindemith, Copland and Schumann.

MUSIC

GLOBE
MAR. 9

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

By CYRUS DURGIN

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra introduced the Second Symphony of Dmitri Kabalevsky to Boston at the concert in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. The amended program began with Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 4, and included the Fourth Symphony of Howard Hanson and the Sixth Symphony by Jean Sibelius.

There is no pleasure in having to assume the role of grouch in this corner of a Saturday morning, nevertheless, apart from the Bach, yesterday's was one of the least interesting Symphony concerts within memory. Except for Bach, the music was all of second rank, even the Sibelius, which does not share the great qualities of his other symphonies.

The facture of this curiously monotonous work of Sibelius is good, the opposition of conflicting rhythms is clever. But throughout the four movements one mood prevails, determinedly gray. It seems almost as if the entire work were a tentative sort of what used to be called "preluding," to something that never appears.

The agile wheelings of the strings, the flutes in thirds and the intermittent anticipatory bursts from the brass and drums put you in expectation of important things to come, but leave you waiting at the symphonic church.

Kabalevsky's Second Symphony is a spirited and rather noisy affair done more or less with the orchestral resources of Tchaikovsky with a suggestion or two derived from Sibelius. There are tunes and strong rhythms, and they make the Symphony easy to listen to. But over all hangs the smoky brown cloud of commonplace ideas.

Howard Hanson himself conducted the first performances of his Fourth Symphony with this orchestra two years ago last December. At that time were duly detailed the facts of its dedication to the composer's late father, and of Howard Hanson's titling the four movements after sections of the mass for the repose of the dead: Kyrie, Requiescat, Dies Irae and Lux Aeterna.

For such purpose the Fourth Symphony is curiously out of key with the feelings aroused by the liturgical words. It is rasping and bellicose, full of sound and brazen fury that clothes, like the crimson robes of the Red Death, only an inward emptiness.

In contrast, Bach's Brandenburg Concerto was music of the utmost distinction, health and sunshine. At its conclusion Mr. Koussevitzky singled out for applause—including his own—the three gentlemen of the concertino: Richard Burgin, violin, and flutists Georges Laurent and James Pappoutsakis.

N MARCH 1946

THOUGHTS ON TUNING IN

by SERGE KOUSSEVITSKY

AMED MAESTRO DISCUSSES CURRENT RADIO

TUNE IN: SAT. 9:30 P.M. E.S.T. (American) phrase 'tune in' means much to me because it recalls ny hours of pleasure in my own study when I have ned to the abundance of music of all sorts with my radio mpany. I realize that this is no special privilege and I am one of millions in this respect. But I should like ut down here a few thoughts about 'tuning in' in the that others may profit by them.

The radio has been called often enough 'the wonder of age,' but do those who are accustomed to tune in every still preserve their sense of wonder at this marvelous ical opportunity which we all have for the asking? Al- gh my arduous duties as conductor often make it im- ible to listen to symphony broadcasts, I try not to miss opportunity to hear new music as it is performed on the So much new music really worth listening to is being posed right now in our country that it would be impos- for one conductor to keep up with it even though he nothing else to do. Necessarily I spend a great part of time going through new scores in the search of some- g with qualities so good as to demand performance. I y literally hundreds of scores each year, but the radio s me in touch with still more of them.

I find it diverting to listen to the principal orchestras conductors on the air and compare the qualities of one estra with another and the interpretations of any stan- symphony by various conductors. I will not say that n influenced by the interpretations of Beethoven or ms or Tchaikovsky by another conductor. After living these scores for many years and seeking their meaning having for so long worked with them and conducted n, by consulting my own nature and impulses, I do not to look for any external promptings. But to those numerous listeners whose function is to 'receive' rather present music, it should be a very absorbing and help- experience to listen to a certain great work by two dif- nt orchestras and leaders in close succession. It should least as interesting as witnessing 'Hamlet' interpreted rn by two great actors. There is also the variation in orchestras themselves.

Having little opportunity on account of my own busy dule to attend other concerts, I get much enjoyment in ning to our various orchestras on the air. Each has its individual character and special sonority. Some orches- strive for as full and vibrant a tone as possible in the ominant melodic part. Others preserve the fine balance e various sections and avoid all distortion. In the case e classical symphony of Mozart or Haydn, for example, sically balanced orchestra is far preferable, and I would ny orchestra in this category.

f a piece of symphonic music is performed in good with its composer's intentions, the component parts ld be clearly and distinctly heard, while at the same they should make a perfectly balanced unity of ensemble. often listen to jazz music on the air. I think I find ment in it for two reasons: first, because jazz is the source of much contemporary symphonic music. Copland and Carpenter are examples of this. Second, because there is such brilliant virtuosity in the ranks of jazz. The high range of the trumpet, for instance, recalls notes that Bach often used, and sometimes I feel that I would like to get hold of some outstanding jazz trumpeter and teach him to play Bach for me.

"Music should be accessible to everybody. That is the first principal of a democracy. While in the past music was cultivated only in a few conservatories and heard by a few connoisseurs in one or two of our cities, it was not a familiar experience to more than a small fraction of one percent of our population. The art of music could never grow into the flourishing art of a whole people in that way. It has not done so yet in America, but thanks to radio it is developing very rapidly into something the average man knows and loves. Music is growing with rapid strides in America. Young composers of brilliant talents are coming forward every day. And although one hears complaints to the contrary, the best of them are readily finding performances and audiences for their music. Radio is playing a vital part in the musical growth of our country."

ACTION STUDY of Serge Koussevitzky as he catches mood on Boston Symphony, heard over ABC network. Over 70, he's still outstanding.

[96]

Davenport, Ia.
Democrat

MAR 10 1946

Catching The Beat In Music World Today

BY

INA WICKHAM

> "I shall know but one country — America
> "To it I owe my utter loyalty
> "The ends I aim at shall be for my Country
> "My God and Truth."
> —National Federation of Music Clubs Collect

SERGE Koussevitsky has planned the programs for the Berkshire Festival to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra next summer under his direction at Tanglewood, Mass. There will be nine concerts over a period of three weeks on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, from July 25 thru Aug. 11. There will be soloists and choral groups assisting. The three programs of the first week will include Beethoven's Third Symphony; a Haydn symphony; Mendelssohn's Italian symphony; Sibelius Second symphony; Prelude to "Die Meistersinger"; Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" suite; Shostakovich's Fifth Symphony, and Copland's suite "Appalachian Spring."

This Clipping From VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

MAR 13 1946

KOUSSEVITZKY BURNS OVER PACT PUBLICITY

Boston, March 12.

Serge Koussevitzky steps down to 13 concerts for forthcoming season beginning in October. Boston Symphony Orchestra trustees announced this week at meeting of the Friends of the Orchestra.

Conductor, who will be 72 in July, has been cutting down little by little in last couple of years, doing only 16 concerts this season in town besides the dozen or so on tour. Trustees quoted Koussevitzky as saying it must be "13 or none."

Famed Boston maestro, however, is reported fuming at publicity given his new contract, as it puts him on spot and makes full retirement seem at hand. Actually, everybody's known for a long time he's been doing fewer concerts each season.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

MAR 13 1946

Horowitz in Concerto

He and Bostonian Play for Rachmaninoff Fund

By Francis D. Perkins

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, benefit concert for the Rachmaninoff Fund, Inc., last night at Carnegie Hall. Soloist, Vladimir Horowitz, pianist. The program:

Quiet City, for trumpet, English horn and strings ....Aaron Copland
Trumpet, Roger Voisin. English horn, Louis Speyer
Piano Concerto No. 3, in D minor.Rachmaninoff
Symphony No. 6, in B minor ("Pathetique"), Tchaikovsky

Vladimir Horowitz, who is president of the Rachmaninoff Fund, and Serge Koussevitzky, who heads its Artists Advisory Committee, paid a memorable tribute to Sergei Rachmaninoff's memory last night when they presented his third piano concerto. The performance left many members of the large audience wondering how long it was, if ever, since they had last heard such piano playing.

This concert had had its vicissitudes before it finally took place. A few days before its original date, Feb. 12, Mr. Horowitz was indisposed and Eugene List took his place. But then came the Lincoln's Birthday emergency shutdown, and the concert was postponed for a month with Mr. Horowitz back in his original assignment. His recital earlier this month had given cause for anticipations of phenomenal pianism, but nevertheless the performance was something beyond expectation. It was not merely a matter of the notable Horowitzian technique, but of an interpretation which realized imaginative possibilities that exist in this concerto, but are seldom expressed. There is much in the work that can be evoked by any talented interpreter, but this performance went far beyond that point.

Its emotional gamut an temperature covered a wide range, and the same could be said of the pianist's tone color. One factor in this impressive result was Mr. Horowitz's remarkable command of his dynamic scale, his ability to produce climatic sonorities that were vast, rather than merely loud, to approach and reach a climax with a truly culminative effect. There was a notably well conceived proportion of tension and relaxation, and the long building up of emotional intensity which marked parts of the concerto was of a kind which is very seldom achieved. The interpretation was distinctly personal, but yet gave a sense of thorough devotion to the composer's intentions.

The orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky also played the concerto on a high imaginative plane, and the interpretation as a whole gave an impression of an entire unity of expressive outlook, as well as of a fine balance between the solo part and the ensemble, which was at the top of its form. Cheers and fervent applause followed.

Mr. Copeland's "Quiet City" is derived from his incidental music for Irwin Shaw's play of this title, which was produced in 1939. The work has been played here both by large and small orchestras during the last five years. The solo trumpet, well played by Mr. Voisin, represents the protagonist of the play. It is well constructed, with the trumpet soaring above or interweaving its music with that of the English horn and strings, and also is expressively appealing in a quiet, meditative way. As for the Pathetic Symphony, the Bostonian interpretation of that masterpiece has frequently been admired here.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

MAR 12 1946

Rachmaninoff Benefit Tonight

The benefit concert for the Rachmaninoff Fund, Inc., originally scheduled for Feb. 12 and canceled, will be given tonight at Carnegie Hall by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Valdimir Horowitz and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Many of the boxholders and others attending will give dinner parties in advance. Proceeds from the concert will be used by the fund to finance its forthcoming contest to discover America's outstanding young pianist. The event will also serve as a memorial to Sergei Rachmaninoff, who died March 28, 1943.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

MAR 13 1946

RUSSIAN, U. S. TIES NOTED IN CONCERT

Cultural Relationship Stressed in Rachmaninoff Program by Boston Symphony

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

The Rachmaninoff Fund concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, with Vladimir Horowitz as ~~piano soloist~~, took place at Carnegie Hall last night. It was a month late through no fault of the artists, but it was worth waiting for.

The program, designed to illuminate some of the objectives of the fund, began with an American work — Aaron Copeland's "Quiet City." Then came Rachmaninoff's Third Piano Concerto and Tchaikovsky's last and greatest symphony, the "Pathétique." Since one of the aims of the fund is to forge cultural ties between Russia, Rachmaninoff's native land, and the United States, his adopted country, it was right and proper that the music of both peoples be represented.

Since another major aim of the fund is to encourage young American artists—pianists, conductors and composers, the fields in which Rachmaninoff was pre-eminent—and since money is needed to promote such a purpose, last night's line-up could not miss. Mr. Horowitz by himself and the Boston on its own are sure-fire sell-outs. Furthermore, Mr. Horowitz is president of the Rachmaninoff Fund and Mr. Koussevitzky is chairman of its artists' advisory committee. A natural. The house was sold out, and the audience got its money's worth, heaped up and overflowing.

Rachmaninoff's third Piano Concerto makes the most exacting requirements of the modern virtuoso. He must have power, poetry and fire; he must play difficult rhythms impeccably; he must accept the challenge of a whole orchestra in full cy and hold his own; he must have unsurpassed brilliancy and more than a touch of tenderness. That just about describes Mr. Horowitz at the top of his form, where he was last night. His playing was positively electric. It had everything that the composer could have wished for his music.

To match him there was the magnificent virtuosity of the Bostonians, kept under masterful control by their leader. Mr. Koussevitzky meshed the work of his players with that of the soloist into an unfailingly integrated interpretation. Music-making of such pulsating drive builds up tensions that require an outlet at the end. Ther ewas round after round of applause and cheers for Mr. Horowitz, Mr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra.

Mr. Copland's finely wrought, evocative work had a sensitive, rewarding performance, with Roger Voisin, trumpet, and Louis Speyer, English horn, doing excellent work. The Tchaikovsky Symphony, of course, is a tour de force of Mr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony. If anything, it was projected with even more intensity than usual, for the performance was dedicated to the memory of Sergei Rachmaninoff.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

MAR 12 1946

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Is Impressive in Closing Program

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under ~~Serge Koussevitzky~~ last evening brought the 1945-46 Woolsey Hall Convert Series to an impressive closing climax with a program which balanced Britten against Beethoven, and Kabalevsky opposite Bach.

The opening number was Beethoven's Symphony No. 1, which gave the satisfying experience of hearing a well known classical symphony in the broadly conceited, finely executed rendition which was to be expected of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, from the adagio introduction to the breathless whirl of the finale.

There followed the Passacaglia and Four Sea Interludes from the opera, "Peter Grimes", by Benjamin Britten. These pieces undoubtedly lost some of their logic by being detached from their various places in the open, but were combined to form a quite well-balanced concert unit. The Passacaglia developed in extremely broad, sweeping passages, and was striking in the sly sustaining of the cymbal's snarling dissonance by other instrumetns in the high registers through quiet passages long after the climax. Similar shimmering augmentation of the tympani marked the interlude. "Dawn," and a related treatment of harp and flute was a device producing cool effects in "Moonlight," "Sunday Morning" had tendency toward the bizarre. "Storm" was sheer violence, except for an exalted bit of melody which crept in near the end. Dr. Koussevitzky's magnificent reading of these numbers was a principal factor in their effectiveness.

Reverting almost to chamber music in a masterful change of pace, Dr. Koussevitzky presented Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 5, with Lukas Foss, pianist; Richard Burgin, violinist; and George Laurent, flutist. Mr. Foss handled the exceedingly difficult allegro movement with technical ease and free, flowing interpretation. He played the slow movement with admirable restraint. The other soloists and the orchestra gave equally clear definition to the craftsmanship of Bach—a precise craftsmanship which stood out with great elegance against the more blatant compositions of our century.

The program closed with Dimitri Kabalevsky's Symphony No. 2, which is now receiving its first performance in Boston, New Haven, and New York, although it was first heard in Moscow in 1934. The entire symphony is vigorous in rhythm and in orchestration. The second movement builds up with tremendous breadth and vitality, and gains particular charm from the skillful use of various woodwinds in haunting melodic snatches. Having somewhat more conventional harmonic treatment than some of the other contemporary Russian music, it is perhaps more attractive to the average listener. The performance last evening measured up in every respect to the high reputation of Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra as interpreters of the significant works being produced in our time in Soviet Russia.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

MAR 13 1946

Horowitz Plays With Boston

By GRENA BENNETT

Appearing together for the first time on a New York concert platform, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, directing the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the eminent piano virtuoso Vladimir Horowitz combined their talents at last night's concert in Carnegie Hall for the benefit of the Rachmaninoff Fund, Inc.

The proceeds will be used to finance the forthcoming contest to discover America's most talented pianist.

The occasion also served as a memorial to Sergei Rachmaninoff whose death occurred March 28, 1943.

In tribute to the famous composer, Horowitz played Rachmaninoff's third piano conecrto with the orchestra last night.

The performance was one of those rare occasions when conductor, soloist and orchestra fuse their efforts so perfectly as to resemble a single interpreter.

Horowitz surpassed himself. One expects scintillating technique and complete command of the keyboard from the pianist, as a matter of course. Last night, however, there was more than that.

The breadth and tonal beauty of the adagio and the turbulent excitement of the finale seemed to infect the orchestra itself.

Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra contributed an accompaniment altogether remarkable for its sensitivity and comprehension.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

MAR 13 1946

Music

Horowitz at Carnegie

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

A huge audience cheered stormily as Vladimir Horowitz brought his hands down on the last mighty chords of Rachmaninoff's Third Piano Concerto in Carnegie Hall last night.

Louis Biancolli.

The ovation given him and Serge Koussevitzky's Boston Symphony was one of the loudest and longest registered this season. Conductor and soloist — looking all in—beamed happily as the crowd brought them back for repeated bows.

The performance of the keyboard classic was another smart boost for the Rachmaninoff Fund, whose two-fold aim is to foster native American talent and forge closer ties with Russian music.

If the performance was any token of the group's zeal, its work ought to bring wide response.

There was nothing new in the concerto for Mr. Horowitz, Mr. Koussevitsky or the orchestra They all knew it backwards. Yet it came through with renewed impact, as if long lost and eagerly rediscovered.

That probably helped explain last night's audience reaction, which built up like another Rachmaninoff crescendo.

So gripping was the massed tone at times, it was hard to say who was the soloist, Mr. Horowitz or the orchestra. And Mr. Koussevitsky was no mean virtuoso himself in keeping them moving in neck-to-neck teamwork.

Mr. Horowitz's technic never seemed grander. But technic as such was soon lost in the rising levels of tone and color rolling from the keys. There was epic stride here, and a giant pulse.

Also billed last night were Aaron Copland's tersely scored "Quiet City" for Trumpet, English Horn and Strings (with Roger Voisin and Louis Speyer as soloists) and Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" Symphony, played in memory of Sergei Rachmaninoff.

The Rachmaninoff Fund committee is now running a piano contest. Sponsored debuts will be awarded to the winners, and appearance with orchestra will be arranged. Similar tours of Russian cities may follow.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

MAR 13 1946

BOSTONIANS GIVE BENEFIT CONCERT

By ARTHUR V. BERGER.

The Boston Symphony's benefit concert for the Rachmaninoff Fund came off with considerable brilliance last night in Carnegie Hall, though it had had a few ordeals to undergo before the event could take place. Just prior to its scheduled date a month ago, Vladimir Horowitz, its soloist, was indisposed, and Eugene List was to appear in his place. When the day arrived, the Mayor's ban put the concert off altogether. Those who rush avidly to every Horowitz appearance thus have the Mayor's shutdown to thank for the fact that the pianist has been heard this season in Rachmaninoff's Third Piano Concerto.

But there was more than the dynamic playing of Horowitz or even the customarily inspired and transparent Koussevitzky reading of Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique" Symphony to distinguish this occasion. There was also the unanticipated beauty and atmosphere of Aaron Copland's "Quiet City" as a curtain-raiser. Until last night I had never thought that this work, originally for small orchestra, could sound so well in performance with full string ensemble. Koussevitzky brought out elements in this sensitive and appealing music that are easily obscured in symphonic renditions. Its apparent simplicity is deceptive, for actually there are several little details that move eloquently to a climax. Roger Voisin was trumpet soloist.

It was, perhaps, appropriate that the performance of the "Pathetique" and not the concerto should have been "dedicated to the memory of the great artist, Sergei Rachmaninoff," as the program stated. Horowitz's insuperable keyboard gifts and the magnificent Boston orchestra somehow did not get together in convincing ensemble. Koussevitzky did not always seem willing to follow the pianist in his demoniacal accelerations. The clarity of the piano, even at highest speed, was indeed astonishing, but after a while the driving quality had an anesthetic effect on me. In the Tchaikovsky, however, the restraint that preceded climaxes was most gratifying. It was a reverent reading, and Koussevitzky allowed no applause after the tragic close, which explains why he curiously permitted the orchestra to stand in response to an ovation after the third movement.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

MAR 14 1946

OPERA BY BRITTEN HEARD AT CONCERT

Excerpts From 'Peter Grimes' Played by Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall Program

By OLIN DOWNES

For one listening to new music from Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," at the Boston Symphony concert conducted by Serge Koussevitzky last night in Carnegie Hall, it was not always easy to tell where a surpassingly vivid performance of the music ended and the power of the music itself began. Almost anything so performed would have given pause. But the impression the music made was a strong one.

The score has a pervasive and tragical mood, and a genuinely individual utterance. The fact that the composer uses with complete readiness and ease the modern vocabulary of his art is not in itself conclusive; what moves us here is not merely the sounds but their emotional significance. Here is music which represents nature as she appears to a fated man. In the quiet of the dawn, or the vistas of the sea, or the turmoil of the storms, she wears a tragical mask. Man—or the man, to be more explicit of the music drama—is confronted with a bitter, complex and ironical fate. To what extent such an interpretation of the music is influenced by the story of the drama itself, as told in the program, may not be estimated here. Visions, frustrations, inner terrors, seem to us to inhabit this music.

May Be Weak for Theatre

How the opera, when it is performed, stands as a work for the theatre cannot be told. It could easily prove that in its symphonic pages the composer had delivered the essence of his message. There may be theatrical weaknesses in his work. Enough that last night one was aware of music of uncommon tension and psychological suggestion; music by a composer who may not himself be a simple man.

The remainder of the program was curiously variegated, and the program was too long. It began with a performance of the most exemplary clarity and grace of Beethoven's First Symphony. The first movement was taken a little quicker than we have heard it before; it did not suffer in precision or transparency from this, but it is not certain that the firm and Beethovenish opening theme of the allegro gained in potency by this pace. In fact, a retard proved necessary when an ensuing phrase came round. The chords of the introduction amazed Beethoven's generation by their bold and original approach to the main key. Last night they occasioned astonishment by the cleanness of their attack and release.

Solo Trio Heard

The Fifth Bach Brandenberg Concerto was performed by the ensemble with the solo trio of Lukas Foss, piano; Richard Burgin, first violin, and Georges Laurent, flute. It was a painstaking performance. The beauty of Mr. Foss' tone was conspicuous, though neither of his companions could rival the peerless quality of Mr. Laurent's flute. Mr. Burgin played with the most accomplished musicianship. Mr. Foss had not the firmness of tempo or the maturity of style of his callaborators. It is, however, due to state that all three performers were long and loudly applauded.

In point of time consumed this was enough for a full control program, but there was still to come the short Second Symphony of Dmitri Kabalevsky. It is a score of excellent if conventionally effective workmanship, and it can serve perfectly as a vehicle for a virtuso conductor and orchestra. So it was played, played with immense gusto, tonal splendor and rhetoric, to resounding conclusion.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

MAR 14 1946

Boston Symphony

Excerpts From 'Peter Grimes' in Carnegie Hall Concert

By Jerome D. Bohm

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, concert in Carnegie Hall last night. The program:

Symphony No. 1.......................Beethoven
Passacaglia and four Sea Interludes from "Peter Grimes"......................Britten
Brandenburg Concerto No 5..............Bach
Symphony No. 2...................Kabalevsky

So much has been written by English music critics about the London presentations of Benjamin Britten's opera "Peter Grimes," commissioned by Serge Koussevitzky and to be given its first American performance at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood in August, that this writer's interest in last night's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall was focused on the instrumental excerpts from Mr. Britten's work which were performed for the first time in New York under Mr. Koussevitzky's direction.

Of these excerpts, the Passacaglia, based on a theme associated with the character of Peter Grimes, proved the most arresting and worthwhile. Contrary to traditional procedure, Mr. Britten's Passacaglia is in four-quarter instead of three-quarter time. The variations constructed on the brooding germinal matter first played by the solo viola are expressive of the juxtaposed natures of the dour Peter Grimes and of the maltreated fisherboy whose death in the opera leads to Grimes's forced suicide. The music is strong and highly concentrated, a telling climax being achieved. Ideationally and architectonically viewed, it reveals far more originality than the four Sea Interludes.

In these interludes, entitled Dawn, Sunday Morning, Moonlight and Storm, the objective has of course been to suggest the moods of the scenes which follow in the opera. Opinion on how well that purpose has been accomplished must be postponed until the opera is given in its entirety. However, although they are moderately effective atmospheric pieces when heard in the concert hall, one is constantly aware while listening to them of the influences of Moussorgsky and more especially of Sibelius, perhaps more in the instrumentation than in the actual musical material utitlized. More effective musical storms have been heard, although Mr. Britten must be credited with avoiding until the final measures the sweeping chromatic scales which are standard equipment in symphonic and operatic storms.

The concert began with a dull account of Beethoven's First Symphony, one wanting in spontaneity of utterance and rhythmic vitality, and in the rst movement not overly exact in ensemble and punctuated by two most peculiar, seemingly unmotivated retards.

Bach's Fifth Brandenburg Concerto was more felicitously traversedfi the important piano part being set forth with compelling elan and sensibility by Lukas Foss, who preserved a careful balance between his part and those of the solo violinist, Richard Burgin, and the solo flutist, Georges Laurent, but imparted due virtuosity to the closing pages of the first movement.

More Than Baton-Waving

There are few among us who have not dreamed of some day conducting a large orchestra. It looks so easy. You simply wave your baton imperiously, music pours forth, and you turn around to accept the applause of your amazed and delighted friends. It is easy, if the orchestra is well-trained and the music is simple and familiar. It plays, and you simply wave your stick in time with it.

Conducting an orchestra of the size and prestige of the Boston Symphony is something else again. It requires long hours of private study, considerable physical stamina, and a vast amount of nervous, or, should we call it, artistic, energy. That is why the trustees of the Boston Symphony have felt obliged to persuade Dr. Koussevitzky, who is now in his early 70's, not to do so much conducting next season. This, both for Dr. Koussevitzky's sake and for the orchestra's.

Dr. Koussevitzky is justly proud of introducing new works by young composers. This means that he must study a long, highly complex score, containing 20 or more parts, until he knows each part almost as intimately as the man or men who will play it. Then come the rehearsals, usually about three hours each day that the orchestra does not have a concert, but sometimes when it does. Finally the performance itself, with all the dramatic tension that such an occasion produces. Just try merely waving a stick for two hours and see how tired you become. But beyond that, in the conscientious conductor's case, is the obligation of seeing that the orchestra always plays at its artistic best—accurately, harmoniously and in accord with the composer's highest purpose. If you occasionally think that modern orchestral works are difficult to listen to, think how much more difficult they must be to play!

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST

MAR 13 1946

Words and Music

Horowitz Wins Huge Ovation —'Raymonda' Premiere Given

By Edward O'Gorman

In an electrifying performance that drew an immense ovation — the season's best, I should say — from an ultra-fashionable audience, Vladimir Horowitz was soloist with Sergei Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony last night at Carnegie Hall, making good a concert that had been postponed earlier this year. This was for the benefit of the Rachmaninoff Fund, Inc., which was founded two years ago this month. The one Rachmaninoff work on the program, with Mr. Horowitz as soloist, was the D Minor Piano Concerto.

Mr. Horowitz was in brilliant, sensitive form. Playing in an extended range that ran from a ghostly, intimate thread of quiet Russian melody to a thunderous contest in dynamics with the best the Boston Symphony could muster, he gave a stunning performance of the concerto.

A note inserted in the program explained that the founders of the Fund had decided pretty early in the venture that this expression of the Russian composer's greatness was to be no inanimate thing. A living memorial was the goal they had in mind; and as a memorial, last night's concert alone, which was by way of being a bright spotlight on the work the fund is already doing and plans to continue doing well into the future, was as alive as anything the good founding fathers could have wished for.

The concerto was the program's highlight, but there was other music that won ungrudging bravos from the large audience. Over the Rachmaninoff music, in the friendly Russian-American spirit of the fund, Aaron Copland and Peter Tchaikosky linked hands, with Mr. Copland's "Quiet City" opening the concert and Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique" Symphony closing it. The Fund's initial project, the contest for pianists, is now well under way, it was announced in the program, and its first contests for conductors and composers will be announced in the fall.

"Raymonda" Premiere.

Around the corner, at roughly the same time, the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo treated its City Center audience to the premiere of a new version of Glazounoff's "Raymonda," a trim little slip of a ballet that had been whittled down to a mere two-hour length.

The new choregraphy, which, for all I know, may or may not bear any spectacular resemblance to the original, is by Alexandra Danilova (who danced the title role) and George Balanchine. Sets and costumes are by Alexandre Benois.

I wouldn't go so far as to say that "Raymonda" is an electrifying ballet, which seems to be the adjective I have adopted for today's sermon, but it certainly beats gas. It is in three acts, has something to do with a Saracen Knight and a Crusader, in addition, of course, to the hotly contested Miss Danilova, and is colorful enough and varied enough to keep the City Center clientele in a constant state of enthusiasm.

Miss Danilova, it almost goes without saying, dances rings around everyone in the production.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

MAR 14 1946

NEW ENGLISH MUSIC BY KOUSSEVITZKY

By IRVING KOLODIN.

Serge Koussevitzky combined a little proselytizing for next summer's Berkshire Festival with the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which he conducted in Carnegie Hall last night. He offered the first local performance of a group of orchestral excerpts from "Peter Grimes," a new opera by the English composer, Benjamin Britten, which will have its American stage premiere at Tanglewood in August. The reason for this extreme interest is no mystery, for the conductor commissioned Britten to write the work as one of a series in memory of his wife, who died in 1941.

Britten is undoubtedly one of the most facile composers now among us, and possessed of an unmistakable talent. Whether it is suited to the theater is a matter for the future to decide. His choice of the crabbed old fisherman, Peter Grimes (whose original may be found in a work of George Crabbe, the nineteenth century English poet, is indicative of his high-minded approach to the subject. There is certainly nothing patly theatrical in the faring of this seaman, who has a series of unfortunate "accidents" to the boys he takes from the workhouse to help him. When two of them die, the people of his town rise up against him and Peter takes to the sea to consummate his own end.

The most impressive of last night's excerpts was a "Passacaglia," which occurs between two scenes of the second act. It is masterfully constructed, with a content that is expressive as well as adroit. Along with the four Interludes which completed the Koussevitzky selection, it suggested that Britten's model may well have been operas of the unconventional type of "Pelleas" and "Wozzeck" rather than those of the Italian, or Garden (Mary) variety. One interlude, depicting Sunday morning, suggested that church bells sound much the same in an English village as they do in the Kremlin that Moussorgsky imagined in "Boris"; in another, contrariwise, Britten whipped up an angry storm which avoided most of the cliches found in the two standard musical storms — Beethoven's "Pastoral" and Rossini's "William Tell." The orchestral colors are deftly applied throughout, and it is hardly necessary to say they were thoroughly revealed by the penetrating clarity of the orchestral playing.

Other Works.

There was much more of this same clarity in the performance of the Beethoven First Symphony which opened the program. However, there is more than one dimension to this score, and only the surface was illuminated by Koussevitzky. This gleamed brilliantly indeed, but one listened in vain for the humor and tenderness that can be found in this music. The other works of the program were the Fourth Brandenburg Concerto of Bach, and the Second Symphony of Kabalevsky.

[98]

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST

MAR 14 1946

Words and Music

Bach, Beethoven and Britten Share Koussevitzky Program

—By Edward O'Gorman—

I didn't think much of Serge Koussevitzky's milk-toasty interpretation of Beethoven's first symphony on his program with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall last night, an opinion which I am willing to hold up as something liberally sprinkled with bias and 9 o'clock ennui. But I did think that the orchestra's playing of the Bach Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 reached a peak of classical perfection which not even the Boston orchestra often attains. And this, I think, is an opinion shared by pretty nearly everyone who heard the music last night.

KOUSSEVITZKY

The Brandenburg concerto followed the Beethoven symphony and a suite of five numbers from Benjamin Britten's new opera, "Peter Grimes," two works which had been followed by a certain show of appreciative applause. But after the first movement of the Bach concerto, which was played by approximately twenty-three men and a boy, with Dr. Koussevitzky making modest, unostentatious gestures from the conductor's stand, there was a sudden burst of applause, and under it one could hear a buzz of unanimous approval. This, on the whole, was for a top-notch performance by Lukas Foss (pianist), Georges Laurent (flutist) and Richard Burgin (violinist), the three soloists; but if the audience had been pinned down to it I think the consensus would have been that this demonstration had been brought on by the brilliant, artistic playing of the young Mr. Foss, whose lengthy solo in the first movement shone out like a star among candles.

The Britten Suite

Four years ago, when Dr. Koussevitzky asked Mr. Britten why he had not turned his hand to an opera, Mr. Britten explained that the creation of such an elaborate piece "demanded a freedom from other work which was an economic impossibility for most young composers," a point which more benighted composers might have made the mistake of expressing in words of one syllable. Dr. Koussevitzky shortly arranged for the commissioning of an opera, which was to be dedicated to the memory of his wife, and in February, 1945, Mr. Britten put the finishing touches on "Peter Grimes." The opera has been given many times in England, and it is scheduled for performance next August at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

Continued from Preceding Page

It would be a mistake to draw a conclusive picture of the opera from these five excerpts—a passacaglia (in common time) and four interludes; but the passacaglia is a strong piece of considerable originality, and there are so many suggestive touches and interesting strokes of imagination in the other movements that a great many of last night's listeners must have quickly turned over in their minds the possibility of a hasty trip up to Tanglewood next August.

There are signs of immaturity in this score, derivative stretches that have a minimum of Britten in them, but it is interesting, well composed music, with moments of striking brilliance. It had apparently been prepared with the maximum of care, and Dr. Koussevitzky conducted it with obvious enthusiasm. As a brief sales talk for the August premiere, I don't think it could have been better.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

MAR 14 1946

Koussevitzky At Carnegie

By GRENA BENNETT

The program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky in Carnegie Hall last night was highligted by the first New York performance of Britten's Passacaglia and Four Sea Interludes, from his opera, "Peter Grimes."

The opera was commissioned by Dr. Koussevitzky in 1941.

The librettist, Montague Slater, found his subject in "The Borough," a poem by George Crabbe, written in 1810.

The world premiere of the opera took place in London on June 7, 1945, just about five months after the composer completed the score.

In order to fully appreciate the five interludes, Passacaglia, Dawn Sunday Morning, Moonlight and Storm, one must be familiar with the character of Peter Grimes, who is the sort of man who fits nowhere into the world.

He is poetic and imaginative, which makes him different from his neighbours.

As a fisherman he is more skillful than the rest.

He knows best how to make the richest catch.

He hires a boy to help him from an orphanage. The boy is overworked and dies in Peter's employ.

At a public inquiry, which forms the prologue of the opera, he is acquitted. It was an accident.

He becomes an outcast. There are only two people who understand him, a retired sea captain named Balstrode, and a widowed school mistress, Ellen Orford.

Peter engages another boy apprentice, the storm grows—murder once, murder again. An angry procession starts towards his lonely dwelling on top of a cliff. He flees to his boat by the cliff. The boy slips and dies. There is only one thing left for him to do, he sails far out, sinks his boat and drowns.

Britten's tonal pictures are very effective and there are some brilliant innovations in the cleverly orchestrated score.

It is sufficiently original in its construction to hold the listeners' keyed up interest.

At the same time, however, one feels that the work will be more appreciated by the general public when heard during the performance of the opera itself instead as a mere orchestral piece, as was the case last night.

The program opened with Beethoven's Symphony No. 1, and it included Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 5, in which Lukas Foss, pianist, Richard Burgin, violinist, and Georges Laurent, flutist, were the solo instrumentalists.

The concert was brought to a close with the Kabalevsky Symphony No. 2.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

MAR 14 1946

Music

Bostonians Give Britten Opera Fine Performance

By ROBERT BAGAR.

Over two hours and 15 minutes long, last night's program by the Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall was the lengthiest yet by this group of New Englanders, at least around these parts. There were four numbers and, as someone remarked, "all with movements." They were the Beethoven First Symphony, the Passacaglia and Four Sea Interludes from Benjamin Britten's opera "Peter Grimes," Bach's "Brandenburg" Concerto No. 5, and the Second Symphony of Kabalevsky. Soloists in the Bach were Lukas Foss, pianist; Richard Burgin, violinist, and Georges Laurent, flutist.

Robert Bagar.

Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes" was written on a commission by Serge Koussevitzky for performance by the Berkshire Music Center opera department, where it will be produced next August. In the meantime, it has already had 24 performances at the Sadler's Wells Theater, London, and it is scheduled for still further showings in Basel, Zurich, Antwerp and Stockholm. For a 33-year-old composer this isn't bad going at all. The librettist, Montague Slater, drew his subject from George Crabbe's poem "The Borough."

A Good Sample.

The story is about a lonely man driven unto himself and suspected of several murders, of which, incidentally, he is innocent. What we did hear, though, speaks rather well for the entire piece.

The Passacaglia section started right off winning friends and influencing people, and the four Interludes — "Dawn," "Sunday Morning," "Moonlight," and "Storm"—went on doing additional good deeds along those lines.

Mood Cast Brightly.

The composer has invented themes that are immediately striking contrasts. Cleverly wrought stunts catch the ear as the music progresses, things like glisses, quaint and curious sounds in the rhythm section, sudden bursts and weird tinklings. All of these are mood makers.

The piece was beautifully played by the Bostonians, though, not knowing the score, I wonder if on occasion there was not a fluff here and there in the rhythm or the dynamics or the notes themselves.

Foss Brilliant.

It remained for good old Papa Bach to be the joy of the evening, however. After a sluggish opening movement, which came to life with Lukas Foss' brilliant account of the solo passage, the composition set out on its all-winning pace without ever bogging down again. Messrs. Burgin and Laurent contributed handsomely to the accomplishment.

Beethoven's First, for some reason or other, had the speed jitters. Everything came out clearly, all the same, and Beethoven is Beethoven, whether you get him fast or slow, provided every element is set to scale.

The Kabalevsky Second is short for a symphony—three movements running some 25 minutes. It's well orchestrated and it makes nice noises most of the time. Not bad at all as a program filler.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

MAR 14 1946

MUSIC

By Miles Kastendieck

Koussevitzky Introduces Britten Music for Opera, 'Peter Grimes'

Twice coupling new music with old, Serge Koussevitzky set forth a nicely balanced program with the Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall last night. The concert opened with Beethoven's First Symphony, an utterly charming work which is not favored with too frequent performances. It was followed by the first New York performance of the Passacaglia and Four Sea Interludes from Benjamin Britten's opera "Peter Grimes," which will have its American premiere this Summer at the Berkshire Festival. Thereafter came Bach's Fifth Brandenburg Concerto and Kabalevsky's Second Symphony.

The "Peter Grimes" music is characteristic of our times for its ingenious scoring and calculated effectiveness. There is no doubting the cleverness, the skill and the technical mastery which guides Britten to fashion a fascinating orchestral score. The Passacaglia profits most by all this, having the form within which to achieve the most satisfactory results. Its theme is hardly endearing; indeed, its nature is kind of grim. The interludes are outspoken realism, descriptive of their subject-matter according to title. The "Dawn" streaks out in the high violins and paints the cold greyness it strives to depict; "Sunday Morning" is strikingly realistic with its rhythmic bell effects and singing birds and not altogether suggestive of a day of rest; "Moonlight" has a strange emptiness; "The Storm" roars in gales and thunders right and left in full orchestral brilliance with an enchanting lull between outbursts.

As theater music, the score undoubtedly achieves its purpose. Its facility suggests some lack of substance: it sounds on first hearing like surface music. Britten knows his Strauss and shows a similar command of the orchestra and its full potentialities. As descriptive music, this is a series of sketches.

The first part of the evening fared better in performance than the last. The Bach was too restrained, especially in the piano part of the ensemble, and too cool in its inhibited expression. Lukas Foss played the piano meticulously but with his non-legato approach often sounded too dry and too inflexible even in his more animated long cadenza of the first movement. Richard Burgin and Georges Laurent, playing the violin and flute respectively, supplied the requisite artistry. The Kabalevsky made its popular appeal in accordance with the nature of the music and the style of the performance, though the latter needed a sharper outline to give the music the full glitter it has.

This Clipping From
BALTIMORE, MD.
NEWS-POST
MAR 15 1946

Clarinetist Dies During Concert

Georges Grisez, substitute bass larinetest for the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra, died suddenly at he Lyric Theater last night, tricken while he was performing is part in a presentation of ershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue."

Spectators said Mr. Grisez, who ived at 2619 Huntingdon avenue, ell from his chair in the middle of the performance, but other members of the orchestra carried him so quickly and quietly from the stage that the production was uninterrupted.

Mr. Grisez served five years vith the French Army during the irst World War and was later olo clarinetist with the Boston, hiladelphia and Minneapolis ymphony Orchestras.

Philadelphia Inquirer, March 15, 1946

THE PHILA

Boston Symphony Gives Annual Concert Here

By Linton Martin

Departing from his custom of confining his programs to familiar symphonic fare when the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to town for its annual concert for the Forum, Serge Koussevitzky provided novelty at the Academy last night. The result was an exceptionally stimulating and exciting musical experience.

It was an orchestral event of major importance. For Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony, introduced here on a program that included Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture and the Brahms Fourth Symphony, is immediately arresting in content and quality, and strikes the listener as one of the most significant symphonic works that has come out of Soviet Russia in years, in its idiom and utterance.

Since it was composed in 1944, this Fifth Symphony of Prokofieff is manifestly a product of the later years of the war. In that chronological category, it inescapably challenges comparisons with the Shostakovich Seventh and Eighth, or "Leningrad" and "Victory" Symphonies.

In that light it emerges as a masterpiece, making those widely publicized works by Prokofieff's contemporary composer seem more bombastic and overblown than ever.

'ABOUT SPIRIT OF MAN'

Of course there can be no kind of comparison on the score of intrinsic musical merits. For the current composition, played with the superb vitality and technical finish that are to be taken for granted from the famed Boston band under its distinguished conductor, discloses a greater and more impressive musical maturity than ever before in Prokofieff.

To what extent this symphony is program music, it would be hard to say. The composer himself has been quoted as calling it "a symphony about the spirit of man"—which is a quite comprehensive designation, and one that is difficult if not impossible to pin down to any definite detail.

COMPOSER RESOURCEFUL

From the first, the new work is marked by admirable directness and clarity. The opening theme, in its melodic manner, sets the key of the composition, and reveals a more romantic mood than customary in Prokofieff.

From this, the composer continues with increasing energy of treatment and rhythm, building to a powerful climax. He provides contrast in a scherzo-like section that follows, though this is probably intentionally less impressive.

In the slow movement, Prokofieff shows masterly resourcefulness in the treatment and development of his melodic and harmonic material, and while the finale, at a first hearing, seems more conventional in cut, it is logical, and is effective in its shrewdly calculated effect.

[99]

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

MAR 17 1946

Boston Symphony

3 Living Composers' Works Are Featured

By Francis D. Perkins

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Serge Koussevitzky [illegible] yesterday afternoon [illegible] program: [illegible] Bach [illegible] solos, [illegible] Pappoutsakis [illegible] Hanson [illegible] Sibelius [illegible] Kabalevsky

Symphonies by three living composers of different nationalities—American, Finnish and Russian—were presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction yesterday afternoon at Carnegie Hall. All three had been heard here before, although Howard Hanson's Fourth Symphony had not previously figured in a New York subscription concert by a major orchestra. Placing the Hanson and Kabalevsky works in a program with a Sibelius symphony called attention to certain measures in each which suggest the influence of Sibelius. This is more prominent in the American work than in the Russian, which has more reminders of earlier Russian masters.

Dr. Hanson's Fourth Symphony was first played here by the N. B. C. Symphony in a broadcast in January, 1944, and had its local concert premiere in the Columbia University festival last spring. The Sibelian influence is prominent mainly in the first movement, lying partly in one of the principal thematic structural features of the work and partly in the treatment of the musical ideas and the scoring. Later, however, one was much more conscious of the composer's own musical individuality. The work as a whole gives a sense of expressive intimacy. The moods and emotions suggested by the titles of the movements are well realized in the first two movements. The third falls somewhat short of suggesting the "Dies Irae," while the fourth approaches, but does not quite reach the expressive implications of "Lux Aeterna." The scoring is well wrought.

The Bostonians had played Kabalevsky's Second Symphony in last Wednesday's program, but it came too late in the evening to give a chance for comment. It is an effective work of ready appeal, with plenty of tunes which are skillfully treated and presented in a colorful instrumental investiture. Whether the intrinsic musical distinction and durability of the composition match its immediate appeal is debatable; it is mainly extrovert music of a sometimes derivative character.

Of Sibelius's seven symphonies, the sixth is one of the least often played here; it has been regarded as somewhat austere as compared with most of the others. And yet yesterday's performance gave no impression of austerity, although the work does not abound in sonorous perorations and closes quietly; it was communicative music, communicatively played.

The three symphonies were prefaced by a well routined performance of Bach's fourth Brandenburg Concerto, with the three soloists in praiseworthy instrumental form.

This Clipping From
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD

MAR 15 1946

Forum Brings Boston Symphony To City for Concert at Academy

By EDWIN H. SCHLOSS

The Philadelphia Forum played host last to a great American musical institution—the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and his men played their annual concert in the Academy of Music to a capacity audience of Forum members and paying guests who had bought out the house almost two weeks in advance.

Important Novelty

The program, which opened proudly with Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture and close sumptuously with the Brahms Fourth Symphony, offered an important novelty—the first performance in this city of the Fifth Symphony of Prokofieff.

The new work, written in 1944, was introduced to this country last year by Dr. Koussevitzky. It was [illegible] last night by the Boston [illegible] with the added [illegible] discoverer.

[illegible] composer [illegible] authoritative and [illegible] premiere of [illegible]

Values are Fixed

[illegible] is interesting [illegible] its values are [illegible] definitely in the [illegible] who is one [illegible] and probably [illegible] graceful in [illegible] hierarchy. [illegible] enormously charming [illegible] irresistibly [illegible] a glittering [illegible] not always con[illegible] always come into three dimensions emotion[illegible]

Builds Up to Barbarity

The two fast movements last night were the best. In the Scherzo the composer is the Prokofieff of the "Classical" Symphony of 30 years ago. The music, gay and coquettishly inventive, chatters beguilingly with neo-Mozartean grace. A refreshing trio is thrown in for good measure.

The opening movement, after a somber introduction, builds up to the bright barbarity of the composer's "Scythian Suite." The Slow Movement lapses into the synthetic. It is the kind of music which seeks to whip up excitement with violins divisi and brooding brass a la the movies. The Finale, while a bit too long, is rich in rather romantic themes handled with engaging skill. Responding to the symphony's peaks and the superb performance it received, the audience gave its accolade in prolonged applause.

When one of the great orchestras of this country visits the home grounds of another, comparisons are inevitable. Though when two such supreme ensembles as Dr. Koussevitzky's and our own village band are thrown into the scales, the difference is likely to register as a matter of taste rather than of information.

Old Parallels Hold

As far as this reporter is concerned, the old parallels still hold. The Boston strings cannot boast the warmly luxurious, silken tone of Dr. Ormandy's. And the woodwind section of last night's visitors is not as rich as is our own in individual artistry. But the Bostonians played last night with a vitality, a balance and a disciplined elan rarely heard in the Academy from any orchestra—including the home team.

Dr. Koussevitzky's "Coriolanus" was full-blooded and masterful. One heard the Roman warhorns.

The concluding Brahms was a musical experience of the first order. Dr. Koussevitzky's reading was not quite so romantic as the home-grown variety. But it was a masterpiece of deeply felt and beautifully modeled orchestral playing.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

MAR 16 1946

MUSIC

By Miles Kastendieck

Koussevitzky Promotes Contemporary Music in Concert at the Academy

Contemporary music carried the fourth concert of the Boston Symphony at the Academy of Music last night. Koussevitzky had programmed three representative symphonies written within the last quarter century. For the most part they were unfamiliar to the Brooklyn audience. But then even Bach's Fourth Brandenburg Concerto is relatively unfamiliar since the Third and Fifth are more frequently played.

The audience appeared to weather this venture into modern music surprisingly well. Each of the works made good listening and had its own individual attractiveness. There was at no time any prolonged stretch of dissonance to offend the ear, no extended waste of sheer intellectualism to rob the music of appeal. Individual tastes will undoubtedly differ regarding the relative merits of Hanson's Fourth Symphony, Sibelius' Sixth Symphony and Kabalevsky's Second Symphony, but all would agree that they deserved to be heard and presented an excellent picture of the contemporary musical scene in a single program.

Called an elegiac symphony, the Hanson gains meaning in the use of the ritual titles: Kyrie, Requiescat, Dies Irae and Lux Aeterna. Each of the four movements carries out their meaning in spirit through the purpose and the sincerity expressed in the music. Hanson has not held back; his expression of emotion is both true and deep. His handling of the orchestra is that of an expert craftsman who enjoys the richness of a full orchestra and appreciates the technique of a Sibelius.

Quite a different Sibelius emerges from his Sixth Symphony, one much more personal in its quest for beauty. This characteristic is at once noticeable in the first movement; otherwise the remainder of the work follows the general outline of his style. There is a rare quality of serenity so different from the heroic urge to be noted in most of his earlier works.

The Kabalevsky music is standard Russian fare, in all probability what the Soviet public thoroughly enjoys. This is facile, entertaining, popular music with no pretensions to more than surface meaning. Its tunes are catchy, its rhythms fascinating, and its style simple. Strategically placed at the end, it supplied just what was needed to balance the program.

While all of the performances of the evening were good, there was none that was outstanding. Koussevitzky was most in the vein in the Kabalevsky. The Bach was treated in a nice, refined way, enhanced by the skillful performances of Richard Burgin, violin, and Georges Laurant and James Pappoutsakis, flutists. Hanson himself conducts his Symphony more dramatically. On the other hand the performance of the Sibelius wanted more of inner meaning. Koussevitzky has been more inspiring on other occasions. The concert itself, however, was provocative from a program point of view.

Many Attend Concert Of Boston Orchestra

A capacity crowd of representative Brooklynites attended the concert by the Boston Symphony last night in the Opera House of the Academy of Music.

Seated in Box 1 were Mrs. Frank E. Simmons and Mrs. Maxwell Lester and their guests.

Mrs. Dean C. Osborne and her guests held Box 2, and Mrs. Benjamin Prince was hostess to her party in Box 3.

Members of the Brooklyn Woman's Club occupied Box 4: Mrs. Burgess Osterhout, president; Mrs. Thomas H. McClintock, Mrs. George Hills Iler, Mrs. Robert Franklin Ives, Mrs. Adolph L. Muller, Mrs. William [illegible] Howes, and Lois Pinney Clark.

Seated in Box 5 were Emma Jessie Ogg, Jessie Lockitt and her guests, Mr. and Mrs. William A. Macfarlane, and Mrs. William B. Parker and her guests, Mrs. Cornelius Hearn Jr., Joan Long, and Katherine F. Parker.

Tickets for Box 7 were distributed to enlisted and non-commissioned personnel of the navy. This box was donated by the Brooklyn Committee for the Boston Symphony Concerts, Mrs. Henry J. Davenport, chairman.

Tickets for Box 8 were donated by the institute to officers of the Brooklyn army base.

This Clipping From
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
BULLETIN

MAR 15 1946

Boston Orchestra is Heard Here in Prokofieff Symphony No. 5

By MAX de SCHAUENSEE

THE Boston Symphony and its great conductor, Serge Kousesevitsky, made its ~~annual~~ appearance at the Academy of Music last night under the auspices of the Philadelphia Forum. As usual, it had a complete success, judging from the applause of a sold-out house.

Feature of the program was the first Philadelphia performance of Serge Prokofieff's Symphony No. 5. Frankly we were disappointed in this gifted Russian's latest labor. The symphony is reactionary rather than radical, and while it has several striking and effective passages, as a whole it evinces little character or personality. The work belongs to the romantic school of symphonic music and can no more be called "modern" than the symphonies of Sibelius.

Prokofieff's Fifth seems to lack the sardonic individuality, the civilized and fine-grained fastidiousness which the composer made peculiarly his own in his earlier days. This music seems to stem from the epic and grandiose formulas of Gliere. The second movement, which is the most original of the four, is more than suggestive of Shostakovich. The endings of three of the movements are surprise-endings calculated to momentarily get the audience.

For one observer, this symphony, which is only 14 months old, seemed pleasantly superficial with an orchestration and structure which clearly outdistanced the melodic invention and the thematic material.

As may be guessed, Dr. Koussevitsky played the symphony for all it was worth, bringing all his resources of enthusiasm and vitality to its presentation. Furthermore he had at his disposal the brilliant and richly-sounding orchestra, which is always so welcome in this city. It is a matter of rather fascinating conjecture just how well Prokofieff's work would stand up with a lesser conductor and a lesser orchestra.

The balance of the program included Beethoven's "Coriolan" Overture and the Brahm's Symphony No. 4 in E Minor. Dr. Koussevitsky's tempi seem to grow faster as the years progress. His tremendous vitality is constantly and irresistibly asserting itself. Certainly his way of conducting Brahms finds a personal response in the writer of these lines, for Dr. Koussevitsky's style admits little of the mawkishness and sentimentality which can be so easily resorted to in an interpretation of Brahms' music.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

MAR 15 1946

Boston Symphony

Excerpts From 'Peter Grimes' in Carnegie Hall Concert

By Jerome D. Bohm

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, concert in Carnegie Hall Wednesday night. The program:

Symphony No. 1	Beethoven
Passacaglia and four Sea Interludes from "Peter Grimes"	Britten
Brandenburg Concerto No 5	Bach
Symphony No. 2	Kabalevsky

So much has been written by English music critics about the London presentations of Benjamin Britten's opera "Peter Grimes," commissioned by Serge Koussevitzky and to be given its first American performance at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood in August, that this writer's interest in Wednesday night's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall was focused on the instrumental excerpts from Mr. Britten's work which were performed for the first time in New York under Mr. Koussevitzky's direction.

Of these excerpts, the Passacaglia, based on a theme associated with the character of Peter Grimes, proved the most arresting and worthwhile. Contrary to traditional procedure, Mr. Britten's Passacaglia is in four-quarter instead of three-quarter time. The variations constructed on the brooding germinal matter first played by the solo viola are expressive of the juxtaposed natures of the dour Peter Grimes and of the maltreated fisherboy whose death in the opera leads to Grimes's forced suicide. The music is strong and highly concentrated, a telling climax being achieved. Ideationally and architectonically viewed, it reveals far more originality than the four Sea Interludes.

In these interludes, entitled Dawn, Sunday Morning, Moonlight and Storm, the objective has of course been to suggest the moods of the scenes which follow in the opera. Opinion on how well that purpose has been accomplished must be postponed until the opera is given in its entirety. However, although they are moderately effective atmospheric pieces when heard in the concert hall, one is constantly aware while listening to them of the influences of Moussorgsky and more especially of Sibelius, perhaps more in the instrumentation than in the actual musical material utitlized. More effective musical storms have been heard, although Mr. Britten must be credited with avoiding until the final measures the sweeping chromatic scales which are standard equipment in symphonic and operatic storms.

The concert began with a dull account of Beethoven's First Symphony, one wanting in spontaneity of utterance and rhythmic vitality, and in the rst movement not overly exact in ensemble and punctuated by two most peculiar, seemingly unmotivated retards.

Bach's Fifth Brandenburg Concerto was more felicitously traversedfi the important piano part being set forth with compelling elan and sensibility by Lukas Foss, who preserved a careful balance between his part and those of the solo violinist, Richard Burgin, and the solo flutist, Georges Laurent, but imparted due virtuosity to the closing pages of the first movement.

[100]

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

MAR 17 1946

BOSTONIANS OFFER 3 MODERN WORKS

Koussevitzky Leads Sibelius Sixth Symphony, Kabalevsky Second, Hanson Fourth

Contemporary music was stressed on the program presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. With the exception of the Brandenburg Concerto No. 4, of Bach, the list was given over to three symphonies of the present day—the Sixth of Sibelius, the Second of Kabalevsky and Howard Hanson's Fourth.

Although all these modern offerings had been heard here previously, they all belonged to the category of unfamiliar music, even the Sibelius work, which has had surprisingly few performances in this city.

The Sibelius Sixth has a niche all its own among the seven symphonies of its composer. Throughout its four movements it pursues a golden mean, not only in matters of orchestration, but in its dynamic frame and in the essential character of its content, which is prevailingly pastoral and largely free of emotional conflict. The instruments employed in the score are the same called for in the master's Fourth symphony, but with the addition of a bass clarinet and a harp, which help to give the music its distinctive color.

A Con Amore Reading

Another factor that sets the Sixth apart from Sibelius' other symphonies is the frequent recourse to a type of modal procedure that imparts a sense of vagueness to key relationships, something foreign to his other creations in the form.

Mr. Koussevitzky, to whom the local musical public primarily owes what familiarity it possesses with this symphony, read it con amore, filling its four movements with vitality and life, and yet keeping it all within the needed bounds of restraint.

The juxtaposition of this symphony and Mr. Hanson's Fourth only served to make the clearer the American composer's debt to Sibelius in his orchestration and other respects. That Mr. Hanson also makes free use of modes in his opus has no connection with Sibelius' employment of them in his Sixth. But his building up of his symphonic structure on definitely chosen germinal intervals and fragments of scales is closely related to Sibelius' own method of composition.

But whereas Sibelius found it possible to construct his entire symphony on two brief motifs stated in its opening measures and carefully hid his incessant development of them, Mr. Hanson needed a number of different devices of the kind in his score, and made his use of them all too obvious.

Mr. Hanson's latest symphonic creation is in four divisions, entitled respectively, "Kyrie," "Requiescat," "Dies Irae" and "Lux Eterna." Despite the religions connotations implied, the music possesses less devotional intensity than the composer's more important Third symphony, which is a more spontaneous and less artificially contrived creation.

Mr. Hanson makes his most telling impression in that part of the first movement concerned with the "Kyrie" theme in diminution with the scherzo-like measures that follow, and again when the "Kyrie" theme in its triplet form appears at the close of the finale, where the work reaches its climax of effectiveness and its most gripping mood.

The work is richly scored, and there could be no doubt as to its sincerity. But one could not help wondering why music that so nearly approached the nature of an Indian dance and was so happy in its atmosphere should receive the title "Dies Irae."

Mr. Koussevitzky and his forces had performed the Kabalevsky Second here earlier in the week. But the Bach Brandenburg suite, No. 4, replaced another of the set played at that time. Probably the spring weather made it difficult for the participants in this offering to get in the mood for it at the start of the afternoon. With Richard Burgin, violin, and Georges Laurent and James Pappoutsakis, flutes, as soloists, the work was in the best of hands. But, somehow, only the final fugue came fully to life.

N. S.

BOSTON POST 3/17

LEONARD BERNSTEIN

Composer, to Lead Boston Symphony, Will Present Controversial "Manfred"

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

WE ARE so used to thinking that the more advanced of our younger musicians are unalterably opposed to romanticism and all its works that it comes as a pleasant surprise to find that Leonard Bernstein, who conducts this week's symphony concerts, will devote the latter part of the program to the music of that arch-typical romanticist, Robert Schumann: the "Manfred" Overture and the Second Symphony. To choose this particular symphony is in itself a mark of courage and discernment. For while certain authorities, among them the composer's latest biographer, Robert Haven Schauffler, esteem it above the other three, it has long been the object of critical brickbats. Dr. Koussevitzky, incidentally has displayed little faith in it, and the only recent Symphony Hall performances have come from Messrs. Mitropoulos and Szell. The "Manfred" has not been heard here in a long time.

* * *

What, by the way, has become of the Schumann film that we were told was just around the corner? As was not the case with Chopin, there is no room here for either political intrigue or scandal. But in the courtship and married life of Robert and Clara, at least until the former's mind gave way, we have a film natural that needs no embroidering. And what a villain could be made of the interfering Papa Wieck. In this case it would be the lady that would do the piano playing, and there is much filmogenic material for her to perform. Liszt and Chopin could again fit into the picture, along with Richard Wagner, and Mendelssohn would be almost indispensable.

While eagerly awaiting further information on this matter, the music department has received from Universal Pictures a press release dealing with a forthcoming film based on the life of Rimsky-Korsakov, more specifically on a "week-long adventure." Except for his early years in the navy, which brought him to our shores and as far inland as Niagara Falls, Rimsky's life, crowded as it was with work, would not seem at a glance to be film material. As to that we must wait and see. He too had a musically accomplished wife, and a real helpmate who, working at the same table as her exceedingly productive husband, arranged for piano each page of an orchestral score as soon as it left the latter's hands. His son has further assured us that during every moment of the day his father's mind was occupied with some musical problem.

Anyway, the picture, which was to have borne the title 'Shahrazad" (sic) is to be called "Fandango," after the "Spanish Caprice." Jack Brooks, Universal lyricist, has supplied words for the "Fandango" and the "Gipsy Song," also from the "Capriccio," and they will be sung by Metropolitan tenor, Charles Kullman, along with the "Song of India," from "Sadko," and the "Hymn to the Sun," from "Coq d'Or." We can confidently expect a marked increase in the sale of Rimsky records and a new crop of simplified piano arrangements of these orchestral and operatic numbers. Rimsky did write some piano music but it is as good as unknown to the majority of concertgoers, and pianists no longer play his Concerto. We have practically got him down to "Scherherazade," the "Russian Easter" Overture, the song, "The Nightingale and the Rose" and the two airs aforesaid. "Le Coq d'Or" does enjoy a precarious existence on the Metropolitan stage, and "Sadko" is likewise on the list of operas for the radio audience to vote upon. You can be sure that it will not be chosen.

* * *

So much for Rimsky-Korsakov, who is now to be presented to a wider public than he has heretofore commanded. In this same press release we are reminded of one of the worst headaches in musical lore, the music of ancient Greece. It appears that Frank Skinner, Universal composer, will acquaint movie-goers with "the four-note Grecian scale" in the score he has prepared for "Night in Paradise." In the very earliest days Greek melodies did have this limited compass. Later on two of these tetrachords were combined and a full scale resulted. And there were not "at least eight groups of tetrachords," meaning presumably the so-called modes, but seven of them, which may be reproduced on the white keys of the piano. It used to be held that the Greeks had three of these tetrachords, each with the semitone in a different place. Modern research restricts them to one, e d c b. (The Greeks always thought of scales as going downhill.) And it further informs us that there was in reality but one paret-scale, corresponding to our natural minor. You could begin on any tone and go downward to its octave, but the "mese" or tonic was A in every case. This sets Greek musical thinking not only apart from our own but also from that of the medieval musicians who employed scales outwardly resembling the Greek variety and bearing similar names.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

MAR 18 1946

Boston Symphony

3 Living Composers' Works Are Featured

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, concert Saturday afternoon [illegible]negie Hall. The program:
Brandenburg Concerto No. 4, in G major..Bach
Violin solo, Richard Burgin; flute solos, Georges Laurent and James Pappoutsakis
Symphony No. 4, Op. 34..............Hanson
Symphony No. 6, Op. 104............Sibelius
Symphony No. 2, Op. 19..........Kabalevsky

Symphonies by three living composers of different nationalities, American, Finnish and Russian, were presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction Saturday afternoon at Carnegie Hall. All three had been heard here before, although Howard Hanson's Fourth Symphony had not previously figured in a New York subscription concert by a major orchestra. Placing the Hanson and Kabalevsky works in a program with a Sibelius symphony called attention to certain measures in each which suggest the influence of Sibelius. This is more prominent in the American work than in the Russian, which has more reminders of earlier Russian masters.

Dr. Hanson's Fourth Symphony was first played here by the N. B. C. Symphony in a broadcast in January, 1944, and had its local concert premiere in the Columbia University festival last spring. The Sibelian influence is prominent mainly in the first movement, lying partly in one of the principal thematic structural features of the work and partly in the treatment of the musical ideas and the scoring. Later, however, one was much more conscious of the composer's own musical individuality. The work as a whole gives a sense of expressive intimacy. The moods and emotions suggested by the titles of the movement are well realized in the first two movements. The third falls somewhat short of suggesting the "Dies Irae," while the fourth approaches, but does not quite reach the expressive implications of "Lux Aeterna." The scoring is well wrought.

The Bostonians had played Kabalevsky's Second Symphony in last Wednesday's program, but it came too late in the evening to give a chance for comment. It is an effective work of ready appeal, with plenty of tunes which are skillfully treated and presented in a colorful instrumental investiture. Whether the intrinsic musical distinction and durability of the composition match its immediate appeal is debatable; it is mainly extrovert music of a sometimes derivative character.

Of Sibelius's seven symphonies, the sixth is one of the least often played here; it has been regarded as somewhat austere as compared with most of the others. And yet yesterday's performance gave no impression of austerity, although the work does not abound in sonorcus perorations and closes quietly; it was communicative music, communicatively played.

The three symphonies were prefaced by a well routined performance of Bach's fourth Brandenburg Concerto, with the three soloists in praiseworthy instrumental form.

F. D. P.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
PM

MAR 18 1946

CRITICAL and AMUSEMENTS

PM's Nostradamus Continues His Analysis of Conductors

This is the ninth of a series of Monday morning appraisals of artists and activities in the world of music.

From the mail received following the article of a few weeks ago on conducting and conductors, it would seem in order to go further into that discussion. One facet of conducting which was not covered in the previous article, and one which, curiously enough, was not suggested in any of the letters, is the question of the opera conductor; and since many of the conductors of whom I shall speak today have worked in that field, it may be well to consider, for a moment, the special problems of that category of conducting.

The very good opera conductor is a very special kind of musician. Within his hands is the obligation of balancing theater and music without sacrificing either. Few of our present day conductors are capable of a first-class job in this respect, and we are constantly, of necessity, accepting conductors on the basis of their excellence either in theatricality or musicianship; hardly ever for both. It is a real problem: for just the music-making in opera calls for a delicate weighing of the singers-against-the-orchestra-against-the-chorus, and when one has finished attacking this problem in balance, there is but little time left for consideration of histrionics. I don't mean to hold conductors responsible for the preposterous acting that we see in the opera house, but surely a conductor cannot concern himself just with the musical aspects of an art which is as much visual as aural. Now, the conductor might say: "What can I do about it?" Well, first of all, he could refuse to be a party to an artistic outrage, or he could make music with a chief concern for its theatrical implications. That is the nature of opera; there are only a handful of operas which stand alone as music. It is the composer's intention, when he writes an opera, to have it presented in the theater with all that it implies; we pay the composer a dubious compliment by saying that we don't need singers, scenery, or footlights to enjoy the music. The conductors who concern themselves with the theatrical aspects of opera usually turn out to be the best opera conductors; such conductors, as for instance, Beecham and Reiner. I never saw him, but I am told that Mahler was an opera conductor who was at all times conscious of the scenic and the dramatic as well as the musical qualities of the productions in which he was involved. And certainly Wagner considered his operas ill-performed if only the musical side was given consideration. It would seem that the minute a conductor steps into an opera house, he must, for artistic integrity, concern himself with more than the mere directing of an orchestra. Perhaps the solution would be to have opera under the full artistic direction of a conductor who would understand the full measure of his responsibilities.

To continue with the analyses of conductors which was started in the first article:

Piere Monteux: A master of technique, a great orchestra-builder, and a wonderful program maker, Monteux is just now coming into his own with the American public. With our penchant for classifying, Monteux has been considered at his best in French impressionistic music, but there is no need to limit him to that; in fact, his Brahms is surprisingly good, and if anything, his true forte is with incisive, contemporary music.

Sir Thomas Beecham: Sir Thomas' place is difficult to define. I happen to think that he gets away with murder with his select, highly articulate, and somewhat precious followers, who applaud everything he does with fanatical enthusiasm. Musically, he is erratic, capricious, and undependable at times; I've seen him give performances which were chiefly distinguished for sloppiness. On the other hand, he can be brilliant and electrifying, particularly with theatrical and operatic music. I think his Mozart is over-rated and not half as good in live performances as on records, where, apparently, he has time to work them over a bit.

George Szell: Despite his very impressive success with audiences at Carnegie Hall and at the opera, I think Szell will have to stand the test of familiarity before these audience reactions can be said to count. He is undoubtedly a good musician, but I would like to see him take a warmer and less sadistic attitude towards music.

Erich Leinsdorf: Needs experience with the symphonie repertoire; enthusiasm is still not enough. His conducting of the German opera repertoire is good enough, but without excitement and authority.

Leonard Bernstein: Undoubtedly the most talented of young conductors in a long time, but one who is banking entirely on emotional drive combined with an over-intellectualization. He needs a heavy dose of a rare and elusive artistic vitamin, called Simplicity. Less Koussevitzky in his conducting would help; what's good for his elder colleague does not always sit well on Mr. Bernstein's somewhat slighter shoulders.

—NOSTRADAMUS.

SEMENTS

Continues
Conductors

orning appraisals of artists

rticle of a few weeks ago
em in order to go further
g which was not covered riously enough, was not estion of the opera con-

ut there is no need to limit hat; in fact, his Brahms is gly good, and if anything, forte is with incisive, con-
y music.

Thomas Beecham: Sir
place is difficult to define.
to think that he gets away rder with his select, highly
e, and somewhat precious
, who applaud everything
with fanatical enthusiasm.
y, he is erratic, capricious,
ependable at times; I've give performances which edly distinguished for slop-
On the other hand, he can ant and electrifying, par-
with theatrical and oper-
ic. I think his Mozart is
d and not half as good in formances as on records,
pparently, he has time to em over a bit.

Szell: Despite his very
e success with audiences
gie Hall and at the opera,
Szell will have to stand the miliarity before these audi-
ctions can be said to count.
doubtedly a good musician,
uld like to see him take a
and less sadistic attitude
music.

Leinsdorf: Needs experi-
th the symphonic reper-
thusiasm is still not enough.
ducting of the German
pertoire is good enough, hout excitement and au-

rd Bernstein: Undoubtedost talented of young con-
in a long time, but one banking entirely on emo-ive combined with an overualization. He needs a ose of a rare and elusive vitamin, called Simplicity.
~~ussevitzky~~ in his conducting elp; what's good for his league does not always sit
Mr. Bernstein's somewhat shoulders.

—Nostradamus.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
PM

MAR 1 8 1946

Hague

MUSICAL DIARY

Britten, Bizet, Bruckner & Bernstein

Wednesday, March 13 – New music of considerable originality, descriptive power and emotional impact was heard in Carnegie Hall when Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony presented the Passacaglia and Four Sea Interludes from Benjamin Britten's opera, Peter Grimes.

Commissioned by Dr. Koussevitzky in 1941, the opera has been given several performances in London where it was very well received at its premiere last June.

The Passacaglia, with its dark and somber orchestral coloring, its recurring tragic viola theme and general intensity of feeling, and the pungent and highly evocative sea-scapes–Dawn, Sunday Morning, Moonlight and Storm–set the mood and form a connective orchestral tissue between the scenes of the opera, which takes place in an early 19th century fishing village on the Suffolk coast, and derives its inspiration and principal characters from George Crabbe's poem, The Borough. If the body of the opera is as arresting as these between-scenes interludes, superbly performed on this occasion by the Bostonians, its full - length American premiere by the opera group of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in August is something to look forward to.

* * *

Later the same evening, hearing the third and fourth acts of Carmen, I caught up with the Met's recently acquired new Don Jose and Micaela–Ramon Vinay and Fiorenza Quartararo. The tall, robust and handsome Chilean tenor, who made a fine impression when he sang the role earlier in the season at the City Center, seemed even better in his new surroundings, and youthful Miss Quartararo, too, proved a welcome addition to the company. Though her singing, at this point in her development, is a bit lacking in color, expressiveness and style, she has a big, dramatic voice with sure top notes, and she did a very good job with Micaela's famous third-act aria.

And it was an uncommonly good performance of the Bizet masterpiece all around. Lily Djanel, a lively and experienced Carmen, was in good voice, Robert Merrill was a convincing Escamillo and Wilfred Pelletier, in the orchestra pit, kept things moving at a smart pace.

Thursday–Winding up his seasonal term as guest conductor of the Philharmonic-Symphony, Bruno Walter treated the Carnegie Hall audience to an expert and highly devotional performance of Anton Bruckner's Ninth Symphony. This is the symphony that the Austrian composer left unfinished–he died soon after completing the final measures of its third movement in 1896–and intended to dedicate to God. We are told that he prayed nightly for time to complete it, remarking, "If He refuses, then He must take the responsibility for its incompleteness."

Since Bruckner was never a man to do anything on a small scale, the three completed movements take nearly an hour to play. And the missing finale would have had to be divinely inspired indeed to make up for the accumulative boredom generated in this listener by the reiterated and unresolved musical ideas, the insistent brassy climaxes and generally disaffecting quality of the first three.

* * *

Saturday–The second annual George Gershwin Memorial Concert, sponsored by B'nai B'rith Victory Lodge, enlisted the services of the Rochester Philharmonic under the guest leadership of Leonard Bernstein at Carnegie Hall. An all-American program featured the initial performance of the first movement of Harold Shapero's Serenade in D, recipient of the Lodge's $1000 award, and the 25-year-old composer was present to accept the prize from the hands of Mrs. Rose Gershwin.

The Serenade, as played by the Rochester strings, turned out to be a pleasant and skillfully written piece of a notably lyrical quality, and marks young Mr. Shapero as a gifted composer worth watching. The rest of the evening was given over to music by Gilbert, Copland (including a particularly clean and vital performance by the orchestra of his new and engaging Danzon Cubano), Bernstein (the dance episodes from On the Town) and Gershwin, whose Rhapsody in Blue received a rousing, if somewhat slap-dash, presentation by pianist Eugene List and the visiting Rochesterites under Mr. Bernstein's energetic direction.

—Robert A. Hague

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

MAR 20 1946

Boston Symphony Orchestra In Fine Performance Here

By JOHN F. KYES

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Leonard Bernstein conducting, with Richard Burgin, concert master, upheld its fine traditions before a capacity Civic Music Association audience in the Auditorium last night. This program was offered:

Tchaikovsky
"Romeo and Juliet," Overture-Fantasia
Copland
"Quiet City," for Trumpet, English Horn and Strings
Trumpet: Roger Voisin
English Horn: Louis Speyer
Copland Danzon Cubano
Schumann
Sympony No. 2 in C major, Op. 61
I. Sostenuto assai; allegro ma non troppo
II. Scherzo: Allegro vivace; Trio (I); Trio (II)
III. Adagio espressivo
IV. Allegro molto vivace

Disappointment over the non-appearance of Serge Koussevitzky was keen, but the decision at Boston undoubtedly was governed by the limitations of the famous conductor's strength.

Leonard Bernstein proved to be an artist in his own right. At 27, this handsome product of Massachusetts, who trained at the Berkshire Music Center under Koussevitzky, is well-known as a composer, pianist and conductor. He was received warmly by last night's audience.

The Bernstein method of conducting is reasonably direct and concise, yet with a good deal of poetry in arms and hands. One might have expected the Boston ensemble to sound indifferently under so young a conductor, but instead there were many moments of gorgeous accomplishment.

High Standard Maintained

Between rousing climaxes and sensitively handled pianissimos, one noted occasional phrases of half-voice, plateaus of quiet mood, where the demand for singing tone was not met as well. To this extent, it seemed, control of the wind choirs was not as intimate or meaningful as that of the strings.

Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" is heard often, requires no review, though given an able exposition. Copland's "Quiet City" was played here by the Cleveland Orchestra last year. Its modern qualities lean pleasantly to the right. The passage for trumpet and English horn were intoned by Roger Voisin and Louis Speyer with great skill and expressiveness.

Its intricate rythms accented by a variety of percussion devices, Copland's "Cuban Dance" gave orchestra and conductor the opportunity to display their complete virtuosity.

Second Symphony Well Handled

Schumann's Second Symphony has had few hearings in Worcester during recent years. It is less popular than the First ("Spring") performed here this season, or the Third (Rhenish") given by the Philharmonic under Albert Wassell a few years ago. The score is a bit uneven. In the hands of a less capable conductor and ensemble, the many moments of pure and heartfelt music could be obscured by clumsy handling of several naive or stilted passages.

This symphony marked a temporary lull in the misfortunes of Schumann's life. The music progresses from a mood of obstinate energy to one of resolute gaiety; and having found mastery, then dares reveal in the "Adagio espressivo" as tender, passionate and meaningful a bit as you will find anywhere. Conducting without score, Bernstein painted these contrasting colors with deep conviction, and brought the evening to a real climax. Though the individual melodies of this symphony are often complex, the structure of the score as a whole tends to be simple. Mr. Bernstein utilized this quality of the music as an asset, and maintained a breadth of treatment which called upon the full resources of the admirable Boston players.

TELLS ABOUT POPS CONCERT

Conductor Fiedler Says They Began in 1885

Arthur Fiedler, conductor of Boston Pops Orchestra, reveals in the April issue of Holiday that when he took over Pops as conductor in 1930 he was known to men of the orchestra as "the Floating Kidney" because no one could determine whether his forte was playing viola, violin, celesta, piano or organ, all of which he had played as a member of Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The chatty and informative article on Pops tells how the name originated, not from the sound of corks from wine and champagne bottles being opened, but from popular concerts. The Pops program, he recounts in the article, started July 11, 1885, in the old Boston Music Hall when Adolf Neuendorf conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra, then four years old, in a series of Promenade Concerts which followed the pattern of similar concerts in London.

Actually, he explains, the Pops concerts are played by the full symphony orchestra which plays during the winter season, but the music is less serious, and the rehearsals are much less formal. He also disclosed the secret of how he and Serge Koussevitzky managed to keep cool despite the exertions of conducting. There is an electric fan concealed in the bottom of the podium, and a touch of a foot to a button on the floor sets the fan whirling and blows breezes up the coat-tails of the perspiring conductors.

Boston Post 3/20

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

MAR 20 1946

Near-Capacity Audience Hears Boston Symphony

By RAYMOND MORIN

A near-capacity Civic Music audience gave the Boston Symphony and its guest conductor, Leonard Bernstein, a rousing welcome last night at the Auditorium. This was the sixth and not the final concert of the series, for Joel Berglund's concert has been postponed to April 11.

Worcester audiences have had the good fortune during the past season to hear four of the country's leading symphony orchestras—namely, the Philadelphia, Cleveland, Boston and Indianapolis. All four have individual assets. The Boston Symphony through the years has achieved a unity of purpose and a flexibility that is unrivaled. Also, it has a string section to which no other can compare.

Bravo for Bernstein

The orchestra's gift for adaptability was in full use last night. Bernstein, at the age of 28, has not reached his full stature as a conductor, but the irrefutable fact remains that he did superlatively well at keeping in tow the vast resources of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This personable young conductor knows just what he wants from his orchestra and he generally gets it. He is lucidly clear in his demands—sometimes unnecessarily so; that is, he is sometimes too preoccupied with "effect." Yet, he has a calm, even gentle method of obtaining a cantabile, and at times he attains his effects with dramatic determination.

Sincerity and deep feeling, with which Bernstein is abundantly endowed, are gifts, not acquirements. I believe him to be the leader of a new crop of conductors who can imbue the most moth-eaten score with effectiveness. Many of his gestures might well have originated in the school for showmen, but you can scarcely name one conductor of whom this isn't true.

Copland's 'Quiet City'

Roger Voisin, trumpeter, and Louis Speyer, English horn, gave superb readings of the solo scores in Aaron Copland's "Quiet City." I once referred to this work (Cleveland Orchestra concert) as "pointless wanderings via polytonalities." In all honesty, I want to temper this opinion after a second hearing. It does create an atmosphere of weirdness, desolation, and even of foreboding, but it should be listened to for its symbolism alone The instrumentation is cleverly managed and the feeling of rhythmic vagueness consistently maintained, but it relies on the solo instruments for its eventual effectiveness, which was fortunately so last night.

"Romeo and Juliet"

The emotional high pitch was reached in Tschaikowsky's overture-fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet." It being Tschaikowsky, the Boston Symphony played it superbly; Dr. Koussevitzky has thoroughly schooled the orchestra in unaffected interpretation.

The program's main course was Schumann's "Symphony No. 2 in C major, Opus 61." This work hasn't the good nature of Schumann's "Spring Symphony" which was played here in February by the Cleveland Orchestra. For the most part, the bucolic light-heartedness of the first symphony is supplanted by a more emotional text which almost approaches melancholia in the prelude to the first movement.

The following artists have been engaged for next season's Civic Music Course — Arthur Dann, pianist, (son of Civic Music's president, Arthur J. Dann), in joint concert with Robert Hall Collins, baritone; Blanche Thebom, mezzo-soprano; Jan Peerce, tenor; Icelandic Male Chorus; San Francisco Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Pierre Monteux; Baltimore Symphony, conducted by Reginald Stewart; New York Philharmonic, conducted by Artur Rodzinsky.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

MAR 18 1946

Koussevitzky Leads Three Symphonies

The Boston Symphony, in the second of its Carnegie Hall pair of concerts last week, gave a program Saturday afternoon that consisted of three symphonies by living composers who all content themselves with an idiom essentially of the late nineteenth century. These were the Fourth of Howard Hanson, the Sixth of Sibelius and the Second of Kabalevsky. On one program [illegible] adventurousness and [illegible] formulas became [illegible] but this is the kind of [illegible] in which Serge [illegible] very much at [illegible] provides many occasions [illegible] soaring quality of the superb orchestra's playing to deploy itself.

One of the results of the juxtaposition of the three works was a [illegible] appreciation of the [illegible] of Sibelius. To open the program the Fourth "Brandenburg" Concerto of Bach was presented.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

MAR 21 1946

Bernstein to Conduct in London

Leonard Bernstein, music director of the New York City Symphony, has been invited to conduct six concerts with the London Philharmonic Orchestra during the last three weeks of June. He will present four programs in London, each including a contemporary American or British work. The young American conductor, who will conduct two concerts with the Prague Philharmonic on May 15 and 16, will then return to New York to conduct the N. B. C. Symphony on May 26 and June 2. He will leave for London from La Guardia Field on June 4 and will be back by July 1 to be Serge Koussevitzky's assistant at the Berkshire Music Center, Lenox, Mass. He may conduct one concert in Paris in June, if time permits.

[illegible], N.Y
HERALD
3/[illegible]

Among American works soon to be given a first performance is Samuel Barber's Concerto for Violincello and Orchestra, Op. 22. It will be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky on April 5, with Raya Garbousova as soloist.

The concerto, which is expected to prove a welcome addition to the literature for 'cello, was completed last Nov. 27 at Mt. Kisco, N. Y. It is described by G. Schirmer, the publishers, as extremely melodious and remarkable for its clarity of conception as well as its economy of orchestration.

This Clipping From
WINONA, MINN.
REPUBLICAN HERALD

MAR 23 1946

Bernstein to Guest Conduct Boston Symphony

Leonard Bernstein joins the list of the current season's Boston Symphony orchestra guest conductors this evening when he presides over the ensemble's ABC broadcast at 8:30 o'clock over Radio Station KWNO. The broadcast will originate from Symphony hall in Boston.

Bernstein, who is fulfilling guest appearances this year, is conductor of the New York City Symphony orchestra. He has selected an all-Schuman program, opening with the overture to Byron's "Manfred." This work will be followed by the "Symphony No. 2."

The broadcast will be the 25th of the current season.

SEMENTS

Continues
Conductors

orning appraisals of artists

rticle of a few weeks ago
em in order to go further
g which was not covered riously enough, was not
estion of the opera con-

ut there is no need to limit
hat; in fact, his Brahms is gly good, and if anything,
forte is with incisive, con-
y music.

Thomas Beecham: Sir
place is difficult to define.
to think that he gets away
rder with his select, highly
e, and somewhat precious
, who applaud everything
with fanatical enthusiasm
, he is erratic, capricious,
ependable at times; I've give performances which
edly distinguished for slop-
On the other hand, he can ant and electrifying, par-
with theatrical and oper-
ic. I think his Mozart is
d and not half as good in
formances as on records,
pparently, he has time to m over a bit.

e Szell: Despite his very
e success with audiences
gie Hall and at the opera, zell will have to stand the miliarity before these audi-
ctions can be said to count.
doubtedly a good musician,
uld like to see him take a
and less sadistic attitude
music.

Leinsdorf: Needs experi-
th the symphonic reper-
thusiasm is still not enough.
ducting of the German
epertoire is good enough, hout excitement and au-

rd Bernstein: Undoubted-
ost talented of young con-
in a long time, but one banking entirely on emo-
ive combined with an over-alization. He needs a se of a rare and elusive itamin, called Simplicity.
his conducting lp; what's good for his eague does not always sit
Mr. Bernstein's somewhat shoulders.

—NOSTRADAMUS.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
PM

MAR 18 1946

—Hague

MUSICAL DIARY

Britten, Bizet, Bruckner & Bernstein

Wednesday, March 13 – New music of considerable originality, descriptive power and emotional impact was heard in Carnegie Hall, when Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony presented the Passacaglia and Four Sea Interludes from Benjamin Britten's opera, Peter Grimes.

Commissioned by Dr. Koussevitzky in 1941, the opera has been given several performances in London where it was very well received at its premiere last June.

The Passacaglia, with its dark and somber orchestral coloring, its recurring tragic viola theme and general intensity of feeling, and the pungent and highly evocative sea-scapes–Dawn, Sunday Morning, Moonlight and Storm–set the mood and form a connective orchestral tissue between the scenes of the opera, which takes place in an early 19th century fishing village on the Suffolk coast, and derives its inspiration and principal characters from George Crabbe's poem, The Borough. If the body of the opera is as arresting as these between-scenes interludes, superbly performed on this occasion by the Bostonians, its full - length American premiere by the opera group of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in August is something to look forward to.

* * *

Later the same evening, hearing the third and fourth acts of Carmen, I caught up with the Met's recently acquired new Don Jose and Micaela–Ramon Vinay and Fiorenza Quartararo. The tall, robust and handsome Chilean tenor, who made a fine impression when he sang the role earlier in the season at the City Center, seemed even better in his new surroundings, and youthful Miss Quartararo, too, proved a welcome addition to the company. Though her singing, at this point in her development, is a bit lacking in color, expressiveness and style, she has a big, dramatic voice with sure top notes, and she did a very good job with Micaela's famous third-act aria.

And it was an uncommonly good performance of the Bizet masterpiece all around. Lily Djanel, a lively and experienced Carmen, was in good voice, Robert Merrill was a convincing Escamillo and Wilfred Pelletier, in the orchestra pit, kept things moving at a smart pace.

Thursday–Winding up his seasonal term as guest conductor of the Philharmonic-Symphony, Bruno Walter treated the Carnegie Hall audience to an expert and highly devotional performance of Anton Bruckner's Ninth Symphony. This is the symphony that the Austrian composer left unfinished–he died soon after completing the final measures of its third movement in 1896–and intended to dedicate to God. We are told that he prayed nightly for time to complete it, remarking, "If He refuses, then He must take the responsibility for its incompleteness."

Since Bruckner was never a man to do anything on a small scale, the three completed movements take nearly an hour to play. And the missing finale would have had to be divinely inspired indeed to make up for the accumulative boredom generated in this listener by the reiterated and unresolved musical ideas, the insistent brassy climaxes and generally disaffecting quality of the first three.

* * *

Saturday–The second annual George Gershwin Memorial Concert, sponsored by B'nai B'rith Victory Lodge, enlisted the services of the Rochester Philharmonic under the guest leadership of Leonard Bernstein at Carnegie Hall. An all-American program featured the initial performance of the first movement of Harold Shapero's Serenade in D, recipient of the Lodge's $1000 award, and the 25-year-old composer was present to accept the prize from the hands of Mrs. Rose Gershwin.

The Serenade, as played by the Rochester strings, turned out to be a pleasant and skillfully written piece of a notably lyrical quality, and marks young Mr. Shapero as a gifted composer worth watching. The rest of the evening was given over to music by Gilbert, Copland (including a particularly clean and vital performance by the orchestra of his new and engaging Danzon Cubano), Bernstein (the dance episodes from On the Town) and Gershwin, whose Rhapsody in Blue received a rousing, if somewhat slap-dash, presentation by pianist Eugene List and the visiting Rochesterites under Mr. Bernstein's energetic direction.

—ROBERT A. HAGUE

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

MAR 18 1946

Koussevitzky Leads Three Symphonies

The Boston Symphony, in the second of its Carnegie Hall pair of concerts last week, gave a program Saturday afternoon that consisted of three symphonies by living composers who all content themselves with an idiom essentially of the late nineteenth century. These were the Fourth of Howard Hanson, the Sixth of Sibelius and the Second of Kabalevsky. On one program their unadventurousness and post-Romantic formulae became rather tiresome, but this is the kind of music in which Serge Koussevitzky is very much at home and it provides many occasions for the soaring quality of the superb orchestra's playing to deploy itself.

One of the results of the juxtaposition of the three works was a better appreciation of the musicianship of Sibelius. To open the program the Fourth "Brandenburg" Concerto of Bach was presented.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

MAR 21 1946

Bernstein to Conduct in London

Leonard Bernstein, music director of the New York City Symphony, has been invited to conduct six concerts with the London Philharmonic Orchestra during the last three weeks of June. He will present four programs in London, each including a contemporary American or British work. The young American conductor, who will conduct two concerts with the Prague Philharmonic on May 15 and 16, will then return to New York to conduct the N. B. C. Symphony on May 26 and June 2. He will leave for London from La Guardia Field on June 4 and will be back by July 1 to be Serge Koussevitzky's assistant at the Berkshire Music Center, Lenox, Mass. He may conduct one concert in Paris in June, if time permits.

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y
HERALD
3/22/46

Among American works soon to be given a first performance is Samuel Barber's Concerto for Violincello and Orchestra, Op. 22. It will be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky on April 5, with Raya Garbousova as soloist.

The concerto, which is expected to prove a welcome addition to the literature for 'cello, was completed last Nov. 27 at Mt. Kisco, N. Y. It is described by G. Schirmer, the publishers, as extremely melodious and remarkable for its clarity of conception as well as its economy of orchestration.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

MAR 20 1946

Boston Symphony Orchestra In Fine Performance Here

By JOHN F. KYES

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Leonard Bernstein conducting, with Richard Burgin, concert master, upheld its fine traditions before a capacity Civic Music Association audience in the Auditorium last night. This program was offered:

Tchaikovsky
"Romeo and Juliet," Overture-Fantasia
Copland
"Quiet City," for Trumpet, English Horn and Strings
Trumpet: Roger Voisin
English Horn: Louis Speyer
Copland — Danzon Cubano
Schumann
Symphony No. 2 in C major, Op. 61
I. Sostenuto assai; allegro ma non troppo
II. Scherzo: Allegro vivace; Trio (I); Trio (II)
III. Adagio espressivo
IV. Allegro molto vivace

Disappointment over the non-appearance of Serge Koussevitzky was keen, but the decision at Boston undoubtedly was governed by the limitations of the famous conductor's strength.

Leonard Bernstein proved to be an artist in his own right. At 27, this handsome product of Massachusetts, who trained at the Berkshire Music Center under Koussevitzky, is well-known as a composer, pianist and conductor. He was received warmly by last night's audience.

The Bernstein method of conducting is reasonably direct and concise, yet with a good deal of poetry in arms and hands. One might have expected the Boston ensemble to sound indifferently under so young a conductor, but instead there were many moments of gorgeous accomplishment.

High Standard Maintained

Between rousing climaxes and sensitively handled pianissimos, one noted occasional phrases of half-voice, plateaus of quiet mood, where the demand for singing tone was not met as well. To this extent, it seemed, control of the wind choirs was not as intimate or meaningful as that of the strings.

Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" is heard often, requires no review, though given an able exposition. Copland's "Quiet City" was played here by the Cleveland Orchestra last year. Its modern qualities lean pleasantly to the right. The passage for trumpet and English horn were intoned by Roger Voisin and Louis Speyer with great skill and expressiveness.

Its intricate rythms accented by a variety of percussion devices, Copland's "Cuban Dance" gave orchestra and conductor the opportunity to display their complete virtuosity.

Second Symphony Well Handled

Schumann's Second Symphony has had few hearings in Worcester during recent years. It is less popular than the First ("Spring") performed here this season, or the Third (Rhenish") given by the Philharmonic under Albert Wassell a few years ago. The score is a bit uneven. In the hands of a less capable conductor and ensemble, the many moments of pure and heartfelt music could be obscured by clumsy handling of several naive or stilted passages.

This symphony marked a temporary lull in the misfortunes of Schumann's life. The music progresses from a mood of obstinate energy to one of resolute gaiety; and having found mastery, then dares reveal in the "Adagio espressivo" as tender, passionate and meaningful a bit as you will find anywhere. Conducting without score, Bernstein painted these contrasting colors with deep conviction, and brought the evening to a real climax. Though the individual melodies of this symphony are often complex, the structure of the score as a whole tends to be simple. Mr. Bernstein utilized this quality of the music as an asset, and maintained a breadth of treatment which called upon the full resources of the admirable Boston players.

This Clipping From
WINONA, MINN.
REPUBLICAN HERALD
MAR 23 1946

Bernstein to Guest Conduct Boston Symphony

Leonard Bernstein joins the list of the current season's Boston Symphony orchestra guest conductors this evening when he presides over the ensemble's ABC broadcast at 8:30 o'clock over Radio Station KWNO. The broadcast will originate from Symphony hall in Boston.

Bernstein, who is fulfilling guest appearances this year, is conductor of the New York City Symphony orchestra. He has selected an all-Schuman program, opening with the overture to Byron's "Manfred." This work will be followed by the "Symphony No. 2."

The broadcast will be the 25th of the current season.

TELLS ABOUT POPS CONCERT

Conductor Fiedler Says They Began in 1885

Arthur Fiedler, conductor of Boston Pops Orchestra, reveals in the April issue of Holiday that when he took over Pops as conductor in 1930 he was known to men of the orchestra as "the Floating Kidney" because no one could determine whether his forte was playing viola, violin, celesta, piano or organ, all of which he had played as a member of Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The chatty and informative article on Pops tells how the name originated, not from the sound of corks from wine and champagne bottles being opened, but from popular concerts. The Pops program, he recounts in the article, started July 11, 1885, in the old Boston Music Hall when Adolf Neuendorf conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra, then four years old, in a series of Promenade Concerts which followed the pattern of similar concerts in London.

Actually, he explains, the Pops concerts are played by the full symphony orchestra which plays during the winter season, but the music is less serious, and the rehearsals are much less formal. He also disclosed the secret of how he and Serge Koussevitzky managed to keep cool despite the exertions of conducting. There is an electric fan concealed in the bottom of the podium, and a touch of a foot to a button on the floor sets the fan whirling and blows breezes up the coat-tails of the perspiring conductors.

BOSTON POST 3/20

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

MAR 20 1946

Near-Capacity Audience Hears Boston Symphony

By RAYMOND MORIN

A near-capacity Civic Music audience gave the Boston Symphony and its guest conductor, Leonard Bernstein, a rousing welcome last night at the Auditorium. This was the sixth and not the final concert of the series, for Joel Berglund's concert has been postponed to April 11.

Worcester audiences have had the good fortune during the past season to hear four of the country's leading symphony orchestras—namely, the Philadelphia, Cleveland, Boston and Indianapolis. All four have individual assets. The Boston Symphony through the years has achieved a unity of purpose and a flexibility that is unrivaled. Also, it has a string section to which no other can compare.

Bravo for Bernstein

The orchestra's gift for adaptability was in full use last night. Bernstein, at the age of 28, has not reached his full stature as a conductor, but the irrefutable fact remains that he did superlatively well at keeping in tow the vast resources of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This personable young conductor knows just what he wants from his orchestra and he generally gets it. He is lucidly clear in his demands—sometimes unnecessarily so; that is, he is sometimes too preoccupied with "effect." Yet, he has a calm, even gentle method of obtaining a cantabile, and at times he attains his effects with dramatic determination.

Sincerity and deep feeling, with which Bernstein is abundantly endowed, are gifts, not acquirements. I believe him to be the leader of a new crop of conductors who can imbue the most moth-eaten score with effectiveness. Many of his gestures might well have originated in the school for showmen, but you can scarcely name one conductor of whom this isn't true.

Copland's 'Quiet City'

Roger Voisin, trumpeter, and Louis Speyer, English horn, gave superb readings of the solo scores in Aaron Copland's "Quiet City." I once referred to this work (Cleveland Orchestra concert) as "pointless wanderings via polytonalities." In all honesty, I want to temper this opinion after a second hearing. It does create an atmosphere of weirdness, desolation, and even of foreboding, but it should be listened to for its symbolism alone The instrumentation is cleverly managed and the feeling of rhythmic vagueness consistently maintained, but it relies on the solo instruments for its eventual effectiveness, which was fortunately so last night.

"Romeo and Juliet"

The emotional high pitch was reached in Tschaikowsky's overture-fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet." It being Tschaikowsky, the Boston Symphony played it superbly; Dr. Koussevitzky has thoroughly schooled the orchestra in unaffected interpretation.

The program's main course was Schumann's "Symphony No. 2 in C major, Opus 61." This work hasn't the good nature of Schumann's "Spring Symphony" which was played here in February by the Cleveland Orchestra. For the most part, the bucolic light-heartedness of the first symphony is supplanted by a more emotional text which almost approaches melancholia in the prelude to the first movement.

The following artists have been engaged for next season's Civic Music Course — Arthur Dann, pianist, (son of Civic Music's president, Arthur J. Dann), in joint concert with Robert Hall Collins, baritone; Blanche Thebom, mezzo-soprano; Jan Peerce, tenor; Icelandic Male Chorus; San Francisco Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Pierre Monteux; Baltimore Symphony, conducted by Reginald Stewart; New York Philharmonic, conducted by Artur Rodzinsky.

[102].

MUSIC

HERALD.. MARCH 23

Symphony Concert

The 20th regular concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Leonard Bernstein conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows:

Konzertmusik for string and brass instruments, Op. 50......Hindemith
"Quiet City" for trumpet, English horn and strings..........Copland
"Danzon Cubano" .... Copland
Symphony No. 2 in C major, Op. 61 .... Schumann

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

Yesterday's was one of the best concerts that I, at least, have heard. The program was well chosen and the interpretations were alive and invigorating. This is the first time that I have seen Mr. Bernstein conduct and I am glad to add my bit to the weight of evidence which finds him a stimulating leader. There may be some who would quarrel with his tempi in the Schumann, but at least he brought that unequal score very much to life.

Hindemith's Konzertmusik has become reasonably well known at Boston Symphony concerts. It is a work fully deserving of many revivals, for it is gloriously robust music. It is necessary to get to know Hindemith's particular idiom, from which point on there is no difficulty whatever in enjoying the vigorous counterpoint of most of his music. The Konzertmusik is a typical example of his style and is probably one of his most successful works. The performance yesterday was fine, with the exception of a wrong entry by some of the violins in the fugue. (I would not mention this if it were not such fun for once in a way to catch the Boston Symphony tripping.)

I looked up with some curiosity to see what I had said of Copland's "Quiet City" in past performances and was dismayed to note that I had not liked it and had called it "amorphous." Like Disko Troop, I have been "mistook in my jedgements" and must hasten to make amends to Mr. Copland. Yesterday "Quiet City" seemed to me an effective tone poem of considerable dignity and beauty. The strange combination of trumpet (Roger Voisin), English horn (Louis Speyer) and strings is handled very ably by the composer to further his artistic aims.

Next on the list was another work by Mr. Copland of a very different character. "Danzon Cubano" is a brilliant, engaging and rhythmically vital work. Its orchestration is one of the most interesting things about it, for Mr. Copland has employed a wide variety of instruments to great effect. The piece is, in short, great fun and should be immediately popular. It requires a precise performance, so that the sudden fortissimo attacks will have bite, and it must also have the dance rhythm clearly suggested. Mr. Bernstein got, it appeared, just what he wanted from the orchestra. Mr. Copland was in the audience and modestly acknowledged the applause from the floor.

As I have indicated, the Schumann Symphony had a dynamic interpretation, if not always one that purists might agree to. Nevertheless the whole work was alive and not, as so often, just the two middle movements. I wish we could have had the "Manfred" Overture as well, for the concert was not long and it had been originally scheduled. The explanation is that the President's speech tomorrow night makes it impractical to keep the Overture on the program, so poor "Manfred" is hustled away to the shelf. This radio business, as a matter of fact, has played hob with the programs too often. I, for one, resent having my musical feast cut short because it doesn't suit the radio.

The program will be repeated tonight. Next week Mr. Koussevitzky will lead Cowel's Hymn and Fuguing Tune, Berezowsky's Symphony No. 3, Gretchaninoff's Elegy and Brahms' Violin Concerto (Zimbalist, soloist).

SYMPHONY CONCERT

BOSTON POST 3/23

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

A young conductor, Leonard Bernstein, and a century-old symphony, the Second of Robert Schumann, shared chief honors at yesterday afternoon's Symphony Concert. We have heard Mr. Bernstein before in his own music, in that of Tchaikovsky, Aaron Copland, Brahms and Shostakovitch—there were two Copland pieces yesterday, "Quiet City" and the new "Danzon Cubano." But in Schumann he met a real test and passed it triumphantly. There was applause after the first and second movements, a deeply appreciative hush after the beautiful adagio, and cheers, stamping and three recalls at the end.

This Second Symphony is far and away Schumann's greatest, though you may read in more than one place that it is the least of the four. But it is not a piece that plays itself. Schumann was a much abler orchestrator than he is generally given credit for. But his scores need discernment, sympathy and communicative ardor on the part of the conductor, and Mr. Bernstein, modernist though he is, brought these things to the masterpiece of the great romanticist, and brought them in such measure that the audience's reaction, already chronicled, was forthcoming. Thus Schumann, rather than Copland, who was present, or Hindemith, whose "Konzertmusik" for string and brass made the beginning, emerged the composer of the afternoon.

The "Konzertmusik" of Hindemith was written for the Symphony Orchestra's 50th anniversary, and at the time it seemed one of the very best of the pieces so commissioned from the leading composers of the day. Only very rarely does a work of Hindemith escape its measures of dryness, of mere cerebration, of musical mechanics, and this "Konzertmusik" is not one of the happy exceptions. For the most part, though, it is good to hear. The combination of strings and brass produces some striking sonorities. Nor is the music notable only for its vigor and energy. Hindemith has not altogether disdained his Teutonic heritage of songful beauty.

We have now heard "Quiet City" four times and it is beginning to wear thin. There is not much here but mood and a pleasant texture. The parts for solo trumpet and English horn were ably played by Roger Voisin and Louis Spreyer. The new "Danzon Cubano" is mostly nervous and convulsive rhythms, with little of the intoxication and allure that we associate with Latin-American music. If you can subsist on rhythm alone the piece is your dish.

GLOBE MAR. 23

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

By CYRUS DURGIN

Leonard Bernstein again is guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall this week. His program brings the Konzertmusik for strings and brass, by Hindemith; two pieces by Aaron Copland—"Quiet City" and "Danzon Cubano," the latter new to Boston, and the Second Symphony of Robert Schumann.

Since we last had the pleasure of hearing him, dark and slim young Mr. Bernstein has matured greatly, both as orchestral technician and interpreter. His performances yesterday would have done credit to one older and more experienced.

That is no matter of faint praise, either. On the contrary, it is the simplest way of saying that, at 27, Mr. Bernstein is a formidable conductor whose innate talent has considerably ripened.

He still prefers to use his hands rather than a baton. But his gestures have lost most of the feverish motion that, a couple of years ago, seemed occasionally to verge on confusion. His conducting is sharper, simpler, more exact. Although he still has dynamism to spare, his reading now has a better sense of proportion, the orchestral textures are clearer and better balanced.

His readings have gained individuality, as well. Take the Schumann Symphony, for example, a tricky if lovely work. Mr. Bernstein performed it beautifully, with good broad style, a well-calculated range of dynamics that put everything in the right light, without either understatement or exaggeration. Once or twice the fast tempi did seem to get a bit out of hand, but only momentarily. The slow movement had a well-sustained line; it "sang" and was deeply moving, but there was no overstress of sentiment. The finale purled and bubbled, and the brass were strong but not overdriven.

Hindemith's Konzertmusik, composed for the 50th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is music of durable materials. It is just as vital today as in 1930-31. The idiom remains contemporary, hence the work has not "dated." It was good to hear again Hindemith's purposefully rough and vigorous counterpoint, the succinct statement of ideas, the masterly contrast between wind and string sonorities. The Konzertmusik, I am convinced, is going to remain with us quite a while. It still looks like a masterpiece.

Of Mr. Copland's, "Danzon Cubano," described as "only an American tourist's impression" of a Latin American dance form, one can say that it is forceful, occasionally bouncy. Somehow it does not seem to have either the high spirits or the abundance of tunes possessed by that similar work of Copland, "El Salon Mexico."

"Quiet City," the demanding trumpet part admirably played by Roger Voisin, and the effective English horn solo superbly taken by Louis Speyer, once again impressed as mood music of high skill and exceptional persuasion. Through the afternoon the audience seemed to enjoy both program and performance. Mr. Bernstein clearly was given a very big hand.

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND
STAR
MAR 24 1946

Barber's Concerto Will Be Presented By Koussevitzky

New York, March 23 (UP)—Among American works soon to be given a first performance is Samuel Barber's Concerto for Violincello and Orchestra, Op. 22. It will be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. ~~Serge Koussevitzky~~ April 5, with Raya Garbousova as soloist.

The concerto, which is expected to prove a welcome addition to the literature for 'cello, was completed last Nov. 27 at Mt. Kisco, N.Y. It is described by G. Schirmer, the publishers, as extremely melodious and remarkable for its clarity of conception as well as its economy of orchestration.

The famous Jooss Ballet is returning to this country in the autumn for a nation-wide tour, beginning in Montreal in October. The company has been booked so far for 26 weeks, covering all the larger cities and college communities except the Northwest. A season of three weeks will be given at the City Center in New York during December.

The company, now appearing in Paris, is the first important ballet to make an extensive tour of Europe since the war, covering Switzerland, Belgium, Holland and Scandinavia.

Its familiar repertoire of such works as "Big City," "Green Table," "Prodigal Son," etc., will be supplemented by several new productions.

This Clipping From
KINGSTON, N. Y.
FREEMAN
MAR 27 1946

Gretchaninoff 'Elegy' Will Be Featured by Boston Symphony

Boston, March 29—The first national performance of "Elegy" by Gretchaninoff and the appearance of Efrem Zimbalist, distinguished violinist, as soloist, feature the Saturday program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, ~~Dr. Serge Koussevitzky~~, conducting, over WJ-ABC from 9:30 to 10:30 p. m.

Gretchaninoff, now approaching his 82nd birthday, completed "Elegy" only last year. Now a resident of New York, he lived for many years in Paris. Previously he was closely identified with the development of music in his native Russia. Gretchaninoff, born in Moscow, studied at the Conservatory in that city and then went to St. Petersburg in 1891 where he became a pupil of Rimsky-Korsakoff.

Among his numerous compositions are more than 250 songs and choral music which, although based on Russian liturgy, are sung in all parts of the world "Elegy" will have its first performance Friday by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Zimbalist, whose debut in this country was made with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1911, will be heard in the Brahms Violin Concerto, the only work in this idiom created by the master. Written in 1878, it is one of the standard works in the repertoire of violinists.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, ILL.
ILL. STATE JOURNAL
MAR 26 1946

Mr. Truman's Speech.

Descending rapidly from the esthetic to the political plane, we found President Truman in our midst Saturday evening at the conclusion of the Boston Symphony orchestra's performance of Schumann's Symphony ~~No. 2~~. It was a painful transition.

What pained us most was the fact that Mr. Truman vocalized so many of the thoughts teeming in the troubled public conscience, yet was forced by the nature of his address and the partisan idiom to step up and down from his eminent position as chief executive of the United States.

After chopping with a politician's machete the weaknesses and reactionary nature of his opposition, he would do his best to rise above such considerations with a platitudinous " . . . but we must be tolerant of man's weaknesses."

Knowing how badly veterans need homes Mr. Truman placed great emphasis upon the Patman housing legislation. He struck out strongly against the real estate lobby, which he claimed had emasculated the bill, and advocated re-insertion of the premium payment and ceiling provision to do away with speculation on existing homes, which could be sold by the present owners for any price obtainable, but not resold for additional gain. On this, the strongest pillar of his speech, he dwelt longest.

Our President, as most Americans have tolerantly believed since his unexpected succession to Mr. Roosevelt's office, means well.

However, the chasm between his thoughts and his achievements has been bridged with an ineffectual administrative structure which sways perilously in the vagrant winds of public opinion.

Looking back upon the achievements of the war as a party victory is not in the best interests of America. Our production, and our military achievements came from all of the people, Republicans, Democrats, Progressives, and non-partisan groups alike, who often attained goals despite rather than because of administrative effort.

During the closing phases of the war our achievements ran past our thoughts, and the war was won by physical momentum. Now we find ourselves with achievements sadly lagging and with thoughts and opinion ranging far ahead, like tracer bullets looping in the night.

Achievement is not obtained without incentive. Incentive today is enfeebled by the administration's willingness to increase public aid in the form of higher unemployment compensation. Incentive has been badly bruised by 13 years of encouraged idleness.

In attempting to depict the Republican party, as a snake-pit of reactionaries, Mr. Truman failed to recognize the new international realizations of the Republican party, and states where Republican administrations have achieved forward-looking, efficient administration with long lists of achievements in the public record.

Mr. Truman didn't refer to the Midwest where thrives a new determining philosophy of the Republican party. Not content to rest upon the achievements of Abraham Lincoln, as the Democratic party is eager to rely upon its leaders who have passed, the new Republican party is gathering strength and purpose from the prairies to keep old torches alight with new fuel.

In the pivot state of Illinois, a Republican administration has proven a model for other states to follow. Governor Green voiced at Chicago last winter the aggressive spirit which must bring the Republican spirit of practical leadership back to prominence.

Through the past winter we have seen members of both parties, urged by war-sick constituents, shirk America's duties in the realization of our wartime promises. We have done our best all winter to smoke the state department out into the open, and to avoid the shameful bickering that has grown out of poor leadership.

We have asked for a loan policy, a definite stand on the world trusteeship question, an open discussion of world oil concessions, flexible price control, and adequate veterans' assistance.

We realize the difficulties under which the administration has worked, and we see the weakness on all sides due to greed and narrowness. But we do think that it is the job of national leaders to conquer these weaknesses, and to carry on their program without vacillation.

At this early date, there has not yet emerged the clear-cut choice of the people for a Republican presidential candidate in 1948. But the eyes of the nation search the gentle slopes of the interior, checking the stature of men from Minnesota, Michigan, Illinois, Ohio and plainsmen from other states.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

BY CYRUS DURGIN

S[illegible] Koussevitzky returned to [illegible] Symphony [illegible] yesterday afternoon and introduced [illegible] pieces. The first [illegible] Elegy by Alexander Gretchaninoff [illegible] the first time [illegible] was Henry Cowell's Hymn and Fuguing Tune [illegible] new to Boston [illegible] concert [illegible] Third Symphony by [illegible] Berezowsky, and the [illegible] Violin Concerto with Efrem Zimbalist [illegible] solo part.

[illegible] have been the [illegible] part, but whatever [illegible] yesterday's Symphony [illegible] was decidedly on the [illegible] side. There was only one first-rate piece of music, and [illegible] the Concerto. But even here, [illegible] Mr. Koussevitzky worked [illegible] orchestral accompaniment of considerable heat and tension, the [illegible] performance was not one to generate excitement. The air was [illegible] humid, which is bad for stringed instruments and, further, Mr. Zimbalist, suave and authoritative though he is, is not a musician of strong temperament.

Gretchaninoff, now approaching 82, wrote his Elegy last year, "in memory of those who gave their lives for freedom." The scoring is [illegible] the Elegy makes impressive sounds. But at first hearing it does [illegible], on the whole, notably [illegible] or moving. The idiom is romantic and derivative, which in a young composer would be harking back to times past, but in a composer of Mr. Gretchaninoff's chronological position, quite natural.

Mr. Koussevitzky directed the Berezowsky Symphony in place of its composer, who originally had been announced to conduct. In the more than five years since it last was heard here, the work has not grown any younger or more persuasive. It is curiously mixed in style, a little romanticism, a little conservatism, two jiggers of modernism and the whole shaken up in expert orchestration.

The most pronounced shortcoming of the Third Symphony is its lack of motion and its failure to get anywhere. It might have been titled, after the Southern folk ballad, "I Wonder as I Wander." Both composers were present and acknowledged applause, Mr. Gretchaninoff from his seat, Mr. Berezowsky from the stage.

By comparison the frank melody and the sprightly motion of the Fuguing Tune made Mr. Cowell's music seem almost of masterpiece dimensions. It is well written, fully but transparently scored for the strings. The treatment of the tune is a sort of flowing contrapuntal imitation analogous to the "fuguing" style of Boston's 18th century William Billings, who was the leader in developing this homemade kind of polyphony.

HERALD MAR 29

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The 21st regular concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The soloist was Efrem Zimbalist, violinist. The program was as follows:

Elegy Op. 175 .... Gretchaninoff
Symphony No. 3 Op. 21 ..... Berezowsky
Hymn and Fuguing Tune .... Cowell
Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in D major Op. 77 .... Brahms

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

Yesterday's concert was a peculiar one, with definite ups and downs. I doubt if any two people would agree throughout on it. It opened with the first performance of the 82-year-old Gretchaninoff's Elegy "in memory of those who gave their lives for freedom." The Elegy was written last summer, but it might equally well have been written in 1890. It is conventional reasonably impressive music, realizing the effects and climaxes that you would expect of music on such a theme. Mr. Gretchaninoff was in the audience and twice acknowledged the applause.

Mr. Berezowsky's Symphony, which has been played twice before here, is an intellectually interesting work. At the earlier performances I thought it had more to it than that, but after yesterday I am not so sure. It is all skillfully put together, but is the second movement, for example, more than just cleverness? The third movement gains in strength and eloquence on repeated hearings, but for the Symphony as a whole I am inclined to think it has receded in stature while retaining much of its fascination for the intellect. Mr. Berezowsky was also in the audience and came out on the platform to acknowledge the applause in his turn.

After the intermission we had Henry Cowell's Hymn and Fuguing Tune for its first performance in Boston. It apparently owes much, if not all, of its inspiration to an 18th century New England musician, William Billings. I found it yesterday no more than a mildly interesting experiment in writing music in the modes. Lots of English composers have been doing this sort of thing for a long time, and I refuse to get very excited about it at this date.

Finally we had the greatest of all violin concertos, that by Brahms. I am sorry to say that I thought Mr. Zimbalist's performance of it with the orchestra rather dry and stolid. His tone, while usually quite lovely, was often not full enough until he let himself out a bit in the finale. The slow movement found him at his best. The orchestral part under Mr. Koussevitzky was beautiful as always, but the interpretation as a whole fell far short of that memorable performance with Heifetz some years ago, which has fortunately been recorded. There would be no point in criticizing the Concerto yesterday as being not much more than adequately played, if there were not such an amazing list of first-rate violinists in the country who would jump at the chance to achieve more than mere competence in it.

The concert will be repeated tonight. Next week Raya Garbousova, cellist, will be soloist in a new Concerto by Samuel Barber. Also on the program, which Mr. Koussevitzky will conduct, are David Diamond's Rounds for string orchestra, Strauss' "Don Juan," Moussorgsky's Prelude to "Khovanstchina" and Tchaikovsky's "Francesca da Rimini."

Symphony Concert

Gretchaninov Elegy, Cowell Hymn Introduced

By L. A. Sloper

Two novelties adorn the twenty-first program of the Boston Symphony season, played yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Alexander Gretchaninov's Elegy had its first performance anywhere. Henry Cowell's Hymn and Fuguing Tune was heard for the first time in Boston. The other items were Nicolai Berezowsky's Third Symphony and the Brahms Violin Concerto, with Efrem Zimbalist as soloist.

A serious mood pervades this program. The only light touches are in Mr. Berezowsky's pleasant Scherzo movement, and in the amusing excerpts from Mrs. Berezowsky's book, "Duet With Nicky," reprinted in the program book.

Mr. Gretchaninov's Elegy is dedicated "in memory of those who gave their lives for freedom." It is an impressive score, conservative in its idiom and evidently deeply felt. If there are passages reminiscent of earlier Russian composers, there is also an individual quality that negates any thought of imitation. Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra gave the piece eloquent utterance, and the distinguished composer acknowledged from the floor the cordial applause of the audience.

Mr. Cowell's Hymn and Fuguing Tune carries us a long way from the tone clusters and piano-wire-plucking of his salad days. This evocation of early Puritan Psalmody is straightforward in its tunefulness, in the harmonic scheme of the Hymn and in the contrapuntal texture of the Fuguing Tune. Using a string orchestra, the composer speaks understandingly of the stern faith and firm character of the Founders. This work, too, was well performed and well received.

A third hearing of Mr. Berezowsky's Symphony No. 3 confirms an earlier impression that he is at his best as a musical humorist. His rhythms are clever, but his melodic invention is weak, and there is more bombast than power in his climaxes.

We do not think of the Brahms D major nowadays as a concerto "against the violin" in Bülow's phrase, nor do we necessarily regard it as "a concerto for violin against the orchestra," in Huberman's. We look upon it rather as a great symphonic work in which the solo violin plays a major role. Huberman says that "the violin wins." But that is not always so, and it was not so yesterday. Mr. Zimbalist is a fine violinist and a fine musician, but on this occasion his tone was not big enough nor his articulation acute enough to enable him to stand up against the orchestra. Nevertheless, there was an ovation for him, and for the conductor and orchestra.

POST MAR 29

SYMPHONY CONCERT

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Yesterday afternoon's Symphony Concert might be described as a friendly little Russo-American affair. Three of Dr. Koussevitzky's former compatriots, now as firmly established here as himself, figured on the program in various capacities. Two members of the trio, Alexander Gretchaninoff and Nicolai Berezowsky, were on hand to hear their music played, and the third, Efrem Zimbalist, was the soloist of the afternoon.

Mr. Gretchaninoff, whose appearance utterly belies the 81 years with which he is credited, has composed a sincerely felt but hardly original Elegy "in memory of those who gave their lives for freedom." It is receiving this week its first performances. Cut down by half, the piece would make a stronger impression, since the not too distinguished material is spread pretty thin.

Mr. Berezowsky's Third Symphony had now been heard at these concerts three times, and by all means it should be three times and out. It might have been all right to play it once, but the first repetition seemed superfluous and that of yesterday doubly so. While displaying some craftsmanship and constructive skill, the piece simply does not say anything worth listening to.

The third number on the program, Henry Cowell's Hymn and Fuguing Tune, was yesterday accorded its first performance in Boston, nor had Mr. Cowell's name previously appeared on any Boston Symphony list. Moved to write something in the style of William Billings, who published four collections of songs in this city between 1770-94, Mr. Cowell has turned out an unassuming but wholly grateful composition for string orchestra. Its straightforwardness and sturdiness commend it, and in the particular company in which it found itself yesterday, it sounded very well indeed.

The only important music of the afternoon came at the end, in the shape of the Violin Concerto of Brahms. It needs, however, a more convincing interpreter than the punctilious Mr. Zimbalist. The impassivity which marks this estimable musician in recital yielded slightly to Dr. Koussevitzky's ardor, but the total result was hardly inspiring.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

MAR 31 1946

Boston Symphony

Plays Barber's Cello Concerto in Last Concert Here

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its last New York concerts of the season on Wednesday night and Saturday afternoon, April 10 and 13, at Carnegie Hall, and on Friday night, April 12, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. The Wednesday night program consists of Aaron Copland's suite from "Appalachian Spring," Richard Strauss's "Don Juan" and Brahms's second symphony.

Samuel Barber's new cello concerto, completed late last November at Mount Kisco, will have its first performances here in the Brooklyn concert and the Carnegie Hall Saturday matinee, with Raya Garbousova as the soloist. Serge Koussevitzky's program for both concerts also includes David Diamond's "Rounds for String Orchestra" and Brahms's first symphony. The Barber concerto will be introduced in the Boston Symphony's home concerts next Friday afternoon and Saturday night.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

MAR 31 1946

RECORDS: RACHMANINOFF

By MARK A. SCHUBART

RACHMANINOFF'S music continues to be a desirable commodity from the record-buying public's point of view, and the record companies continue to issue and re-issue new performances of these works. This month's Columbia list includes two major Rachmaninoff recordings—one of "The Isle of the Dead" by Dimitri Mitropoulos and the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra (album M-MM-599, three twelve-inch records); the other of the Second Piano Concerto in C minor, played by Gyorgy Sandor and the New York Philharmonic-Symphony under the direction of Artur Rodzinski (album M-MM-605, four twelve-inch records).

Of these two items, the former is the more commendable. It is a fine performance, taking full advantage of Rachmaninoff's colorful orchestral technique. I prefer it to the recent Victor release of the same work by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which favors more rapid tempi and, in general, makes a more superficial impression.

The Concerto, I regret to say, is one of the poorest recordings encountered in recent months. It would be difficult to appraise the performance by Mr. Sandor, since the surfaces are so uneven and the balance between piano and orchestra so poor that it is difficult to tell who is playing what. The work itself is heavily scored in spots, and more careful planning is necessary to commit it to records efficiently.

This Clipping From
JACKSON, TENN.
SUN

MAR 31 1946

Noted Cellist Of Boston Symphony Turns Botanist

The colorful imagery of tonal quality which Jean Bedetti, leader of the Boston Symphony cellists, evokes from the strings of his instrument, finds its counterpart in the profusion of color which he draws from the earth in his Florida garden.

Bedetti cannot casually accept the wonder of his garden with its sixty-six varieties of hibisci. "Such a range of color—you should see," says Bedetti. "And the size of the blossoms—as big as this."

Bedetti demonstrates by spreading his cello-spanning fingers.

In the midst of his twelve-foot high garden of hibisci, each summer Bedetti plays his cello in preparation for his winter concert season, matching the unusual color variation of his flowers with the tonal opulence of his instrument.

The Boston Symphony is heard over WTJS-ABC, Saturday evenings, 8:30-9:30 p. m.

This Clipping From
DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT

MAR 31 1946

DR. KOUSSEVITSKY

. . . conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will receive the honorary A. G. O. degree from the American Guild of Organists on Saturday, April 13, during the orchestra's last broadcast of the current season. Dr. Koussevitsky has dedicated the concert to the guild which on that evening will be observing its 50th anniversary. 100 members and officers of the guild will be guests at the broadcast which will be heard over ABC and will enter the auditorium in a colorful procession, wearing their vari-colored hoods and gowns. E. Power Biggs, organist of the orchestra, and Roger Voison, trumpeter, will give a brief program at the opening ceremonies playing Strauss' "Processional Entry for Festival Occasions." Dr. Koussevitsky is the second conductor of an American orchestra to receive this degree, the other being the late Dr. Frederick Stock of Chicago Symphony orchestra.

TANGLEWOOD
NOTES
Feb.-Mar.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

FEB 5 - 1946

Brilliant Musical Season Planned For Berkshire Festival

Four concerts of chamber music and two Bach-Mozart programs by an orchestra of 30 members will be presented at Tanglewood this summer in addition to the regular Berkshire Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, it has been announced by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and director of the Berkshire Music Center.

The 1946 summer school will be conducted July 1 to Aug. 10, and the big concert series will be held July 25 to Aug. 11, the nine performances being given as usual on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons..

The opera department of the school will present Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes" in its first American production.

Other highlights of the season include the playing of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony at the closing concert of the series, in which the Festival chorus will sing. Olin Downs is scheduled to give four lectures on the art of criticism; Aaron Copland will be in charge of the composition department; Gregor Piatigorsky will direct the chamber music groups; and there will be several guest lecturers.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

FEB 10 1946

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL PLANS

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced plans for the 1946 season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., July 1 to August 10. New activities include four chamber music concerts arranged with the co-operation of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation, and two Bach-Mozart programs by the instrumental faculty.

Assistants to Dr. Koussevitzky in the orchestral conducting department will be Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, and Stanley Chapple. The opera department will be directed by Dr. Herbert Graf and Boris Goldovsky; the composition department, by Aaron Copland; choral conducting, by Hugh Ross and Robert Shaw; and chamber music groups, by Gregor Piatigorsky and the principals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Among the lecturers will be Olin Downes, Howard Hanson, William Schumann, and Edward Weeks.

Full information may be obtained by writing to Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Massachusetts.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

FEB 12 1946

Of Music and Musicians

The big musical news of the week was released Saturday from Boston Symphony hall. It is:

"Returning to his post as conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra after his mid-season vacation, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky announces his plans for the 1946 season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., from July 1-Aug. 10.

"The school catalog, which is about to be circulated, will disclose two new musical activities at Tanglewood. With the co-operation of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge foundation, four concerts of chamber music have been arranged, and preceding the festival concerts Dr. Koussevitzky and the instrumental faculty composed of more than 30 members of the Boston Symphony will give two Bach-Mozart programs.

Dr. Koussevitzky's assistants at the center in the orchestral conducting department and for the advanced orchestra will be Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin and Stanley Chapple.

"The opera department will be under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf and Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design scenery and costumes. Benjamin Britten's opera 'Peter Grimes,' commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music foundation and composed especially for Tanglewood, and produced in England with outstanding success, will receive its first American presentation. Hugh Ross will train the chorus and Leonard Bernstein will conduct the performance.

"The composition department will be in charge of Aaron Copland, who is the assistant director of the Berkshire Music center.

"Hugh Ross and Robert Shaw will have classes in choral conducting, and also direct the student chorus—Mr. Shaw preparing the festival chorus for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, which will close the Berkshire festival concerts.

"Chamber music groups will work under the direction of Gregor Piatigorsky with the assistance of the principals of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

"While the emphasis at Tanglewood is on student participation in the actual performance of music, students will also have the opportunity, as before, to attend special assemblies. Aaron Copland as moderator will conduct forum meetings. Olin Downes will give four lectures on the 'Art of Criticism.' Special guest lecturers will include Howard Hanson, William Schuman, Edward Weeks and others to be announced.

"Next month Dr. Koussevitzky will announce a summary of the festival programs—nine concerts from July 25-Aug. 11 on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons."

Among the local musical presentations for the balance of the month are the two performances of "HMS Pinafore" by the Schenectady Light Opera Co. on Friday and Saturday nights at the Mont Pleasant High school, the Schenectady symphony midwinter concert on Feb. 19 and the Anna Kaskas concert at Union College Memorial chapel on Feb. 22. On Sunday, Feb. 24 Miss Yella Pessl will conduct the second of the workshop sessions at the Schenectady museum.

When the Schenectady Light Opera Co. opens its' Gilbert and Sullivan production on Friday it will be resuming its activity after a three and a half year dormant period because of the war. Its last production was Oscar Straus's "The Waltz Dream." Edgar Moulton, director, announced that the current production uses about 55 members for the principals and chorus. Ken Hallenbeck is the president of the company and membership is open to any community person interested in music or dramatics. Anthony Pezzano will direct the 20 piece orchestra which will accompany the operetta. A special television performance will be given on Feb. 20. Plans for another light opera to be performed in June are being discussed.

New publications issued recently by the Associated Music Publishers, Inc., include three Stravinsky items—a revised edition of the "Danse Sacrale" from the Sacre du Printemps," "Scherzo a la Russe" for orchestra and also for two pianos, four hands, and an "Elegie" for solo violin or solo viola.

The "Danse Sacrale" was thoroughly revised by the composer 30 years after its original compostion in the "interests of enhanced effectiveness and, clarity." The "Scherzo a la Russe" was originally written for Paul Whiteman's Blue Network orchestra but has been completely rescored and partly recomposed. Both numbers are available in miniature scores.

The "Elegie" is dedicated to the memory of Alphonse Onnou, founder of the Pro Arte quartet. Its three movements are a "Lento," a "L'istesso tempo," in the form of a fugue and a return to the Prelude theme. Abounding in double stops it is not to be taken lightly and will require much musical intelligence as well as fluent technique for performance.

This Clipping From
ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
PRESS

FEB 17 1946

Books And The Arts

Boy Pianist, 12, Makes His First Movie

By W. G. ROGERS
Associated Press Arts Reporter

NEW YORK, Feb. 16 (AP)—A little boy and his music teacher came in to see me. Pupil Richard Korbel claimed to be 12 and a half years old, but when Teacher Hedy Spielter pointed out that his birthday came only about a month before, he settled for 12 and a twelfth.

He has long black hair, eyes that twinkle, a shy but ready smile. He wears glasses.

He's no ordinary boy, however. He has been guest star on radio shows and has just made a movie. He has just given his second piano recital in Carnegie Hall. . . . He had already done two in Town Hall and 25 out of town. Carnegie was nearly filled. Many in the audience were his own age, but there were grown-ups, too. The program was enough to stump an adult musician, but Richard got through handsomely, as the critics agreed the next day.

The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass., will be open this year from July 1 to Aug. 10. Two new activities are planned, says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky: four concerts of chamber music, with the cooperation of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation, and, preceding the festival, two Bach-Mozart programs conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky.

Under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf and Boris Goldovsky the opera department will give the first American presentation of Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes," which was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and composed especially for Tanglewood.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

FEB 17 1946

Faculty Named For Tanglewood

Preparations Begun For Music Festival

BOSTON, Feb. 16—Returning to his post as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra after his mid-season vacation, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has announced plans for the 1946 season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in Lenox, July 1 to Aug. 10.

The school catalogue will disclose two new musical activities at Tanglewood. With the cooperation of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation four concerts of chamber music have been arranged, and preceding the festival concerts, Dr. Koussevitzky and the instrumental faculty composed of more than 30 members of the Boston Symphony will give two Bach-Mozart programs.

Dr. Koussevitzky's assistants in the orchestral conducting department and for the advanced orchestra will be Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin and Stanley Chapple.

The opera department will be under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf and Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design scenery and costumes. Benjamin Britten's opera "Peter Grimes," commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and composed especially for Tanglewood, and produced in England with outstanding success, will receive its first American presentation. Hugh Ross will train the chorus and Leonard Bernstein will conduct the performance.

The composition department will be in charge of Aaron Copland, who is the assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center.

Choral conducting will be under the direction of Hugh Ross and Robert Shaw, both of whom will have classes in choral conducting, and also direct the student chorus, Mr. Shaw preparing the festival chorus for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, which will close the Berkshire Festival concerts.

Chamber music groups will work under the direction of Gregor Piatigorsky with the assistance of the principals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

While the emphasis at Tanglewood is on student participation in the actual performance of music, students will also have the opportunity, as before, to attend special assemblies. Aaron Copland as moderator will conduct forum meetings. Olin Downes will give four lectures on the Art of Criticism. Special guest lecturers will include Howard Hanson, William Schuman and Edward Weeks.

Next month Dr. Koussevitzky will announce a summary of the festival program—nine concerts July 25 to Aug. 11. Those who wish fuller information about the School or the Festival should address Symphony Hall, Boston 15.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

FEB 17 1946

Music

Tanglewood Summer School Unequalled in U.S.

By RAYMOND MORIN

Talented music students of this area have an opportunity for Summer study that is unequalled anywhere else in the United States. This is apparent from the plans just released for the Music Center Summer School at Tanglewood from July 1 through Aug. 10.

Tanglewood at Lenox is the materialization of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's cherished dream. The setting is unsurpassed for inspiration. There are the same expansive, verdant grounds that impelled Hawthorne to write his "House of the Seven Gables." There is a faculty that reads like an extract from music's "Who's Who."

Koussevitzky

Dr. Koussevitzky will be assisted in the Orchestral Conducting Department by Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, and Stanley Chapple. The Opera Department will be under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf and Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rychtarik will design scenery and costumes.

Classes in Choral Conducting will be directed by Hugh Ross and Robert Shaw. Composition will be taught by Aaron Copland, and chamber music groups will work with Gregor Piatigorsky. Olin Downes will lecture on Musical Criticism, and other guest lectures will include Howard Hanson, William Schuman and Edward Weeks.

Versatility

Versatility among musicians is not an uncommon trait. For example, Robert Schumann edited a newspaper, Cesar Cui was a military engineer, and Rimsky-Korsakoff was an officer in the Russian navy.

Worcester has a number of versatile musicians, but none of more diversified activities than William C. Steere. His two main occupations are as organist and choir director at Old South Church, and running his own music store. The latter, by the way, was founded by his father in 1887.

In the interim, Mr. Steere is musical adviser for the Worcester County Light Opera Club, and is regular organist for one of Worcester's prominent funeral establishments.

The most significant of his accomplishments is the sizable repertory of his compositions that is represented in the catalogues of all the more prominent publishers. His works vary from operettas to piano solos, one of which, "Valse Rubato," won a national prize in a contest that was sponsored by the Etude Music Magazine in 1940.

Mr. Steere tells this as his most unusual experience. . . . One Sunday noon he tuned in the Salt Lake City Tabernacle Choir on WTAG for the first time, and the very first words he heard were his own name—the choir was about to sing one of his compositions!

Norton Debut

Another musician of unusual versatility is David Broekman, who will conduct the Texaco Star Theater Orchestra at the Auditorium Feb. 26 for the Norton Co. Family. He was born in Holland forty years ago and received his musical education at the Royal Conservatory at the Hague.

To his credit is a list of more than 150 motion pictures for which he prepared and directed the background music; among them is "All Quiet on the Western Front," "Phantom of the Opera," and "It Happened One Night."

He has achieved success as a composer, notably with his combined symphony and ballet, "Harlem Heaven." His radio programs have also included "Camel Caravan" and "Great Moments in Music."

As musical director for the Treasury Department he was given a special citation in recognition of the 500 "Treasury Star Parade" programs he directed, as well as the 250 "Treasury Song Parade" programs which featured America's greatest singers.

[105]

DAYTON, O.
NEWS

FEB 17 1946

r. Koussevi or Festival

STON, Feb. 16.—Return his post as conductor on Symphony orchestra
midseason vacation, Dr.
ssevitzky announced his the 1946 season of the music center at Tangl enox, Mass., July 1-Aug.
he school catalog whi circulated will disclos ical activities at Tangle the cooperation of the Sprague Coolidge foun concerts of chamber been arranged, and p
the festival concerts, sevitzky and the instru lty composed of more members of the Boston
y will give two Bach-M rams.
Koussevitzky's assista center in the orchestra ing department and fo nced orchestra will be Le stein, Richard Burgin ley Chapple.
e opera department w r the direction of Dr. H and Boris Goldovsky. R terik will design scener
mes. Benjamin Brit
, Peter Grimes, commis
he Koussevitzky music f and composed especial lewood, and produce and with outstanding s receive its first Am ntation. Hugh Ross the chorus and L
stein will conduct the ance.
e composition departme charge of Aaron Co s the assistant director shire music center.
gh Ross and Robert have classes in choral c for Beethoven's Ninth y, which will close the festival concerts.
amber music groups wil
the direction of G
gorsky with the assista
principals of the
phony orchestra.
ile the emphasis at T is on student partic
he actual performan
, students will also ha
tunity, as before, to al assemblies. Aaron C oderator will conduct
ngs. Olin Downes wi

[106]

ner

in U.S.

e an opportunity here else in the just released for vood from July 1

ns!

but

isician of unusual
David Broekman, ict the Texaco Star
stra at the Audi-26 for the Norton
e was born in Hol-
s ago and received ucation at the Royy at the Hague.
t is a list of more tion pictures for ared and directed d music; among uiet on the West-hantom of the Opt Happened One

eved success as a bly with his comy and ballet, "Har-
His radio programs
ded "Camel Carat Moments in Mu-director for the rtment he was l citation in rece 500 "Treasury programs he ding the 250 "Trease" programs

America's great-

This Clipping From
DAYTON, O.
NEWS

FEB 17 1946

WOOD NOTES

Dr. Koussevitzky Lists Plans For Festival At Tanglewood

B[illegible] the [illegible] Dr. Serge [illegible] plans [illegible] Berk- [illegible] Aug. 10. [illegible] is [illegible] Tanglewood. [illegible] Eliza- [illegible] Dr. [illegible] Bach-Mozart

[illegible] assistants at [illegible] orchestral con- [illegible] department and for the [illegible] will be Leonard [illegible] and

[illegible] will be [illegible] Dr. Herbert [illegible] Richard [illegible] scenery and [illegible] Britten's [illegible] commissioned [illegible] music founda- [illegible] posed especially for [illegible] and produced in [illegible] outstanding success, [illegible] its first American [illegible] Hugh Ross will [illegible] chorus and Leonard [illegible] conduct the per[illegible] department will [illegible] of Aaron Copland, [illegible] assistant director of the [illegible] music center.

[illegible] Ross and Robert Shaw [illegible] classes in choral conduct- [illegible] Beethoven's Ninth sym- [illegible] which will close the Berk- [illegible] festival concerts.

[illegible] music groups will work [illegible] direction of Gregory [illegible] with the assistance of [illegible] of the Boston [illegible] orchestra.

[illegible] the emphasis at Tangle- [illegible] student participation [illegible] performance of [illegible] students will also have the [illegible], as before, to attend [illegible] assemblies. Aaron Copland [illegible] will conduct forum [illegible]. Olin Downes will give four lectures on the art of criticism. Special guest lecturers will include Howard Hansen, William Schuman, Edward Weeks, and others to be announced.

This Clipping From
SAN DIEGO, CAL.
UNION

MAR 3 1946

SHAW TO JOIN FACULTY

Robert Shaw, conductor of the Collegiate Chorale, will join the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center this summer and will prepare a large chorus for Beethoven's "Ninth Symphony" to be presented in the Berkshire festival under Koussevitsky's direction.

Other festival plans call for the production of Benjamin Britton's opera, "Peter Grimes," which was commissioned by the Koussevitsky Music foundation. This opera has already had a great success in England. Dr. Herbert Graf, of the Metropolitan Opera, will head the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center.

Leonard Bernstein and Stanley Chapple will assist Koussevitsky in the orchestral conducting department. Aaron Copland will be in charge of composition classes. Gregor Piatigorsky and principals of the Boston Symphony will direct chamber music groups. Olin Downes will lecture on music criticism. The Berkshire Music Center will hold sessions from July 1 to Aug. 10. Koussevitsky will present nine festival concerts during the season.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

MAR 1 - 1946

Berkshire Festival Programs Planned

Serge Koussevitzky has planned the programs for the Berkshire Festival to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra next summer under his direction at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. There will be nine concerts over a period of three weeks Thursday evenings, Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons.

The three programs of the first week (July 25, 27, 38) will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 (Eroica), a symphony of Haydn, Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony, Sibelius' Second Symphony, Rachmaninoff's Second Piano Concerto, Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger", Stravinsky's Petrouchka Suite, Shostakovitch's Fifth Smyphony, and Copland's Suite, "Appalachian Spring".

The second week (Aug. 1, 3, 4) will consist of a Brahms Festival, the programs to include the Tragic Overture, all four symhonies, the First Piano Concerto, the Haydn Variations, and Alto Rhapsody, and the Double Concerto for Violin and 'Cello.

The third week (Aug. 8, 10, 11), Berlioz' Fantastic Symphony, Schumann's 'Cello Concerto, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel", Moussorgsky's "Khovanstchina" Prelude, Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony, Martinu's Violin Concerto, Thompson's "Testament of Freedom", and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Subscription inquiries should be addressed to Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

List Programs For Berkshire Festival

Programs for the nine Berkshire Festival Concerts at Tanglewood, Mass., have been announced. Planned by Serge Koussevitzky they will begin July 25 and end on Aug. 11 Three concerts will be given each week on Thursday evenings, Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons.

The three programs of the first week (July 25, 27 and 28) will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 (Eroica), a symphony of Haydn, Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony, Sibelius' Second Symphony, Rachmaninoff's Second Piano Concerto, Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger"; Stravinsky's Petrouchka Suite, Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony and Copland's Suite, "Appalachian Spring".

The second week (Aug. 1, 3 and 4) will consist of a Brahms Festival. The programs will include the Tragic Overture, all four symphonies, the First Piano Concerto, the Haydn Variations, the Alto Rhapsody and the Double Concerto for Violin and 'Cello.

The third week (Aug. 8, 10 and 11) programs will include Berlioz' Fantastic Symphony, Schumann's 'Cello Concerto, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel", Moussorgsky's "Khovanstchina", Prelude, Prolofieff's Fifth Symphony, Martinu's Violin Concerto, Thompson's "Testament of Freedom" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Subscription inquiries should be addressed to Symphony hall, Boston 15, Mass.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

MAR 2 - 1946

Brochures from the Berkshire Music center are already in the mails, announcing Serge Koussevitzky as director and Aaron Copland as assistant. The Tanglewood season will run from July 1 to August 10, with five departments for those who want to take the study courses: Orchestral conducting; choral conducting; orchestral and chamber music (the latter under the direction of the premier cellist, Gregor Piatigorsky); composition; opera, and choral singing and ensemble playing.

* * *

General tuition fee is $120, with an extra fee of $20 for active conducting, composition and the active opera course for singers. (Living costs are estimated to be between $18 and $25 per week.) A registration payment of $10 is due upon notice that the application has been accepted, and the balance is payable at the time of registration.

* * *

Those who are unable to attend the Center, but want series or individual tickets to the Festival, may write to the Boston Symphony orchestra, inc., Symphony hall, Boston, and will be accepted until June 30. The concerts will be on the following dates: July 25, 27 and 28; August 1, 3, 4, 8, 10 and 11.

* * *

Documentary note: Sunday, the 17th, "Here Is Ireland," a full-length technicolor film, will be shown at the Tech high auditorium under the auspices of the Knights of Columbus. There will be two showings, at 2.45 and 8 p. m.

* * *

At Paramount's "Blithe Spirit" this week I was reminded of the first time I saw the play in New York. This was four or five years ago, when the comedy was in the middle of its long Broadway run. Sitting directly in front of me was Mrs Eleanor Roosevelt, who arrived and left with no fanfare or undue commotion. Just another theatergoer.

* * *

As the crowd streamed out on the sidewalk, a man and his wife passed me, arguing.

"But I tell you it was," said the male half of the argument in an earnest voice.

"Nonsense," said the woman tersely.

* * *

"I guess I know Eleanor when I see her," insisted the man, but the woman had the last word.

"You've been seeing ghosts all over the stage; now you're thinking you see Mrs Roosevelt," she said unreasonably.

"We-ell---" said the man doubtfully, as they passed out of earshot.

I felt sorry for him. All his life he will be halfconvinced that one night he saw the President's wife at the theater—but he'll never be quite sure.

* * *

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
Sunday Union & Republican

FEB 17 1946

Orchestra Plans Housing Facilities at Tanglewood

Boston Symphony Considers Construction of Cottages to Accommodate Summer Music Students

Special Dispatch to The Sunday Union and Republican

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Feb. 16—The Boston Symphony orchestra is considering the construction of cottages at Tanglewood to care for a part of the 300 Berkshire Music school students who are expected for July and early August. The group of girl students will be at Lenox school but Cranwell, where it was expected the boys would be, is to have a summer school of its own. Richard Rchytarick, Metropolitan opera stage architect, was at Tanglewood this week and inspected several locations for the proposed cottages.

Tanglewood Activities

All is activity at Tanglewood where the orchestra is to spend thousands of dollars in preparation for the revived summer program that will be augmented from the prewar days. The 6000 seats in the music shed are to be painted. Parking places which have been a nightmare on rainy concert days are to be drained and graveled for 3000 cars. The garden hemlock hedges, in which Supt Gaston E. Drake takes special pride, have wintered well. He had a force of men this week removing decrepit trees and trimming others. Early in the winter Berkshire Symphonic Festival, inc., gave to the Boston Symphony the $80,000 music shed, which was built through public subscriptions. The Festival, inc., Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president, has a "nest egg," the disposition of which has yet to be decided.

Mr and Mrs John Stewart McLennan are to occupy this summer, for the first time since prewar years, Ashintully, the huge mansion on the side of the mountain at the head of the Tyringham valley. This 25-room house with its white marble columns is one of the most imposing in Berkshire. It was built in 1911 and '12 by Mr McLennan's mother and stepfather, Mr and Mrs Robb de Peyster Tytus.

A graduate of Yale in 1897, Mr Tytus soon afterward received a concession from the Egyptian government to explore the royal palace in the ancient city of Thebes, now the town of Luxor, Egypt. Pharaoh's relics now adorn the frieze of this Berkshire villa, the site of which Mr and Mrs Tytus selected on their wedding trip.

The great Georgian marble and stucco villa is 170 feet long and 130 feet wide. The architect was Francis V. L. Hoppin of New York and Newport. At one time on a wall of a sleeping room was a magic portrait, with which Henry Adams, great-grandson of John Adams, second President of the United States, held conversation during the summer that he was a tenant. Mr and Mrs McLennan and children now are occupying a small white-painted cottage on the place near the old home of Daniel Clark, celebrated mineralogist, whose collection is now in Berkshire museum, Pittsfield.

This Clipping From
WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE

FEB 19 1946

The World of Music

NEW YORK, Feb. 19 (U.P.) — The Metropolitan Opera Company has announced that its first postwar tour next season will take in more cities than at any time since 1910.

Ten cities are on the list—Baltimore, Boston, Cleveland, Bloomington (Ind.), Minneapolis, Chicago, St. Louis, Dallas, Memphis and Chattanooga. Of these, Chattanooga will be visited for the first time and Memphis for the first time since 1901.

The company will close its subscription season in New York on March 30 and entrain for Baltimore for performances on April 1 and 2. A ten-day stay will be made in Boston from April 4 to 13, during which the company will mark its 400th performance in that city. The tour will be broken for postseason performances in New York during Holy Week, plus a visit to Philadelphia the same week.

The company will be in Cleveland from April 22 to 27 and at the University of Indiana in Bloomington on April 29 and 30. Minneapolis will be host from May 2 to 4 and Chicago from May 6 to 11. St. Louis will be visited on May 13, 14 and 15 for the first time since 1910. The remaining dates are May 17 in Dallas, May 20 and 21 in Memphis, and May 22 in Chattanooga.

Plans for the 1946 season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., have been announced by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The festival will consist of nine concerts from July 25 to Aug. 11. The programs will be announced shortly. Preceding the festival concerts, Koussevitsky and the instrumental faculty of the school, consisting of more than 30 members of the Boston Symphony, will give two Bach-Mozart programs. Four concerts of chamber music also have been arranged during the school session, with the cooperation of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation.

The opera department will be under the direction of Herbert Graf and Boris Goldovsky. Richard Rycrtariff will design scenery and costumes. Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes," commissioned by the Koussevitsky Music Foundation and composed especially for Tanglewood, will be given its first American presentation. It has been produced in England with great success.

TANGLEWOOD NOTES
MARCH 1946

This Clipping From
GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS

MAR 4 - 1946

Music Notes

By MRS. GEORGE C. EICHHORN

The trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and Serge Koussevitzky, director, announce ~~that~~ the Berkshire Music center, suspended for three seasons because of the war, will be resumed during the summer of 1946. A six weeks session, July 1 to August 10, will be held with a distinguished faculty including the principal players of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The emphasis at the Berkshire Music center is upon the collective aspects of music performance, the art of playing and singing together. Dr. Koussevitzky has said, "Obviously, in six weeks we cannot hope to give fundamental courses and instruction on the same basis as they are introduced in conservatories, college and music schools. What we want to give our students is constructive advice and a practical method which will stimulate their gifts, round out their abilities gained during their years of study, and broaden their acquaintance with music." Those who enroll in the center will participate in the student orchestras, choruses, chamber music and operatic groups, acquiring a direct understanding of music as it is written, conducted, played or sung. Lectures and forums will supplement the making of music.

Members of the Berkshire Music center will be entitled to attend the nine concerts of the 1946 Berkshire Festival by the Boston Symphony orchestra in the Music Shed, two programmes in the theater-concert hall devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart, certain rehearsals for these concerts, a series of four chamber music concerts to be given in co-operation with the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge foundation, and the various student concert and opera performances.

Five departments will be included in the center's activities this summer. Dr. Koussevitzky, assisted by Leonard Bernstein and others, will be in charge of orchestral conducting, while Hugh Ross and Robert Shaw will conduct a class in choral conducting. A full symphony orchestra for qualified students will be under the direction of Dr. Koussevitsky, assisted by Bernstein and others, and will give weekly concerts. Under the direction of Gregor Piatigorsky, groups of qualified students will be formed for various combinations of chamber music, and will give weekly chamber music concerts.

Aaron Copland and a prominent guest composer will be in charge of the composition department open to a limited number of students. In opera, a group under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf will present the first American production of Benjamin Britten's opera "Peter Grimes," and Boris Goldovsky will direct an opera workshop.

The largest department of the center is the choral singing and ensemble playing open to all who attend the center's work and programs. The chorus under Robert Shaw will prepare Beethoven's Ninth Symphony for performance with Dr. Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony orchestra during the festival. A part of the chorus will perform in "Peter Grimes." A complete symphony orchestra made up of students less advanced than those qualifying for the festival's regular orchestra will rehearse daily and present regular programs.

This information is thus given in some detail in the hope that several musicians in this area may be apprised of the work to be done at Tanglewood this year, and may become interested enough to attend. The management is particularly interested that young singers interested in opera may know of the opportunity. This column has on hand a limited number of folders giving further information (such as rates, etc.) and application blanks, which may be obtained from the writer.

This Clipping From
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE ~~STATES~~

MAR 21 1946

TANGLEWOOD CENTER WILL PRODUCE OPERA

The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass., will be open this year from July 1 to August 10. Two new activities are planned, says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky: Four concerts of chamber music, with the co-operation of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation, and, preceding the festival, two Bach-Mozart programs conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky.

Under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf and Boris Goldovsky the opera department will give the first American presentation of Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes," which was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and composed especially for Tanglewood.

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH

MAR 10 1946

Programs Set For Berkshire Festival Series

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY has planed the ~~program~~ for the Berkshire Festival to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra next summer under his direction at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. There will be nine concerts over a period of three weeks on Thursday evenings, Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons.

The three programs of the first week (July 25, 27, 28) will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 (Eroica), a symphony of Haydn, Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony, Sibelius' Second Symphony, Rachmaninoff's Second Piano Concerto, Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger," Stravinsky's Petrouchka Suite, Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony, and Copland's Suite, "Appalachian Spring."

The second week (Aug. 1, 3, 4) will consist of a Brahms Festival, the programs to include the Tragic Overture, all four symphonies, the First Piano Concerto, the Haydn Variations, the Alto Rhapsody, and the Double Concerto for Violin and Cello.

The third week (Aug. 8, 14, 11)—Berlioz's Fantastic Symphony, Schumann's Cello Concerto, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," Moussorgsky's "Khovanstichina" Prelude, Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony, Martinu's Violin Concerto, Thompson's "Testament of Freedom," and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Subscription inquiries should be addressed to Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Massachusetts.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

MAR 10 1946

Berkshire Festival

Program Features Announced for 1946 Series

Serge Koussevitzky has planned his programs for ~~the 1946~~ Berkshire Symphonic Festival to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The works to be heard in the nine concerts include:

Series A, Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon, July 25, 27, 28: Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, a Haydn symphony, Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony, Sibelius's second symphony, Rachmaninoff's second piano concerto, Wagner's prelude to "Die Meistersinger," Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" suite, Shostakovitch's fifthy symphony and Copland's "Appalachian Spring."

Series B, Aug. 1, 3, 4: Brahms Festival: Tragic Overture, the four symphonies, first piano concerto, Haydn Variations, Alto Rhapsody and double concerto.

Series C, Aug. 8, 10, 11: Berlioz's Fantastic Symphony, Schumann's cello concerto, Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel," Moussorgsky's "Khovantchina" prelude, Prokofieff's fifth symphony, Martinu's violin concerto, Thompson's "Testament of Freedom" and Beethoven's ninth symphony.

Inquiries about subscriptions should be addressed to Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

This Clipping From
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER

MAR 17 1946

Berkshire Festival Will Open in July

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, has ~~planned the programs~~ for the Berkshire festival to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra, next summer at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. There will be nine concerts over a period of three weeks on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons.

The three programs for the first week (July 25, 27, 28) will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 (Erocia), a symphony of Hadyn, Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony; Sibelius' Second Symphony, Rachmaninoff's Second Piano Concerto, Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger," Stravinsky's Petrouchka Suite, Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony, and Copland's suite, "Appalachian Spring."

The second week (August 1, 3, 4) will consist of a Brahms Festival, the programmes to include the Tragic Overture, all four symphonies, the First Piano Concerto, the Haydn Variations, the Alto Rhapsody, and the Double Concerto for Violin and 'Cello.

The third week (August 8, 10, 11)—Berlioz's Fantastic Symphony, Schumann's 'Cello Concerto, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," Moussorgsky's "Khovanstchina" Prelude, Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony, Martinu's Violin Concerto, Thompson's "Testament of Freedom," and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

MAR 17 1946

Music

By Edgar S. Van Olinda

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY has planned the programs for the Berkshire Festival to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra next summer under his direction at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. There will be nine concerts over a period of three weeks on Thursday evenings, Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons.

The three programs of the first week (July 25, 27, 28) will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 (Eroica), a symphony of Haydn, Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony, Sibelius' Second Symphony, Rachmaninoff's Second Piano Concerto, Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger," Stravinsky's Petrouchka Suite, Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony, and Copland's Suite "Appalachian Spring."

The second week (August 1, 3, 4) will consist of a Brahms Festival, the programs to include the Tragic Overture, all four symphonies, the First Piano Concerto, the Haydn Variations, the Alto Rhapsody, and the Double Concerto for Violin and 'Cello.

The third week (August 8, 10, 11)—Berlioz' Fantastic Symphony, Schumann's 'Cello Concerto, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel,' Moussorgsky's "Khovanstchina" Prelude, Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony, Martinu's Violin Concerto, Thompsons "Testament of Freedom." and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Subscription inquiries should be addressed to Symphony Hall, Boston 15, M[illegible]

The amended program for the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo performance at the Palace theatre, Thursday night April 11, is as follows: "Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme," "Frankie and Johnnie" and "Gaite Parisienne." The [illegible], under the choreographic direction of Frederic Franklin, will include Alexandra Danilova, Nathalie Krassovska, Ruthanna Boris, a brilliant corps de ballet and a symphony orchestra. The Albany Association of Women's College Clubs is the sponsor.

SHARON, CONN
NEWS
3/7/46

Koussevitzky Plans Programmes For Berkshire Festival

Second Week Will Feature Brahms Music

Boston Symphony Orchestra To Play At Tanglewood, Lenox

NINE CONCERTS

To Be Presented Sunday Afternoons And Thursday And Saturday Evenings

Serge Koussevitzky has planned the programmes for the Berkshire Festival to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra next summer under his direction at Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts. There will be nine concerts over a period of three weeks on Thursday evenings, Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons.

The three programmes of the first week (July 25, 27, 28) will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 (Erocia), a symphony of Haydn, Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony, Sibelius' Second Symphony, Rachmaninoff's Second Piano Concerto, Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger," Stravinsky's Petrouchka Suite, Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony, and Copland's Suite, "Appalachian Spring."

The second week (August 1, 3, 4) will consist of a Brahms Festival, the programmes to include the Tragic Overture, all four symphonies, the First Paino Concerto, the Haydn Variations, the Alto Rhapsody, and the Double Concerto for Violin and 'Cello.

The third week (August 8, 10, 11) — Berlioz' Fantastic Symphony, Schumann's 'Cello Concerto, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," Moussorgsky's "Khovanstchina" Prelude, Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony, Martinu's Violin Concerto, Thompson's "Testament of Freedom," and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Subscription inquiries should be addressed to Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Massachusetts.

This Clipping From
ST. PAUL, MINN.
PIONEER-PRESS

MAR 17 1946

Music Festival Will Include Modern Works

BOSTON—Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will include seven contemporary musical works in his Berkshire festival programs during July and August at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

They include Sibelius' second symphony, Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" suite, Shostakovitch's fifth symphony, Aron Copland's suite, "Appalachian Spring," Prokofieff's fifth symphony, Bohuslav Martinu's violin concerto and Virgil Thompson's "Testament of Freedom".

The programs also will include a Brahms cycle and Beethoven's ninth symphony.

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

MAR [illegible]

Familiar Music Festivals Resume

Bach Revival at Bethlehem Signals Return to Prewar Concert Schedule

By Alice Eversman

The healthy signs of a return to normal living is reflected in the resumption of many important features of the country's musical life discontinued during the war. Foremost among these in the East are the famous Bach Festival in Bethlehem, Pa.; the 18th century concerts in historic Williamsburg, Va., and the reopening of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass., closely identified with the Boston Symphony's Berkshire Festival.

In the quiet and beautiful setting of the little town in Pennsylvania, on May 18 Bach's great "Mass in B Minor" will be given in its complete form for the 37th time. The "Kyrie" and "Gloria" will be sung at 2 p.m. that day and the remainder of the Mass at 4:30 p.m. In the morning at 10:30 o'clock, a program of Bach's organ and other orchestral music will be given. The opening day, May 17, will see the performance of the entire "Christmas Oratorio," part I scheduled for 4 p.m. and part II for 8:30 p.m.

The soloists have not been announced but the famous Bach Choir of 240 voices will be heard under the direction of Ifor Jones with accompaniments furnished by Mrs. R. P. Givens and members of the Philadelphia orchestra. The Moravian Trombone Choir will sound the opening of the festival from the church tower.

Bach Choir Story.

The story of the Bach Choir is a remarkable one, going back to December, 1898, when it was organized by J. Fred Wolle, who was its only conductor until the time of his death a few years ago. It was the outgrowth of a former group known as the Bethlehem Choral Union, which was disbanded when the singers refused to learn the "Mass" because of its difficulties. Having previously given the "St. John Passion," the "St. Matthew Passion" and the "Christmas Oratorio," Dr. Wolle was adamant in wishing to have his group sing the greatest of Bach's works. When the singers' resistance could not be overcome, he resigned.

For five years nothing was done until a group of 80 selected singers agreed to study the "Mass" if Dr. Wolle would lead them. The rehearsals covered a period of 14 months, and the great work was finally presented to the public in 1900. Dr. Wolle's absence in California caused another hiatus in the Bethlehem concerts until Charles M. Schwab, the great steel magnate, persuaded the conductor to return and resume the festivals.

Williamsburg Concert.

The candle-lighted ballroom of the Palace of the Royal Governors in Williamsburg will be the scene again of two series of concerts, the first on May 13 through May 15, and the second, May 16 to 18. The opening date is the 240th anniversary of the passing of the act authorizing the building of the palace by the Colonial House of Burgesses in 1706.

The concerts were inaugurated as part of the educational program carried out in the restored city. As before the war, Ralph Kirkpatrick, renowned harpsichordist, will be featured in music for his instrument, the clavichord and the piano. He will be assisted by Alexander Schneider, violinist; Daniel Saidenberg, cellist, and Jennie Tourel, mezzo-soprano of the Metropolitan Opera, the same artists appearing on each series.

The capital of the oldest and largest colony in America was restored by John D. Rockefeller, jr., who sought to re-create the physical environment in which so many events took place in pre-Revolutionary days. Its fame before the war was widespread, and during the recent conflict its beautiful buildings were turned to war service, in particular the caring for of wounded servicemen. The architectural restorations will be continued, and it is expected that another 10 years will be required for its completion.

Berkshire Center.

Suspended for three seasons, the Berkshire Music Center will be reopened for a six-week session from July 1 to August 10. The plan of music study at the center will be under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, with a distinguished faculty including the principal players of the Boston Symphony. The collective aspects of music performance is stressed during the summer period rather than fundamental instruction. Dr. Koussevitzky said "What we want to give our students is constructive advice and a practical method which will stimulate their gifts, round out their abilities gained during their years of study and broaden their acquaintance with music."

The extensive grounds of Tanglewood, presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is the place where Hawthorne wrote "The House of the Seven Gables" and was once the meeting place of Holmes, Emerson and Melville. The original house and barn are for the school's use and nearby are the large shed, where the festival concerts are given, the Theater-Concert Hall, the Chamber Music Hall and a number of studio units.

The members of the center will be permitted to attend the concerts of the festival by the Boston Symphony, the Bach and Mozart programs in the Theater-Concert Hall and the series of four chamber music concerts given in co-operation with the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation besides the student concerts and opera performances.

THIS CLIPPING FROM AMERICAN MILLER
CHICAGO, ILL.

APR -- 1946

Allis-Chalmers on the Air

On Tuesday nights from 9:30 to 10:30 p.m., EST, American Broadcasting Co. launches on the airwaves the great music of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The program is sponsored by Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co.

During each broadcast, of course, Allis-Chalmers tells its listeners something concerning its many activities. On the March 16th program, 80% extraction flour—and the role Allis-Chalmers machinery and engineering have played in its manufacture—were discussed. Following are some quotations from the brief commercial:

"You read recently how President Truman asked us to 'tighten our belts' to help feed a famished world and prevent the political chaos that marches hand in hand with hunger.

"Shortly afterward . . . to save wheat . . . the government ordered American millers to convert to the production of the new 80% extraction flour.

"Millers throughout the country immediately asked for help from Allis-Chalmers. . . . With complete data on hand of every installation they had ever made, Allis-Chalmers flour milling engineers were able to help . . . flour mills convert quickly and efficiently. Today, those mills are turning out an 80% extraction flour of the highest possible baking quality.

"It was only natural that flour millers should turn to Allis-Chalmers . . . they've been doing it for 99 years! In 1847, for example . . . if you had been a miller in that year when America was beginning to expand westward . . . only one factory west of Cleveland could have supplied you with complete flour milling equipment.

"That factory was to grow into the huge Allis-Chalmers organization of today . . . an industry whose machines span the world to serve all industry."

The Tale of Tanglewood

by MARK A. DE WOLFE HOWE
With an Introduction by Serge Koussevitzky

"The word Tanglewood has two vivid associations in the mind of the American public. The first is with Hawthorne's Tanglewood Tales; the second, with a series of Music Festivals conducted in recent summers by Serge Koussevitzky at the country place that bears the same name."

Thus Mark A. De Wolfe Howe, former Pulitzer prize winner, begins the story of the famous Berkshire Music Festival, which has attracted thousands of Americans every summer since it was started in 1934. Mr. Howe, whose love of music and literature are matched with an unassuming learning and wit, takes us from the days when Hawthorne and Melville met as strangers near Stockbridge during a violent thunderstorm, and delightfully brings us to the present, when, under the inspired direction of Serge Koussevitzky, the name Tanglewood has come to stand not only for a kind of American Salzburg but also as a vital symbol of those elements of civilization for which the free peoples of the world have been struggling.

With music assuming an ever more important place in American life and with transportation again possible, the thousands who already have visited Tanglewood and those unable to do so during the war will find Mr. Howe's book not only of genuine interest in itself but a keepsake to add to the memories of the Festival that has made Tanglewood a great mecca of music.

6" x 9" 96 pages With photographic illustrations $2.00

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

MAR 17 1946

Familiar Music Festivals Resume

Bach Revival at Bethlehem Signals Return to Prewar Concert Schedule

By Alice Eversman

The healthy signs of a return to normal living is reflected in the resumption of many important features of the country's musical life discontinued during the war. Foremost among these in the East are the famous Bach Festival in Bethlehem, Pa.; the 18th century concerts in historic Williamsburg, Va., and the reopening of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass., closely identified with the Boston Symphony's Berkshire Festival.

In the quiet and beautiful setting of the little town in Pennsylvania, on May 18, Bach's great "Mass in B Minor" will be given in its complete form for the 37th time. The "Kyrie" and "Gloria" will be sung at 2 p.m. on that day and the remainder of the "Mass" at 4:30 p.m. In the morning at 10:30 o'clock, a program of Bach's organ and other orchestral music will be given. The opening day, May 17, will see the performance of the entire "Christmas Oratorio," part I scheduled for 4 p.m. and part II for 8:30 p.m.

The soloists have not been announced but the famous Bach Choir of 240 voices will be heard under the direction of Ifor Jones with accompaniments furnished by Mrs. R. P. Givens and members of the Philadelphia orchestra. The Moravian Trombone Choir will sound the opening of the festival from the church tower.

Bach Choir Story.

The story of the Bach Choir is a remarkable one, going back to December, 1898, when it was organized by J. Fred Wolle, who was its only conductor until the time of his death a few years ago. It was the outgrowth of a former group known as the Bethlehem Choral Union, which was disbanded when the singers refused to learn the "Mass" because of its difficulties. Having previously given the "St. John Passion," the "St. Matthew Passion" and the "Christmas Oratorio," Dr. Wolle was adamant in wishing to have his group sing the greatest of Bach's works. When the singers' resistance could not be overcome, he resigned.

For five years nothing was done until a group of 80 selected singers agreed to study the "Mass" if Dr. Wolle would lead them. The rehearsals covered a period of 14 months, and the great work was finally presented to the public in 1900. Dr. Wolle's absence in California caused another hiatus in the Bethlehem concerts until Charles M. Schwab, the great steel magnate, persuaded the conductor to return and resume the festivals.

Williamsburg Concert.

The candle-lighted ballroom of the Palace of the Royal Governors in Williamsburg will be the scene again of two series of concerts, the first on May 13 through May 15, and the second, May 16 to 18. The opening date is the 240th anniversary of the passing of the act authorizing the building of the palace by the Colonial House of Burgesses in 1706.

The concerts were inaugurated as part of the educational program carried out in the restored city. As before the war, Ralph Kirkpatrick, renowned harpsichordist, will be featured in music for his instrument, the clavichord and the piano. He will be assisted by Alexander Schneider, violinist; Daniel Saidenberg, cellist, and Jennie Tourel, mezzo-soprano of the Metropolitan Opera, the same artists appearing on each series.

The capital of the oldest and largest colony in America was restored by John D. Rockefeller, jr., who sought to re-create the physical environment in which so many events took place in pre-Revolutionary days. Its fame before the war was widespread, and during the recent conflict its beautiful buildings were turned to war service, in particular the caring for of wounded servicemen. The architectural restorations will be continued, and it is expected that another 10 years will be required for its completion.

Berkshire Center.

Suspended for three seasons, the Berkshire Music Center will be reopened for a six-week session from July 1 to August 10. The plan of music study at the center will be under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, with a distinguished faculty including the principal players of the Boston Symphony. The collective aspects of music performance is stressed during the summer period rather than fundamental instruction. Dr. Koussevitzky said "What we want to give our students is constructive advice and a practical method which will stimulate their gifts, round out their abilities gained during their years of study and broaden their acquaintance with music."

The extensive grounds of Tanglewood, presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is the place where Hawthorne wrote "The House of the Seven Gables" and was once the meeting place of Holmes, Emerson and Melville. The original house and barn are for the school's use and nearby are the large shed, where the festival concerts are given, the Theater-Concert Hall, the Chamber Music Hall and a number of studio units.

The members of the center will be permitted to attend the concerts of the festival by the Boston Symphony, the Bach and Mozart programs in the Theater-Concert Hall and the series of four chamber music concerts given in co-operation with the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation besides the student concerts and opera performances.

THIS CLIPPING FROM AMERICAN MILLER
CHICAGO, ILL.

APR -- 1946

Allis-Chalmers on the Air

On Tuesday nights from 9:30 to 10:30 p.m., EST, American Broadcasting Co. launches on the airwaves the great music of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The program is sponsored by Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co.

During each broadcast, of course, Allis-Chalmers tells its listeners something concerning its many activities. On the March 16th program, 80% extraction flour—and the role Allis-Chalmers machinery and engineering have played in its manufacture—were discussed. Following are some quotations from the brief commercial:

"You read recently how President Truman asked us to 'tighten our belts' to help feed a famished world and prevent the political chaos that marches hand in hand with hunger.

"Shortly afterward . . . to save wheat . . . the government ordered American millers to convert to the production of the new 80% extraction flour.

"Millers throughout the country immediately asked for help from Allis-Chalmers. . . . With complete data on hand of every installation they had ever made, Allis-Chalmers flour milling engineers were able to help . . . flour mills convert quickly and efficiently. Today, those mills are turning out an 80% extraction flour of the highest possible baking quality.

"It was only natural that flour millers should turn to Allis-Chalmers . . . they've been doing it for 99 years! In 1847, for example . . . if you had been a miller in that year when America was beginning to expand westward . . . only one factory west of Cleveland could have supplied you with complete flour milling equipment.

"That factory was to grow into the huge Allis-Chalmers organization of today . . . an industry whose machines span the world to serve all industry."

The Tale of Tanglewood

by MARK A. DE WOLFE HOWE
With an Introduction by Serge Koussevitzky

"The word Tanglewood has two vivid associations in the mind of the American public. The first is with Hawthorne's Tanglewood Tales; the second, with a series of Music Festivals conducted in recent summers by Serge Koussevitzky at the country place that bears the same name."

Thus Mark A. De Wolfe Howe, former Pulitzer prize winner, begins the story of the famous Berkshire Music Festival, which has attracted thousands of Americans every summer since it was started in 1934. Mr. Howe, whose love of music and literature are matched with an unassuming learning and wit, takes us from the days when Hawthorne and Melville met as strangers near Stockbridge during a violent thunderstorm, and delightfully brings us to the present, when, under the inspired direction of Serge Koussevitzky, the name Tanglewood has come to stand not only for a kind of American Salzburg but also as a vital symbol of those elements of civilization for which the free peoples of the world have been struggling.

With music assuming an ever more important place in American life and with transportation again possible, the thousands who already have visited Tanglewood and those unable to do so during the war will find Mr. Howe's book not only of genuine interest in itself but a keepsake to add to the memories of the Festival that has made Tanglewood a great mecca of music.

6" x 9" 96 pages With photographic illustrations $2.00

1946 SPRING
CATALOG, VANGUARD PRESS

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

APR 1 - 1946

A Schubert Special.

Right out of the top drawer, too, is the Schubert "Unfinished" Symphony, as turned in by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony, another Victor set (DM 1039—three 12-inch disks). This recording replaces the former one by Messrs. Koussevitzky et al. Schubert's springs of melody bubble over and trickle coolly upon this music. And wherever it might have been fevered (OK, so it's not a verb) by burning passion the tunefulness freshens it to no more than light and bearable melancholy.

The Bostonians play the two movements with special care for the delicate framework. The tonal balances are good and, again, the sound is all music and no scrape.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

APR 3 - 1946

Music

Boston Symphony, Under Koussevitsky's Baton, Gives Concert at Met

BY RUTH TRIPP

Metropolitan Theater was the scene of a delightful reunion of old friends last evening when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitsky, played Beethoven and Brahms to us. A capacity audience gave the orchestra an ovation at the end of one of the most completely satisfactory concerts of this season.

The orchestra was in excellent form. A more delightful choice than the Beethoven Sixth (Pastoral) Symphony could not have been made. It was exactly the music that a tired world should hear. All of the freshness of the countryside was described gracefully in understandable terms. The singing tones of the strings and the velvet quality of the brass instruments contrasted well with the delicacy of the reeds. The thunderstorm was realistic and the merriment of the dancers fairly set one's feet tapping.

We strongly suspect that Dr. Koussevitsky and the orchestra were delivering by means of the "Pastoral" a cordial invitation to come to Tanglewood. No doubt much of the Berkshire country has crept into the playing of this pleasant music. Last evening's reading was full of "the time of the singing of birds."

A strong contrast was afforded in the Brahms First. There are few times in a lifetime of concert going when such a noble interpretation of this great music will be heard. Structurally, this symphony is a marvel. Whether one listened last evening to the unfolding of the design or simply revelled in the glorious sounds, it could not fail to bring one back to a consideration of fundamentals. The beauty of the 4-note phrase for horns and trombones in the third movement, a fragment of a major scale, was worth the whole evening. As for the chorale, which uses primary triads, its inspiration as we heard it played, should last until next season.

There is little need for singling out any section for special praise. It suffices to say that when the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays under Koussevitsky's baton, the whole group achieves a unity of thought which produces what we heard last evening, a superb concert.

This Clipping From
JACKSON, TENN.
SUN

APR 7 - 1946

Arthur Fiedler, master of the viola, celesta and piano and indefatigable conductor of the Boston Pops, conducts the "Pops" for the sixteenth consecutive season when these concerts replace the Boston Symphony at 8:30 p. m. ever[illegible] Saturdays.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

APR 3 - 1946

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Plays Under Koussevitsky at Metropolitan

BY RUTH TRIPP

Metropolitan Theater was the scene of a delightful reunion of old friends last evening when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitsky, played Beethoven and Brahms to us. A capacity audience gave the orchestra an ovation at the end of one of the most completely satisfactory concerts of this season.

The orchestra was in excellent form. A more delightful choice than the Beethoven Sixth (Pastoral) Symphony could not have been made. It was exactly the music that a tired world should hear. All of the freshness of the countryside was described gracefully in understandable terms. The singing tones of the strings and the velvet quality of the brass instruments contrasted well with the delicacy of the reeds. The thunderstorm was realistic and the merriment of the dancers fairly set one's feet tapping.

We strongly suspect that Dr. Koussevitsky and the orchestra were delivering by means of the "Pastoral" a cordial invitation to come to Tanglewood. No doubt much of the Berkshire country has crept into the playing of this pleasant music. Last evening's reading was full of "the time of the singing of birds."

A strong contrast was afforded in the Brahms First. There are few times in a lifetime of concert going when such a noble interpretation of this great music will be heard. Structurally, this symphony is a marvel. Whether one listened last evening to the unfolding of the design or simply revelled in the glorious sounds, it could not fail to bring one back to a consideration of fundamentals. The beauty of the 4-note phrase for horns and trombones in the third movement, a fragment of a major scale, was worth the whole evening. As for the chorale, which uses primary triads, its inspiration as we heard it played, should last until next season.

There is little need for singling out any section for special praise. It suffices to say that when the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays under Koussevitsky's baton, the whole group achieves a unity of thought which produces what we heard last evening, a superb concert.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

APR 7 - 1946

BENJAMIN BRITTEN'S new English opera, "Peter Grimes," will be introduced to U. S. listeners Saturday when the Boston Symphony plays selected passages (WFCI—9:30).

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

APR 7 - 1946

Berkshire Auditions

Auditions will be held here this week for the orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center, of which Serge Koussevitzky is director, at Tanglewood, ~~Lenox, Mass.~~ Applicants for positions should be at Carnegie Hall at 1 o'clock next Thursday afternoon. The school term will run from July 1 to Aug. 10.

CONCERTO HAS ITS DEBUT HERE

POST - APR. 6

Mr. Barbers Work Played at Symphony

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

The current Symphony program, conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky, consists of two immediately contemporary pieces, David Diamond's Rounds for String Orchestra and a 'Cello Concerto by Samuel Barber, and three works from the '70s and '80s of the last century, Strauss' "Don Juan," Moussorgsky's Prelude to "Khovanstchina" and Tchaikovsky's "Francesca da Rimini." The Diamond number was introduced here last December by the orchestra of the New England Conservatory. Barber's concerto, with Raya Garbousova to play the extremely difficult solo part, received yesterday its first public performance.

Mr. Diamond's Rounds are definitely attractive, though the third and final movement is a bit too long for what it contains. The music is vigorous and expertly written, if not conspicuously original. There are reminders of two not entirely dissimilar fugatos in operatic music, namely, the Overture to "The Bartered Bride" and the Overture to "Mme. Butterfly." A contemplative Adagio set between two Allegros makes for admirable contrast. This would seem to be a piece that might remain in the repertory. Present in the audience, Mr. Diamond was invited to the edge of the platform by Dr. Koussevitzky and warmly applauded.

Not so palatable on first acquaintance is Mr. Barber's Concerto. The most agreeable portions are the second movement, which reveals more of lyric impulse than of real melodic invention, and a slow section in the finale, slightly reminiscent of Shostakovitch. Much of the first movement is nervous and jittery. You are reminded of Bernard Shaw's comparison of a 'cello with a bee buzzing in a stone jug. The most successful concertos for this instrument, which does not lend itself too well to the purpose anyway, have been essentially songful in character and it may be doubted whether many artists will find themselves drawn toward Mr. Barber's piece, since it places their instrument for the most part in a not too flattering light. The composer was brought to the stage and he and the much deserving Miss Garbousova were also applauded.

Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra accomplished a brilliant performance of "Don Juan," which stands up better than some of its composer's later creations, and they acquitted themselves well, as usual, in Moussorgsky's imaginative Prelude. "Francesca" is a curious mixture of genius, sheer twaddle and arrant vulgarity. Dr. Koussevitzky did full justice to the genius and, if anything, exaggerated the vulgarity. We have seen him rise to this dual occasion in other works of Tchaikovsky, notably the Fourth Symphony.

MUSIC:

JEWISH TIMES APRIL 4

Moses Smith

One of the key positions in a symphony orchestra is held by the first oboist. By virtue of its range and flexibility and especially its penetrating tone-quality the oboe has been assigned many of the important solo passages in orchestral music from the period before the crystallizatoin of the classical symphony through the present day.

FOR MORE THAN 20 YEARS the first oboist in the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been Fernand Gillet. A product of the Paris Conservatoire (where one of his classmates was Georges Enesco), he was already a well-established Parisian orchestral musician when the war broke out in 1914, and he had etsablished a chamber music society. Gillet served as an aviator in the French Army during the war, belonging to a night bombing squad, and winning a Croix de Guerre. Then resumed his musical career in Paris, playing in leading French Orchestras.

SMITH

HE BECAME F ST OBOIST in the orchestra which Serge Koussevitzky assembled for his celebrated Concerts Koussevitzky in Paris, beginning in 1921, concerts which Koussevitzky continued even after he came to Boston in 1924. And when Koussevitzky had a disagreement with the first oboist of the Boston Orchestra, Georges Longy, during his first season here, it was natural for him to bring Gillet to Boston to assume the important post in the Fall of 1925.

GILLET WAS ON THE SPOT at the outset, whether or not he realized it. Longy had been a member of the Orchestra for 27 years. During that time he had established himself—both at the Boston Symphony concerts and at unusual concerts of his own, which he organized and directed—as not only a fine oboe player but also a superlative musician. As successive conductors assumed direction of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, they listened in amazement—so runs the legend—on first hearing Longy play a solo, and forgot to direct him: it wasn't necessary. Even the great Karl Muck, who, other things being equal, had no fondness for French musicians, bowed to him.

GILLET SOON TURNED OUT to be an exceptionaly reliable, well-schooled musician, even by Longy's standards. During all the years I have been listening more or less regularly to the Orchestra, while Gillet has been a member, I can recall exactly one occasion when he made a clearly recognizable error—and that was in rehearsal. He has often seemed to be a veritable Rock of Gibraltar Guaranteeing protection and security to the other members of the Orchestra.

FEW WOULD CALL HIS PLAYING poetic. It is so straight-forward that the less sensitive might call it unimaginative. This does him an injustice. Gillet is a careful musician and a conscientious one. His playing is always recognition of the fact that his job is not to show off but to serve the composer, to the extent the conductor will let him do so. Thus, for me, at any rate, Gillet's wonderful articulation of the oboe part in Ravel's "Tombeau de Couperin is one of the landmarks in contemporary orchestral playing.

THE OCCASION FOR THIS rambling disquisition is the news—not yet announced at the time this is written—that Gillet is quitting the Orchestra. His resignation will take effect at the end of the Berkshire Festival in August. Thereafter Gillet may play occasionally in chamber music, but otherwise he will devote himself to teaching and coaching (he knows the literature of the piano well.)

TO SAY THAT HE WILL be missed at symphony concerts here is an understatement. It is hard to imagine the sound of the Boston Symphony Orchestra without his characteristic biting tone, without his superlative sense of style. This style (if not quite the same reliability) also characterizes his deportment at the bridge table except when, excited by a big hand, Gillet leaps helter-skelter to initiate the Blackwood convention. It is apparent in the careful way in which he shuffles and deals, the methodical way in which he arranges his cards, and the deliberation with which he plays the successive cards.

Fortunately these last things will continue. I am happy to record private word that Gillet will go on with the Friday night bridge games. What the "boys" are going to do for a fourth for their games on trains while touring, however, is as unsettled as who is going to succeed Gillet as first oboeist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The 22nd concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Raya Garbousova, cellist, was the soloist. The program was as follows:

Rounds for String Orchestra....	Diamond
Concerto for Cello and Orchestra Op. 22	Barber
"Don Juan," Tone Poem, Op 20	Strauss
Prelude to "Khovanstchina" ..	Moussorgsky
"Francesca da Rimini," Orchestral Fantasia Op. 32...........	Tchaikovsky

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

Yesterday's concert was notable for two first performances, David Diamond's Rounds for String Orchestra, which was played for the first time at these concerts, and Samuel Barber's Cello Concerto, which was played for the first time anywhere. Both composers were in the audience and were cordially received.

Mr. Diamond's Rounds are more or less what you would expect, brisk and bustling canons with nice writing for the strings. They sound fresh and exhilarating. They are readily grasped at a first hearing by anyone with a taste for modern counterpoint. The Boston Symphony's strings were heard to admirable advantage in them yesterday.

On the other hand, Mr. Barber's Concerto was not at all easy to take in at a single hearing. I have admired his Violin Concerto and other music and was fully prepared to like this new piece, but, except for the slow movement, I did not find myself in sympathy with it at all. The first movement seemed especially obscure. The finale started out with the high spirits of a concluding rondo and then wasted away in a series of recitatives, practically miniature cadenzas, for the solo instrument.

Cello concertos are notoriously hard to bring off, and I don't think Mr. Barber has turned the trick. His Concerto appealed to me far less than the Dukelsky Cello Concerto heard here earlier this season. I must say, though, that Miss Garbousova seemed to enjoy herself immensely and tossed off a bravura performance that brought much applause from the audience.

The second half of the program gave us Strauss's well known and exciting tone poem, "Don Juan," Moussorgsky's hauntingly lovely Prelude to "Khovanstchina" and Tchaikovsky's "Francesca da Rimini." No comment is needed on the first two, particularly as Mr. Koussevitzky read them with sympathetic fervor. "Francesca da Rimini" was not a good foil for "Don Juan." For all its noise and brilliant passages it dates and it will never equal Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet." Still I suppose it is as well to encourage the performance of the lesser known Tchaikovsky, since we hear so much of the war horses. The score has its merits, but I don't think it was heard to best advantage cheek by jowl with the tone poems of Strauss and Moussorgsky.

The concert will be repeated tonight. Next week the orchestra will be out of town. For the following week the concerts will be held on Thursday afternoon, instead of on Good Friday, and Saturday night. Rachmaninoff's 3rd Piano Concerto with Horowitz, will be played, as well as works by Sibelius, Wagner and Brahms.

MUSIC

ny Concert concert by the Boston Symstra, Serge Koussevitzky as given yesterday afternoon

Hall, Raya Garbousova, e soloist. The program was tring Orchestra.....Diamond

Cello and Orchestra
..........Barber
Tone Poem, Op. 20..Strauss
Khovanstchina".Moussorgsky Rimini," Orchestral
. 32..........Tchaikovsky

XANDER WILLIAMS

y's concert was notable
st. performances, David Rounds for String Orhich was played for the at these concerts, and arber's Cello Concerto, played for the first time Both composers were in ce and were cordially

nond's Rounds are more t you would expect, brisk g canons with nice write strings. They sound exhilarating. They are sped at a first hearing with a taste for modern
nt. The Boston Sym-rings were heard to advantage in them yester-other hand, Mr. Barber's was not at all easy to a single hearing. I have is Violin Concerto and c and was fully prepared s new piece, but, except ow movement, I did not lf in sympathy with it e first movement seemed obscure. The finale

t with the high spirits luding rondo and then ay in a series of recita-tically miniature caden-
e solo instrument.
ncertos are notoriously ing off, and I don't think er has turned the trick.
rto appealed to me far the Dukelsky Cello Con-rd here earlier this sea-st say, though, that Miss a seemed to enjoy her-nsely and tossed off a erformance that brought ause from the audience.
ond half of the program
Strauss' well known and tone poem, "Don Juan," sky's hauntingly lovely o "Khovanstchina" and ky's "Francesca da Rim-comment is needed on the particularly as Mr. Kousead them with sympa-
vor. "Francesca da Rim-not a good foil for "Don or all its noise and brilages it dates and it will al Tchaikovsky's "Romeo t." Still I suppose it is o encourage the perfor-the lesser known Tchai-nce we hear so much of orses. The score has its ut I don't think it was best advantage cheek by the tone poems of Strauss sorgsky.
ncert will be repeated to-ext week the orchestra will town. For the following concerts will be held on afternoon, instead of on day, and Saturday night.
inoff's 3rd Piano Concerto, rowitz, will be played, as works by Sibelius, Wagner
ms.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

By CYRUS DURGIN

Two new pieces stand at the head of this week's program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra: Rounds for String Orchestra, by David Diamond and Samuel Barber's Cello Concerto, in which the soloist is [illegible] Garbousova. The second [illegible] over to three familiar [illegible] poem, "Don Juan," [illegible] the Prelude to [illegible] opera, "Khovantschina," [illegible] orchestral fantasy [illegible] Tchaikovsky, "Francesca da Rimini."

[illegible] is new to these [illegible] Barber Concerto had [illegible] anywhere. [illegible] in purpose and [illegible] scores have something [illegible] common. They are both [illegible] and they are both [illegible]temporary and very ner-[illegible]

[illegible] slow movement of Barber's [illegible]—by far the best of the [illegible] movements—is of a troubled [illegible]. What seems to be [illegible] the same thing that [illegible] Diamond: pre-occupation with intellectual concepts of music. [illegible] both works look simply [illegible] on paper—and to be sure, Diamond's Rounds have a certain astringent vigor.

But in actual performance, the Rounds have only their restless vitality and their keen-witted facture to recommend them, while Barber's Concerto has practically nothing discernible to say. Where Barber triumphs, however, is in his brilliant and probably idiomatic [illegible] of the solo instrument.

He has provided Miss Garbousova with [illegible] but an exacting role which she carries off with victorious brilliance. If opportunity for technical virtuosity were everything, the Barber Concerto would be a world-beater. Miss Garbousova received what amounted to a full-sized "ovation." Both Diamond and Barber were present and bowed to applause.

If "Don Juan" had continued as it began, yesterday afternoon, this performance by Serge Koussevitzky would have been one never to be forgotten. As it was, Strauss' youthful [illegible] striding counterpoint was thrilling, but after the first few pages some of the voices just disappeared into the polyphonic void.

"Francesca da Rimini," however, emerged in a reading that made your hair stand on end—and almost made you forget that if Tchaikovsky hadn't been so fussy about repetition and bridge pasages, "Francesca" would have been shorter but an unflawed masterpiece.

Moussorgsky's mood-music also received superfine treatment, of which one notable detail was Valkenier's last horn phrases of incredible pianissimo.

Berkshire Festival Seats Going Fast

PITTSFIELD, April 8—Most of the higher priced seats in the Tanglewood shed and two-thirds of the boxes have been sold for the Berkshire Festival which opens July 25, according to George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The festival will resume after an interlude of four years due to the war.

Housing Test Solved By Boston Symphony

By the Associated Press

Lenox, Mass., April 9
The Boston Symphony Orchestra is solving a housing problem at its Berkshire music center here, where approximately 300 young men and women, representing every state in the Union, will study this summer.

Using lumber which had been employed to protect the big, open-sided music shed during the period of wartime inactivity, five units, each capable of accommodating 24 students, are being built on the shore of Lake Makheenac.

Blueprints were prepared by Richard Rychtarik, and employees of Tanglewood are furnishing the labor. Young women students will be housed in two private schools, normally closed during the summer.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

APR - 9 1946

Tanglewood Housing Problem Being Solved

LENOX, April 9 (AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra is solving a housing problem at its Berkshire music center here, where approximately 300 young men and women, representing every state in the union, will study this summer.

Using lumber which had been employed to protect the big, open-sided music shed during the period of wartime inactivity, five units, each capable of accommodating 24 students, are being built on the shore of Lake Makheenac.

Blueprints were prepared by Richard Rychtarik and employes of Tanglewood are furnishing the labor. Young women students will be housed in two private schools, normally closed during the summer.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

APR 9 - 1946

Boston Symphony Solves Own Housing Problem

Lenox, Mass., April 9—(AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra is solving a housing problem at its Berkshire Music Center here, where approximately 300 young men and women, representing every state in the Union, will study this Summer.

Using lumber which had been employed to protect big, open-sided music shed during the period of wartime inactivity, five units, each capable of accommodating 24 students, are being built on the shore of Lake Makheenac.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

[illegible] 9-1946

Boston Symphony Solves Housing

Music Shed Protection Lumber at Lenox Used to Provide Quarters for 300 Summer Students.

Lenox, Mass., April 9 (AP)—Boston symphony orchestra is solving a housing problem at its Berkshire music center here, where approximately 300 young men and women, representing every state in the union, will study this summer.

Using lumber which had been employed to protect the big, open-sided music shed during the period of war-time inactivity, five units, each capable of accommodating 24 students, are being built on the shore of Lake Makheenac.

Blueprints were prepared by Richard Rychtarik and employes of Tanglewood are furnishing the labor. Young women students will be housed in two private schools, normally closed during the summer.

Boston Symphony Licks Tanglewood Housing Problem

GLOBE
APR 9

LENOX, April 9 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra is solving a housing problem at its Berkshire music center here, where approximately 300 young men and women, representing every state in the Union, will study this Summer.

Using lumber which had been employed to protect the big, open-sided music shed during the period of wartime inactivity, five units, each capable of accommodating 24 students, are being built on the shore of Lake Makheenac.

Blueprints were prepared by Richard Rychtarik and employees of Tanglewood are furnishing the labor. Young women students will be housed in two private schools, normally closed during the Summer.

Old Lumber Solves Tanglewood Housing

LENOX, April 9 (AP)—Boston Symphony Orchestra is solving a housing problem at its Berkshire Music Center here, where approximately 300 young men and women, representing every state, will study this summer.

Using lumber which had been employed to protest the big, open-sided music shed during the period of wartime inactivity, five units, each capable of accommodating 24 seudents, are being built on the shore of Lake Makheenac.

Blueprints were prepared by Richard Rychtarik and employes or Tanglewood are furnishing the labor. Young women students will be housed in two private schools, normally sloсed during the summer.

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

APR 9 - 1946

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA ENDS HOUSING PROBLEM

LENOX, Mass., April 9. — (AP) Boston Symphony orchestra is solving a housing problem at its Berkshire Music Center here, where approximately 300 young men and women, representing every state in the union, will study this summer.

Using lumber which had been employed to protect the big, open-sided music shed during the period of war-time inactivity, five units, each capable of accommodating 24 students, are being built on the shore of Lake Makheenac.

Blueprints were prepared by Richard Rychtarik and employes of Tanglewood are furnishing the labor. Young women students will be housed in two private schools, normally closed during the summer.

This Clipping From
MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER

APR. 9 - 1946

Music Center Students Build Their Own Homes

LENOX, Mass., April 9—(AP)—Boston Symphony orchestra is solving a housing problem at its Berkshire Music Center here, where approximately 300 young men and women, representing every state in the Union, will study this summer.

Using lumber which had been employed to protect the big, open-sided music shed during the period of war-time inactivity, five units, each capable of accommodating 24 students, are being built on the shore of Lake Makheenac.

Blueprints were prepared by Richard Rychtarik and employes of Tanglewood are furnishing the labor. Young women students will be housed in two private schools, normally closed during the summer.

This Clipping From
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES

APR 10 1946

Solves Housing Shortage

Lenox, Mass., April 10 (AP) — Boston symphony orchestra is solving a housing problem at its Berkshire music center here, where approximately 300 young men and women, representing every state in the union, will study this summer. Using lumber which had been employed to protect the big, open-sided music shed during the period of war-time inactivity, five units, each capable of accommodating 24 students, are being built on the shore of Lake Makheenac. Blueprints were prepared by Richard Rychtarik and employes of Tanglewood are furnishing the labor. Young women students will be housed in two private schools, normallv closed during the summer.

This Clipping From
SALEM, MASS.
NEWS

APR 9 - 1946

Boston Symphony Orchestra Solves Housing Problem

Lenox, April 9 (AP)Boston Symphony orchestra is solving a housing problem at its Berkshire Music center here, where approximately 300 young men and women, representing every state in the union, will study this summer.

Using lumber which had been employed to protect the big, open-sided music shed during the period of wartime inactivity, five units, each capable of accommodating 24 students are being built on the shore of Lake Makheenac.

Blueprints were prepared by Richard Rychtarik and employes of tanglewood are furnishing the labor. Young women students will be housed in two private schools, normally closed during the summer.

This Clipping From
KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL

APR 9 - 1946

LENOX, MASS. IS SOLVING ORCHESTRAL HOUSING

Lenox, Mass., April 9, (AP)—Boston Symphony orchestra is solving a housing problem at its Berkshire music center here, where approximately 300 young men and women, representing every state in the union, will study this summer.

Using lumber which had been employed to protect the big, open-sided music shed during the period of war-time inactivity, five units, each capable of accommodating 24 students, are being built on the shore of Lake Makheenac.

Blueprints were prepared by Richard Rychtarik and employes of Tanglewood are furnishing the labor. Young women students will be housed in two private schools, normally closed during the summer.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

APR 10 1946

Tanglewood School Attracts Students From Every State

Students from every state in the union and from foreign countries have applied to Symphony Hall in Boston for enrollment in the Berkshire Music Center, the school for music in performance founded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1940 and directed by Serge Koussevitzky. The center is to be resumed at Tanglewood July 1 and will continue through the Berkshire Festival, which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct through the last three of the six weeks' school term.

Four of the five departments (conducting, composing, orchestral playing and opera) are for advanced students. The fifth department, which includes choral singing, chamber music and orchestral playing, offers an opportunity for amateurs and those less advanced in musical training to benefit by singing or playing under the most expert guidance, and to partake in Festival and opera, as well as school performances.

Chorus Conductor

The chorus for Beethoven's ninth symphony, which is to conclude the Festival, will be prepared by Robert Shaw. Mr. Shaw will also train a smaller choral group for weekly school concerts. The choral part in Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes," which is to have its American premiere at Tanglewood, will be prepared by Hugh Ross. Mr. Ross will also have a smaller group to study and perform madrigals. The orchestra in this department will be under the direction of Richard Burgin, the concert master and associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Harmonic analysis, solfege, and country dancing will be available to this department, as well as forums, lectures, all Festival and other concerts at Tanglewood. Applications are still being received for all departments of the Center, including the class in conducting under Serge Koussevitzky; the advanced orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky, Stanley Chapple and Leonard Bernstein; the opera department, Dr. Herbert Graf, Boris Goldovsky, Richard Rychtarik; chamber music, Gregor Piatigorsky. Bohuslav Martinu will divide with Aaron Copeland the class in composition. The faculty will otherwise consist of 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, including all the principals.

Auditions for the advanced orchestra will be held in New York Thursday afternoon, April 11, at Carnegie Hall, and in Boston Thursday morning, April 18, at Symphony Hall. The place and date for the final opera auditions will be announced shortly.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

APR 9 - 1946

SYMPHONY SUCCEEDS

Boston Orchestra Solves Housing Problem at Lenox.

Lenox, Mass., April 9.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra is solving a housing problem at its Berkshire music center here, where approximately 300 young men and women, from every State in the Union, will study this Summer.

Using lumber which had been employed to protect the big, open-sided music shed during the period of wartime inactivity, five units, each capable of accommodating 24 students, are being built on the shore of Lake Makheenac.

Blueprints were prepared by Richard Rychtarik and employes of Tanglewood are providing the labor. Coung women students will be housed in two private schools, normally closed during the Summer.

This Clipping From
PORTSMOUTH, N. H.
HERALD-TIMES

APR 9 - 1946

Symphony Solves Housing Problem

Lenox, Mass., April 9 (AP)—Boston Symphony orchestra is solving a housing problem at its Berkshire music center here, where approximately 300 young men and women, representing every state in the union, will study this summer.

Using lumber which had been employed to protect the big, open-sided music shed during the period of wartime inactivity, five units, each capable of accommodating 24 students, are being built on the shore of Lake Makheenac.

Blueprints were prepared by Richard Rychtarik and employes of Tanglewood are furnishing the labor. Young women students will be housed in two private schools, normally closed during the summer.

under Stokowski, of the Mozart Sinfonia Concertante for Woodwinds and Orchestra, where the soloists are excellent, but the orchestra is clearly not suited to the music.

The change in Stokowski's interpretative processes is to be heard in a comparison of his old Philadelphia set of the Beethoven Seventh Symphony with the All American album of the Beethoven Fifth Symphony.

Stokowski fares better with Brahms. This is not to say that his interpretations of this composer's music are flawless ; rather that Brahms permits greater leeway than does Beethoven, Mozart or Haydn. Also, in Brahm's warmer orchestral colours, Stokowski finds congenial material for his peculiar talents. His Brahms, as evidenced in his recording of the First Symphony, glows warmly, and if his readings are not orthodox, they are also not without their appeal.

To claim for Stokowski a niche among the great musicians on the conductor's stand is not correct, if only because of the violations of which he has been guilty. To say he is a musical charlatan without musical feeling is equally incorrect. To say that he is a great conductor, among the greatest of our day, whose erratic nature has resulted in some glorious performances and others which are far less so, is perhaps the closest to the truth. For Stokowski, whatever his excesses and faults, is all of that—a great master of the orchestra and a magnificent conductor. And always, he is Stokowski.

ANALYTICAL NOTES AND FIRST REVIEWS

ORCHESTRAL

Boston Symphony Orchestra (Koussevitzky) : Till Eulenspiegels lustige Streiche, Op. 28 (Till's Merry Pranks) (R. Strauss). H.M.V. DB6268-9 (12 in., 19s. 10d.).

One of the brightest recordings I have ever heard : bright not in the sense of B.Y.P., but of genuine musical joy-in-colour. Till (for my article in which I refer those who may not recall it to the issue of February, 1945) depends a great deal on the inter-action of tone, interpretation, and the clever blend of impetuosity and deliberation in interpretation, which will let the colour tell, and allow the thing to sink into the mind : for, mark, the supreme problem in this tone-poem (not more keenly felt, I think, in any other programme piece) is that so much happens in such short space. Four sides, and you have to absorb Till and all his diverse pranks. Obviously, it cannot be done without a full foreknowledge of the story : pity the early listeners, who had it not: for Strauss, rather unwisely, took the slightly cranky notion to keep the "programme" secret, at the start : a little element of réclame in that, perhaps.

So, there is for me a special interest in listening to the first bars of any Till performance : will he get out colour, tang, espièglerie, volume, pace and impression-of-size ?—for after all, Till must have the larger-than-life size of the great myth—like Paul Bunyan and Pecos Bill, and all such, right back to my favourites of antiquity, Finn MacCool and his kind. By the way, a grand book for all lovers of tall tales and oddities is Botkin's Treasury of American Folklore (New York. Crown Publishers) : one of the many benefactions to me of my good friend Peter Reed, editor of the American Record Guide—who, I notice, in his review of this performance (October, 1945 issue) likes Koussevitzky's "spontaneity." Now, for once this is scarcely the word that I should use. I feel he is very slightly slow, even a trifle ponderous ; but there, who can account for anybody's likes and dislikes save himself ?—and the recording does get the full bloom and tang of the music so splendidly that I easily plump for it. The last I recall, Busch's, was apt for high praise, but this, on balance, jumps well beyond it, tonally. The chamber is not, to my ear, quite ideal (I am thinking of what I hear after one or two detached chords) ; but it also plays its part, doubtless, in the assemblage of colour-pleasures that make up so much of the attraction in Till ; therefore, no one need hesitate to buy these discs, and everyone may hasten to do so happily.

I need not go over the placing of the incidents : this I did with the Busch records a year ago. Points of enjoyment in the first side are the wood-wind flirts. On side 2, early, the conductor gives ample time for the effects to sink in just before the love section (some will prefer this to the swifter method). The richness of the love part has not been excelled, as regards tone : as to spirit, it has. How fine or thick-spirited was Till ? Here is a subject for a Ph.D. thesis ! But you will not hear a performance that gives you more of every chord's full tone, in every one of its instrumental parts. I agree with Reed that the clarity (that is what I mean by the foregoing note) is eminently good. The end of side 2 (street-song) is taken swiftly—all the more contrast with the weighty style in other places. There are passages which I believe I have never heard in quite this balance (one early on side 3, going aloft : after a lifetime of listening one carries many thousands of effects in that amazing storehouse, memory—however poorly one may have deserved such pleasure by ill tendance). This is the pure Bostonian glory, as I remember it fondly in 1939, heard in its own home town, now, rather comically, never to be separated from John Marquand's wickedly amusing study of The Late George Apley, which I implore you, if you have not read it, to get.

Side 3's artillery of percussion is enough to terrify a Hitler, never mind a Till, an Anderson, or even minor criminals. Never was there such a judgment since the Last One, surely. The epilogue needs very wise handling : wise, and affectionate. Back to earth, and yet with a trailing wisp of glory from . . . hell, I suppose. But, as has been said before by wiser folk, if that's hell, I'd prefer to go there with Till, rather than stay here with . . . fill in the blank according to taste and sufferings.

A glorious controlled-rampage, then ; and if the control in the early part is, for me, a wee bit Stalinic, the way in which a great (in two senses) orchestra is made to balance and impel its chords remains a marvel. I see that the American pressings were upon a new plastic which, Reed said, enhanced the quality. Our own, upon the familiar shellac material, has a fine surface, which plays its part in enabling us to get every former ounce of colour, and the little more that makes quite a difference. And in the playing and directing Koussevitzky and his men take on the quality of Paul Bunyans, or supermen.

Philharmonia Orchestra (Süsskind) : Max Gilbert (viola) : Italian Serenade (Hugo Wolf, arr. Reger). Columbia DX1236 (12 in., 6s. 7½d.).

This is a capital, alert orchestra, which I am hearing with keen pleasure. Süsskind I know only from his recordings. He seems a wise man. The Wolf Society of the early thirties (H.M.V.—songs) helped to get the composer into perspective, and, I think, to raise him in the esteem of most of us. He lived scarcely forty-three years (1860-1903), and only recently has his work been collected : indeed, as late as 1936 nearly forty newly found songs were performed for the first time in Vienna. Wolf was at the Vienna Conservatoire in 1875-7, the days of Brahms and Bruckner. It was Wagner who conquered him first, though, and later, Beethoven and the earlier Romantics. He had hard times before he was made assistant conductor at Salzburg. There is a tone poem, Penthesilea, which might be worth recording : the original form of it, richer than the one formerly current, was found long after his death. He also wrote incidental music to Ibsen's Feast at Solhaugen, which is well spoken of. Why not a disc of it, as a change from Grieg-Ibsen ? The Corregidor, his opera of 1895, is worth a few discs, surely. He is known almost entirely to us by the songs (of which he once wrote twenty-four in under five weeks), and this Serenade. Death was from paralysis after insanity. Music was food and drink to this delicate, badly-treated soul from South Styria. Sometimes that Austrian warmth is very richly felt. In the Serenade there is another kind, the Italian. (We recall his Italian Song Book.) The string quartet was his first medium for this : the orchestral form is later. He never heard either, save in his mind. The lyrical warmth and grace welled up in a period of partial rest from song writing : 1892-3. There are well-marked sections. The accompaniment evokes the bright mood ; solo viola begins his serenade. The high-placed romantic continuation soon arrives. The wood-wind is heard when a new idea, in ix-time, comes. There is a handsome key-change here, just before the new feeling of wo three-bit beats in the bar. Then gleams f fire in the sonorous writing (mark the ine resonance of the strings here, and the ite, never harsh, of the attack). The allant pleads his cause with ardour, as the rst section returns, reinforced with other lements of melodic sweetness and strength : Wolf can summon up admirable power, hythmic, running power : one of the otable qualities in his setting of poetry is is sense of feet, of limbs, of the general thletic needs of the poetry, above all. ne can imagine a cantillation to much of is genial, tuneful music. The cello's eclaiming in recit. (middle side 1) is pecially charming, and so is the start of de 2, with its chirpy statement of now miliar matter. The whole thing is on toe. If you like to imagine the lute's ccompaniment here and there, well and ood. The climactic working on side 2, e touches of deeper string tone, are eliciously light—everything kept in the r. The coda comes in reflective spirit, a appy change, as the music winds tenderly its end, in the notes which we heard as began. In its small scope, and by no eans pretentious speech, this piece hits a ark of happy suggestion as well as anything I know. If you don't know it, enjoy refreshment, as perfectly dished up here the players and recorders.

W.R.A.

INSTRUMENTAL

ouis Kentner (piano) : Reverie ; Mazurka No. 6 in A flat (Balakirev). Columbia DX1237 (12 in., 6s. 7½d.).

Kentner is happily recorded, so far as I ave heard his records, in that his varieties f touch seem to come through : there is n actuality in the effects that makes one ppear to be standing just near, and watch- well as hearing him. Balakirev's smaller iano music has not, so far as I recall, ome out here before. He, the chief of the mighty handful" in the 19th century 1836-1910), is best known in this department by Islamey, and orchestrally by Tamara. The present examples, which are n first-class recording style, have a good deal of Lisztian device, sharp, clean lines of melody, a little of the native quirks, just a touch of the "Eastern" Russianism, a bit of Glinka, perhaps, and of course the back-log of Chopin : who could have written an entirely un-Chopinian Mazurka ? For the centenary of Chopin's birth, he arranged orchestrally four of the master's pieces, including one in this mazurka style. Balakirev was a fine pianist, and, said Rimsky-Korsakov, could remember every bar he had ever heard : a dangerous facility, perhaps, for anyone not very loose-limbed in composition. The Reverie has much of the same Chopin-Liszt balance : sweet, direct, friendly, with a tinge of the Russian curve of melody ; open-hearted, a little lush, rising easily to climax ; nothing deep : not even perhaps, a very consistent reverie in the formal sense of something quiet, entirely reflective. That first phrase could not be mistaken for any nation but Russia, any more than the decorative style and the general impulse could be anything but Lisztian. The actual melodic turns of the decoration are purely Balakirev's own : you will best mark this in the last third of the side. The bass is particularly sound and rewarding, in the recording, and the whole comes into the highest category of the day.

Benno Moiseiwitsch (piano) : Clair de Lune, No. 3 "Suite Bergamasque" (Debussy) : Polonaise, No. 9, in B flat (Op. 71, No. 2) (Chopin). H.M.V. C3485 (12 in., 6s. 7½d.).

He begins the Polonaise (one of a posthumously issued set, of about 1827-1830) very slowly—about 66, against the 90 or thereabouts that I should think apt for "Allegro, ma non troppo." The effect is of reflective Nocturne-ism. Quickly, however, we get a flirt, and the dancing rhythm of high spirits, with a notably highly decorated outline (for a Polonaise). There is a light tone about this that is distinctive and delicious. As Gerald Abraham has remarked of the set in general, a touch of Weber is marked : I find it in this quality of lightness, and in a certain cavalier spirit, not quite the high Polish big-bow-wow manner of the aristocratic Polonaise, which was rather a procession than a dance. This may be a bit fanciful, but I like the notion of Weber's very different touch having slightly guided Chopin's hand, or spirit, in these pieces. I am reminded of bits of the Freischütz, e.g., and of Oberon : only tiny traits, but nice to note. Interesting is the second part of the middle section (it starts at mid-side, with an imitation of the first part). The bits of left-hand reflection, and the (in effect) little development he indulges in, are first-rate : not least in key (the sudden change to A after ten bars of this part is fine). This middle section is a complete little piece in itself, as to form (A, B, A).

The same happily recorded, round tone is embodied in the Debussy, if not quite, for me, the full romantic delicacy of poetry. This player is better suited in the sharper-edged drawings. Yet he shows a cordial sense of the progression of the clouds across the moon. This is early Debussy, of course—1889-90 was the time of the first form (revised 1905). He was then about twenty-eight, and had written La Demoiselle élue. The placing Clair de lune in a Bergomask suite seems rather curious. The bergomask was originally a rustic dance (M.N.D.—the clodhoppers' play, mentions it). The other three pieces in the set are Prelude, Minuet and Passepied, the two last-named having of course an ancient significance. It is interesting to see how simple are Debussy's materials : a great part of his mastery consisted in his use, formally considered, of these (I mean, as regards the smaller elements of form : placing over against each other the phrases, bringing in a very slightly unusual harmony —that art of placing which is so fine, and too little regarded). These piano records today allow the thoughtful lover of technique—and who, after a few years of gramophony, is not among them ?—to turn over upon his tongue all manner of technical tastes and conceits, in the dishing up of which Debussy was so choice a chef.

W.R.A.

OPERATIC and SONGS

Miss Ada Alsop tells me, in a charming note, that she comes not from Yorkshire but from County Durham. Her house is only three-quarters of a mile from the border of the two counties, but a miss is as good as a mile !

I have also heard from Decca that by an oversight the record with the "tiny mishap" I remarked upon in Cara Selve was put out instead of the "master," which is flawless. The records were all withdrawn before actually being issued to the public : so that you can be assured of getting the right one and Miss Alsop, who at once realised what had happened on reading my remarks, can now rest happy. I can imagine what a shock it must have been to her.

Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra of New York (Rodzinski) : Tristan and Isolde (Excerpts). Prelude to Acts 1 and 3. Helen Traubel (soprano) : Isolde's Narrative, Act 1, Scene 3. Isolde's Love Death, Act 3, Scene 4. (Wagner) Sung in German. Columbia LX941-5 (12 in., 49s. 7d.) Auto LX8517-21.

This recording is a large undertaking and it was with a sense of excitement that I put on the first record of the Prelude Act 1 (which is spaced out on three sides). Apart from the fact, for which everyone will be prepared, that the cellos did not begin, as Wagner directs, double piano and made a crescendo of disproportionate size, the tempo, tone, and clarity of the playing aroused lively expectation. The conductor's approach was, if somewhat detached, free of emotional over-emphasis. On the next side the phrase marked animando shows a disturbing change of level and there is little buoyancy in the upward rush of the strings which expresses the rising passion of the lovers. More serious still, the strings lack weight to such a degree at the great climax (on the third side) that the result is far below the overwhelming crisis intended by Wagner, and leaves one with an exasperated vision of someone controlling down the sound. The timpani, at the recapitulation of the opening bars, are practically inaudible and, in general, all the way through this set the bass is on the feeble side.

The Prelude to the Third Act is, however, much more successful. The strings make a beautiful ascent at the points where Wagner

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

APR 1 0 1946

SYMPHONY SUCCEEDS

Boston Orchestra Solves Housing Problem at Lenox.

Lenox, Mass., April 9.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra is solving a housing problem at its Berkshire music center here, where approximately 300 young men and women, from every State in the Union, will study this Summer.

Using lumber which had been employed to protect the big, open-sided music shed during the period of wartime inactivity, five units, each capable of accommodating 24 students, are being built on the shore of Lake Makheenac.

Blueprints were prepared by Richard Rychtarik and employes of Tanglewood are providing the labor. Coung women students will be housed in two private schools, normally closed during the Summer.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

APR 1 0 1946

Music Center Plans Large Enrollment

Courses of Study to Be Conducted at Lenox, Mass.

Students from every state in the Union and from foreign countries have applied to Symphony Hall in Boston for enrollment in the Berkshire Music Center, the school for music in performance founded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1940 and directed by Serge Koussevitzky. The Center is to be resumed at Tanglewood (in Lenox, Mass.) next July 1 and will continue through the Berkshire Festival, which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct through the last three of the six weeks' school term.

Four of the five departments (conducting, composing, orchestral playing and opera) are for advanced students. The fifth department, which includes choral singing, chamber music and orchestral playing, offers an opportunity for amateurs and those less advanced in musical training to benefit by singing or playing under the most expert guidance, and to partake in Festival and opera, as well as school performances. The chorus for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, which is to conclude the Festival will be prepared by Robert Shaw. Mr. Shaw will also train a smaller choral group for weekly school concerts.

The choral part in Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes," which is to have its American premiere at Tanglewood, will be prepared by Hugh Ross. Mr. Ross will also have a smaller group to study and perform madrigals. The orchestra in this department will be under the direction of Richard Burgin, the concert master and associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Harmonic analysis, solfege, and country dancing will be available to this department, as well as forums, lectures, all Festival and other concerts at Tanglewood. Applications are still being received for all departments of the Center, including the class in conducting (under Serge Koussevitzky), the advanced orchestra (under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, Stanley Chapple and Leonard Bernstein), the Opera Department (Dr. Herbert Graf, Boris Goldovsky, Richard Rychtarik), chamber music (Gregor Piatigorsky). Bohuslav Martinu will divide with Aaron Copland the class in composition. The faculty will otherwise consist of thirty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, including all the principals.

Auditions for the advanced orchestra will be held in New York Thursday afternoon, at Carnegie Hall, and in Boston Thursday morning, April 18, at Symphony Hall. The place and date for the final opera auditions will shortly be announced.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

APR 1 0 1946

Koussevitzky Programs Copland's Americana

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

WERE IT NOT for Dr. Koussevitzky our symphony programs would be virtually static. Only from him have we had samplings of William Schuman, Shostakovitch and Copland, or of Vaughn-Williams, Stravinsky and the more dissonant pages of Sibelius. He has been artful about it, not pressing these flavors upon us, but sandwiching them palatably between nicely trimmed layers of the naturalized classics.

It was thus he served up Copland's "Appalachian Spring" Suite last night after Haydn's G major Symphony, No. 88, and before the Second Symphony of Brahms to give us the season's final concert in the Bushnell Series.

The audience was patient, as it has learned to be with Koussevitzky—isn't "modern" music a foible of his?—and as one music lover, after hearing the Copland piece, hoped politely during intermission that "Brahms would make up for it."

There was, though, a prolonged demonstration during which the composer was prevailed upon by Dr. Koussevitzky to show himself and finally came down the isle, vaulted to the stage and took repeated bows in company with the smiling conductor and alone amid the applause of the orchestra.

* * *

IT IS a bit prim and fussy of us to take such music as this pillwise. Copland's Suite is emphatically today's music, to be played again and again until it is so familiar that we might look forward to it as making up for indifferently-done Brahms (which wasn't the kind we heard last night).

Writing recently on modern poetry, Lloyd Frankenberg has said: "An inability to comprehend the relationship of a modern work to the age in which we live casts doubt on our capacity for understanding past masterpieces, related as they are to ages in which we do not, except vicariously, participate."

This truth can with profound effect be applied to our concert programs. "Appalachian Spring" has the aroma of homespun United States and, unlike much contemporary composition is virtually devoid of sophistication. There are singable tunes, cherishable tunes in it, even besides the Shaker spiritual which is apotheosized.

Rhythmic and atmospheric values are equally important in this work but, despite its ballet motivation and its splendidly kinetic life, it is, for me, essentially a tone painting, an American eclogue. Nothing in music is more quietly climactic than the seraphic song of its closing pages.

* * *

THE BOSTON leader seems never to tire of the G major Symphony of Haydn, as why should anybody with his perception of its mannered beauties? He feels it hugely and the listener cannot help but go along. Here are subtleties which would be lost in a less transparent orchestra. Its expressiveness is something beyond what we ordinarily look for in Haydn, but that is because other interpreters seldom get under the notes. The mock pathos of the minuet's trio is only one of the inimitable Koussevitzky touches.

His Brahms had the ozone of Tanglewood pines for, with the passage of time and under the ministrations of the Boston musicians, Brahms is becoming as bucolic as Copland set out to be in his Suite.

The Second Symphony was prevailingly serene, purged of philosophical implication. Neither the few stentorian periods of the first movement nor the joyous turbulence of the last disturbed its complete adjustment to healthy and evocative musical thought.

To enlarge upon the peerless technique of the Boston Orchestra would be gratuitous. Suffice that all its traditions were confirmed in this concert.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

APR 1 1 1946

Berkshire Auditions Today

Auditions for the advanced orchestra in this summer's session of the Berkshire Music Center, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be held in Carnegie Hall this afternoon at 1 o'clock.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

APR 1 1 1946

Berkshire Auditions Today

Auditions for the advanced orchestra in this summer's session of the Berkshire Music Center, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be held in Carnegie Hall this afternoon at 1 o'clock. The session runs from July 1 to Aug. 10. The orchestra will be directed by Serge Koussevitzky, Stanley Chapple and Leonard Bernstein.

This Clipping From
KINGSTON, N. Y.
FREEMAN

APR 11 1946

Applications Being Received For Tanglewood Music School

Students from every state in the Union and from foreign countries have applied to Symphony Hall in Boston for enrollment in the Berkshire Music Center, directed by Serge Koussevitzky. The Center will be resumed at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., July 1, and will continue for six weeks.

One department, which includes choral singing, chamber music and orchestral playing, offers an opportunity for amateurs and those less advanced in musical training. The chorus for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, which is to conclude the Festival, will be prepared by Robert Shaw. Mr. Shaw will also train a smaller choral group for weekly school concerts. The choral part in Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes," which is to have its American premiere at Tanglewood, will be prepared by Hugh Ross. Mr. Ross will also have a smaller group to study and perform madrigals. The orchestra in this department will be under the direction of Richard Burgin, the concert master and associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Harmonic analysis, solfege, and country dancing will be available to this department, as well as forums, lectures, all Festival and other concerts at Tanglewood.

Applications are still being received for all departments of the center, including the class in conducting (under Serge Koussevitzky), the advanced orchestra (under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, Stanley Chapple and Leonard Bernstein), the opera department (Dr. Herbert Graf, Boris Goldovsky, Richard Rychtarik), chamber music (Gregor Piatigorsky). Bohuslav Martinu will divide with Aaron Copland the class in composition. The faculty will otherwise consist of 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, including all the principals.

This Clipping From
PORTSMOUTH, N. H.
HERALD-TIMES

APR 11 1946

Boston Symphony Resumes Music Center in Berkshire's Tanglewood

Students from every state in the Union and from foreign countries have applied to Symphony hall, Boston, for enrollment in the Berkshire Music Center, the school for music in performance founded by the Boston Symphony orchestra in 1940 and directed by Serge Koussevitzky. The center is to be resumed at Tanglewood (in Lenox Mass.) next July 1, and will continue through the Berkshire Festival, which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct through the last three of the six weeks' school term.

Four of the five departments (conducting, composing, orchestral playing and opera) are for advanced students. The fifth department, which includes choral singing, chamber music and orchestral playing, offers an opportunity for amateurs and those less advanced in musical training to benefit by singing or playing under the most expert guidance, and to partake in festival and opera, as well as school performances.

Features American Premier

The chorus for Beethoven's Ninth symphony, which is to conclude the Festival, will be prepared by Robert Shaw. Mr. Shaw will also train a smaller choral group for weekly school concerts. The choral part in Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes," which is to have its American premiere at Tanglewood, will be prepared by Hugh Ross. Mr. Ross will also have a smaller group to study and perform madrigals. The orchestra in this department will be under the direction of Richard Burgin, concert master and associate conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Harmonic analysis, solfege, and country dancing will be available to this department, as well as forums, lectures, all Festival and other concerts at Tanglewood. Applications are still being received for all departments of the center, including the class in conducting (under Dr. Koussevitzky), advanced orchestra (under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky, Stanley Chapple and Leonard Bernstein), opera department (Dr. Herbert Graf, Boris Goldevsky, Richard Rychtarik), chamber music (Gregor Piatigorsky).

Faculty of 30 Musicians

Bohuslav Martinu will divide with Aaron Copland the class in composition. The faculty will otherwise consist of 30 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, including all the principals.

Auditions for the advanced orchestra will be held in New York today at Carnegie hall, and in Boston Thursday morning, April 18, at Symphony hall. The place and date for the final opera auditions will shortly be announced.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

APR 1 1 1946

Boston Symphony Plays Brahm's2d,Haydn's88th

Koussevitzky Leads Final Evening Concert of Season

The fifth and final evening concert of the season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction in Carnegie Hall last night brought no unfamiliar music. The program began with Haydn's Symphony No. 88 in G, continued with Copland's Spite from the Ballet "Appalachian Spring," and closed, with Brahms's Second Symphony.

After a rather listless, thick-sounding performance of the Haydn Symphony, matters brightened considerably. Mr. Copland's Suite, although perhaps a trifle too long, is beyond question one of his most arresting, worthwhile products. It was unfolded with affectionate discernment by Mr. Koussevitzky and invested with transparently shimmering tones by the orchestra.

The most compelling discourse, however, was that of Brahms's Seond Sympthy. It is not often that so flawlessly integrated, poetically sensitive, eloquent and tonally sumptuous an account of this work is vouchsafed.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

APR 11 1946

Koussevitzky Ends Concert Season Here

Copland's 'Appalachian Spring' Features Bushnell Program

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Sarge Koussevitzky, was presented in the [illegible] concert of the Bushnell series in the Memorial auditorium Tuesday night. The program:

[illegible] 88 Haydn
[illegible] Spring Suite Copland
[illegible] No. 2 Brahms

[illegible] molten performance of the Brahms opus 73 by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston orchestra, the Bushnell symphonic season came to an impassioned close Tuesday night. It was the Boston's second but Dr. Koussevitzky's first appearance here this season and he was accorded an ardent and sustained welcome and farewell by the audience. Although not too smoothly played, it had been a concert interpreted with ultra-romantic vividness by the conductor and set out with surging intensity by the orchestra.

Done here for the first time was Aaron Copland's Suite from the ballet "Appalachian Spring" which he had composed two years ago for Martha Graham who was intent on depicting "a pioneer celebration in the spring" around a Pennsylvania farmhouse newly-built for a betrothed couple, in the early part of the last century. The marks of necessity, that is, of providing a definitely rhythmic foundation for dance, of bearing out a scenario and of matching Miss Graham's highly-individual art outlook, are naturally upon it. But the score is far from confined by them and the result has been a wealth of fine, free, inventive and beautifully constructed music, another vigorous success for Mr. Copland. Mr. Copland attended the concert and came to the stage to enjoy his success.

Moods And Atmosphere.

The Suite is in eight sections and appears to undertake the dual task of creating an atmospheric background redolent of an epoch and a season, and of catching up the moods and emotions of the characters of this dance-tale. For the former purpose Mr. Copeland employs an idiom strongly reminiscent of "The Quiet City," while for the latter, dancier sections, an earlier, rhythm-minded Copland is in evidence. Despite many complexities of writing, the over-all impression of the work is essentially one of simplicity, paradoxical as this may sound. As usual, the writing melodically and harmonically is open and steers steadily away from sweetness. There are impressions of remoteness on the one hand, and occasionally of emptiness. The Suite, for concert performance is a little long, without the ballet action to help sustain it dramatically.

The acid test of "Appachalian Spring," whether it conveys the impression of early antics in early America, is not met quite so well by Mr. Copland. It doubtless was of a piece with Miss Graham's ballet, but like the movement throughout all our contemporary arts, consciously to produce an "American art," like Grant Wood's painting for example, the underlying spirit of "Appachalian Spring" seems artificial, unauthentic, part of an art-convention rather than the real thing.

Old Favorites Resplendent.

The concert opened with Haydn and closed with Brahms, and with Dr. Koussevitzky almost more famous for his presentations of these two composers, than of any others there is hardly anything to be said at this late date but what will appear ineffectual repetition. Even so, his interpretation of the third section of the Haydn Symphony, done with such wit, and of the closing movement, done with such incredible elan last night, must be noted as one of his triumphant occasions with this composer.

The performance of the Brahms Second Symphony was an incandescent from end to end. On occasion Dr. Koussevitzky has taken the orchestra through the opening movement with more serenity, but last night he plunged into even the initial measures with tremendous fervor and proceeded to give the entire four movements the growing intensity and the Olympian dimension which somehow he usually seems to reserve for the Festival concerts at Stockbridge where his ardors seem customarily heightened. Maybe, with the Festival being renewed this year, he is already working toward that pitch.

Except for the fact that the ensemble did not seem continually sound last night, permitting small disarrangements, the orchestra gave fervent accounts of all three works last night. If details might have been smoothed out, the performance as a whole was one of impact, zeal and impelling intensity.

Everybody seemed to think that the new auditorium lights at the Bushnell were just about the biggest improvement since the whale-oil lamp went out.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

APR 11 1946

SUITE BY COPLAND HEARD AT CONCERT

Koussevitzky Conducts Boston Symphony in Composer's 'Appalachian Spring'

By OLIN DOWNES

Aaron Copland's suite from the ballet "Appalachian Spring" was the most modern music on the program given by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night in Carnegie Hall. The music was heard for the second time here this season, and its repetition was more than welcome. For this is certainly one of the best of Mr. Copland's scores, and of them all the most tender and poetical in character.

In it the folk element is strongly present; it is neither disguised nor disfigured by affectation. A modern composer takes this material as his own—as a musical substance that has for him a beauty as of today—and not as some archaic relic of an imaginary past. The music is simple and full of feeling. It is admirably orchestrated, with fine taste and a sure hand. Some of the movements become a little long and have a degree of sameness of coloring without the dancers on the stage. But the sum of it is a charming and sincere score, by a composer whose craftsmanship develops and acquires fresh distinction as he advances. The performance was a wonder of delicacy, finish and imagination.

Mr. Copland was present in the upper part of the house and, he was repeatedly called upon to acknowledge the applause.

The two classics of the evening were the Haydn G major Symphony numbered on last night's program, 88, and Brahms' Second, the latter work receiving a memorable reading. With Haydn it was not the same. His work sounded in the manner of a polite curtain-raiser to the entertainment to come, rather than the voice of Haydn the peasant-born, Haydn the architect and the virile precursor of Beethoven.

In other words, we like our Haydn rougher, more zestful, and with a broader humor. We do not like his slow movement taken so portentously, and we like to hear the off-key strokes of the violins over the drone bass in the trio of the minuet for what they are—broad strokes of shrewd peasant humor. Perhaps no other orchestra can play the finale with such finish and at such a tempo as this one. Granted, but let us have a sharper edge to the jest, and not quite such polished manners.

Or was there the thought of contrasting Haydn, at the beginning, with the more rugged manner of Johannes Brahms, whose second symphony brought the end? The symphony was gloriously played. It also is primavera. Not only in the Appalachians was it spring! The performance of the symphony had equally the lyricism and the ruggedness of Brahms' style. Seldom has a conductor so sustained the great line of the slow movement, or imparted more grace, brilliancy, power, as the passage might be, to the whole work. Every voice in the orchestra sang; every instrument glowed with color refracted, as it were, from choir to choir. With this well-known symphony Dr. Koussevitzky and his men achieved a summit of their New York season.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

APR 11 1946

BOSTONIANS PLAY COPLAND'S MUSIC

By ARTHUR V. BERGER.

Sérge Koussevitzky achieved a level of excellence last night that was as satisfying as those moments of early cinema days when an out-of-focus projection machine used to regain its focus. This was especially true of the Brahms Second Symphony which the magnificent Boston Symphony was maneuvered by its leader to present with a clarity we had almost forgotten is inherent in the work as we hear it in our concert halls these days. The Carnegie Hall audience was also set right again on a much newer work, Aaron Copland's ballet suite, "Appalachian Spring." In less than two years of its existence it has been subjected to the distortions not only of the itinerant orchestras of a dance company, but of some of our reputable musical organizations as well.

Several of our nation's orchestras, including our own Philharmonic-Symphony, started out the season with Copland's Pulitzer Prize score. In programming it on the first of his final pair of New York concerts, Koussevitzky completes the circle. All of this is very encouraging to contemplate, and it restores our confidence in the times to note that a native work of so much beauty, precision and inspiration is properly acknowledged so soon after its completion. And last night in particular it was a delight to discover how superbly its orchestration, even when every one is fully participating, sets all the parts in clearly audible relief in a well-balanced performance like this one. The music has extraordinary spatiousness and the sudden burst into action after the slow beginning is as exhilarating as the return to calm at the end is eloquent.

One might take objection to several details in Koussevitzky's version of Haydn's Symphony in G major, No. 88, which opened the program—notably the drawn out presentation of the Largo. But the conductor has rarely been in such excellent form as he was in last night's concert as a whole.

This Clipping From
WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE

APR 11 1946

Pupils Applying For Berkshire Music School

Students from every state, and from foreign countries, have applied to Symphony Hall in Boston for enrollment in the Berkshire Music Center, the school for music in performance founded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1940 ~~and directed~~ by Serge Koussevitzky. The center is to be resumed at Tanglewood, Lenox, next July 1 and will continue through the Berkshire Festival, which Dr. Koussevitsky will conduct through the last three of the six weeks' school term.

Applications are still being received for all departments of the Center, including the class in conducting (under Serge Koussevitsky), the advanced orchestra (under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky, Stanley Chapple and Leonard Bernstein), the opera department (Dr. Herbert Graf, Boris Goldovsky, Richard Rychtarik), chamber music (Gregor Piatigorsky). Bohuslav Martinu will divide with Aaron Copland the class in composition. The faculty will otherwise consist of 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, including all the principals.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

APR 11 1946

Music

Copland Deserves to Rank with Best

By ROBERT BAGAR.

Today rubbed friendly elbows with yesterday and the day before at the Boston Symphony concert in Carnegie Hall last night, when Aaron Copland, Brahms and Haydn shared a three-part program to the utter delight of a large audience. Mr. Copland's suite from the ballet "Appalachian Spring" was fit company for the Brahms Second and the Haydn G major, No. 88. And it is becoming increasingly evident, by the way, that modern music is taking a feature place on orchestral programs, that is to say, a place of equal importance with that of time-tried masterpieces.

Robert Bagar.

Of course, nobody knows for certain whether the music Copland wrote for the Martha Graham company will mean much a century hence. The chances are that it will, I think. But the important thing is that it is plenty good right here and now. It is one of those pieces that suit their balletic requirements without loss of individuality and, besides, prove good concert stuff on their own.

"Appalachian Spring" is as good a repertory work as the composer's "El Salon Mexico," and "Music for the Theater," neither of which, regrettably, is scheduled with any great regularity. Each of these shows the Copland refinement in orchestration, the right contrasts; the sensitive feeling for the subject and its possibilities.

And there isn't a touch of fussiness in any of them. All is right, if not overwhelming, all goes well and with order and musical finish. The "Appalachian Spring" Suite is just about the best orchestral piece Mr. Copland has written (I think I've heard most of them). It has charm and it has immediacy. It belongs to now. I wouldn't say as much for his "Lincoln Portrait," but that's another story.

The Boston Symphony, directed con amore by Serge Koussevitzky, did a particularly good job of playing the Copland. It did not, however, in the case of Haydn. The maestro seemed preoccupied with minute detail. Preoccupation is OK up to a point, but beyond that it becomes preciousness.

That's what it was last night in the G major Symphony, preciousness, and it made of virtually each note a sophisticated mot. Haydn in delicate silks and satins. Haydn curtseying like a salon elegant. He's made of hardier stuff than that, and, I believe, especially so in this composition.

The Brahms Second is by no means a foolproof Symphony. It isn't one of those things that play themselves. And the Koussevitzky lyricism equaled the composer's, for such was the parity of viewpoints—granted that Brahms does sing in this work.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

APR 12 1946

Koussevitzky Hails Backers Of Orchestra

Words of encouragement for workers who are now seeking $30,000 to support the Springfield Orchestra association, have come from Serge Koussevitzky, distinguished conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

In a telegram read to campaign workers at a report meeting this afternoon, Dr Koussevitzky says, "May I congratulate you and the board of the Springfield Orchestra association on the splendid efforts that promote musical life in your community by giving the Springfield Orchestra your interest and support. Please extend my heartiest good wishes to Alexander Leslie and the members of your orchestra."

Alexander Leslie, conductor of the Springfield Symphony, studied under Dr Koussevitzky, and the Boston maestro has watched the work of the Springfield group from its inception.

Besides supporting the Springfield symphony, the Orchestra association also sponsors the Young People's Symphony, the Quadrangle Pops, the Symphony chorus and the YPS Scholorship Fund.

Prescott Barrows Springfield pianist, will be a guest artist at a Springfield symphony concert next season. Joseph Szigeti, violinist, will also be featured, as will William Primrose, violist.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

APR 11 1946

Bostonians At Carnegie

The usual capacity audience attended last night's concert of the Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall and manifested their enjoyment in the orchestra's highly accomplished ensemble performance by applauding heartily each of the three compositions that made up the evening's program.

Dr. Koussevitzky and his Bostonians began the program with Haydn's Symphony in G major. It must be said that the symphony itself, thrice familiar, is always a new and engrossing experience when granted the interpretation that it received last night. The sheer tone quality and the brilliance of the orchestra would have aroused extravagant plaudits under any circumstances.

The work is characteristically melodious, subtle and refreshing. The art of writing for stringed instruments as Haydn and Mozart knew it has remained a lost one since their time and in the string sections of the Boston Symphony Dr. Koussevitzky had an unsurpassed instrument for the delineation of its phrases.

The second offering of the evening was Copland's suite from the ballet "Appalachian Spring." The music was especially written for Martha Graham, exponent of the modern dance.

The work is deeply imaginative, interesting and expressive in instrumentation. One nevertheless felt that the composer intended the work more as an accompaniment to the ballet itself and consequently without the action of the dance, as a mere orchestral piece, its effect was not quite gratifying.

Brahm's Symphony No. 2 in D major brought the program to a close.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST

APR 11 1946

Words and Music

The Boston Symphony Ends Wednesday Series

By Edward O'Gorman

With their concert at Carnegie Hall last night, Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra took their local Wednesday evening series and entered it in the column marked finished business.

For this last program, Dr. Koussevitzky had assembled classical, romantic and modern works, a program, without question, designed to send everyone home with a warm, contended glow on.

Saving himself for more energetic efforts. Dr. Koussevitzky opened the concert with a simple, unaffected performance of Haydn's Symphony No. 88, in G Major. Haydn is a lily which Dr. Koussevitzky rarely, if ever, gilds. and there was no sign in this, one of the most cheerful and optimistic symphonies of the master, of an expression or interpretative device that one couldn't be sure of finding in black and white in the score. This was Haydn as Haydn put it down, innocent of any applied sophistication, and in the clear, balanced accents of the Boston Symphony this is always enjoyable Haydn.

There was more excitement, if not the same clean precision, a little later in the suite from Aaron Copland's "Appalachian Spring."

This suite is a work which sounds better and better, and it sounded first-rate when it made its debut. Last night it sounded better than ever, although as performances go I wouldn't say that this was a model of smooth accuracy. Some of the trickier measures, of uneven meter, had a let's-run-through-it-once feeling. But it was the spirit of the music, a spirit which Dr. Koussevitzky seems to feel and understand just a little bit better than the next fellow, that came through brilliantly, and there was a generous round of applause for the music and its composer.

With the Symphony No. 2, in D Major, of Brahms, Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra ended the program on a note pretty familiar to all of the Boston Symphony patrons. This was a sturdy, well-rounded performance, moving at a pace that never lagged. For this, the orchestra was in perfect form and energetic spirits, and in most ways it was the evening's best.

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE

APR 12 1946

Boston Offers Radio Premiere Of 'Peter Grimes' Music Tomorrow

The first radio performance of excerpts from Benjamin's Britten's opera, Peter Grimes, will be performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow, ~~in its~~ regular broadcast concert heard over CFCF and the ABC network at 9.30 p.m.

There is good reason why the Boston Symphony is giving the premiere hearing of this much-discussed British work, in preference to other leading American orchestras. It was the Boston aggregation's conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who commissioned ~~Peter Grimes~~ for performance by the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Centre at Tanglewood. The work will be heard, in its entirety for the first time in this country, in August at the Berkshire Festival.

Peter Grimes was given first in London, at Sadler's Wells Theatre, last summer and won immediate accolades. Twelve performances were given at that time and a similar number this year at the same theatre. In addition to the Tanglewood presentation this August, there is a possibility of a New York performance to follow. Other performances are scheduled in Basle, Zurich, Antwerp and Stockholm.

Benjamin Britten, who was born in 1913 in England, is considered one of the leading contemporary British composers. He has for his librettist, Montagu Slater, who found his subject in a poem, The Borough, by the 19th Century writer, George Crabbe.

Dr. Koussevitzky will play the passacaglia and the interludes, Dawn and Sunday Morning. The first excerpt comes between the two scenes of the second act. Dawn is an interlude between the prologue and the first act and connects them without a break, preparing for the "cold, gray morning" on the sea coast. Sunday Morning leads into Act 11.

The remainder of the Boston Symphony program includes the Prelude and Allegro for Organ and Strings by Piston, with E. Power Biggs as soloist, and the suite from the Copland ballet, Appalachian Spring.

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS

APR 12 1946

Boston Symphony

Dr. Koussevitzky and Orchestra Brilliant in Griffith Event at the Mosque

BY ALAN BRANIGAN

Boston Symphony and Brahms combined with magical effect to provide one of the great moments of the musical season last night at the Mosque. The Bostonians, led by the revered and exquisitely talented Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, played the Fourth Symphony in E Minor as the crowning diadem of Griffith Music Foundation's final regular concert of the season.

Two works and composers completely new to Newark made up the remainder of the program—David Diamond's "Rounds for String Orchestra" and the "Passacaglia and Four Sea Interludes" from Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes."

Significantly enough, the applause that followed these novel works was completely enthusiastic and should have gone far to encourage local sponsors of concerts t include new music along with acknowledged masterpieces in future programs. More than 3,500 were present last night, which showed that only the extremely timorous were frightened away by the spectre of modern music.

Satisfying

The foundation's fondness for Dr. Koussevitzky is a love affair that should find widespread approval. Of all the visiting orchestras and conductors, this is the one that satisfies most thoroughly.

The whole-souled sincerity of the aging leader, his dynamic, vivid style, the unshakeable authority of his every action are reflected in the orchestra's performances. In every aspect of modern orchestral technique, the group is at the peak of its form. This was its second visit here this season, each time drawing close to capacity houses.

One could not have wished a more magnificent performance of the famous Brahms work, a symphony of vast complications and splendor. The string tone was rich and flexible. The unusually large brass and wind choirs struck perfect pitch throughout. The finale, a gigantic chaconne, sang vibrantly in every episode. The audience was reluctant to let the men go at the end of the playing. We would have liked to have heard it all over again.

Britten's work is in the impressionistic vein, partaking somewhat of Debussy and Delius in its evocation of natural phenomena. This was most poignantly brought forth in the seascapes, done in four contrasting forms. The English composer uses a complex tonal palette like that of Richard Strauss, to convey his music and succeeds beautifully in limning his thoughts.

Coloring

The rush of the sea, and its ceaseless motion are strongly depicted in varying rhythms and strange instrumental combinations, like harp, flute and celeste, are utilized to touch up the colorations. The Passacaglia is especially striking in its variations, mostly tragic in import, on a somber theme played against an off-beat rhythm in the bass.

Diamond, young American, writes brightly for strings in his new piece. The whole-tone scale is employed with lavish hand throughout the three movements in the suite. An abstract exercise in counterpoint, these rounds are not particularly moving emotionally. But they do exude a sense of gayety and boisterous spirits and lead one to suspect that a ballet from Diamond's hands might be great fun.

The orchestra's performances of the new works were briliant.

This Clipping From
ST. JOSEPH, MO.
NEWS-PRESS

APR 14 1946

Woman Finds Bassoon Takes Life to Master

BOSTON, April 13.—(UP)—That one of the world's leading orchestras—the Boston symphony—should have a woman player is not too amazing But that the woman should be a bassoon player puts the information in the "man bites dog" class.

The woman bassoonist is Miss Anne de Guichard. She plays the bassoon through choice, doubling on saxophone when the score calls for it.

To the uninitiated, a bassoon is a long piece of pipe about the size of a rocket-throwing "bazooka." And it's played by a ridiculously small tube that curves around to meet the player's mouth. It throws a tone lower than a horse-player's bankroll after a bad day, and is reputed by musicians not bassoon players to require enough breath to keep several Dutch windmills in operation for a long time.

But it's Miss Guichard's baby. And has been ever since she was 16 years old. She never attended music school, and her only teacher was the man whose chair in the Boston symphony she took over after he died two years ago.

An attractive brunette, Miss de Guichard is accepted as an equal among the members of the orchestra. However, she still feels she has much to learn about her instrument.

"The bassoon is not for people who are easily discouraged," she says. "I haven't completely mastered it yet, and I'm still hard at it."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

APR 12 1946

SUITE BY COPLAND HEARD AT CONCERT

Koussevitzky Conducts Boston Symphony in Composer's 'Appalachian Spring'

By OLIN DOWNES

Aaron Copland's suite from the ballet "Appalachian Spring" was the most modern music on the program given by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night in Carnegie Hall. The music was heard for the second time here this season, and its repetition was more than welcome. For this is certainly one of the best of Mr. Copland's scores, and of them all the most tender and poetical in character.

In it the folk element is strongly present; it is neither disguised nor disfigured by affectation. A modern composer takes this material as his own—as a musical substance that has for him a beauty as of today—and not as some archaic relic of an imaginary past. The music is simple and full of feeling. It is admirably orchestrated, with fine taste and a sure hand. Some of the movements become a little long and have a degree of sameness of coloring without the dancers on the stage. But the sum of it is a charming and sincere score, by a composer whose craftsmanship develops and acquires fresh distinction as he advances. The performance was a wonder of delicacy, finish and imagination.

Mr. Copland was present in the upper part of the house and he was repeatedly called upon to acknowledge the applause.

The two classics of the evening were the Haydn G major Symphony numbered on last night's program, 88, and Brahms' Second, the latter work receiving a memorable reading. With Haydn it was not the same. His work sounded in the manner of a polite curtain-raiser to the entertainment to come, rather than the voice of Haydn the peasant-born, Haydn the architect and the virile precursor of Beethoven.

In other words, we like our Haydn rougher, more zestful, and with a broader humor. We do not like his slow movement taken so portentously, and we like to hear the off-key strokes of the violins over the drone bass in the trio of the minuet for what they are—broad strokes of shrewd peasant humor. Perhaps no other orchestra can play the finale with such finish and at such a tempo as this one. Granted, but let us have a sharper edge to the jest, and not quite such polished manners.

Or was there the thought of contrasting Haydn, at the beginning, with the more rugged manner of Johannes Brahms, whose second symphony brought the end? The symphony was gloriously played. It also is primavera. Not only in the Appalachians was it spring! The performance of the symphony had equally the lyricism and the ruggedness of Brahms' style. Seldom has a conductor so sustained the great line of the slow movement, or imparted more grace, brilliancy, power, as the passage might be, to the whole work. Every voice in the orchestra sang; every instrument glowed with color refracted, as it were, from choir to choir. With this well-known symphony Dr. Koussevitzky and his men achieved a summit of their New York season.

This Clipping From
BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
ENQUIRER NEWS

Organists' Guild To Give Degree To Koussevitzky

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be honored during the final broadcast of the New York City series by the Boston Symphony orchestra tomorrow evening when the American Guild of Organists presents him with a degree. The broadcast over ABC and WELL will be from Hunter college.

The orchestra will give the first radio performance of excerpts from Benjamin Britten's opera "Peter Grimes," which is to be produced in this country for its initial stage presentation next August at Tanglewood, Mass.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

Koussevitzky Praises Concert Interest Here

[illegible]

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

APR 13 1946

Koussevitzky to Aid Jubilee

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at a special concert to mark the Golden Jubilee of the American Guild of Organists at the Hunter College Assembly Hall, Park Avenue and Sixty-eighth Street, on Saturday, April 20. Dr. George N. Shuster, president of the college, will introduce Dr. Koussevitzky and present to him a certificate from the guild

---

PATERSON, N.J
EXAMINER
4/13/46

"PETER GRIMES"

The first radio performance of excerpts [illegible] Benjamin Britten's opera "Peter Grimes" will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Saturday, April [illegible] the fifth and concluding [illegible] of the orchestra [illegible] New York broadcast season [illegible] 8:30 p. [illegible] tion WJZ [illegible] m.

"Grimes" [illegible] by Dr. S[illegible] ductor of [illegible] formance [illegible] ment of [illegible] Center [illegible] be produced [illegible] for the first [illegible] try. It [illegible] ances last S[illegible] Wells Theatre [illegible] has been given [illegible] similar number of performances there this year. Performances also are scheduled in Basle, Zurich, Antwerp and Stockholm

---

Boston
Monda

The Boston
last tour of the Monday evening the 23d pair of co longer series set for stead of Good Frida day. The closing noon program wil
next Sunday.

Bach's Brandenb
No. 5, with Lukas
Richard Burgin
Georges Laurent, flu will be given M
Aaron Copland's ba palachian Spring,
Second Symphony in will be heard.

Rachmaninoff's T
Concert, with Vladi
as soloist, will be the Thursday and S
certs. Dr. Serge Kou conduct the second program includi
Seventh Symphony
Good Friday Spell
(in observance of Ho
Brahims' Variations
by Haydn.

TIMES 'APR.

The composer, Sam
his new 'Cello Con with the B

[113]

K, MICH.
R NEWS

1946

s' Guild Degree
sevitzky

~~Koussevitzky~~ will be the final broadcast rk City series by the ony orchestra tomorwhen the American
nists presents him
The broadcast over
L will be from Hun-

a will give the first nce of excerpts from ten's opera, "Peter is to be produced for its initial stage
ext August at Tan-

FIELD, MASS.
NG UNION

R 12 1946

vitzky Concert
t Here

Koussevitzky, distin-nductor of the Boston orchestra, has sent ncouragement to work-re now seeking $30,000
the Springfield Or-ssociation.
legram to be read to workers at a report is afternoon, Dr. Kous-ays, "May I congratuand the board of the Orchestra Association
lendid efforts that proical life in your com-giving the Springfield your interest and supse extend by heartiest es to Alexander Leslie members of your orer Leslie, conductor of field Symphony, studied Koussevitzky.

Y YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

APR 13 1946

zky to Aid Jubilee
sevitzky will conduct ymphony Orchestra at cert to mark the Gold-the American Guild of the Hunter College Park Avenue and Street, on Saturday,
George N. Shuster,
he college, will introsevitzky and present ficate from the guild.

SON, N.J
NER
46

ER GRIMES" radio performance s from Benjamin era, "Peter Grimes", ven by the Boston
Orchestra on Satur-
13, when the fifth ding concert of the
New York broad-is heard over Sta-
rom 9:30 to 10:30 p.

was commissioned e Koussevitzky, cone ensemble, for per-
the Opera Depart-e Berkshire Music
anglewood and will d there in August
time in this coun-given 12 perform-
Summer at Sadler's re in London and ven a similar numrmances there this rmances also are
Basel, Zurich, Antockholm.

AMERICAN APR13

Boston Symphony Plays Monday Eve Concert Here

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, returning from its last tour of the season, will give the final concert of the Monday evening series in Symphony Hall Monday night and the 23d pair of concerts of the longer series set for Thursday (instead of Good Friday) and Saturday. The closing Sunday afternoon program will take place next Sunday.

Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 5, with Lukas Foss, piano; Richard Burgin, violin, and Georges Laurent, flute, as soloists, will be given Monday night. Aaron Copland's ballet suite Appalachian Spring, and Sibelius' Second Symphony in D major also will be heard.

Rachmaninoff's Third Piano Concert, with Vladimir Horowitz as soloist, will be a feature of the Thursday and Saturday concerts. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the second portion of the program including Sibelius' Seventh Symphony, Wagner's Good Friday Spell from Parsifal (in observance of Holy Week) and Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

APR 13 1946

Koussevitzky Announces Tanglewood Departments

Students from every state in the Union and from foreign countries have applied to Symphony Hall in Boston for enrollment in the Berkshire Music Center, the school for music in performance founded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1940 and directed by Serge ~~Koussevitzky~~.

The Center is to be resumed at Tanglewood (in Lenox, Mass.) next July 1 and will continue through the Berkshire Festival, which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct through the last three of the six weeks' school term.

* * *

FOUR OF THE FIVE DEPARTMENTS (conducting, composing, orchestral playing and opera) are for advanced students. The fifth department, which includes choral singing, chamber music and orchestral playing, offers an opportunity for amateurs and those less advanced in musical training to benefit by singing or playing under the most expert guidance, and to partake in festival and opera, as well as school performances.

The chorus for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, which is to conclude the Festival, will be prepared by Robert Shaw. Mr. Shaw will also train a smaller choral group for weekly school concerts.

* * *

THE CHORAL PART in Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes", which is to have its American premiere at Tanglewood, will be prepared by Hugh Ross. Mr. Ross will also have a smaller group to study and perform madrigals.

The orchestra in this department will be under the direction of Richard Burgin, the concert master and associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Harmonic analysis, solfège, and country dancing will be available to this department, as well as forums, lectures, all Festival and other concerts at Tanglewood.

* * *

APPLICATIONS ARE STILL BEING RECEIVED FOR ALL departments of the Center, including the class in conducting (under Serge Koussevitzky), the advanced orchestra (under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, Stanley Chapple and Leonard Bernstein), the Opera Department (Dr. Herbert Graf, Boris Goldovsky, Richard Rychtarik), chamber music (Gregor Piatigorsky).

Bohuslâv Martinu will divide with Aaron Copland the class in composition. The faculty will otherwise consist of thirty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, including all the principals.

Auditions for the advanced orchestra will be held in New York Thursday afternoon, Apr. 11, at Carnegie Hall, and in Boston Thursday morning. Apr. 18, at Symphony Hall. The place and date for the final opera auditions will shortly be announced.

Musicians Prepare

Ben Greenhaus

The composer, Samuel Barber, listens to Raya Garbousova practice his new 'Cello Concerto, which she will play for the first time with the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week.

This Clipping From
KIRKSVILLE, MO.
EXPRESS AND NEWS

APR 14 1946

Bassoon Can Take Lifetime to Master

Boston, (UP)—That one of the world's leading orchestras—the Boston Symphony—should have a ~~woman player~~ is not too amazing. But that the woman should be a basson player puts the information in the "man bites dog class."

The woman bassonist is Miss Anne de Guichard. She plays the bassoon through choice, doubling on saxophone when the score calls for it.

To the uninitiated, a bassoon is a long piece of pipe about the size of a rocket-throwing "bazooka." And it's played by a ridiculously small tube that curves around to meet the player's mouth. It throws a tone lower than a horse-player's bankroll after a bad day, and is reputed by musicians not bassoon players to require enough breath to keep several Dutch windmills in operation for a long time.

But it's Miss Guichard's baby. And has been ever since she was 16 years old. She never attended music school, and her only teacher was the man whose chair in the Boston Symphony she took over after he died two years ago.

An attractive brunette, Miss de Guichard is accepted as an equal among the members of the orchestra. However, she still feels she has much to learn about her instrument.

"The bassoon is not for people who are easily discouraged," she says. "I haven't completely mastered it yet, and I'm still hard at it."

THE KNOXVILLE JOURNAL
Knoxville, Tennessee

APR 14 1946

Music and Drama
MALCOLM MILLER

PALM SUNDAY MUSIC
Church Street Methodist Church

SEVEN LAST WORDS OF CHRIST, the oratorio by Theodore Francis Clement Dubois, will be given by Church Street Methodist Choir, under direction of organist-director Elizabeth Platt, in the church auditorium, at 5:00 o'clock p. m. today.

Soloists will be James Chesney, tenor; James Mann, baritone; Mary Kinzel, soprano, and Dorothy Kennedy, contralto.

Fourth Presbyterian Church

OLIVET TO CALVARY, sacred contata by J. H. Maunder, will be the Palm Sunday special program of the Fourth Presbyterian Church. It will be given in the church auditorium, at 5 p. m. today.

The program will be directed by organist-director Earl C. Jones. Soloists will be Alfred Cole and Robert Ogden, tenors; W. D. Helsley, baritone; Mrs. Malcolm Miller, soprano, and Gladys Jones, contralto.

PIRATES OF PENZANCE

Oak Ridge Community Chorus is stepping out!

The chorus will stage "The Pirates of Penzance," the melodious operetta by W. S. Gilbert and Arthur Sullivan, in Oak Ridge High School auditorium, Friday and Saturday, May 3 and 4, at 8:15 p. m.

CAST

Major General Stanley, of the British Army	Lillard Clayton
Richard, a Pirate King	Haskell Burden
Samuel, His Lieutenant	Joe Prane
Frederic, a Pirate Apprentice	Dr. Fontaine C. Armistead
Edward, a Sergeant of Police	A. D. Horton
General Stanley's daughters:
Mabel (the youngest)	Rosedell Ford
Edith	Betty Slaughter
Kate	Estelle Hays
Isabel	Reva Jean Dunsworth
Ruth, a Piratical Maid-of-All-Work	Lil Armistead

In addition to the principals, there will be 56 additional pirates, policemen, chorus, etc.

Music for the operetta will be furnished by the Oak Ridge Symphony Orchestra, now being rehearsed by Waldo Cohn.

The production will be conducted by Kenneth L. McSween, director of the Oak Ridge Community Chorus. It is being designed, rehearsed and staged by Lillard Clayton. Jack Kaufman, of the Oak Ridge Little Theatre, is stage manager.

Stage sets designed by Lillard Clayton are being constructed by 15 members of the Oak Ridge Community Chorus. In the past the group ordered stage sets from a professional scenic studio or had them built by the Oak Ridge Little Theatre.

FROM EVERY STATE

Students from every state of the United States and from foreign countries have applied to Symphony Hall in Boston for enrollment in the Berkshire Music Center, the school for music in performance founded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1940, and directed by Serge Koussevitzky.

The Center will be resumed at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass., next July 1, and will continue through the Berkshire Festival, which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct through the last three of the six weeks' school term.

Four of the five departments (conducting, composing, orchestral playing and opera) are for advanced students. The fifth department, which includes choral singing, chamber music and orchestral playing, offers opportunity for amateurs and those less advanced in musical training to benefit by singing or playing under the most expert guidance, and to partake in Festival and opera, as well as school performances.

The chorus for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, which will conclude the Festival, will be prepared by Robert Shaw. Mr. Shaw will also train a smaller choral group for weekly school concerts.

The choral part in Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes," which will have its U. S.-ian premiere at Tanglewood, will be prepared by Hugh Ross. Mr. Ross will also have a smaller group to study and perform madrigals.

Richard Burgin, concert master and associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will direct the orchestra department. Harmonic analysis, solfege and country dancing will be available to the orchestra department, as well as forums, lectures, all Festival and other concerts at Tanglewood.

Applications are still being received for all departments of the Center.

The Berkshire Music Center is an approved place for education under Public Law 346, the so-called "GI Bill of Rights." Ex-servicemen and women may apply for government financial aid.

For additional information address Thomas D. Perry Jr., Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass. From June 1 to August 20, the address will be: Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

APR 14 1946

Music Center Events Listed

School in Lenox Will Open July 1

Students from every state in the Union and from foreign countries have applied to Symphony Hall in Boston for enrollment in the Berkshire Music Center, the school ~~for music in performance~~ founded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1940 and directed by Serge Koussevitzky. The Cen~~ter is to be resumed~~ at Tanglewood, in Lenox, July 1 and will continue through the Berkshire Festival, which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct through the last three of the six-week school term.

Four of the five departments (conducting, composing, orchestral playing and opera) are for advanced students. The fifth department, which includes choral singing, chamber music and orchestral playing, offers an opportunity for amateurs and those less advanced in musical training to benefit by singing or playing under the most expert guidance, and to partake in festival and opera, as well as school performances. The chorus for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, which is to conclude the festival, will be prepared by Robert Shaw. Mr. Shaw also will train a smaller choral group for weekly school concerts.

The choral part in Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes," which is to have its American premiere at Tanglewood, will be prepared by Hugh Ross. Mr. Ross also will have a smaller group to study and perform madrigals. The orchestra in this department will be under the direction of Richard Burgin, the concert master and associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Harmonic analysis, solfege, and country dancing will be available to this department, as well as forums, lectures, all festival and other concerts at Tanglewood.

Applications still are being received for all departments of the Center, including the class in conducting (under Mr. Koussevitzky), the advanced orchestra (under the direction of Mr. Koussevitzky, Stanley Chapple and Leonard Bernstein), the Opera Department (Dr. Herbert Graf, Boris Goldovsky, Richard Rychtarik), chamber music (Gregor Piatigorsky). Bohuslav Martinu will divide with Aaron Copland the class in composition. The faculty will otherwise consist of 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, including all the principals.

Auditions for the advanced orchestra will be held at Symphony Hall in Boston Thursday morning. The place and date for the final opera auditions will shortly be made known.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
APR 14 1946

BOSTONIANS PLAY 2 AMERICAN WORKS

Koussevitzky Is Acclaimed for Diamond, Barber Numbers—Raya Garbousova Soloist

By OLIN DOWNES

The concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall was the final concert of the season by that organization in this city, and it was an exceptionally significant conclusion of the series. Half the program was given to two compositions by Americans and both works were eminently worth hearing. One of them had been made known last season, David Diamond's "Rounds for Orchestra." But Samuel Barber's Concerto for Violoncello and Orchestra, with Raya Garbousova as 'cellist, was heard for the first time in this city. The Brahms C minor symphony was manna for those with small taste for modernity, and the epical performance was followed by thunderous acclaim.

Mr. Diamond's music, admirably fashioned, is joyous and vernal. There is youth in it. The writing is refreshingly direct and brilliant. The piece could properly be called "Rondes de Printemps," although other composers have used that title. In this case it would be a singularly appropriate one, not only because of the mood of the music but because of its facture. The Rounds devices of imitations are used well and extensively, but freely, without academic insistence and with inventive vigor and fancy.

The technical procedure is not merely the vehicle but the springboard of the composer's imagination. He uses the system exuberantly, and there's laughter in the music. And no waste notes! The counterpoint is ingenious enough, sure in the manipulation of the material, but none of it superfluous, and all of it music. The centralization of the musical idea, which is the supreme usefulness of the strict "canon," or "round" as the case may be, is preserved, so that the central ideas are driven home, but the writing is remarkably flexible, spontaneous, and unpedantic.

Interpretation of Score

The hearing of this score emphasized anew how much an adequate interpretation means to a composer. Dr. Koussevitzky's performance revealed every detail and facet of the score, and this in the most transparent and glowing manner. All the finish and virtuosity of the magnificent orchestra was put at the composer's service, in the re-creation of the score, and the same thing held true of Mr. Barber's concerto.

Here too one was aware of a composer finding himself and speaking with an unprecedented directness and confidence of manner. A little preluding is followed by the 'cello's announcement of the principal theme, already anticipated by the oboe. The gay and piquant character of the opening and its spicy rhythm is presently given competition and melodic intensity by the solo instrument. The invaluable attribute of a genuinely lyrical vein is Mr. Barber's. Here it is combined with a structural capacity that had not always been in evidence. There is a good deal of cadenza in the first movement, but the cadenzas are continuations of the musical development and not separate display passages for the soloist. They link sections together and establish liaison between the accompanied solo passages and "tutti" developments.

The slow movement, indeed the whole concerto, is something to hear again—at least for this listener—before it is thoroughly grasped. At first this andante impresses as relying upon thematic figures rather than melodic themes—even as the classic "concerto grosso" of the Bach period does in another and stricter way. But this movement grows in melodic interest and in intensity of mood, and for its coda—a young modern American absolutely dares to express himself poetically.

The last movement is remarkable for its structure and also for the sudden emergence of measures more serious, even tragical, than the prevailing tenor of the composition. This is not artifical; it is felt and it bestows what was needed for the emotional completion of the work.

Fine Work by Soloist

Mr. Barber had also the benefit, like the audience, of the sensitive and authoritative playing of Miss Garbousova. She played with an authentically feminine warmth and in masterly style. She had a Guadagnini 'cello, recently acquired, which should prove an excellent instrument for her use, because of its noble sonority and the fine balance of the strings. The concerto has passages of great difficulty, and not only the difficulties of some elaborate double-stopping. All the resources of the 'cello technique were called into play, and were put by a great artist at the service of sovereign interpretation. Then there was the enveloping interpretation of the work as a whole by Dr. Koussevitzky.

Both composers were present yesterday and in turn the conductor led them to the stage, where they were long and warmly applauded. The effect of their music was one more testimony—and vindication—of the faith that Dr. Koussevitsky has shown, since his arrival in this country twenty-two seasons ago, in the gifts of our creative musicians of the rising generation. From the beginning of his conductorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra he has sought out native talent and insistently given it opportunities of a hearing and the benefit of his personal aid and counsel, and he has won the reward for these labors. Two concert programs which have produced three scores of such merit as Aaron Copland's "Appalachian Spring," played Thursday night, and the Diamond and Barber compositions of yesterday afternoon, are among the proofs, not only of what Koussevitzky has done, beyond any other conductor this country has ever seen, for its composers, but also the way in which the composers are repaying in kind their championship by Sergei Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
APR 14 1946

MUSIC

By VIRGIL THOMSON

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, last New York concert of the season yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. Soloist, Raya Garbousova, cellist. The program:
Round for String Orchestra....David Diamond
Concerto for violoncello and orchestra, Op. 22....................Samuel Barber
First Manhattan Performance
Symphony No. 1, in C minor..........Brahms

A Fine, Big Piece

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, who has somewhat neglected of late his own and the Boston Symphony Orchestra's ancient tradition of playing at least one new work on every program, returned to the path of virtue at yesterday afternoon's concert in Carnegie Hall by giving us two. David Diamond's Rounds for String Orchestra have been heard here only once before, when Howard Hanson conducted them last spring at Columbia University's Festival of American Music. Samuel Barber's Concerto for Cello and Orchestra, with Raya Garbousova as excellent soloist, was altogether new to New York.

* * * *

Mr. Diamond's Rounds are pleasant of sound but a little low in both expressive and musical interest. Their first movement is based on a descending minor third, treated in the obsessive manner. The second, or slow movement, wanders contrapuntally (and agreeably) but not far. The third is a fugato of which the returning theme is treated, like the first movement's main motif, as if it were an idée fixe. Moment by moment the work is pretty. As a whole, it seems to lack both intensity of thought and a clear progression of feeling.

* * *

Mr. Barber's Cello Concerto is the most ample work this composer has yet produced. It lasts abou tthirty-five minutes, and it is full of thought. It is full of thought about musical expression in general and about the possibilities for musical expression of the violoncello in particular. It is full of ingenious orchestral devices for accompanying this insrtument without drowning it. And it is full of reasonably good tunes.

The tunes are not really so satisfactory, however, as the flowing passage work that separates and joins them might lead one to believe. The main first-movement and last-movement themese are based on obsessive rhythmic devices; the slow-moement melody is merely an arpeggio treated in the same monotonous fashion. But the working-up of these into a richly romantic, well-sustained structure is musical, masterful, thoughtful and not without a certain Brahms-like grandeur.

The work has the feel of serious repertory about it, and it is most advantageous for the cello, which has a lot to do all the time. Perhaps it has a little too much to do, because it keeps the more powerful orchestra sounds pretty constantly on leash. Perhaps if Mr. Barber had dramatized more the functional contrasts between orchestra and soloist, instead of letting these two always express the same sentiments, they might had together a little less than they do the aspect of a lion lying down with a lamb. This outcome, as William Blake long ago pointed out, is not really a harmonious adjustment of characteristics, since it represents both physically and morally a complete victory for the lamb.

* * *

For all that, Mr. Barber's Cello Concerto, though not quite a masterpiece, is a fine, big work. It has depth of musical thought, as well as length and breadth. And for all its occasional modernity of texture, it has the formal solemnity of Late Romanticism and an expansive melancholy of mood that makes it both adequate and suitable to a permanent place on our standard symphony orchestra programs. The afternoon ended with the usual Brahms.

Raya Garbousova

Solo cellist in yesterday afternoon's Boston Symphony concert

---

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD AMERICAN
APR 14 1946

Berkshire Music News: Bonelli's New Plans: S.U. Composers

By E. V. W.

In the autumn of 1835, two young composers met for the first time in Leipzig. Mendelssohn's letter to his family describes it. Felix was 26, his guest was a year younger. "His playing enchanted me," wrote Mendelssohn of the young Pole, Frederic Chopin, "there was something original in it, and at the same time so masterly, that he may be called a perfect virtuoso. It was pleasant to be once more with a thorough musician. He has a lovely new notturno, a considerable part of which I learnt by ear."

STUDENTS FROM every state in the Union and from foreign countries have applied to Symphony Hall in Boston for enrollment in the Berkshire Music Center, the school for music in performance founded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1940, and directed by Serge Koussevitzky. The center is to be resumed at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) next July 1 and will continue through the Berkshire Festival, which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct through the last three of the six weeks' school term. Four of the five departments (conducting, composing, orchestral playing and opera) are for advanced students.

Dr. Koussevitzky

THE FIFTH department, which includes choral singing, chamber music and orchestral playing, offers an opportunity for amateurs and those less advanced in musical training to benefit by singing or playing under the most expert guidance, and to partake in festival and other school performances. The chorus for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, which is to conclude the Festival, will be prepared by Robert Shaw. Mr. Shaw will also train a smaller choral group for special concerts.

THE CHORAL part in Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes" (to have its American premiere in Tanglewood) will be prepared by Hugh Ross. Mr. Ross will also have a smaller group to study and perform madrigals. The orchestra in this department will be under direction of Richard Burgin, concertmaster and associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Harmonic analysis, solfege and [illegible] dancing will be available to this department, as well as forums, lectures, all Festival and other concerts at Tanglewood.

This Clipping From
FAIRMOUNT, W. VA.
WEST VIRGINIAN
APR 15 1946

WOMAN FINDS BASSOON TAKES LIFE TO MASTE

BOSTON (U.P.)—That one of t world's leading orchestras—the B ton Symphony—should have woman player is not too amazi
But that the woman should be bassoon player puts the inform tion in the "man bites dog class."

The woman bassoonist is M
Anne de Guichard. She plays t bassoon through choice, doubling saxaphone when the score calls f it.

To the uninitiated, a bassoon
a long piece of pipe about the si of a rocket-throwing "bazook
And it's played by a ridiculous small tube that curves around meet the player's mouth. It thro a tone lower than a horse-playe bankroll after a bad day, and reputed by musicians not basso players to require enough brea to keep several Dutch windmills operation for a long time.

But it's Miss Guichard's ba
And has been ever since she w
16 years old. She never attend music school, and her only teach was the man whose chair in t
Boston Symphony she took o after he died two years ago.

An attractive brunette, Miss Guichard is accepted as an eq among the members of the orche tra. However, she still feels she h much to learn about her instr ment.

"The bassoon is not for peo who are easily discouraged," s says. "I haven't completely ma tered it yet, and I'm still hard
it."

This Clipping From
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
ITEM
APR 15 1946

'Bassoon Not For Pessimists'

BOSTON, (UP)—That one of the world's leading orchestras—the Boston Symphony—should have a woman player is not too amazing. But that the woman should be a bassoon player puts the information in the "man bites dog class.'

The woman bassoonist is Miss Anne de Guichard. She plays the bassoon through choice, doubling on saxophone when the score calls for it.

To the uninitiated, a bassoon is a long piece of pipe about the size of a rocket-throwing "bazooka. And it's played by a ridiculously small tube that curves around to meet the player's mouth. It throws a tone lower than a horse-player's bankroll after a bad day, and is reputed by musicians not bassoon players to require enough breath to keep several Dutch windmills in operation for a long time.

But it's Miss Guichard's baby. And has been ever since she was 16 years old. She never attended music school, and her only teacher was the man whose chair in the Boston Symphony she took over after he died two years ago.

An attractive brunette, Miss de Guichard is accepted as an equal among the members of the orchestra. However, she still feels she has much to learn about her instrument.

"The bassoon is not for people who are easily discouraged," she says. "I haven't completely mastered it yet, and I'm still hard at it."

This Clipping From
HOLDREGE, NEB.
DAILY CITIZEN
APR 15 1946

Woman Finds Bassoon Takes Life To Master

BOSTON (U.P.) That one of the world's leading orchestras—the Boston Symphony—should have a woman player is not too amazing. But that the woman should be a bassoon player puts the information in the "man bites dog class."

The woman bassoonist is Miss Anne de Guichard. She plays the bassoon through choice, doubling on saxophone when the score calls for it.

To the uninitiated, a bassoon is a long piece of pipe about the size of a rocket-throwing "bazooka." And it's played by a ridiculously small tube that curves around to meet the player's mouth. It throws a tone lower than a horse-player's bankroll after a bad day, and is reputed by musicians not bassoon players to require enough breath to keep several Dutch windmills in operation for a long time.

But it's Miss Guichard's baby. And has been ever since she was 16 years old. She never attended music school, and her only teacher was the man whose chair in the Boston Symphony she took over after he died two years ago.

An attractive brunette, Miss de Guichard is accepted as an equal among the members of the orchestra. However, she still feels she has much to learn about her instrument.

This Clippi
DAVENPO
DEMOC
APR 1

STUDENTS
. every state in om foreign count ied for enrollmen
ire Music Center, usic founded by th
hony orchestra an ergel Koussevitzky, Tanglewood Mas continue thru the ire Music Festiv his will be the first on of the school
eak of the war in e five departmen mposing, orchestra
pera are for advan
e fifth departme udes choral singi usic and orchestral opportunity for ose less advance
aining to have exp

This Clippi
NORWOOD
MESSEN
APR 1

erkshire M enter Draw om Every students from ever on and from fore applied to Symp ion for enrollme

Music Center,
Boston Symphony
and directed by itzky. The Cente
ed at Tanglewood
s.) next July 1 through the Be which Dr. Kou
luct through the six weeks' school our of the five nducting, compos ying and opera)
ced students. Th
t, which include chamber music ying, offers an o teurs and those musical training ing or playing u ert guidance, and tival and opera
ool performances
Beethoven's Nin
h is to conclude be prepared by Shaw will also ral group for certs. The chora
n Britten's "P h is to have its e at Tanglewoo
by Hugh Ross. have a smaller perform madri
r the directio in, the concert ate conductor phony Orchest ysis, solfege, an will be availa
s, as well s, all Festival s at Tanglewoo still being rece
ments of the scho
class in cond
e Koussevitzky stra (under e Koussevitzky and Leonard a Department
Boris Goldo
htarik), chamb Piatigorsky). will divide
the class in co

This Clipping From
DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT
APR 14

STUDENTS FROM [illegible]

This Clipping From
NORWOOD, MASS.
MESSENGER
APR [illegible] 1946

Berkshire Music Center Draws From Every State

Students from every state in the Union and from foreign countries have applied to Symphony Hall in Boston for enrollment in the Berkshire Music Center, the school for ~~music in performance~~ founded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1940 and directed by Serge Koussevitzky. The Center is to be resumed at Tanglewood (in Lenox, Mass.) next July 1 and will continue through the Berkshire Festival, which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct through the last three of the six weeks' school term.

Four of the five departments (conducting, composing, orchestral playing and opera) are for advanced students. The fifth department, which includes choral singing, chamber music and orchestral playing, offers an opportunity for amateurs and those less advanced in musical training to benefit by singing or playing under the most expert guidance, and to partake in Festival and opera, as well as school performances. The chorus for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, which is to conclude the Festival, will be prepared by Robert Shaw. Mr. Shaw will also train a smaller choral group for weekly school concerts. The choral part in Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes," which is to have its American premiere at Tanglewood, will be prepared by Hugh Ross. Mr. Ross will also have a smaller group to study and perform madrigals. The orchestra in this department will be under the direction of Richard Burgin, [illegible] concert master and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Harmonic analysis, solfege, and country dancing will be available to this department as well as forums, lectures, all Festival and other concerts at Tanglewood. Applications are still being received for all departments of the Center, including the class in conducting (under Serge Koussevitzky), the advanced orchestra (under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, Stanley Chapple and Leonard Bernstein), the Opera Department (Dr. Herbert Graf, Boris Goldovsky, Richard [illegible]), chamber music (Gregory Piatigorsky). Bohuslav Martinu [illegible] with Aaron Copland [illegible] composition.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
APR 15 1946

BARBER CONCERTO IS INTRODUCED

By IRVING KOLODIN.

Not for a considerable time has a new American work of such quality and distinction been heard as the 'cello concerto of Samuel Barber, which had its first local performance at the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon. Blessed by the virtuoso skill of Raya Garbousova, its advocate, and the multiple talents of Serge Koussevitzky and the orchestra, it presented a burden of proof which the jury could hardly reject. Its effect was immediate, unmistakeable.

One has always respected the presently thirtyish Barber for the forthright conventionality of his writing, his indifference either to easy sensation or recondite aloofness. He dares to challenge a statement of derivations and influence not from obscure sources, but from recognizably familiar ones. In this work, for example, one is conscious of the classic 'cello key of A minor, its suggestion of Dvorak's work for the same instrument, its halving of the Brahms double concerto (violin and 'cello) in the same key.

But this is no more than to say that it utilizes canvas for its background, as countless varied paintings do. Barber has worked with distinguished materials in an individual way in this work, filled in a structure of imposing dimensions with artful detail, expressiveness and great technical resource. He has studied with loving care the instrument he has chosen to ennoble, and created a work which does it, as well himself, honor.

The thesis is plainest, perhaps, in the finale, which is a brilliant example of balanced workmanship utilizing perfectly apropos elements. But the structure of the first movement is impressive in its organization and planning, with a symphonic apotheosis that few native writers can challenge, followed by a slow movement which projects a mood of eloquent revery that is a welcome relief to the hurly-burly of our time. That there will be many repititions in the future one does not doubt; but there is hardly likely to be a performance of greater style or affection than this one.

Another native work, the "Rounds for String Orchestra" of David Diamond, preceded the Barber concerto. These are notably well made, but lacking in distinctions other than those purely physical. They bear the same relationship to expressive music that setting-up exercises do to a record quarter-mile. Both composers were present to acknowledge the applause of the audience. The first symphony of Brahms concluded the afternoon's remarkable performances.

The Philharmonic - Symphony Society finished its subscription season in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon with a repitition of its previous program of the week. This included Bernard Rogers "A Memorial to Franklin Delano Roosevelt," and two works of Beethoven—the "Leonore No. 3" overture and the monumental Ninth Symphony. As before, the soloists were Dorothy Kirsten, soprano; Nan Meriman, alto; Donald Dame, tenor; Todd Duncan, baritone, assisted by the Westminster Choir. Artur Rodzinski conducted.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
APR 16 1946

Students from every state in the union and from foreign countries, have applied to Symphony hall in Boston for enrollment in the Berkshire Music center for the six weeks' course being offered this summer under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Applications are still being received for all departments of the center, including the class in conducting (under Dr. Koussevitzky), the advanced orchestra (under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky, Stanley Chapple and Leonard Bernstein), the opera department (Dr. Herbert Graf, Boris Goldovsky, Richard Rychtarik), and chamber music (Gregory Piatigorshky). Bohuslav Martinu will divide with Aaron Copland the class in composition. Otherwise the faculty will include 30 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, including all principals.

Auditions for the advanced orchestra will be held at Symphony hall, Boston, Thursday morning.

This Clipping From
CLIFTON FORGE, VA.
REVIEW
APR 16 1946

Woman Finds Bassoon Takes Long to Master

Boston (UP)—That one of the world's leadng orchestras—the Boston Symphony—should have a woman player is not too amazing. But that the woman should be a bassoon player puts the information in the "man bites dog class."

The woman bassoonist is Miss Anne de Guichard. She plays the bassoon through choice, doubling on saxophone when the score calls for it.

To the unitiated, a bassoon is a long piece of pipe about the size of a rocket-throwing "bazooka." And it's played by a ridiculously small tube that curves around to meet the player's mouth. It throws a tone lower than a horse-player's bankroll after a bad day, and is reputed by musicians not bassoon payers to require enough breath to keep several Dutch windmills in operation for a long time.

But it's Miss Guichard's baby. And has been ever since she was 16 years old. She never attended music school, and her only teacher was the man whose chair in the Boston Symphony she took over after he died two years ago.

An attractive brunette, Miss de Guichard is accepted as an equal among the members of the orchestra. However, she still feels she has much to learn about her instrument.

"The bassoon is not for people who are easily discouraged," she says. "I haven't completely mastered it yet, and I'm still hard at it."

This Clipping From
PONTIAC, MICH.
PRESS
APR 15 1946

Woman Bassoon Player Joins Boston Symphony

BOSTON, April 15.—(UP)—That one of the world's leading orchestras — the Boston symphony — should have a woman player is not too amazing. But that the woman should be a bassoon player puts the information in the "man bites dog class."

The woman bassoonist is Miss Anne de Guichard. She plays the bassoon through choice, doubling on saxophone when the score calls for it.

To the uninitiated, a bassoon is a long piece of pipe about the size of a rocket-throwing "bazooka."

HERALD APR 16

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitky, gave the final Monday night concert of the season last night at Symphony Hall, being heard in the following program:

Brandenberg Concerto No. 5 . . . . . . Bach
"Appalachian Spring" Suite . . . . . . Copland
Symphony No. 2 in D major . . . . . . Sibelius

By DORIS SPERBER

The program with which Dr. Koussevitzky chose to end the Monday night series was altogether satisfying, contrasting a classical work with a modern one, and closing with a richly scored example of the late romantic symphony. Both conductor and orchestra were in rare form, playing with a fervor and precision that is rare, even for the Boston Symphony.

The Fifth Brandenberg Concerto lacks the close integration of some of the others, as the piano part is far more elaborate than that of the solo violin and flute. A truly virtuoso pianist is needed to perform the work, and last night Lukas Foss proved brilliantly satisfactory. If his work lacked something of the electrifying quality it had at Tanglewood last summer, he made up for it by a deeper insight into the ensemble passages. Georges Laurent and Richard Burgin were the flute and violin soloists, and the supporting work of the small orchestra was clean and subtle throughout.

Aaron Copland's music for the ballet "Appalachian Spring" seems more lovely with each hearing. The composer's rich imagination, warmth of expression and interesting rhythmic and dynamic invention make for a work that holds the interest of the listener through the final quiet sustained chord. It was brilliantly performed last night with Dr. Koussevitzky drawing the deepest emotional expression from the musicians. The concert closed with a richly moving performance of the sombre Second Symphony of Sibelius.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
APR 17 1946

KAPELL SOLOIST IN BOSTON

New York Pianist Is Replacing Horowitz, Ill With Grippe

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BOSTON, April 16—Serge Koussevitzky made a quick substitution this afternoon when he received word that Vladimir Horowitz was ill and would be unable to appear as guest soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Thursday and Saturday night concerts.

The Boston conductor called upon William Kapell, young New York pianist, who agreed to fly up tonight for rehearsal tomorrow morning. Mr. Kapell, who will play Aram Khatchaturian's piano concerto, will have only one rehearsal with the orchestra because of the Thursday performance in place of a Good Friday appearance.

Mr. Horowitz, who was scheduled to play Rachmaninoff's Concerto No. 3 in D minor, was reported to be ill of grippe. Symphony Hall had been sold out for weeks in advance of his scheduled performance.

This Clipping From
DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT
APR 18 1946

WOMAN FINDS BASSOON TAKES LIFE TO MASTER

Boston.—(UP)—That one of the world's leading ochestras — the Boston Symphony—should have a woman player is not too amazing. But that the woman should be a bassoon player puts the information in the "man bites dog class."

The woman bassonist is Miss Anne de Guichard. She plays the bassoon thru choice, doubling on saxophone when the score calls for it.

To the uninitiated, a bassoon is a long piece of pipe about the size of a rocket-throwing "bazooka." And it's played by a ridiculously small tube that curves around to meet the player's mouth. It throws a tone lower than a horse-player's bankroll after a bad day, and is reputed by musicians not bassoon players to require enough breath to keep several Dutch windmills in operation for a long time.

But it's Miss Guichard's baby. And has been ever since she was 16 years old. She never attended music school, and her only teacher was the man whose chair in the Boston Symphony she took over after he died two years ago.

An attractive brunette, Miss de Guichard is accepted as an equal among the members of the orchestra. However, she still feels she has much to learn about her instrument.

"The bassoon is not for people who are easily discouraged," she says. "I haven't completely mastered it yet, and I'm still hard at it."

This Clipping From
HOLLYWOOD, CAL.
HOLLYWOOD REPORTER
APR 16 1946

Allis-Chalmers Airs Ork

Saturday airings of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for nine weeks beginning May 4, will be sponsored in their entirety for the first time by the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co.

GLOBE APR. 16

MUSIC

Symphony Hall Boston Symphony Orchestra

By PHYLLIS WATTS

Monday symphony goers seemed to feel well satisfied with their season as they settled back in their seats for the last concert of the 1945-46 series. The listener who could not find something to please him in last night's program, whether he came for Bach, Copland, or Sibelius, would be a hard man to serve.

Those who like to work out the design of the music they hear had two very different types of ground plans to observe inthemarvellously neat workmanship of Bach's Fifth Brandenburg Concerto in D major and in the landbound simplicity of the Aaron Copland Suite from the Ballet "Appalachian Spring."

Thanks to a penetratingly shrewd difference in Serge Koussevitzky's approach, the discriminating listener could change his sights with each item on the program, using a magnifying glass for the details of Bach, the far end of the telescope to see the Copland as a whole, and the naked eye for the Sibelius Second Symphony.

The piano solo work of Lukas Foss was restrained in style but not in resources, according to the demands of the Fifth Brandenburg, and Georges Laurent's flute showed a nice sense of balance in the slow movement devoted to the three soloists alone. Richard Burgin's violin could have been less colorful without sacrificing his solo status. The fugual material of the final allegro was unforced and therefore rewarding, played by 18 string members of the orchestra.

The Copland Suite was best served in performance. Growing familiarity with the inventive ballet music, which has been blue-ribboned both by the Pulitzer Prize committee and the Music Critics' Circle of New York, this year shows in the relish of both conductor and performers and their grasp of the spare, down-to-earth music.

Dr. Koussevitzky may have lost his reverence for the Sibelius Second Symphony, but his reading has not lost its charged quality. The string basses still go at the pizzacato sections as though they were possessed, and the same kinetic energy flies off in all directions.

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y
HERALD
4/19/46

The Boston Symphony Orchestra reports that students from every state and from foreign countries have applied for enrollment in the Berkshire Music Center this summer. The center is to be resumed after a war lapse at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) next July 1, under Serge Koussevitzky. It will continue through the Berkshire Festival, which Dr. Koussevitsky will conduct through the last three of the six weeks' school term.

This Clipping From
DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT
APR 14 1946

STUDENTS FROM

. . . every state in the Union and from foreign countries have applied for enrollment in the Berkshire Music Center, the school for music founded by the Boston symphony orchestra and directed by Sergei Koussevitsky, to be resumed at Tanglewood Mass in July and to continue thru the annual Berkshire Music Festival in August. This will be the first complete session of the school since the outbreak of the war in 1941. Four of the five departments, conducting, composing, orchestral playing and opera are for advanced students. The fifth department, which includes choral singing, chamber music and orchestral playing offers an opportunity for amateurs and those less advanced in musical training to have expert instruction.

This Clipping From
NORWOOD, MASS.
MESSENGER
APR 15 1946

Berkshire Music Center Draws From Every State

Students from every state in the Union and from foreign countries have applied to Symphony Hall in Boston for enrollment in the Berkshire Music Center, the school for music in performance founded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1940 and directed by Serge Koussevitzky. The Center is to be resumed at Tanglewood (in Lenox, Mass.) next July 1 and will continue through the Berkshire Festival, which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct through the last three of the six weeks' school term.

Four of the five departments (conducting, composing, orchestral playing and opera) are for advanced students. The fifth department, which includes choral singing, chamber music and orchestral playing, offers an opportunity for amateurs and those less advanced in musical training to benefit by singing or playing under the most expert guidance, and to partake in Festival and opera, as well as school performances. The chorus for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, which is to conclude the Festival, will be prepared by Robert Shaw. Mr. Shaw will also train a smaller choral group for weekly school concerts. The choral part in Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes," which is to have its American premiere at Tanglewood, will be prepared by Hugh Ross. Mr. Ross will also have a smaller group to study and perform madrigals. The orchestra in this department will be under the direction of Richard Burgin, the concert master and associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Harmonic analysis, solfege, and country dancing will be available to this department, as well as forums, lectures, all Festival and other concerts at Tanglewood. Applications are still being received for all departments of the Center, including the class in conducting (under Serge Koussevitzky), the advanced orchestra (under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, Stanley Chapple and Leonard Bernstein), the Opera Department (Dr. Herbert Graf, Boris Goldovsky, Richard Rychtarik), chamber music (Gregor Piatigorsky). Bohuslav Martinu will divide with Aaron Copland the class in composition.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN
APR 15 1946

BARBER CONCERTO IS INTRODUCED

By IRVING KOLODIN.

Not for a considerable time has a new American work of such quality and distinction been heard as the 'cello concerto of Samuel Barber, which had its first local performance at the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon. Blessed by the virtuoso skill of Raya Garbousova, its advocate, and the multiple talents of Serge Koussevitzky and the orchestra, it presented a burden of proof which the jury could hardly reject. Its effect was immediate, unmistakeable.

One has always respected the presently thirtyish Barber for the forthright conventionality of his writing, his indifference either to easy sensation or recondite aloofness. He dares to challenge a statement of derivations and influence not from obscure sources, but from recognizably familiar ones. In this work, for example, one is conscious of the classic 'cello key of A minor, its suggestion of Dvorak's work for the same instrument, its halving of the Brahms double concerto (violin and 'cello) in the same key.

But this is no more than to say that it utilizes canvas for its background, as countless varied paintings do. Barber has worked with distinguished materials in an individual way in this work, filled in a structure of imposing dimensions with artful detail, expressiveness and great technical resource. He has studied with loving care the instrument he has chosen to ennoble, and created a work which does it, as well himself, honor.

The thesis is plainest, perhaps, in the finale, which is a brilliant example of balanced workmanship utilizing perfectly apropos elements. But the structure of the first movement is impressive in its organization and planning, with a symphonic apotheosis that few native writers can challenge, followed by a slow movement which projects a mood of eloquent revery that is a welcome relief to the hurly-burly of our time. That there will be many repititions in the future one does not doubt; but there is hardly likely to be a performance of greater style or affection than this one.

Another native work, the "Rounds for String Orchestra" of David Diamond, preceded the Barber concerto. These are notably well made, but lacking in distinctions other than those purely physical. They bear the same relationship to expressive music that setting-up exercises do to a record quarter-mile. Both composers were present to acknowledge the applause of the audience. The first symphony of Brahms concluded the afternoon's remarkable performances.

The Philharmonic - Symphony Society finished its subscription season in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon with a repitition of its previous program of the week. This included Bernard Rogers "A Memorial to Franklin Delano Roosevelt," and two works of Beethoven—the "Leonore No. 3" overture and the monumental Ninth Symphony. As before, the soloists were Dorothy Kirsten, soprano; Nan Meriman, alto; Donald Dame, tenor; Todd Duncan, baritone, assisted by the Westminster Choir. Artur Rodzinski conducted.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
APR 16 1946

Students from every state in the union and from foreign countries have applied to Symphony hall in Boston for enrollment in the Berkshire Music center for the six weeks' course being offered this summer under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Applications are still being received for all departments of the center, including the class in conducting (under Dr. Koussevitzky), the advanced orchestra (under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky, Stanley Chapple and Leonard Bernstein), the opera department (Dr. Herbert Graf, Boris Goldovsky, Richard Rychtarik), and chamber music (Gregory Piatigorshky). Bohuslav Martinu will divide with Aaron Copland the class in composition. Otherwise the faculty will include 30 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, including all principals.

Auditions for the advanced orchestra will be held at Symphony hall, Boston, Thursday morning.

This Clipping From
CLIFTON FORGE, VA.
REVIEW
APR 16 1946

Woman Finds Bassoon Takes Long to Master

Boston (UP)—That one of the world's leadng orchestras—the Boston Symphony—should have a woman player is not too amazing. But that the woman should be a bassoon player puts the information in the "man bites dog class."

The woman bassoonist is Miss Anne de Guichard. She plays the bassoon through choice, doubling on saxophone when the score calls for it.

To the unitiated, a bassoon is a long piece of pipe about the size of a rocket-throwing "bazooka." And it's played by a ridiculously small tube that curves around to meet the player's mouth. It throws a tone lower than a horse-player's bankroll after a bad day, and is reputed by musicians not bassoon payers to require enough breath to keep several Dutch windmills in operation for a long time.

But it's Miss Guichard's baby. And has been ever since she was 16 years old. She never attended music school, and her only teacher was the man whose chair in the Boston Symphony she took over after he died two years ago.

An attractive brunette, Miss de Guichard is accepted as an equal among the members of the orchestra. However, she still feels she has much to learn about her instrument.

"The bassoon is not for people who are easily discouraged," she says. "I haven't completely mastered it yet, and I'm still hard at it."

This Clipping From
PONTIAC, MICH.
PRESS
APR 15 1946

Woman Bassoon Player Joins Boston Symphony

BOSTON, April 15, —(UP)— That one of the world's leading orchestras — the Boston symphony — should have a woman player is not too amazing. But that the woman should be a bassoon player puts the information in the "man bites dog class."

The woman bassoonist is Miss Anne de Guichard. She plays the bassoon through choice, doubling on saxophone when the score calls for it.

To the uninitiated, a bassoon is a long piece of pipe about the size of a rocket-throwing "bazooka."

HERALD MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitky, gave the final Monday night concert of the season last night at Symphony Hall, being heard in the following program:

Brandenberg Concerto No. 5 . . . . Bach
"Appalachian Spring" Suite . . . . . Copland
Symphony No. 2 in D major . . . . . Sibelius

By DORIS SPERBER

The program with which Dr. Koussevitzky chose to end the Monday night series was altogether satisfying, contrasting a classical work with a modern one, and closing with a richly scored example of the late romantic symphony. Both conductor and orchestra were in rare form, playing with a fervor and precision that is rare, even for the Boston Symphony.

The Fifth Brandenberg Concerto lacks the close integration of some of the others, as the piano part is far more elaborate than that of the solo violin and flute. A truly virtuoso pianist is needed to perform the work, and last night Lukas Foss proved brilliantly satisfactory. If his work lacked something of the electrifying quality it had at Tanglewood last summer, he made up for it by a deeper insight into the ensemble passages. Georges Laurent and Richard Burgin were the flute and violin soloists, and the supporting work of the small orchestra was clean and subtle throughout.

Aaron Copland's music for the ballet "Appalachian Spring" seems more lovely with each hearing. The composer's rich imagination, warmth of expression and interesting rhythmic and dynamic invention make for a work that holds the interest of the listener through the final quiet sustained chord. It was brilliantly performed last night with Dr. Koussevitzky drawing the deepest emotional expression from the musicians. The concert closed with a richly moving performance of the sombre Second Symphony of Sibelius.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
APR 17 1946

KAPELL SOLOIST IN BOSTON

New York Pianist Is Replacing Horowitz, Ill With Grippe

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BOSTON, April 16—Serge Koussevitzky made a quick substitution this afternoon when he received word that Vladimir Horowitz was ill and would be unable to appear as guest soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Thursday and Saturday night concerts.

The Boston conductor called upon William Kapell, young New York pianist, who agreed to fly up tonight for rehearsal tomorrow morning. Mr. Kapell, who will play Aram Khatchaturian's piano concerto, will have only one rehearsal with the orchestra because of the Thursday performance in place of a Good Friday appearance.

Mr. Horowitz, who was scheduled to play Rachmaninoff's Concerto No. 3 in D minor, was reported to be ill of grippe. Symphony Hall had been sold out for weeks in advance of his scheduled performance.

This Clipping From
DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT
APR 18 1946

WOMAN FINDS BASSOON TAKES LIFE TO MASTER

Boston.—(UP)—That one of the world's leading ochestras — the Boston Symphony—should have a woman player is not too amazing. But that the woman should be a bassoon player puts the information in the "man bites dog class."

The woman bassonist is Miss Anne de Guichard. She plays the bassoon thru choice, doubling on saxophone when the score calls for it.

To the uninitiated, a bassoon is a long piece of pipe about the size of a rocket-throwing "bazooka." And it's played by a ridiculously small tube that curves around to meet the player's mouth. It throws a tone lower than a horse-player's bankroll after a bad day, and is reputed by musicians not bassoon players to require enough breath to keep several Dutch windmills in operation for a long time.

But it's Miss Guichard's baby. And has been ever since she was 16 years old. She never attended music school, and her only teacher was the man whose chair in the Boston Symphony she took over after he died two years ago.

An attractive brunette, Miss de Guichard is accepted as an equal among the members of the orchestra. However, she still feels she has much to learn about her instrument.

"The bassoon is not for people who are easily discouraged," she says. "I haven't completely mastered it yet, and I'm still hard at it."

This Clipping From
HOLLYWOOD, CAL.
HOLLYWOOD REPORTER
APR 16 1946

Allis-Chalmers Airs Ork

Saturday airings of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for nine weeks beginning May 4, will be sponsored in their entirety for the first time by the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co.

GLOBE MUSIC APR. 16

Symphony Hall
Boston Symphony Orchestra

By PHYLLIS WATTS

Monday symphony goers seemed to feel well satisfied with their season as they settled back in their seats for the last concert of the 1945-46 series. The listener who could not find something to please him in last night's program, whether he came for Bach, Copland, or Sibelius, would be a hard man to serve.

Those who like to work out the design of the music they hear had two very different types of ground plans to observe inthemarvellously neat workmanship of Bach's Fifth Brandenburg Concerto in D major and in the landbound simplicity of the Aaron Copland Suite from the Ballet "Appalachian Spring."

Thanks to a penetratingly shrewd difference in Serge Koussevitzky's approach, the discriminating listener could change his sights with each item on the program, using a magnifying glass for the details of Bach, the far end of the telescope to see the Copland as a whole, and the naked eye for the Sibelius Second Symphony.

The piano solo work of Lukas Foss was restrained in style but not in resources, according to the demands of the Fifth Brandenburg, and Georges Laurent's flute showed a nice sense of balance in the slow movement devoted to the three soloists alone. Richard Burgin's violin could have been less colorful without sacrificing his solo status. The fugual material of the final allegro was unforced and therefore rewarding, played by 18 string members of the orchestra.

The Copland Suite was best served in performance. Growing familiarity with the inventive ballet music, which has been blue-ribboned both by the Pulitzer Prize committee and the Music Critics' Circle of New York, this year shows in the relish of both conductor and performers and their grasp of the spare, down-to-earth music.

Dr. Koussevitzky may have lost his reverence for the Sibelius Second Symphony, but his reading has not lost its charged quality. The string basses still go at the pizzacato sections as though they were possessed, and the same kinetic energy flies off in all directions.

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y.
HERALD
4/19/46

The Boston Symphony Orchestra reports that students from every state and from foreign countries have applied for enrollment in the Berkshire Music Center this summer. The center is to be resumed after a war lapse at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) next July 1, under Serge Koussevitsky. It will continue through the Berkshire Festival, which Dr. Koussevitsky will conduct through the last three of the six weeks' school term.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

APR 17 1946

Berkshire Music Center Attracts Many Students

Student from every State and from foreign countries have applied to Symphony Hall in Boston for enrollment in the Berkshire Music Center, the school for music in performance founded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1940 ~~and directed by Serge~~ Koussevitzky. The center is to be resumed at Tanglewood, Lenox, July 1 and will continue through the Berkshire Festival, which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct through the last three weeks of the six-week school term.

Four of the five departments (conducting, composing, orchestral playing and opera) are for advanced students. The fifth department which includes choral singing, chamber music and orchestral playing offers an opportunity for amateurs and those less advanced musicians to sing or play under expert guidance, and to partake in festival opera and school performances. The chorus for Beethoven's "9th Symphony," which is to conclude the festival will be prepared by Robert Shaw.

The orchestra in this department will be under direction of Richard Burgin, concertmaster and associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Harmonic analysis, solfege, and country dancing will be available as well as forums, lectures, all festival and other concerts at Tanglewood.

Applications still are being received for all departments, including the class in conducting (under Serge Koussevitzky), advanced orchestra (under direction of Koussevitzky, Stanley Chapple and Leonard Bernstein), the opera department (Dr. Herbert Graf, Boris Goldovsky, Richard Rychtarik) and chamber music (Gregor Piatigorsky). Bohuslav Martinu will share with Aaron Copland the class in composition. The factulty will consist of 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, including all principals.

Auditions for the advanced orchestra will be held in Boston tomorrow morning, at Symphony Hall. The place and date for the final opera auditions will be announced shortly.

This Clipping From
CHATTANOOGA, TENN.
NEWS FREE PRESS

APR 19 1946

Woman Finds Bassoon Takes Life to Master

BOSTON (U.P.)—That one of the world's leading orchestras — the Boston Symphony—should have a wo[redacted]not too amazing. But that the woman should be a bassoon player puts the information in the "man bites dog class."

The woman bassoonist is Miss Anne de Guichard. She plays the bassoon through choice, doubling on saxophone when the score calls for it.

To the uninitiated, a bassoon is a long piece of pipe about the size of a rocket-throwing "bazooka." And it's played by a ridiculiusly small tube that curves around to meet the player's mouth. It throws a tone lower than a horse-player's bankroll after a bad day, and is reputed by musicians not bassoon players to require enough breath to keep several Dutch windmills in operation for a long time.

But it's Miss Guichard's baby. And has been ever since she was 16 years old. She never attended music school, and her only teacher was the man whose chair in the Boston Symphony she took over after he died two years ago.

An attractive brunette, Miss de Guichard is accepted as an equal among the members of the orchestra. However, she still feels she has much to learn about her instrument.

"The bassoon is not for people who are easily discouraged," she says. "I haven't completely mastered it yet, and I'm still hard at it."

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

APR 17 1946

Music

PLAN BERKSHIRE MUSIC AUDITIONS

By RAYMOND MORIN

Bohuslav Martinu, famous Czech composer, will divide the class in composition at the Berkshire Music Center this Summer, with Aaron Copland. Another important announcement just released is that Thursday morning, April 18, auditions will be heard at Symphony Hall, Boston, for the Berkshire Festival's advanced orchestra.

Instrumentalists aspiring to play under Serge Koussevitzky should write to Symphony Hall and arrangements will be made to hear them next Thursday morning or on a subsequent date.

MARTINU

Martinu's Berkshire colleagues will include Leonard Bernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Olin Downes, Robert Shaw, Hugh Ross, Herbert Graf, Richard Burgin and Howard Hanson.

"Ballet is shown to disadvantage in a small group. It stands to reason that this should be true because the ingredients that make it up—scenery, costumes, proper musical accompaniment, etc.—are not in the proper magnitude." This is the firm conviction of Nicolas Magallanes, 23-year-old star of the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo, who made a brilliant appearance at the Auditorium last Monday night.

Those who attended the performance will recall him as the sole male dancer in Bach's "Double Concerto in D minor," retitled "Concerto Borocco." This ballet, by the way, is not only his favorite but is also that of most of the company.

A native of Chihuhua, Mexico, Nicolas came to New York when a lad of seven. He went through grammar and high schools, but instead of going to college he enrolled at the American School of Ballet. Eventually he became one of the American Ballet Caravan and toured throughout this hemisphere; for the past two seasons he has been with the Ballet Russe.

Nicolas is an enlightened conversationalist, speaks English, French and Spanish fluently, and knows just enough Russian that his colleagues say nothing within his hearing that they don't want him to know.

Speaking of the unusually wide variety of temperaments in a ballet company, Nicolas admits that there is naturally much nervous tension and personal ambition within the group; but explains—"In the long run, it is wiser to progress slowly and to trust in the judgment of, for example, Alexandra Danilova, who through her wide experience is well qualified to judge." Incidentally, Ballanchine is Nicolas' favorite choreographer and Danilova his favorite ballerina.

He spoke to me at length of his and the company's reaction to critics. They disdain a critic who "goes out on a limb" in an attempt to instruct them in a technic that they have studied all their lives, but he went on to say: "The ballet members welcome constructive criticism when it is written with authority and sincerity, even when unfavorable."

Nicolas didn't explain whether the reviewer who unfavorably criticized some of these life-time efforts was thereby speaking with authority.

BOSTON GLOBE MUSIC APRIL

Koussevitzky and Symphony at Their Best; Kapell Brilliant as Soloist

By CYRUS DURGIN

Since today is Good Friday, the afternoon concert of the week by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was played at Symphony Hall yesterday. In honor of the season, Serge Koussevitzky performed in the second half of the program the "Good Friday Spell," from Richard Wagner's "Parsifal." This music was flanked by the Seventh Symphony of Sibelius and Brahms' Variation on a Theme by Haydn.

When Vladimir Horowitz was reported a victim of the flu, the opening portion of the list had to be changed. In Mr. Horowitz' place as piano soloist came William Kapell, and for the Third Concerto of Rachmaninoff was substituted the Concerto by Aram Khatchatourian.

Much as many of us would have liked to hear again Mr. Horowitz' hair-raising interpretation of the Rachmaninoff work, we were not let down by either Kapell or Khatchatourian. This is the third time that the young American pianist (he is still only 23) has played the Khatchatourian with the Boston Symphony. Each time performance and piece have seemed more substantial.

The Concerto is tricky, of course, and put together with a very shrewd eye to theatrical effort. It is not markedly original, for it owes a certain deft to Rachmaninoff, and it is not remarkable as musical structure. For all that, the Khatchatourian Concerto has a most agreeable Oriental flavor and it has its frequent "big" moments. The dissonance is spicy rather than sour, and the rhythms are decidedly fetching. As for the slow movement, that certainly is one of the best by a contemporary composer.

Having weighed merits and shortcomings, it is evident that the Concerto will give you a good time if you do not expect too much from it in the way of a cosmic masterpiece. Take it for what it is: clever and diverting, and it carries its own weight nicely. Mr. Kapell, with his strength and dexterity, plays it brilliantly, and Mr. Koussevitzky gives the orchestral part a spirited reading. All concerned were entitled to the applause they receved yesterday.

Throughout the afternoon Mr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra were at their best. The one-movement Symphony of Sibelius, which has a certain out-of-this-world quality that reminds me a bit of Beethoven's last quartets, never sounded better. Nor did it ever sound—at least to me—clearer, more compact and understandable.

Brass, strings and woodwind—apart from a few errors that did not spoil the whole—were glorious both in their tone colors and precise execution in the "Good Friday Spell." "Parsifal" is not all of a piece, and it is very demanding upon listeners in the opera house, but the magical interlude from Act 3—for all its initial "pomposo" ostentation—is infinitely touching.

Brahms of the Chorale St. Antony Variations is among the best and most ingratiating Brahms and the performance left nothing to be wanted. Yet it was a mistake to put plain Johannes after the anything-but-plain Richard the First.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

APR 19 1946

The New Records

Two 'First Recordings' by Prokofiev—And Two Rachmaninov Reissues.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

An interesting historical purpose is served by the presence on Victor's current list of two works by Serge Prokofiev, separated by some three decades of his career. One is the "Scythian Suite," of 1914, performed by Desire Defauw and the Chicago Symphony; the other the recent Seventh Piano Sonata, played by its original interpreter here, Vladimir Horowitz.

Both of these are first recordings of these works, and comprise an important addition to the Prokofiev literature on discs. The easy opportunity thus provided to compare two distinctly different works leads to the conclusion that the differences are superficial, the likenesses. profound. I doubt that the speech of any other contemporary composer of like stature has changed less over so important a space of his career. This might suggest that there has been no progress in his work; but I take the view that there was more generative force in the speech he first found for himself, that Prokofiev has proceeded to exploit its possibilities in a thoroughly consistent way.

Thus, while the early suite was essentially pictorial in character, one becomes aware in this new performance that the musical materials are more than merely shocking, that they have point and meaning without a "story" element. Similarly the sonata has a logical relationship to what we know of Prokofiev's other works, with a particularly fine slow section that reminds one of his gift for such writing in the third piano concerto and the first violin concerto, as well as in the new symphony we have been hearing this year.

The composer is greatly honored by the performances. Defauw is well qualified, by temperament and experience, for such music as this; and if the Chicago orchestra has not precisely the kind of brilliance that would give the most gloss to the music, it is otherwise excellent. The Horowitz performance is one of his most admirable, which has already become a tradition. Victor's engineers have operated with high skill in both instances.

Rachmaninov Re-issues.

There is a duplication of a composer's name on Columbia's current list also, and it is that of Rachmaninov. Both works are familiar both in the concert hall and on records—the second piano concerto played by Gyorgy Sandor and the Philharmonic-Symphony conducted by Artur Rodzinski (C-Set 605) and the tone poem, "The Isle of the Dead," by Dimitri Mitropoulos and the Minneapolis Symphony (C-Set 599).

Neither has qualities to give these versions precedents over the existing ones. The Mitropoulos undertaking is much the more successful of the two, but it cannot measure up either in interpretative understanding or orchestral execution to the recent Victor album of the same work by Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony. An incidental discrepancy is that Mitropoulos takes six sides for his version against five for Koussevitzky, who has space left over for the "Vocalise" on the last side. The recording is competent, but in no way remarkable.

None of these [illegible] favorable words can be [illegible] for the Sandor-Rodzinski version of the concerto. The style of [illegible] pianist is small for music of [illegible] breadth, his piano tone [illegible] without sufficient resonance. He gets around the instrument [illegible]ly enough, but I find no pronounced bent for either [illegible] excitement of the music [illegible] dramatic passion. [illegible] a matter-of-fact [illegible] and if these were [illegible] enough, the recording [illegible] and below the quality of Columbia's usual.

Easter Album.

Mindful of the Easter [illegible] Bibletone sends along [illegible] of "Hymns Children Lo[illegible]" by Paula Heminghou[illegible] and Muriel Wilson, with organ accompaniment. Inclu[illegible] six are "Jesus Lo[illegible]" [illegible] He Cometh," [illegible] Jesus" and "Th[illegible] Land." Both [illegible] ant voices and [illegible] suitable for the [illegible] the material, though [illegible] are rather noi[illegible] sic of the hym[illegible] the album. [illegible] "H").

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The 23rd regular concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. William Kapell, pianist, was the soloist. The program was as follows:

Piano Concerto .... Khatchatourian
Symphony No. 7 Op. [illegible] .... Sibelius
"Good Friday Spell" from "Parsifal" .... Wagner
Variations on a Theme by Haydn, Op. 56A .... Brahms

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

Some in yesterday's audience may have been disappointed that Mr. Horowitz could not appear in the Rachmaninoff Concerto, but after Mr. Kapell and the orchestra had finished Khatchatourian's Piano Concerto I am sure that the disappointment was mitigated and replaced by admiration for the soloist and pleasure in the new work. It is, of course, not exactly new, having been played twice at these concerts before. I heard it over the radio in an army camp in Texas in October, 1943, and even with truly execrable reception it then sounded to me like an attractive work.

Yesterday, with no such distortion, but on the contrary a magnificent performance by both Mr. Kapell and the orchestra under Mr. Koussevitzky, it sounded brilliant. Except for a considerable use of the piano as a percussive instrument and greater dissonance, the Concerto bears striking resemblances to Rachmaninoff. Beneath its surface brilliance and occasional harshness it is romantic and even nostalgic. It is also a great show piece for the solo instrument. Both these qualities are characteristic of Rachmaninoff. I do not say that Khatchatourian is not original, but merely that this Concerto is in the same line as an aspect of Rachmaninoff's piano and orchestra music and also bears comparison with Prokofieff.

A curious feature of the music is the use of long passages for the piano while the orchestra remains silent. These are not cadenzas, but part and parcel of the work's development. The second movement is undoubtedly the most appealing on a first hearing, but I found that in all three my attention was closely held. Mr. Kapell received something pretty near to an ovation for his admirable playing. Pinch-hitting for Horowitz is no joke, but Mr. Kapell and the Khatchatourian Concerto carried the day.

After the intermission Mr. Koussevitzky turned his attention to music familiar for the most part and more in keeping with this solemn season. Many consider Sibelius' 7th Symphony his best. It is at any rate his most concise and interesting, if not as popular as the 2nd and 5th. I could hardly believe the program book when it stated that Wagner's Good Friday music has not been played at these concerts since 1933. The audience welcomed it back after all these years with enthusiasm.

Finally Mr. Koussevitzky led the orchestra in a fine performance of Brahms' ingenious and lovely variations on the theme of Haydn's St. Anthony chorale. We could all leave the hall with its gracious sonorities still ringing in our ears and pronounce the concert a most satisfactory one.

This Clipping From NORFOLK, VA.
VIRGINIAN PILOT
APR 21 1946

KAPELL PLAYS AT SYMPHONY

Pleases in Concerto by Khatchatourian

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

William Kapell found himself in a rather unenviable position when called upon to substitute for Vladimir Horowitz at this week's pair of Symphony concerts, the first of which took place yesterday afternoon. By almost universal consent Mr. Horowitz is the most sensational, the most electrifying of contemporary pianists. He was to play the Third Concerto of Rachmaninoff, a work that he has made peculiarly his own and with which he generates a high degree of audience excitement.

Young Mr. Kapell, on the other hand, was asked by Dr. Koussevitzky to play the Concerto of Aram Khatchatourian, which he has played here twice before and with which he achieved, as he did again yesterday, a considerable success. But Khatchatourian is no Rachmaninoff. His Concerto, an outwardly showy, if somewhat hollow affair, with pleasing exotic touches in the middle movement, might be described musically as a blend of Rachmaninoff, Prokofieff, and the Ippolitov-Ivanov of the "Caucasian Sketches." Anyway, Mr. Kapell plays it very brilliantly, and if the audience felt any disappointment in the last minute substitution, it concealed it admirably and applauded Mr. Kapell to the echo, with the orchestra joining in.

For the balance of the program, the part that will go on the air tomorrow evening, Dr. Koussevitzky, as was the case at the last pair of concerts two weeks ago, assembled three contrasted compositions, the Seventh Symphony of Sibelius, the "Good Friday Spell," from "Parsifal" and Brahms' Variations on a Theme of Haydn. With the Sibelius Seventh the conductor completed his observance of the Finnish composer's 80th birthday. At the regular concerts he has played the First, Fifth and Sixth Symphonies, while the Second turned up both at a Sunday afternoon concert and last Monday evening. "The Swan of Tuonela," was also heard. He had planned to play all seven Symphonies, and this reviewer would gladly have seen Nos. 3 and 4 substitued for the over-played Fifth and the dry and barren Sixth.

No. 7, and not only because it is the shortest of the lot, is a great improvement over its two predecessors. There is some of the aimless puttering around to be found in all the later Sibelius, the use of figures instead of themes. There is also beauty, nobility and exaltation of mood that cause the piece to make as a whole deep impression.

If all of "Parsifal" were as beautiful as the "Good Friday Spell," that music drama would be, in truth, everything that some people like to believe it to be. Its performance yesterday matched the music, and after it the Brahms seemed singularly drab, for the most part, a mere exercise in scholastic composition. The G minor variation, in the tempo of a Siciliana, is lovely, of course, and one or two of the livelier ones are engaging. And the work ends pleasantly, with a festive-sounding restatement of Haydn's theme. I for one, however, would as soon hear the piece in the two piano version as in its prevailingly gray orchestral dress. With all the composers on the program, Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra were exceedingly eloquent.

Soloist at Symphony Concert

MONITOR. APRIL 19

Wins Ovation as Last-Minute Substitute

By L. A. Sloper

Substituting on 36 hours' notice for Vladimir Horowitz, who was unable to appear, William Kapell won an ovation at yesterday afternoon's Boston Symphony concert with his performance in Khatchaturian's Piano Concerto. He played this instead of Rachmaninov's Third, which had been scheduled for Mr. Horowitz.

Mr. Kapell deserved the plaudits, for he gave an extraordinary performance. It was he who introduced the Khatchaturian Concerto to the Symphony audience in 1943, and he was repeating his earlier success, but with the added interest that attaches to a rescue job. He played with no sign of tentativeness, and Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra co-operated beautifully.

A rehearing of the concerto gave no reason to revise the opinion of it expressed here on former occasions. It is unquestionably a brilliant score, well suited for pianistic display, and it contains also some haunting Armenian melodies. Mr. Kapell's superb technique and his exquisite tone and phrasing made the most of the opportunities for both kinds of playing.

Dr. Koussevitzky did well to revive in this twenty-third program of the season the Sibelius Seventh Symphony, which had not been heard here for more than four years. It is one of the most compelling of the Finnish master's efforts. Its single movement lasts only 20 minutes, but into that brief time a full measure of musical excitement is packed. The characteristic emotional tension is fully realized in Dr. Koussevitzky's reading. There are occasional pages of dulness, but they are quickly forgotten in the intensity of expression in the rest of the score.

Sibelius is the essence of Wagner, and the Seventh Symphony is the essence of Sibelius. But there is more doubt today about the permanence of Sibelius' music than there seemed to be 10 years ago. It has pattern, but is its structure strong enough to sustain its emotional impact over a long period? That of Tchaikovsky's symphonies is. Time will have to decide the case of Sibelius.

The other items on the program were the "Good Friday Spell" from "Parsifal" and the Brahms Variations on a Theme by Haydn.

Frances Yeend

Soprano soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony at the concluding concerts of the season, Friday, Saturday and Sunday of next week.

Closing Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, gives the last concert of its Sunday afternoon series in Symphony Hall on April 21, at 3:30 o'clock. It gives its final pair of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts on April 26 and 27 at the regular hours.

The Sunday program contains Mozart's Symphony in E flat major No. 26, Bach's Orchestral Suite No. 3 in D major, and Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony No. 3.

At the Friday and Saturday concerts Beethoven's Ninth Symphony will be performed, the orchestra being assisted by the Harvard and Radcliffe choruses and the following quartet of soloists: Frances Yeend, soprano; Viola Cilva, contralto; Andrew McKinley, tenor, and Robert Hall Collins, bass. Haydn's Symphony in G major, No. 88, will precede the Beethoven Symphony.

On the Air

Boston Symphony to End Current Season Saturday

Pops Concerts Take Over Saturday Nights; The Easter Parade To Be Broadcast This Morning; Some Interesting $64 Questions

By Warner Twyford

The Boston Symphony Orchestra concludes its current broadcasting season with next Saturday's performance over ABC-WGH, and from this point through August 10 the Boston Pops concerts, the Esplanade concert, and the Tanglewood Festival series command the attention of the Saturday night listener.

Arthur Fiedler

There will be nine programs in the Pops series, one from the Esplanade on the Charles River, and five from Tanglewood. For the first time, these programs will be sponsored this year.

Pops concerts, in all the tradition of stein-clinking table sitters, will be heard each Saturday from May through June 29. Arthur Fiedler will conduct, as usual, and he will be on the podium for the Esplanade concert of July 6.

Programs of the Bach-Mozart Festival at Tanglewood will be broadcast July 13 and 20, and the Berkshire Festival programs will he heard July 27 and August 3 and 10. Time of all the programs is 9:30 to 10:30 o'clock.

This Clipping From
CLINTON, ILL.
JOURNAL-REPUBLIC
APR 21 1946

The Boston Symphony Orchestra reports that students from every state and from foreign countries have applied for enrollment in the Berkshire Music Center this summer. The center is to be resumed after a war lapse at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) next July 1, under Serge Koussevitsky. It will continue through the Berkshire Festival, which Dr. Koussevitsky will conduct through the last three of the six weeks' school term.

This Clipping From
LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL
APR

MUSIC: Berkshire Center to Be Resumed This Summer After 3-Year Wait

By DWIGHT ANDERSON
Courier-Journal Music Editor

THE Berkshire Music Center, after having been suspended for three seasons, will reopen during the coming summer. Four of the five departments (conducting, composing, orchestral playing and opera) are for advanced students. The fifth department, which includes choral singing, chamber music and orchestral playing, offers an opportunity for less advanced students. Headed by Serge Koussevitzky, the faculty will include Robert Shaw, Hugh Ross, Stanley Chapple, Leonard Bernstein, Herbert Graf, Boris Goldowsky, Gregor Piatigorsky, Bohuslav Martinu and Aaron Copland.

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N. Y.
TELEGRAM
APR 21 1946

THE BOSTON Symphony Orchestra reports that students from every state and from foreign countries have applied for enrollment in the Berkshire Music Center this summer. The center is to be resumed after a war lapse at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) next July 1, under Serge Koussevitsky. It will continue through the Berkshire Festival, which Dr. Koussevitsky will conduct through the last three of the six weeks' school term.

This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

APR 2 1 1946

Summer Programs For Hub Symphony

Plans for the annual Summer concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, include broadcasts by ABC and Station WPOR of the "Pops," Esplanade and Tanglewood festival series.

The programs, sponsored in their entirety for the first time by Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Company, will include nine of the "Pops" series, one from the Esplanade on the Charles River and five from Tanglewood.

The "Pops," broadcast direct from Symphony Hall, which again will take on the atmosphere of a recreation centre with tables for the serving of refreshments replacing the seats, will be heard on May 4, 11, 18 and 25 and on June 1, 8, 15, 22 and 29. Arthur Fiedler again will conduct these, as well as the Esplanade concert of July 6, which is included in the broadcast series.

On July 13 and 20, programs of the Bach-Mozart Festival at Tanglewood will be heard by ABC listeners. The Berkshire Festival programs of July 27 and August 3 and 10 will complete the Summer series.

The broadcasts will continue at the Saturday time of 9:30 to 10:30 p. m. time of the regular season's airings.

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS

APR 23 1946

The Boston Symphony Orchestra reports that students from every State and from foreign countries have applied for enrollment in the Berkshire Music Center this Summer. The center is to be resumed after a war relapse at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) next July 1, under Serge Koussevitzky. It will continue through, the Berkshire Festival which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct through the last three of the six weeks' school term.

This Clipping From
CAMDEN, N. J.
POST

APR 23 1946

Woman Plays Bassoon In Boston's Orchestra

Boston (UP)—That one of the world's leading orchestras—the Boston Symphony—should have a ~~woman player~~ is not too amazing. But that the woman should be a bassoon player puts the information in the "man bites dog class."

The woman bassoonist is Miss Anne de Guichard. She plays the bassoon through choice, doubling on saxophone when the score calls for it.

To the uninitiated, a bassoon is a long piece of pipe about the size of a rocket-throwing "bazooka." And it's played by a ridiculously small tube that curves around to meet the player's mouth. It throws a tone lower than a horse-player's bankroll after a bad day, and is reputed by musicians not bassoon players to require enough breath to keep several Dutch windmills in operation for a long time.

But it's Miss Guichard's baby. And has been ever since she was 16 years old. She never attended music school and her only teacher was the man whose chair in the Boston Symphony she took over after he died two years ago.

This Clipping From
SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL

APR 23

The Boston Symphony Orchestra reports that students from every state and from foreign countries have applied for enrollment in the Berkshire Music Center this summer. The center is to be resumed after a war lapse at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) next July 1, under ~~Serge Koussevitzky.~~ It will continue through the Berkshire Festival, which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct through the last three of the six weeks' school term.

This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
NEWS WEEK

APR 22 1946

MUSIC

Pope of Instruments

The Hunter College Assembly Hall in New York—at 68th Street, and not to be confused with the interim site of the UN Security Council in the Bronx—housed a new kind of academic procession on April 13. The 80 men and women in black gowns who marched down the aisle were members of the American Guild of Organists, representing some 7,000 members of the 130 chapters throughout the country. They had assembled there before the ABC broadcast by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony to celebrate their 50th anniversary and to give Koussevitzky a certificate making him an honorary associate of the guild for his assistance to organists and composers for organ who wished to come out of the church and into the concert hall. The late Frederick Stock of the Chicago Symphony was the only American conductor previously so honored.

Although the American Guild of Organists does not grant degrees, it is authorized by the University of the State of New York—the state's board of education—to conduct examinations and grant certificates of fellowship, associateship, and choirmastership. These examinations are so tough that about 66⅔ per cent of the applicants fail. As yet, the AGO has not the prestige of its model, the Royal College of Organists in England, but it has moved ahead steadily to dignify and raise the standards of a group of musicians who have at their disposal an ever-growing audience and some of the finest instruments in the world.

Education by Biggs: It was Hector Berlioz who called the orchestra the King of Instruments and the organ the Pope—thereby relegating it to a position of solitary splendor. Since Berlioz fathered the modern orchestra, his opinion was perhaps prejudiced, but he did echo a nineteenth-century romantic view which held that an organ played with an orchestra produced a "detestable effect." Although many musicians still share this feeling, some think otherwise, and few have done more than E. Power Biggs, best known of American organists, to prove that the organ belongs equally to the church, the concert hall, and the radio.

On his regular Sunday-morning CBS broadcasts, for example, Biggs has presented premières of works for organ and various instrumental combinations from such modern composers as Howard Hanson, Roy Harris, Leo Sowerby, Quincy Porter, and Walter Piston—whose "Prelude and Allegro for Organ and String Orchestra" Biggs chose to play at last week's broadcast honoring the AGO and Koussevitzky. And as an indication of America's new interest in the organ, only American composers answered Biggs's request for fresh material for use on his broadcasts.

Biggs: No catering to public taste

The radio, Biggs feels, has done more to popularize the organ than any other medium. But radio has also brought Biggs headaches. On a concert tour he could repeat the same works in each city. For radio he must maintain a far greater repertoire. Radio, he says, "is like a mouth . . . It has one piece of steak and it is ready for the next."

Now 40, Edward George Power Biggs was born and educated in England but became an American citizen in 1937. He lives in Cambridge, where, at Harvard's Germanic Museum, it has been his special pride to play the whole cycle of Bach's organ works on an instrument which re-creates as practically as possible the sound produced in the days of the greatest organist of them all. Ultramodern organs, with their thundering swells and imitative tricks, he doesn't care for at all. Nor does Biggs believe in catering to what is supposed to be the public taste in music. "The public be damned," he says. "Go ahead and play something that is good—and the public will follow right with you."

~

Hep Cats, Keep Out

Town Hall in New York just won't have much time for jazz next year. Bookings for the 1946-47 season are already so heavy that the Saturday-afternoon 5:30 date—now associated with informal jazz jam sessions—will be open, with one exception, only to serious concert artists. For them, a Town or Carnegie Hall recital means not only the prestige of a New York hearing, but also the all-important notices of the Manhattan critics, and Town Hall feels its duty to them is more important than the cultivation of its more recent hep clientele.

The one vital exception: Eddie Condon, who pioneered the jazz-at-5:30 trend (NEWSWEEK, Jan. 24, 1944), will still be on hand for his familiar jam-and-jabber Saturday series once a month.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

APR 2 6 1946

Barbara Ulin to Play With Boston Symphony

BARBARA ULIN

Barbara Ulin, brilliant young pianist and pupil of Moshe Paranov and Harold Bauer at the Julius Hartt School of Music, has been engaged to make her debut as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on May ~~12, in~~ Symphony Hall, Boston, according to word received here today.

Miss Ulin, who will perform the Mendelssohn Concerto in G minor with the world-famous orchestra, was one of two winners of the Alfred C. Fuller Piano Scholarships at the Hartt School in September, 1945. She is scheduled to make her Hartford debut in the Hartt Auditorium on May 16.

The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. B. Ulin of Newton Center, Mass., she began her study of piano at the age of 12 and subsequently studied at the Malkin Conservatory in Boston, and at the Longy School of Music in Cambridge. She was graduated from the Newton High School in 1941.

Berkshire Center Attracts Students

BOSTON HERALD.

Students from every state in the Union and from foreign countries have applied to Symphony Hall in Boston for enrollment in the Berkshire Music Center, the school for music in performance founded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1940 and directed by Serge Koussevitzky. The Center is to be resumed at Tanglewood (in Lenox, Mass.) next July 1, and will continue through the Berkshire Festival, which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct through the last three of the six weeks' school term.

Four of the five departments (conducting, composing, orchestral playing and opera) are for advanced students. The fifth department, which includes choral singing, chamber music and orchestral playing, offers an opportunity for amateurs and those less advanced in musical training to benefit by singing or playing under expert guidance, and to partake in Festival and opera, as well as school performances.

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

APR 2 7 1946

Theodorowicz Retires From Boston Symphony

By the Associated Press

BOSTON, April 27—Julius Theodorowicz, assistant concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1919, ~~retired last night~~. He has been a member of that organization for the last 48 years.

He was tendered a reception after last night's concert in Symphony Hall by orchestra members, trustees and friends.

Born in Poland, Theodorowicz won eminence as a violinist in Vienna, from where he was brought to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1898 by Wilhelm Gericke.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

APR 27 1946

Theodorowicz to Retire From Boston Symphony

BOSTON, April 26 [illegible] Theodorowicz, assistant concert master of the Boston S[illegible] Orchestra since 1919, [illegible] night. He has been a [illegible] that organization for [illegible] years.

He was tendered [illegible] after tonight's concert [illegible] Symphony Hall by orchestra [illegible] bers, trustees and friends.

Theodorowicz, however, will continue to sit as concert master of the coming season of pops, a position he has held since 1916. The pops are the Summer season of light music in an informal setting played by members of the Boston Symphony.

Born in Poland, Theodorowicz won eminence as a violinist in Vienna, from where he was brought to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1898 by Wilhelm Gericke, then serving his second term as the orchestra's conductor

SUNDAY TELEGRAM

APR 21 1946

Summer Programs For Hub Symphony

Plans for the annual Summer concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, include broadcasts by ABC and Station WPOR of the "Pops," Esplanade and Tanglewood festival series.

The programs, sponsored in their entirety for the first time by Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Company, will include nine of the "Pops" series, one from the Esplanade on the Charles River and five from Tanglewood.

The "Pops," broadcast direct from Symphony Hall, which again will take on the atmosphere of a recreation centre with tables for the serving of refreshments replacing the seats, will be heard on May 4, 11, 18 and 25 and on June 1, 8, 15, 22 and 29. Arthur Fiedler again will conduct these, as well as the Esplanade concert of July 6, which is included in the broadcast series.

On July 13 and 20, programs of the Bach-Mozart Festival at Tanglewood will be heard by ABC listeners. The Berkshire Festival programs of July 27 and August 3 and 10 will complete the Summer series.

The broadcasts will continue at the Saturday time of 9:30 to 10:30 p. m. time of the regular season's airings.

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS

APR 23 1946

The Boston Symphony Orchestra reports that students from every State and from foreign countries have applied for enrollment in the Berkshire Music Center this Summer. The center is to be resumed after a war relapse at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) next July 1, under Serge Koussevitsky. It will continue through, the Berkshire Festival which Dr. Koussevitsky will conduct through the last three of the six weeks' school term.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

APR 26 1946

Barbara Ulin to Play With Boston Symphony

BARBARA ULIN

Barbara Ulin, brilliant young ianist and pupil of Moshe Parsnov and Harold Bauer at the ulius Hartt School of Music, has een engaged to make her debut s soloist with the Boston Symhony Orchestra on May , in Symphony Hall, Boston, according to word received here today.

Miss Ulin, who will perform the Mendelssohn Concerto in G minor with the world-famous orchestra, was one of two winners of the lfred C. Fuller Piano Scholarhips at the Hartt School in Sepember, 1945. She is scheduled make her Hartford debut in he Hartt Auditorium on May 16. The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. . B. Ulin of Newton Center, Mass., she began her study piano at the age of 12 and subsequently studied at the Malki Conservatory in Boston, and the Longy School of Music Cambridge. She was graduate from the Newton High School 1941.

APR 23 1946

Woman Plays Bassoon In Boston's Orchestra

Boston (UP)—That one of the world's leading orchestras—the Boston Symphony—should have a woman player is not too amazing. But that the woman should be a bassoon player puts the information in the "man bites dog class."

The woman bassoonist is Miss Anne de Guichard. She plays the bassoon through choice, doubling on saxophone when the score calls for it.

To the uninitiated, a bassoon is a long piece of pipe about the size of a rocket-throwing "bazooka." And it's played by a ridiculously small tube that curves around to meet the player's mouth. It throws a tone lower than a horse-player's bankroll after a bad day, and is reputed by musicians not bassoon players to require enough breath to keep several Dutch windmills in operation for a long time.

But it's Miss Guichard's baby. And has been ever since she was 16 years old. She never attended music school and her only teacher was the man whose chair in the Boston Symphony she took over after he died two ye ago.

This Clipping From
SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL

APR 23 1946

The Boston Symphony Orchestra reports that students from every state and from foreign countries have applied for enrollment in the Berkshire Music Center this summer. The center is to be resumed after a war lapse at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) next July 1, under Serge Koussevitsky. It will continue through the Berkshire Festival, which Dr. Koussevitsky will conduct through the last three of the six weeks' school term.

DAYTON, OHIO
NEWS WEEK

APR 22 1946

MUSIC

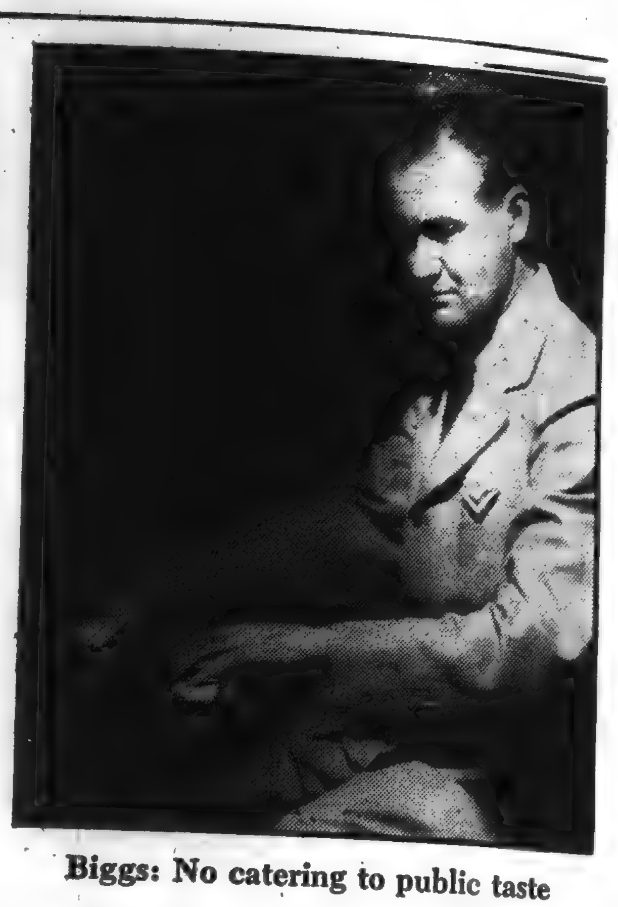
Pope of Instruments

The Hunter College Assembly Hall in New York—at 68th Street, and not to be confused with the interim site of the UN Security Council in the Bronx—housed a new kind of academic procession on April 13. The 80 men and women in black gowns who marched down the aisle were members of the American Guild of Organists, representing some 7,000 members of the 130 chapters throughout the country. They had assembled there before the ABC broadcast by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony to celebrate their 50th anniversary and to give Koussevitzky a certificate making him an honorary associate of the guild for his assistance to organists and composers for organ who wished to come out of the church and into the concert hall. The late Frederick Stock of the Chicago Symphony was the only American conductor previously so honored.

Although the American Guild of Organists does not grant degrees, it is authorized by the University of the State of New York—the state's board of education—to conduct examinations and grant certificates of fellowship, associateship, and choirmastership. These examinations are so tough that about 66% per cent of the applicants fail. As yet, the AGO has not the prestige of its model, the Royal College of Organists in England, but it has moved ahead steadily to dignify and raise the standards of a group of musicians who have at their disposal an ever-growing audience and some of the finest instruments in the world.

Education by Biggs: It was Hector Berlioz who called the orchestra the King of Instruments and the organ the Pope—thereby relegating it to a position of solitary splendor. Since Berlioz fathered the modern orchestra, his opinion was perhaps prejudiced, but he did echo a nineteenth-century romantic view which held that an organ played with an orchestra produced a "detestable effect." Although many musicians still share this feeling, some think otherwise, and few have done more than E. Power Biggs, best known of American organists, to prove that the organ belongs equally to the church, the concert hall, and the radio.

On his regular Sunday-morning CBS broadcasts, for example, Biggs has presented premières of works for organ and various instrumental combinations from such modern composers as Howard Hanson, Roy Harris, Leo Sowerby, Quincy Porter, and Walter Piston—whose "Prelude and Allegro for Organ and String Orchestra" Biggs chose to play at last week's broadcast honoring the AGO and Koussevitzky. And as an indication of America's new interest in the organ, only American composers answered Biggs's request for fresh material for use on his broadcasts.



Biggs: No catering to public taste

The radio, Biggs feels, has done more to popularize the organ than any other medium. But radio has also brought Biggs headaches. On a concert tour he could repeat the same works in each city. For radio he must maintain a far greater repertoire. Radio, he says, "is like a mouth . . . It has one piece of steak and it is ready for the next."

Now 40, Edward George Power Biggs was born and educated in England but became an American citizen in 1937. He lives in Cambridge, where, at Harvard's Germanic Museum, it has been his special pride to play the whole cycle of Bach's organ works on an instrument which re-creates as practically as possible the sound produced in the days of the greatest organist of them all. Ultramodern organs, with their thundering swells and imitative tricks, he doesn't care for at all. Nor does Biggs believe in catering to what is supposed to be the public taste in music. "The public be damned," he says. "Go ahead and play something that is good—and the public will follow right with you."

Hep Cats, Keep Out

Town Hall in New York just won't have much time for jazz next year. Bookings for the 1946-47 season are already so heavy that the Saturday-afternoon 5:30 date—now associated with informal jazz jam sessions—will be open, with one exception, only to serious concert artists. For them, a Town or Carnegie Hall recital means not only the prestige of a New York hearing, but also the all-important notices of the Manhattan critics, and Town Hall feels its duty to them is more important than the cultivation of its more recent hep clientele.

The one vital exception: Eddie Condon, who pioneered the jazz-at-5:30 trend (NEWSWEEK, Jan. 24, 1944), will still be on hand for his familiar jam-and-jabber Saturday series once a month.

Berkshire Center Attracts Students

BOSTON HERALD

Students from every state in the Union and from foreign countries have applied to Symphony Hall in Boston for enrollment in the Berkshire Music Center, the school for music in performance founded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1940 and directed by Serge Koussevitzky. The Center is to be resumed at Tanglewood (in Lenox, Mass.) next July 1, and will continue through the Berkshire Festival, which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct through the last three of the six weeks' school term.

Four of the five departments (conducting, composing, orchestral playing and opera) are for advanced students. The fifth department, which includes choral singing, chamber music and orchestral playing, offers an opportunity for amateurs and those less advanced in musical training to benefit by singing or playing under expert guidance, and to partake in Festival and opera, as well as school performances.

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

APR 27 1946

Theodorowicz Retires From Boston Symphony

By the Associated Press

BOSTON, April 27—Julius Theodorowicz, assistant concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1919, retired last night. He has been a member of that organization for the last 48 years.

He was tendered a reception after last night's concert in Symphony Hall by orchestra members, trustees and friends.

Born in Poland, Theodorowicz won eminence as a violinist in Vienna, from where he was brought to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1898 by Wilhelm Gericke.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

APR 27 1946

Theodorowicz to Retire From Boston Symphony

BOSTON, April 26 (AP)—Julius Theodorowicz, assistant concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1919, retired tonight. He has been a member of that organization for the past 48 years.

He was tendered a reception after tonight's concert in Symphony Hall by orchestra members, trustees and friends.

Theodorowicz, however, will continue to sit as concert master of the coming season of pops, a position he has held since 1916. The pops are the Summer season of light music in an informal setting played by members of the Boston Symphony.

Born in Poland, Theodorowicz won eminence as a violinist in Vienna, from where he was brought to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1898 by Wilhelm Gericke, then serving his second term as the orchestra's conductor

HE BOSTON DAILY GLOBE—SATURDAY, APRIL 27, 1946

Boston Symphony Concertmaster Retires After Record 48 Years

Julius Theodorowicz, assistant concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1919, and a member of the organization for 48 years, was given a reception yesterday after the Boston Symphony concert in the upstairs foyer of Symphony Hall.

After tonight's concert, Theodorowicz will retire from the orchestra. He will, however, continue to sit as concertmaster of the coming season of Pops, a position he has held since 1916.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, [illegible] Theodorowicz upon his [illegible]

Guests included colleagues, members of the Boston Symphony [illegible] and others.

Born in Poland he won eminence [illegible] in Vienna, from where he was brought to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1898 by Wilhelm Gericke, the orchestra's conductor who then was serving his second tenure of office. Brilliant young Franz Kneisel, who was concertmaster, had found the string quartet, bearing his name, which became the top organization of its kind in this country. Theodorowicz became second violin in the quartet, of which the other members, besides Kneisel, were Louis Svencenski, viola; and Alwyn Schroeder, 'cellist—all members of the Boston Symphony.

In 1903 the Kneisel Quartet toured the country, quitting the orchestra for three years for that purp Theodorowicz rejoined the orches in 1907, and has been a memb ever since. He retires with the chestra's record of years served.

For many years he was leader a commentator of his own ensem at the Lake Placid Club in N York state.

He is married to the former Ha L'Africaine, who established hers as a foremost 'cello soloist. Th have a daughter, Anne, and s David. The latter fought with t Marines in the Pacific Theatre the late war.

GLOBE

THE SYMPHONY

APRIL 27

Orchestra, Soloists and Chorus Superb in Beethoven Ninth

By CYRUS DURGIN

Here we are again at the end of another Boston Symphony season. It doesn't seem possible, but unhappily it's true. The last Friday and Saturday concerts of yesterday and tonight will be followed by a pension fund performance at Symphony Hall Sunday night, and then all will be over.

Serge Koussevitzky's program for all three concerts is the same: Haydn's G major Symphony, No. 88, followed by the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven. The choruses for the finale of Beethoven's mighty work are those of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, trained by G. Wallace Woodworth. The vocal soloists are Frances Yeend, soprano (Boston debut); Viola Silva, contralto; Andrew McKinley, tenor (Boston debut), and Robert Hall Collins, bass.

Fitting Final Production

Since the Beethoven Ninth is music of a definitely ceremonial—or at least, occasional—nature, the Symphony makes a fitting production for a season's end. Apart from the ethical aspects of the verses by Schiller which makes the text of the choral finale, this music is of exceptional weight and character. Somehow, in viewing the whole, Beethoven's overwhelming faith in the brotherhood of man, as expressed in those verses, seems of less importance than the grandeur of the entire work.

In all the history of the symphony, there has never been a single movement with the magnitude of the first in Beethoven's Ninth. Here is the apotheosis of his genius for thematic development and variation (although, Heaven knows, the variations of slow movement and finale also are prodigiously worked out). Here, too, is a musical conception of a deaf man whose ears and imagination all were inward; a conception that must have been visionary for its time and which still, more than 125 years later, is gigantic in proportion and of a timeless appeal.

Of course, the Ninth is a flawed masterpiece, to the extent that Beethoven, ignoring the limitations of the human voice and the niceties of vocal writing, hearing inwardly only what he wished to express, demanded that the singers produ what he had set down. Many of t pages in this finale will never be sung with the full amount of tone and power that the composer wanted. They are simply impossible. For this reason, any performance of the finale is always more or less of a gamble, and when voices can be found which deal reasonably well with those difficulties—well, we are so much the luckier.

Choristers Splendid

In this production of the Ninth Symphony the singers on the whole are admirable. Miss Yeend has a high-ranging and crystal-clear soprano as well suited to the soprano part as most, and she sings it musically. Mr. McKinley coped reasonably well with the equally demanding tenor portion, while Miss Silva and Mr. Collins were no less superior in technic and style. The choristers were splendid.

Mr. Koussevitzky has never read the Ninth Symphony with finer style or clarity, or with greater intensity than he did yesterday. The first movement was monumental in every sense of the word. It was vast and heroic, which means that Beethoven's notes were re-created with complete fidelity. It also was something to be remembered as a model of how that movement can go. The orchestra, at the very top of its exalted form, responded superlatively well.

For the sake of the record, it may be added that Haydn's familiar little Symphony was a bit fussed over; a bit too jucy in the largo, a bit too rushed in the finale. Yet it made its undeniably pleasant effect.

So, here we are at the end of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 65th season.

MUSIC

Symphony Concert

The 24th concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday in Symphony Hall. Assisting were the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor; Frances Yeend, soprano; Viola Silva, contralto; Andrew McKinley, tenor; Robert Hall Collins, bass. The program was as follows:

Symphony in G major No. 88 ......Haydn
Symphony No. 9 in D minor, with final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, Op. 125 ....Beethoven

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

A superbly fitting conclusion to the season was yesterday's glowing performance of the Ninth Symphony. Here in this symphonic masterpiece on a large scale Beethoven trumpeted for all the world to hear those ideals about which we have all been thinking during the past six years but which we have not often dared to express. Beethoven had none of our modern timidity in face of the commonplace truths. The brotherhood of man was a fine ideal and so he shouted forth its praise in a work of musical art that reaches the sublime.

I have never been so moved at a performance of the Ninth Symphony as I was yesterday. This was doubtless partly due to personal reflections which had nothing to do with the execution of the Symphony. But in any case it was a splendid performance. Credit should first go to Mr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra for the spirit and devotion with which they interpreted the score. Praise was also due the chorus from Harvard and Radcliffe, which had obviously been remarkably well coached by Mr. Woodworth. Finally the soloists sang their exceptionally difficult music with a fine semblance of ease.

The Ninth Symphony was preceded by Haydn's delightful Symphony in G major, No. 88, which has long been familiar to Boston Symphonic audiences. The performance seemed to me overpolished yesterday. The slow movement was as near to being static as it could be without falling off the perch. Mr. Koussevitzky made the finale go as fast as the Red Queen made Alice run. Of course, he brings it off, but sometimes I am tempted to wonder if it is worth the energy involved.

This concert, which will be repeated tonight and again on Sunday night (with a larger chorus) for the Pension Fund, officially ends the 65th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Fiedler and the Pops take over Tuesday night. When the orchestra returns to Symphony Hall next October it will lack one long-familiar face. Mr. Theodorowicz, who has been with the Boston Symphony for 48 years, is retiring from his post at the second desk of the first violins. He will take the good wishes of all friends of the Boston Symphony with him.

SYMPHONY FINALE

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

POST APRIL 27

Dr. Koussevitzky has a new formula for ending the Symphony season. The First Symphony of Brahms, long dedicated to that purpose, has given way to nothing less than the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven, complete with chorus and soloists. A year ago the final pair of concerts offered the Ninth and nothing more. This year there is a curtain-raiser in the shape of Haydn's Symphony in G major, No. 88, to which the conductor is so greatly devoted.

This year, as before, the chorus is made up of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, as trained by G. Wallace Woodworth. Save for Robert Hall Collins, the bass, the soloists are new. Frances Yeend is the soprano, Viola Silva the contralto and Andrew McKinley, the tenor. In addition to the performances of yesterday afternoon and this evening there will be one on Sunday evening in aid of the orchestra's pension fund, with the same soloists and with Haydn's Symphony again as prefatory number.

The performance yesterday was superb. Possibly a larger chorus will assist on Sunday evening, when the platform can be extended, but yesterday Mr. Woodworth's young men and young women did nobly, and upon the latter, at least, Beethoven lays a cruel task. And so trying is the role of the solists that if they get by at all you say that they did very well indeed. The principal burden, since they are the only ones who sing alone, falls upon the bass and tenor. Mr. Collins was once more impressive in his delivery of the Recitative that introduces the choral portion and Mr. McKinley did well with his solo passage in march-rhythm.

The chorale finale is capable of engendering considerable audience excitement, as was the case yesterday, but the true glory of the Ninth Symphony lies in the three instrumental movements, and particularly in the first two of these. The portentous opening of the work fills the listener with awe no matter how many times it is heard and Dr. Koussevitzky has seen to it that we should be as familiar with the Ninth as we are with any other major work in the repertory. Sunday evening's performance will be the sixth at Symphony Hall in two years, something of a record for any city.

Naturally, Haydn was somewhat swamped by Beethoven yesterday. Dr. Koussevitzky has run this Symphony into the ground, but it stands high among that master's 104 by reason of its noble Largo and the decidedly pleasing nature of the other three movements. Possibly the conductor romanticizes the Largo in a way that Haydn never intended and plays the finale at a speed of which he did not dream, but times and tastes have changed. At the end of the concert yesterday there was great and deserved enthusiasm.

Following the concert there was a reception in the first balcony foyer for Julius Theodorowicz, assistant concertmaster of the orchestra, who is retiring after 48 years of service, the longest term to be served by any member of the organization. He will, however, fill his accustomed post as concertmaster of the Pop Concerts, which begin their 61st season next Tuesday evening.

ORCHESTRA'S YEAR

BOSTON POST ... APRIL 28

Symphony Season Established Record in Number of Guest Conductors Employed

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

THE Symphony season, which ends tonight with a Pension Fund concert, repeating last week's program (Haydn's Symphony No. 88, Beethoven's Ninth), established a record in the matter of conductors. If we include Wheeler Beckett, who again led a considerable portion of the Orchestra in the six Youth Concerts, no less than nine men have directed it in these seven months. Three of these were native-born Americans: Mr. Beckett, Morton Gould, who took over a Sunday concert in mid-season, and Leonard Bernstein.

This last fact is of itself highly gratifying, and in the case of young Mr. Bernstein we can say that he not only held his own with the guesting Europeans, but eclipsed at least two of them. Outside a very few of Dr. Koussevitzky's own concerts, the most stimulating of the season were the pairs presided over by Mr. Bernstein and Hungarian-born Fritz Reiner, respectively. But whereas the latter scored his biggest success with the highly-colored music of Strauss, Salome's Dance and the "Symphonia Domestica," Mr. Bernstein brought down the house with the Second Symphony of Schumann, a work that in a hundred years of existence has failed to establish itself firmly in general critical estimation.

Two of the remaining guests, Paul Paray who, like Mr. Reiner, was on his first visit here, and Sir Adrian Boult, were responsible between them for five of the 24 pairs of "regular" concerts. Mr. Paray rather rashly relied chiefly upon the most familiar items of the French repertory, plus Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, and save in the case of Dukas' "Sorcerer's Apprentice" and possibly Ravel's "La Valse" added nothing to our understanding of them. An energetic and authoritative reader, he appeared to be lacking in poetry.

If Mr. Paray gave us no new or unfamiliar music, Sir Adrian contributed plenty. But outside Vaughan Williams' mystical "Job" and William Walton's saucy "Scapino" Overture, it was either insignificant, like Anthony Collins' "Threnody for a Soldier Killed in Action; based on fragments left by Michael Heming," or outmoded, as in the case of Bax's "Tintagel" and Ireland's "The Forgotten Rite." He also arrested Holst's ambitious "The Planets" and Elgar's "Enigma" Variations in their course toward local oblivion. A sound musician and able leader, Sir Adrian is not sufficiently electrifying for our jaded palates. One could discern a hint of malice in Dr. Koussevitzky's first program after the Englishman's departure: Beethoven's "Pastoral" and Tchaikovsky's, "Pathetique." After three weeks of trying to go British, the audiences looked upon these symphonies, set forth in the best Koussevitzkyan manner, as a sort of musical spree.

All of the guests have now been accounted for except Igor Stravinsky, who once more gave us a program of his own music, both old and new, the latter being the striking Symphony in Three Movements and the diverting "Scenes de Ballet."

Of the remaining 16 concerts, two fell to associate conductor, Richard Burgin, who gave us in the Violin Concerto of Bartok (Menuhin) perhaps the most important of the local novelties, as well as a Piano Concerto by Gian-Carlo Menotti (Firkusny), which proved superficially pleasing but no more. A newcomer to Symphony Hall, Menotti was earlier represented by two conventional Interludes from his opera, "The Island God."

Opera, by the way, loomed large this season. Having neglected Wagner for several years, Dr. Koussevitzky offered no less than six items from him, performances of great tonal beauty, as well as four provocative fragments from Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes," which will have its American premiere at Tanglewood next summer. Of Dr. Koussevitzky's other novelties the most ponderable was the Fifth Symphony of Prokofieff. While not of great originality, it is a work of substance and will probably be a fixture in the repertory for some time to come.

The most taking new piece, however, was Copeland's "Appalachian Spring." His "Danzon Cubano" (Bernstein) proved of much less account. Two new symphonies, Martinu's Third and Kabalevsky's Second and two 'Cello Concertos, those of Vladimir Dukelsky (Piatigorsky) and Samuel Barber (Garbousova), did not impress this observer as being particularly significant, though each had its points. That still leaves David Diamond's Rounds for Strings, Henry Cowell's Hymn and Fuguing Tune, Morton Gould's "Harvest" and Concerto for Orchestra as variously interesting examples of young America at work. Mr. Diamond's Rounds, previously played here by the Conservatory Orchestra, seems the one most likely to remain with us. . . . The usual Mahler was omitted and Bruckner was overlooked for yet another season. But there was plenty of Sibelius: five symphonies and a tone poem, in honor of his 80th birthday.

HERALD APRIL 28

Pops Programs

Tuesday night in Symphony Hall Boston's Pop Concerts will begin their 61st season. Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Pops symphony orchestra in programs varying each night with their usual wide variety and broad appeal, ranging from Bach and Handel to Khatchatourian and Prokofieff in the symphonic field, and from Johann Strauss and Offenbach to Rodgers and Morton Gould. Refreshments will be served at the tables which cover the floor of Symphony Hall and in the balconies during intermission time. Wednesday, May 8 (V-E Day Anniversary) will be under the auspices of "France Forever," and Thursday, May 9, will be the annual Harvard Night. The programs of the first ten days follow:

OPENING NIGHT

Tuesday, April 30, 1946, at 8:30 P. M.

"Washington Post" March..........Sousa
Overture to "Orpheus in the Underworld"..........Offenbach
Irish Tune from County Derry..Grainger
"Voices of Spring" Waltz..........Strauss
Dances from the Ballet, "Gayane"..........Khatchatourian
Clair de Lune..........Debussy
Roumanian Rhapsody..........Enesco
Selection from "Carousel"..........Rodgers
"Jingles All the Way"..........Cable
Knightsbridge March from "London" Suite..........Coates

Wednesday, May 1

Hungarian march, "Rakoczy"....Berlioz
Overture, "Fingal's Cave"...Mendelssohn
Jamaican Rhumba..........Benjamin
Waltzes from "Der Rosenkavalier"..........R. Strauss
Three Movements from the ballet, "Fancy Free"..........Bernstein
Promenade..........Anderson
Marche Slave..........Tchaikovsky
"Bloomer Girl" selection..........Arlen
Yankee Doodle Went to Town..........Morton Gould
"Thunder and Lightning," polka..Strauss

Thursday, May 2

Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, from "Tannhauser"..........Wagner
Gavotte and finale, from the "Classical" symphony..........Prokofieff
Nocturne..........Barbara Curry
Slavonic dance in G minor..........Dvorak
"Bostonia" suite..........Keith Brown
Warsaw Concerto..........Addinsell
Piano soloist—Leo Litwin
Bolero..........Ravel
Selection from "Carousel"..........Rodgers
Promenade..........Anderson
"Bahn Frei" ("Fast Track"), polka..........Strauss

Friday, May 3

Prelude to "Carmen"..........Bizet
Overture to "Mignon"..........Thomas
Clair de Lune..........Debussy
"Wine, Woman and Song," waltzes..........Strauss
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"..........Tchaikovsky
Polonaise in A-flat..........Chopin
Warsaw Concerto..........Addinsell
Piano soloist, Leo Litwin
"Oklahoma!" selection..........Rodgers
Gypsy tango, "Jealousy"..........Gade "Pomp and Circumstance," march..Elgar

Saturday, May 4

Marche Militaire..........Schubert
Overture to "Il Guarany"..........Gomes
"By the Beautiful Blue Danube," waltzes..........Strauss
Regis College Glee Club, conducted by Corinne Pierce, '47; accompanist, Dorothy O'Brien, '48:
Spring..........Becker-Cain
Jesu Rex Admirabilis..........Palestrina
The Road to Romany..........Brahms
(Regis Alma Mater, sung by everyone)
"Semper Fidelis," march..........Sousa
Overture to "Mignon"..........Thomas
Dances from the ballet, "Gayane,"..........Katchatourian
Promenade..........Anderson
Briar Rose Waltz from "The Sleeping Beauty"..........Tchaikovsky
Bolero..........Ravel

Sunday, May 5

Overture, "Leonore," No. 3....Beethoven
Air on the G String..........Bach-Wilhelmj
Polovetzian dances, from "Prince Igor"..........Borodin
Rhapsody on a theme of Paganini, for piano and orchestra..........Rachmaninoff
Soloist—Bernhard Weiser
Wellesley College Choir, Margaret M. Macdonald, director
"These Delights If Thou Canst Give," from "L'Allegro"...Handel
Prelude..........Schuman
Three choral settings from "Alice in Wonderland"..........Fine
Three folksongs
"Cancao de Saudade"...Villa-Lobos
"Riddle Song"
"See the Gipsy"..........Kodaly
Finale, from the "Gondoliers"...Sullivan
Selection from "Carousel"..........Rodgers
Deep River..........Burleigh-Jacchia American Salute ("When Johnny Comes Marching Home")..........Gould

---

GLOBE APRIL 28

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Pension Fund Concert

By PHYLLIS WATTS

The loudest and longest cheering heard in years went up in Symphony Hall last night when a full-sized audience stood in the aisles to pay tribute to a vital performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

That cheering wasn't entirely a farewell gesture to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, although yesterday's was the last concert of the season. Neither was the heartfelt approval the result of being bowled over by a work not often given, because the Ninth Symphony has been a steady diet at Pension Fund concerts for the past three years.

The demonstration was rather a spontaneous outburst from an audience which knew a life-giving performance when it heard one. Conductor, orchestra, soloists and several hundred singers working in closest collaboration made triumphant the final choral movement, which looks impossible for voices on paper and seems anti-climatic in the light of cold musical logic.

Those who noticed such small imperfections as some tentative wind entrances and a certain amount of over roughness from the first violins found it hard to remain analytical in the face of the larger success of the Ninth Symphony which dwarfed the elaborately detailed performance of Haydn's 88th Symphony in G major. The soprano and alto soloists (Frances Yeend and Viola Silva) were particularly effective. Miss Yeend's voice is full and positive, well up to the trying, brief passages allotted her. Andrew McKinley's tenor was a shade too staccato in the section which he shared with the smoothly phrased bass of Robert Hall Collins.

The choruses, trained by G. Wallace Woodworth and his assistants Ethel Bernard and Elliot Forbes, were a credit to the occasion, and that is saying a great deal. The high A held for 10 bars was resolute in the striding double fugue. The new translation of Theodore Spencer is a welcome change from the turgid one used in previous years, but perhaps one day Schiller's original will be allowed to speak for itself.

GLOBE APR 28

Beethoven Ninth Tonight for Symphony Pension Fund

Tonight at 8 o'clock the Boston Symphony Orchestra will bring to an end its 65th season with a performance of Beethoven's choral Ninth Symphony, the concert to be for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will begin the program with Haydn's Symphony in G major, No. 88.

In the finale of the Ninth Symphony the combined choruses of 200 of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth, will join the orchestra, and the following quartet of soloists will be heard. Frances Yeend, soprano; Viola Silva, contralto; Andrew McKinley, tenor, and Robert Hall Collins, bass.

This quartet includes two singers who have proved their abilities by singing with this orchestra on previous occasions: Mr Collins and Miss Silva. Miss Silva, since her last appearance in Bach's B minor Mass both in Boston and at a Berkshire Festival, has figured in the Worcester Festival and sung with other orchestras.

Andrew McKinley, born in Pennsylvania, a graduate of the Juilliard School, a pupil of De Gogorza, also studied in Italy with Binetti. He has appeared with the N. B. C. Symphony under Toscanini and in opera performances. Frances Yeend is a native of the state of Washington. She has sung with orchestras and on the stage, enjoying an outstanding success as Micaela in a Columbia concerts opera production of "Carmen."

HERALD APRIL 28

Half-way Impressions; Symphony Season in Review

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

As I intimated last week, I have no real right to review the 65th season of the Boston Symphony, which ends tonight with the Pension und Concert. By virtue of being rmany during October and ber and on the ocean in De- I missed the first third of son. Nor do I think that I ficiently readjusted to take operly the three concerts which I did hear in December. On one of these was the Prokofieff 5th Symphony, which luckily I heard later at a Monday concert and by which I was deeply impressed. But on another was the Bartok Violin Concerto, about which I cannot truthfully say anything sensible at all.

With this much as apology, a few general impressions may not come amiss. First off is the amazing activity of the orchestra and its musicians. The work of the players in giving freely of their time and artistry for the service hospitals and camps is one of the brightest pages in the history of the Boston Symphony. Listed on paper and told to the meeting of the Friends this activity has indeed been extraordinary.

Second on my list of general impressions is the orchestra's record for playing modern music. There have been 31 such compositions during the regular concerts. (This figure includes Stravinsky, new and old, but does not include Sibelius or Strauss—perhaps a rather arbitrary rating.) Of these 31 scores, five were played for the first time anywhere, two for the first time in the United States and 15 for the first time by the Boston Symphony.

Yet the familiar classical warhorses were not neglected. For example, of Beethoven were heard the 1st, 3d, 5th, 6th and 9th Symphonies and the so-called "Emperor" Concerto, of Brahms the 1st and 2d Symphonies, the Violin Concerto and the Haydn Variations; of Tchaikowsky the 6th Symphony, Franck's Symphony; and there was a whole half program of Wagner excerpts. It would seem that Mr. Koussevitzky has once again successfully played both ends against the middle.

In addition, much of the modern music was not "modern" in the sense that it was difficult for the conservative ear to absorb. Nobody could say, for instance, that Bax's "Tintagel" or Ireland's "The Forgotten Rite" or Gretchaninoff's Elegy were other than music by composers still living but otherwise conceived in a past and conventional idiom. Other new scores were intentionally on the light and exotic side, like Milhaud's Saudades do Brazil" and Copland's "Danzon Cubano." These two proved no stumbling block to faithful patrons of the Symphony who complain that Mr. Koussevitzky gives them too much of "this modern stuff." And, in any event, as he delightfully announced at the Friends' Meeting, he is going blithely on dishing it out. I suspect that deep down Boston Symphony audiences are rather proud of their ability to "take it."

In view of the somewhat unfavorable angle of publicity which played up the announcement that Mr. Koussevitzky would conduct next season a minimum of "only 13 weeks," it is interesting to note that he led the orchestra in just 14 of the regular pairs of concerts. For the other 10 we had Sir Adrian Boult for three, Paul Paray and Mr. Burgin for two each and Leonard Bernstein, Fritz Reiner and Igor Stravinsky for one each. In other words, it is hardly likely that next season we shall have Mr. Koussevitzky any less than we had this.

There is one rather disconcerting aspect which has struck me particularly after nearly four years absence from the concerts. That is the distortion which the radio commitment inflicts upon the programs. In sum it seems to mean that we get far the longest part of the program after the intermission, which is at least debatable practice for an ideal program. Secondly we almost never get any modern music after the intermission. Thus, not only does the new music not get a chance to be heard by the radio audience but also those of us who would like to have a second crack at the new work at home are fobbed off with the good old standbys which we have heard so often. I submit that this knuckling to the radio may be good business, but that it is essentially inartistic, that it does a serious disservice to the cause of modern music and that anyway the customers in the seats in Symphony Hall are in the long run the first to be considered.

Rather than conclude this random survey on a sour note, I should like to express my personal gratification at once again being in a position to listen to and applaud the magnificent music which the Boston Symphony habitually makes.

Adding Up the Ledgers; the Symphony Season in Review

By CYRUS DURGIN

Almost before we know it, the time has arrived to add up the symphonic ledgers for the past seven months. For the 65th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be ended with tonight's performance, as a pension fund benefit, of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. The sum total of the ledgers seems to have been another season of memorable performances of a by no means exceptional repertory.

The Boston Symphony is still at its apogee. In technic, in polish and suavity and depth of style, the orchestra continues to be Boston's glory. That, of course, is due to the master's hand of Serge Koussevitzky who, though his own conducting activity has necessarily diminished, continues to rule as the autocrat of Symphony Hall. That is all to our benefit, for the Boston Symphony which he brought to such perfection is one of the wonders of the civilized modern world.

We may as well be candid. Just how long this Golden Age will endure is problematical. For two seasons past, Mr. Koussevitzky has conducted fewer concerts. Now he has announced officially that next season he will conduct only 13 weeks in Boston and those weeks when the orchestra is on tour. This means an ever-increasing number of guest conductors, and that in turn means the orchestra increasingly will be subjected to new ways.

This also means that Mr. Koussevitzky's regime no longer can be considered in terms of an indefinite future. Sooner or later a successor will appear. Indeed, there has been much public speculation about the when and the who of that occasion. When it does come about, the orchestra will have to undergo that natural change incident to a new leader.

Next Autumn will see some new faces upon the stage. Not only Julius Theodorowicz, but certain others are said to be retiring. Musical Boston, as well as his colleagues of the orchestra, joins spontaneously in saluting Mr. Theodorowicz, whose career goes back almost to the beginning of the Boston Symphony. He has been an able and valued member of the first violin section.

The New Music

I think the season past has been one in which the level of consistently high performances is more important than the consideration of any outstanding events. It is true that Mr. Koussevitzky's repertory has been shrinking for a number of years. Ever more he tends to repeat, from season to season, a diminishing number of standard masterpieces. The flow of new music continues, but not spectacularly.

Of the season's new fare, the Fifth Symphony of Sergei Prokofieff certainly was the most rewarding. This remarkably skilled and moving work may very well turn out to be a masterpiece of the late war years. Only time can tell, but I suspect the Fifth will prove to be of enduring value.

The Bartok Violin Concerto, so ably performed by Yehudi Menuhin, stands high on the list of excellent newer music, along with the Interludes from Benjamin Britten's opera "Peter Grimes." The complete performance of the opera at "Tanglewood" during the Summer, will give us opportunity to assay the work as a whole.

The ballet music "Appalachian Spring" stands among the best of Aaron Copland's work, while his "Danzon Cubano" seemed second-rate. Henry Cowell's Hymn and Fuguing Tune is slight enough, but the facture is solid, and the music has a healthy and honest vitality. The same is true of the Rounds by David Diamond, and the Third Symphony of Bohuslav Martinu.

Of less immediate appeal, but not without various good points were the curious Cello Concerto by Vladimir Dukelsky, Menotti's jingly Piano Concerto and the very long and very static "Job" of Vaughan Williams.

My list of outright failures would include the Cello Concerto by Samuel Barber, a musician who otherwise has written some admirable pieces; the Elegy by the venerable Mr. Gretchaninoff, and the Second Symphony of Kabalevsky.

The Revivals

The finest revival, by all odds, was the Konzertmusik of Hindemith, music of great vigor and point and style. Holst's "The Planets" still has appeal, and the Piano Concerto of Khatchatourian continues to grow with each hearing. Certainly the excerpts from the Prokofieff ballet, "Romeo and Juliet," were important as a revival.

Of the guest conductors the most striking was Leonard Bernstein, probably because he has done so much and matured so well before he has reached 30. I would not go so far as some of my friends who insist he has "arrived" as a first-rate conductor, because I have heard him only with a first-rate orchestra. But of his enormous talent and his promising future there is not a shred of doubt. His mastery of the Schumann style was splendid.

It was a great pleasure to hear the gifted Fritz Reiner, who, since he was here for but a week, ought to be invited to return. As I mentioned at the time, of all the guest conductors in 15 years he was the one who changed the tone of the orchestra least. That, considering his decided individuality, was a feat.

Sir Adrian Boult, that impeccable Briton, gave us restful pleasure, although his intentions seemed to be defeated by his programs. Paul Paray from France left only the impression of his own precise technic. As for Mr. Stravinsky, he has improved as conductor, but I am of those who believe that an all-Stravinsky program is monotonous to the point of boredom. That, especially, because so much of his later music is very, very dry. Again, Richard Burgin, the orchestra's likeable concertmaster and assistant conductor, gave proof of his own prowess with the baton.

If we had too much Stravinsky all in one dose, we certainly had far too little Mozart and Mahler. There was no Bruckner at all. The 80th birthday of Sibelius was honored over the season, but for some unaccountable reason Mr. Koussevitzky did not venture one of his most remarkable works, the Fouth Symphony.

This was also the season of the Great-Rest-From-Shostakovich. We had that coming to us.

[121]

BOSTON HERALD, WEDNESDAY, MAY 1,

AN ALL THE WAY UP—MUSIC LOVERS ALL POPS
POPS
FASHION LOVERS GETTING A FEW TIPS
NOTE ON LATEST FASHION
EXTRA YANKEE DOODLE WENT TO TOWN
AREN'T THEY GONNA PLAY HUBBA HUBBA?
VOICES OF SPRING
IRISH TUNES FROM COUNTY DERRY
SELECTIONS FROM CAROUSEL
JINGLES ALL THE WAY
ROUMANIAN RHAPSODY
HER FIRST POP CONCERT TREAT
BOSTON'S OWN ARTHUR FIEDLER REACHES 17TH MILESTONE AS POPULAR POPS CONDUCTOR READY FOR MAY SHOWERS
THE TEEN AGERS HAVE GONE "PIXIE"
CHARMING DEBS SELLING FLOWERS FOR THE GRENFELL MISSION SOCIETY NOTES-DEBS FACE THE MUSIC
STILL GOING STRONG W.R. KITTREDGE, HASN'T MISSED POPS IN 61 YEARS.
GUS STERN

GAY POPS OPENING AGAIN AIDS N. E. GRENFELL FUND

By ALISON ARNOLD

Proof beyond a doubt that spring has come to Boston was the opening of the Pops last night at Symphony Hall. For these famous concerts now starting their 61st season, are part of the Boston tradition along with the swan-boats and Christmas Eve on Beacon Hill.

Every year in April, Symphony Hall changes from its wintry leather upholstery to gay gilt chairs and apple green tables And vacation days come to this sedate home of the Boston Symphony concerts in the form of a musical picnic—the Boston Pops.

Instead of listening in rapt silence. Pops audiences laugh and chat while sampling tall pitchers of Pop Punch or beer and pretzels and often the hum of conversation is punctuated by the popping of champagne corks. Informality is the keynote and marches, tangos and waltzes take the place of Beethoven and Bach.

Always a popular means of raising money for pet causes, the Pops has plenty of benefit nights. For the fourth season, the New England Grenfell Association took over the opening night, as a means for raising funds for the great work of the Grenfell Mission on the Labrador Coast.

Mrs. Robert M. P. Kennard of Newton Center headed the committee, and looked very springlike in a pink and black print with which she wore a tiny black straw hat trimmed with pale pink hyacinths. Under the direction of Genevra Hobbs, debutante flower vendors sold fragrant gardenias and carnations, as well as cakes of maple sugar, and Grenfell Christmast cards. Mr. Stephen Paine, who bought out all the wares his pretty daughter, Sada, had left, hoped she wouldn't stock up again.

Frivolous hats with open crowns and masses of bright flowers added to the gay atmosphere, although the small umbrella tucked in the crown of one hat lent a dampening influence. There were practically no uniforms in the large audience this year, and many reunited families attended together. Young Mr. and Mrs. David Arnold, Jr., who seem to be having a wonderful time going everywhere together once more, were there, and with Mrs. Augustus W. Soule were her sons, Augustus, Jr., Winsor and Richard, and her daughter, Marjorie. With Mrs. Margaret Lane were her son, Thomas, and her daughter, Jean Harriet.

Among those in the throng were Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, her sable cape over a street-length gown; Miss Gertrude Peabody, Miss Dorothy Rackemann and her sister, Miss Elizabeth Rackemann; Mr. and Mrs. James P. Parker, Jr.; Mr. Nathaniel Saltonstall, Mr. and Mrs. William Dana Orcutt, Mr. and Mrs. George H. Lyman, Jr.; Fire Commissioner Russell Codman escorting post-deb Jane Ferguson, Mr. and Mrs. Basil Gavin, Mr. and Mrs. Robert C. Terry, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Terry Collens, Jr.; Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Bond, Mr. and Mrs. Webb White, Dr. and Mrs. Parker Hayden, Mrs. Robert G. Stone, Miss Virginia Palfrey, Miss Frances Baker, Miss Phyllis Long, Miss Beatrice Weeks, Miss Dagmar Pierce and Mrs. Charles F. Eaton, Jr.

MUSIC

The Pops

The 61st season of the Pops Concerts, with Arthur Fiedler conducting the usual orchestra of Boston Symphony players, opened last night in Symphony Hall. A program of music by Sousa, Offenbach, Grainger, Strauss, Khatchatourian, Debussy, Enesco, and many others was offered. The evening's concert was under the auspices of the Nw England Grenfell Association.

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

It is something to return after a long absence and find the Pops functioning precisely as before in Symphony Hall. Of course, we have long known and there have been the usual announcements beforehand that Mr. Fiedler had the good ship, "Pops," on an even keel and would bring her into port with all flags flying. They may droop a bit with the approach of hot weather but last night they were straining jauntily against the mast.

I could not for the life of me see that there was any difference between the Pops of five years ago (or ten) and what was offered to a large and enthusiastic public last night. Prices for bottled goods may be a bit higher, and there are once again imported items on the menu which I assume have been for some time absent. There was one new piece on the program. But otherwise we might have been attending any Pop concert during the post-Prohibition era.

Nor would that one new piece have told us in no uncertain terms that we were in 1946, rather than '36. This work was a set of three dances from Khatchatourian's Ballet, "Gayane." The first two numbers, "Song of the Rose Maidens" and "Lullaby," might have been slightly modernized Tchaikovsky. The "Sword Dance" had more of the spice that distinguished the composer of the Piano Concerto which has proved so popular in Boston Symphony concerts. It was, I thought, rather mean of Mr. Fiedler to follow it immediately with an encore of Shostakovitch's Polka from "The Golden Age," which is contemporary music with sauce "a la Russe" with a vengeance asd obviously an established "new" favorite with the audience.

But nothing could disturb the pleasure and equanimity of last night's public. It knew within a minute or two just when to settle down and listen. I hope that the new project of having Pops in Carnegie Hall in New York will have a similarly schooled audience. It may even be more like a continuation of Philharmonic's season, thanks to the snobbish notion of only serving refreshments during the music in the boxes! At any rate we shall see if New York can produce a successful substitute for Mr. Fiedler. Meanwhile our own Pops have taken off and will carry on with as much gusto as ever.

TONIGHT AT THE POPS

The 61st season of the Pops continues tonight in Symphony Hall, with Arthur Fiedler conducting the following program:

Hungarian March, "Rakoczy" .... Berlioz
Overture "Fingal's Cave" .... Mendelssohn
Jamaican Rhumba .... Benjamin
Waltzes from "Der Rosenkavalier"
R. Strauss
Suite from "Fancy Free" .... Bernstein
Promenade .... Anderson
Marche Slave .... Tchaikovsky
"Bloomer Girl" Selection .... Arlen
Yankee Doodle Went To Town
Morton Gould
"Thunder and Lightning," Polka .. Strauss

MAY 1, 1946

THE BOSTON DAILY GLOBE

SNAPPED AT THE OPENING OF POPS last night, which benefited the New England Grenfell Association, were Mrs. Krug Nidda of Chestnut Hill and Nathaniel Saltonstall.

Bostonians Jam Symphony Hall for 61st Pops Season Opening

Pops got off to a fine and early beginning last night when Arthur Fiedler swung into the Washington Post March to launch the 61st season of the Boston Pops Orchestra. More than three generations of Boston fans have watched Symphony Hall turn into a cafe complete with persuasive music and refreshment to celebrate the Spring season.

New to the concerts which have become a Boston institution were three pieces which show every sign of prospering, a fresh apple green coat of paint for the walls of the floor section and an untrellised stage. The last innovation, like the chaining of chairs five to a table, may be laid to the recent overhauling of fire laws.

Mr. Fiedler continues to conduct in a debonnair fashion, with left hand on hip and right making sweeping motions above the bank of traditional orange gladioli. The same rivalry for the first popping of corks also continues in the audience, with the left of center section coming in a strong winner last night.

New Song Is a Hit

Cable's new "Jingles All The Way," which combines radio advertisement tunes and symphonic themes in a cavalier manner was a distinct hit. Signature tunes recognizable at a first hearing blended the musical trademarks of a chewing gum, a soft drink, a ventriloquist character, three kinds of soap, and bananas ("which should not be kept in the refrigerator") with snatches of Wagner and Haydn. The recapitulation of the chewing gum and the beverage themes was followed by a coda describing toilet preparation which is a household word. Few in the sold out audience failed to get the joke.

Also heard for the first time at the opening night program which ran the gamut from Debussy's "Claire De Lune" to hit tunes from the Rodgers musical, "Carousel", were dances from the ballet "Gayane" by Khatchatourian, which proved an exotic blend of lullaby and sword dance Armenian rhythms.

Oldtimers on stage were headed by concertmaster Julius Theodorowitz, who is in his 30th year of Pops and in the audience by William R. Kittredge, who has missed only one opening night of Pops in the 61 years which date back to 1885.

Encores in the generous program ran to the French popular song, "Symphonie," the Russian polka, "Golden Age," by Shostakovitch; the American "Yankee Doodle Dandy," by Gould, and two folk inspired numbers by Leroy Anderson.

As a final and traditional feature of Pops, the opening night concert was a benefit occasion, sponsored by the New England Grenfell Association.

There are few nights left unspoken for in the series of concerts which sell out far in advance, but there is always the method of approaching the box office by way of a sponsoring organization, since those ticket-committees cover an all inclusive range of college, club, religion and charitable institutions. There are still two months of Pops yet to come.

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

MAY 2 - 1946

The Listening Post

Boston 'Pops' Asks Fans What to Play

By ROCKY CLARK

Now that the Boston Symphony season has ended, Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Boston Pops orchestra this week in the first of its series of Saturday night broadcasts over WNAB-ABC at 9:30. During the program he will invite listeners to vote on their favorite overture, and the winning number will be played the following week. Each week, he will ask his listeners to vote on a composition in a selected category—a waltz being the subject for the second week's voting.

Patterned after the old-time Saturday "Pops" at St. James Hall in London, the Boston "Pops" are held in Boston's Symphony Hall, with tables replacing seats and listeners refreshing themselves with music as well as drinks. The music, of course, is of a lighter nature than the winter symphony series.

On this Saturday's program are Sousa's "Semper Fidelis," Thomas' "Mignon" Overture, excerpts from Khatchaturian's "Gaynne Ballet," Anderson's "Promenade," the "Briar Rose" waltz from Tchaikowsky's "Sleeping Beauty" and Ravel's "Bolero."

RENOWNED POPS ENTER 61ST YEAR

BOSTON POST
MAY 1

Fiedler Presents One of His Attractive Programs

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

The Symphony Hall Pop Concerts entered bravely upon their seventh decade last evening, with every sign of living up to their name.

A queue at the box office during the intermissions gave the lie to the rumor that the entire series of concerts had been sold out. But seats will not go a-begging.

TRIBUTE TO FIEDLER

As the concerts began their 61st year, Arthur Fiedler commenced his 17th as their most successful conductor. It would be difficult, indeed, to think of the Pops under any other leadership than his. Part of his success is due to his personality and part of it is to his programs, and the rest of it to his all-round fitness for the job.

In the course of two months some 500 numbers will be played by the 80-odd Boston Symphony men, and according to an article by Mr. Fiedler, quoted from the magazine "Holiday" and reprinted in the program book, there are some 50 new titles every year.

The principal novelty last evening was a suite of three numbers from the Ballet "Gayane" by the Soviet composer of Armenian extraction, Aram Khatchatourian, no new name hereabouts. Respectively entitled "Song of the Rose Maidens," "Lullaby" and "Sword Dance," these excerpts had the expected exotic flavor and displayed the expected craftsmanship, but evinced no particular distinction. Good Pops music, they will be serviceable for a time at least.

Mr. Fiedler did not try as hard as he has sometimes to make the opening program unusual. Rather did he rely on very familiar material for the bulk of it. There was Sousa's "Washington Post" March, Offenbach's Overture to "Orpheus in Hades," Grainger's somewhat perversely harmonized arrangement of the beautiful Irish tune from County Derry (better known as "The Londonderry Air"), Strauss' "Voices of Spring" Waltzes, Debussy's toothsome "Clair de Lune" and the First Roumanian Rhapsody of Enesco.

Traditionally, the last group of three pieces is made up of lighter numbers, though some of the others may not be too serious. A selection from "Carousel," Cable's "Jingles all the Way" and Coates' "Knightsbridge" March excellently served this purpose last evening. And of course there were the encores, each one of them eliciting signs of approval from the audience when the announcing placard was lifted in the rear of the orchestra.

Whatever the music in hand, the Symphony men played it last evening not only with care but with zest. Two months from now you may know that they have been at it for eight weeks. They still won't play badly. And so the Pops, Boston's uniquely successful institution, is with us again. Other cities have tried "pop" concerts and they haven't gone too well. Next Saturday, at long last, New York enters the field. But neither there nor anywhere can the Boston Pops be really imitated.

This Clipping From
BATON ROUGE, LA.
STATE-TIMES
MAY 2 1946

BASSOON PLAYED BY RARE WOMAN

Orchestra Members Say Instrument Takes Lifetime to Master

Boston (UP)—That one of the world's leading orchestra — the Boston Symphony—should have a woman player is not too amazing. But that the woman should be a bassoon player puts the information in the "man bites dog class."

The woman bassoonist is Miss Anne de Guichard. She plays the bassoon through choice, doubling on saxophone when the score calls for it.

To the uninitiated, a bassoon is a long piece of pipe about the size of a rocket-throwing "bazooka." And it's played by a ridiculoulsy small tube that curves around to meet the player's mouth. It throws a tone lower than a horse-player's bankroll after a bad day, and is reputed by musicians not bassoon players to require enough breath to keep several Dutch windmills in operation for a long time.

But it's Miss Guichard's baby. And has been ever since she was 16 years old. She never attended music school, and her only teacher was the man whose chair in the Boston Symphony she took over after he died two years ago.

An attractive brunette, Miss de Guichard is accepted as an equal among the members of the orchestra. However, she still feels she has much to learn about her instrument.

"The bassoon is not for people who are easily discouraged," she says. "I haven't completely mastered it yet, and I'm still hard at it."

This Clipping From
BEAUMONT, TEXAS
JOURNAL
MAY 3 1946

Boston Symphony Has Woman Player Of Tricky Bassoon

BOSTON. (UP)—That one of the world's leading orchestras—the Boston symphony—should have a woman player is not too amazing. But that the woman should be a bassoon player puts the information in the "man bites dog class."

The woman bassoonist is Miss Anne de Guichard. She plays the bassoon through choice, doubling on saxophone when the score calls for it.

To the uninitiated, a bassoon is a long piece of pipe about the size of a rocket-throwing "bazooka." And it's played by a ridiculously small tube that curves around to meet the player's mouth. It throws a tone lower than a horse-player's bankroll after a bad day, and is reputed by musicians not bassoon to keep several Dutch windmills in operation for a long time.

But it's Miss Guichard's baby. And has been ever since she was 16 years old. She never attended music school, and her only teacher was the man whose chair in the Boston symphony she took over after he died two years ago.

An attractive brunette, Miss de Guichard is accepted as an equal among the members of the orchestra. However, she still feels she has much to learn about her instrument.

"The bassoon is not for people who are easily discouraged," she says. "I haven't completely mastered it yet, and I'm still hard at it."

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
JOURNAL OF COMMERCE
MAY 3 - 1946

RECORDS

Copland; Brahms; Stravinsky; Prokofieff; Spirituals; Polkas; Singles

By William Leonard

COPLAND: "Appalachian Spring"; Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky (Victor album DM-1046, three twelve-inch records). Too few Chicagoans heard this splendid score when Martha Graham and her company danced "Appalachian Spring" at the Opera House last month. Winner of a Pulitzer Prize for Aaron Copland in 1944, the music deserves the availability and the audiences the phonograph can give it. It also deserves the flawless performance it receives in this set from Mr. Koussevitzky and the Boston orchestra. It probably deserves, as well, the showmanship with which Victor has packaged it, in the "Record-Story" format with seven illustrated pages containing action shots of the Graham troupe's production, the plot of the ballet and other program notes. None of the score's fresh, earthy simplicity is lost in the reading or the reproduction, and the eight sections are well apportioned over the six record sides.

* * *

BRAHMS: Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, D major; Joseph Szigeti, and the Philadelphia Orchestra conducted by Eugene Ormandy (Columbia album MM-603, five twelve-inch records). Mr. Szigeti is a scrupulous musician, one of the foremost technically, but possessed of a refined tone too delicate for adequate representation when recorded against the accompaniment of a full symphonic orchestra. The Brahms concerto, as a result, lacks warmth in this edition, although the capable Mr. Szigeti and the enthusiastic Mr. Ormandy have collaborated in a thoughtful and meritorious presentation.

Mr. Szigeti is heard with Leonid Hambro, pianist, in the adagio from Brahms' Sonata No. 3, D minor, for violin and piano, on the sixth record side.

* * *

STRAVINSKY: Symphonic poem, "The Song of the Nightingale"; Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra conducted by Eugene Goossens (Victor album DM-1041, three twelve-inch records). Originally an opera, later a ballet, and about twenty years ago a fairly familiar symphonic item, this early Stravinsky work never before has been recorded in its entirety. Mr. Goossens conducts the musical version of a Hans Christian Anderson fairy tale with delicacy and a skillful use of tonal color.

Chabrier's "Joyous March" is included as the sixth and final side in the album.

* * *

PROKOFIEFF: Sonata No. 7, Opus 83; Vladimir Horowitz, pianist (Victor album DM-1042, two twelve-inch records). Unless the town's record shops had a large supply of this set on hand, there probably aren't any on the shelves now, for anyone who heard Mr. Horowitz play this vivid work at Orchestra Hall Monday night must have been tempted to add it to his record library. This department recommends it anyway, as a sterling sample, well recorded, of the keyboard champion at his best and in his musical element.

* * *

"AMERICAN SPIRITUALS": Kenneth Spencer, basso (Sonora album MS-478, four ten-inch records). Young Mr. Spencer, at present singing Joe in "Show Boat" on Broadway, sounds like a worthy successor to Jules Bledsoe and Paul Robeson in that role. His voice, voluminous and adroitly used, is heard in "Hear de Lambs A-Cryin'," "Goin' to Ride Up in de Chariot," "City Called Heaven," "Water Boy," "Every Mail Day," "Go Down Moses," "There's a Man Goin' Round Takin' Names," "Joshua Fit the Battle of Jericho," "Black Sheep, Where You Left Yo' Lamb?," "Little David, Play On Yo' Harp" and "Deep River."

This Clipping From PERU, ILL.
NEWS HERALD
MAY 3 - 1946

POM-POM-POM!—Ever hear of a woman bassoonist? Here's one. She's Miss Anne de Guichard, member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Bassoon, you remember, is that wood instrument that is heavy on the bass. Girl's only teacher was man whose seat she took in orchestra after he died, in 1944.

This Clipping From
KLAMATH FALLS, ORE.
HERALD-NEWS
MAY 4 1946

Tonight's Boston "Pops" Symphony, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, offers a varied program for the listener. The program opens with Sousa's Semper Fidelis, and is followed by Overture to "Mignon" by Thomas, dances from ballet "Gaynne" by Khatchaturian, Promenade by Anderson, Briar Rose Waltz from "The Sleeping Beauty" by Tchaikovsky and closes with Ravel's Bolero. This program marks the start of the "Pops" orchestra, which replaces the Boston Symphony for the summer months.

* * *

This Clipping From TROY, OHIO
NEWS
MAY 3 - 1946

Pom-Pom-Pom!

Ever hear of a woman bassoonist? Here's one. She's Miss Anne de Guichard, member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Bassoon, you remember, is that wood instrument that is heavy on the bass. Girl's only teacher was man whose seat she took in orchestra after he died, in 1944.

This Clipping From
JACKSON, TENN.
SUN
MAY 3 - 1946

When the Boston "Pops" Orchestra broadcast series opens in Boston's Symphony Hall on ~~Saturday, May 4,~~ listeners throughout the country will be asked to vote on their favorite overture. The winning number will be heard on the second broadcast, one week later, over WTJS-ABC from 7:30 to 8:30 p. m.

Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the summer series, will each week present the composition in a selected category voted the favorite of ABC listeners. On May 18, the best-loved waltz will be programmed. Other classifications will be chosen later.

For the May 11 broadcast, Fiedler will play the Prelude to Act 3 of "Lohengrin," Miszkowski's "Theme and Variations," from Suite Op. 39, the "Tress Jolie" Waltz of Waldteufel, and Elgar's "Pomp and Cirsumstance" March.

The "Pops" are part of the summer series, sponsored this year for the first time in its entirely by the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Company.

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
MAY

WITH THE SEASON of the Boston Symphony now closed, the summer performance of the Boston "Pops" concerts start today. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky turns the baton over to Arthur Fiedler.

The first broadcast will present "Semper Fidelis," "Mignon," "Bolero" and "Promenade," from well-known composers (8:30, WISH-ABC).

This Clipping From
WINONA, MINN.
REPUBLICAN HERALD

Boston 'Pops' Listeners to Select Overture

When the Boston "Pops" orchestra broadcast series opens in Boston's Symphony Hall today, listeners will be asked to vote for their favorite overture. The winning number will be heard on the second broadcast next Saturday.

The Boston "Pops" concerts begin this week and are broadcast locally over Radio Station KWNO every Saturday from 7:30 to 8:30 p. m.

This is the first year that listeners have been given the opportunity to select musical works they wish to hear on the program.

Each week, Arthur Fielder, conductor of the summer series, will present the composition in a selected category voted the favorite of American Broadcasting Company listeners. On May 18, the best-loved waltz will be aired. Other classifications will be chosen later.

For tonight's broadcast, Fiedler has selected Sousa's famous and ever-popular march, "Semper Fidelis," the "Briar Rose" Waltz from Tchaikovsky's "Sleeping Beauty," Anderson's "Promenade" and Ravel's haunting "Bolero."

The "Pops" are part of the summer series of the Boston Symphony orchestra radio concerts.

This Clipping From
ST. JOSEPH, MO.
NEWS-PRESS

MAY 3 1946

Women in the News of the Day

BASSOONIST . . . Being a member of the Boston symphony is enough to make Miss Anne De Guichard an outstanding woman, In addition she is a bassoonist who doubles on the saxophone and has never attended a music school. Her only instructor was the man whose seat she took over in the Boston symphony upon his death two years ago. (Acme.)

SPY . . . A former woman spy for the free French, Madame Suzanne Bidault, wife of France's foreign minister, will act as hostess to the delegates to the peace conference to begin in Paris this month. As a spy she worked in Vichy, sending information to London via Spain. (Acme.)

SHARPSHOOTER . . . Displaying the sharpshooting skill which won her third place in the United States sectional national interscholastic rifle competition recently, Miss Marie Linder, of Upper Darby, Pa., High School takes a bead on the target. She placed first among the girl contestants in the meet held at Drexel Tech rifle range. (Acme.)

This Clipping From OAKLAND, CAL.
TRIBUNE

MAY 5 1946 ✓

Stravinsky and Grofe Works Newly Recorded

"The Song of the Nightingale," the tone poem which Stravinsky made from his opera founded on a fairy tale by Hans Christian Andersen, remains one of his most intriguingly diverting compositions. It receives a sparkling and well integrated performance by the Cincinnati Symphony under Eugene Goossens, on a currently released Victor album of good recording quality. This is said to be the first complete recording of this seldom heard work.

Another modern orchestral number among the new Victor releases is Arturo Toscanini's enthusiastic reading of Ferde Grofe's "Grand Canyon" Suite, which has become very popular through its associational appeal and because it presents little difficulty to the listener. The recording is excellent.

Turning to the romantics, the Boston Symphony has newly recorded Schubert's Symphony No. 8 in B minor (the beloved "Unfinished" symphony). Conductor Koussevitzky gives it a glowing interpretation, and the improved engineering of the Victor recording studios brings out the mellow suavity of the orchestra's sonorities clearly and with less surface noise than the older disks by the same orchestra.

For those who enjoy a familiar song in a rousing choral arrangement, the Victor Chorale led by Robert Shaw has recorded "The Bells of Saint Mary's" quite clearly and with good orchestral support. The same artists are heard on the reverse side in Malotte's "The Lord's Prayer."

This Clipping From
WHEELING, W. VA.
INTELLIGENCER

MAY 4 - 1946

POM-POM-POM!—Ever hear of a woman bassoonist? Here's one. She's Miss Anne de Guichard, member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Bassoon, you remember, is that wood instrument that is heavy on the bass. Girl's only teacher was man whose seat she took in orchestra after he died, in 1944.

This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

MAY 5 - 1946

The Boston Symphony Orchestra reports that students from every state and from foreign countries have applied for enrollment in the Berkshire Music Center this Summer. The center is to be resumed after a war lapse at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) next July 1, under Serge Koussevitzky. It will continue [illegible] the Berkshire Festival, which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct through the last three of the six weeks' school term.

Todd Duncan, Negro baritone, has been signed for a tour of Hawaii, Australia and New Zealand. He will leave San Francisco on May 8, play a first concert in Honolulu on May 12, and appear in Melbourne, Sydney, Brisbane, Adelaide and other Australian cities before going to New Zealand. The tour calls for at least 25 concerts and some radio engagements.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

MAY 5 - 1946

NOTED MUSICIANS USE ACROSONIC

During the nine years the Baldwin-built Acrosonic piano has been available to the public it has gone to all parts of the world to fulfil a task formerly given to grand pianos. The superb total qualities of this beautiful small piano have won it a spot in the homes of many famous musicians.

Today many hospitalized veterans find pleasure in the concerts organized and given by members of the Boston Symphony orchestra. To [illegible] the more than 500 concerts given by this group, an Acrosonic is mounted on a special "dolly", making it possible for only one man to move the piano into the concert hall of the hospital. At the Berkshire Music Festival also, the Acrosonic will be found, along with Baldwins and Hamiltons, ready to meet the exacting standards of truly great pianists.

Eddie Duchin purchased two of these exquisite small pianos after his recent release from four years of Naval service. And hotels such as The Sheraton, Ritz-Carlton and Plaza of New York have found the Acrosonic ideally suited for the use of professional musicians when space is limited.

The Acrosonic may be seen and heard at the Exposition booth of the Berkeley Music Company of 10 Belmont street.

BOSTON POST MAY 5

ON RICHARD WAGNER

Thoughts Inspired by Article Written by Daughter of the Famous Composer

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

IN ONE way or another, Richard Wagner has been pretty well tied up with the Nazis. They made a fetish of his works, or, rather, those of them which suited their particular purpose. Perhaps mistakenly, since many of his theories and beliefs were drastically opposed to theirs, some have contended that the Nazis found ammunition not only in his doctrines but in his dramas and even in his music, which is carrying things a bit far. After he came into power, Hitler dominated the Bayreuth festivals. There was a rumor that he was to marry Wagner's English-born daughter-in-law, Winifred. However, her husband, Siegfried, who died in 1930, seems not to have taken his wife's long-standing friend and one-time protege, too seriously.

Anyway, one of the couple's four children, Friedelind, became a violent anti-Nazi and sought refuge in this country. She first came into public notice when a radio program featured her grandfather's youthful Overture, "Rule Brittania" and in an intermission commentary she pointed out the irony involved in Wagner's admiration for the English. Not long ago, in conjunction with Page Cooper, she brought out a book, "Heritage of Fire," containing illuminating disclosures regarding the prewar Nazi regime in its relation to music and musicians, with particular emphasis on conditions in the Wagner stronghold of Bayreuth.

Still more recently she has contributed to Musical America a most instructive article entitled "Some Thoughts on Staging Grandfather's Operas." One thing that particularly intrigued me, in view of the cavalier fashion in which the Metropolitan handles that portion of the work (a matter of which we have been lately and rather painfully reminded), was Miss Wagner's contention that no company should attempt the Paris (1861) version of the Venusberg scene unless it can come within striking distance of realizing the dramatist-composer's intentions. (Apparently the original Paris performances were not too hot in that respect; the critic, Gasparini called the Bacchanale "an orgy in a young ladies' boarding school.")

Miss Wagner then quotes "Grandfather's" long, complicated and occasionally impractical stage directions. These are unfamiliar to the great majority of opera-goers here. The piano score of the Paris version has been but little circulated in this country, and you can encounter supposedly well-informed musicians who are not aware that Wagner rewrote and greatly amplified not only the Bacchanale, but also the ensuing duet between Tannhaeuser and Venus. Accordingly, few who attend the Metropolitan's much-curtailed performances have much idea of what they are missing in the way of choregraphy, sets and music. Apparently, the Bayreuth production of 1930 and '31, with Toscanini conducting, filled the bill.

To review a bit of musical history, when Wagner, through the intercession of Princess Metternich, was enabled to have his "Tannhaeuser" mounted at the Paris Opera, he set to work to revise those portions of his 15-year-old score that now seemed to him most inadequate; this Bacchanale and the scene between Tannhaeuser and Venus. The music dramatist, who had just completed "Tristan," was in a position to do a lot more with the Goddess of Love than was the relatively immature composer of "romantic operas."

From this extensive revision certain difficulties resulted. The revised score and the spectacular ballet imposed an added burden on all concerned. Even the older portions of the opera were a bit too much for the French critics and public, and here was music far in advance of that. Again, speaking in terms of the piano score, not only did the new version add 30-odd pages to the Venusberg scene, it made that part of the opera disproportionately long. That Wagner excised the last eight pages of the overture and shortened the Tournament of Song in Act II remedied matters but slightly.

There is also a third objection, and one not likely to disturb most people. As Lawrence Gilman put it, "the score in its present and, alas, final condition straddles violently the upper and nether regions of Wagner's aesthetic world." The interested reader is referred to the essay, "A neglected page of Wagner's" in Mr. Gilman's "The Music of Tomorrow," for an account of Wagner's changes in the music and of the vicissitudes that accompanied those ill-fated Paris performances, brought to ruin by the noble efforts of the members of the Jockey Club, who hissed and catcalled throughout because, forsooth, the ballet came at the beginning of the opera, when they were by no means ready to go to the theatre.

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

Bronislaw Gimpel will conduct the A.B.C. Symphony broadcast on KXOK at 4 p.m. Saturday in performances of the Overture to "Ruslan and Ludmilla," Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony and Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2.

Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Boston Symphony "pop" concert at 8:30 Saturday night on KXOK. Music programmed includes the Prelude to the third act of "Lohengrin," Moszowski's Theme and Variations, Waldteufel's "Tres Jolie" Waltz and Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance" March.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

MAY - 5 1946

WILL SING TONIGHT

Miss Alice Brown, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur F. Brown of Beecher Road, Woodbridge, and Miss Jean Maurer, daughter of Mrs. Richard Long of Central Avenue, students at Wellesley College, Wellesley, Mass., will sing tonight in a concert featuring the Wellesley College Choir with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall, Boston. Miss Brown is a junior in the college and Miss Maurer a senior.

[124]

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
5 - 1946

SECOND-RATE SEASON

By VIRGIL THOMSON

LOOKING back at the music season now approaching its end, this reviewer finds he can remember very little that took place. Discussing it with friends and colleagues, he finds that in the opinion of these very little, in fact, did take place that was out of the ordinary. There were lots of concerts and recitals and the usual number of operatic performances, but unusual departures from routine repertory or from average standards of competence in execution have been almost non-existent.

* * *

Monotonous Repertory

THE New York Music Critics' Circle will have to make its annual awards on a basis of very few available works, since the new American pieces given here for the first time can almost be counted on five fingers. And our New York situation is not unique. The Pulitzer Prize Committee has been worried all spring lest the number of new American works performed anywhere in America be insufficient to justify the giving of a prize at all. Our City Symphony has been fairly assiduous about novelties; our Philharmonic has been skimpy with them. Philadelphia, not of late a very novelty-minded orchestra, has furnished just about its usual quota. Boston, formerly our chief source of fresh musical material, would seem to have gone ultra-conventional all of a sudden. In any case, none of the orchestras that plays here regularly, excepting the City Symphony, which has kept a lively repertory, has played enough new music, American or other, for anybody but the conductors to shake a stick at.

The local opera companies at the Metropolitan and the City Center, as well as the Salmaggi and San Carlo troupes, have ~~long ago~~ disaccustomed us to novel repertory. Of that they provide us literally and exactly nothing; they do not even pretend that they are about to. Their policy is identical with that of the New Friends of Music, conservatism for the box-office's sake. And the regular run of recitalists follows the same slogan. A few here and there play something new and get applauded for it. But mostly they stick to the conventions. And the conventions would have one believe that the music-consuming public only wants and will buy chestnuts.

* * *

Baby Food for Everybody

THE falsity of the supposition is proved by the devotion of certain small groups among the public to musical advance and to quality. Nobody pretends that these small groups are capable of supporting large institutions. But they are capable of supporting a great deal more modern music and quality music than they are nowadays being given a chance to do. They flock to hear Maggie Teyte and Landowska and the Cantata Singers. They turn ~~out for Povla~~ Frijsh and for the two-piano playing of Gold and Fizdale. They even mobilize, on occasion, the literary world. They are a devoted public. To throw away their custom by lumping them with the mass public is like a book publisher who would refuse to publish any manuscript not destined to sell a hundred thousand copies.

This latter seems to be the calculation of the gramophone recording companies. Their output of anything beyond the Fifty Pieces is pathetically small. They are commercial institutions and may possibly be excused from the cultural obligation, though their virtual monopoly of materials and of distribution facilities will force one day the raising of the cultural question. But the orchestras and the Metropolitan are, in theory, intellectual foundations. They are committing intellectual suicide by not appealing to the intellectual public. Let them give standard repertory for the young people and for the musically retarded who are not yet familiar with it. The mouthing of sacred texts has no doubt a place in art, as in religion; let it by all means go on. But not to give special concerts for the musically active (concerts which they are perfectly willing to pay admission to) is like making the grown folks in a household take all their meals at the children's table. This is a faulty cultural policy and a bad business policy, though it is defended at present as a business economy.

* * *

Limited Public Service

JUST how much the standard opera companies and symphony orchestras contribute to real musical life is questionable, anyway. They go through a routine about this, and some of the customers certainly get pleasure and profit. Whether these particular benefits are worth what the whole thing costs is hard to say. Certainly expensive orchestras are a more important part of music's business set-up, which could not do without them, than of our cultural set-up, which could. They are the branches of a vast international chain-store of music, with interchangeable managements, musicians, conductors, soloists and repertory. They supply to the public only a very small part of the repertory that exists and that is properly their stock in trade.

The performance of this repertory is a public service. Wherever business does not supply it, governments do. Where business does supply it, the circulation is larger; but the number of pieces supplied gets smaller and smaller every year. I have no proposal for remedying the stalemate beyond elaborating the scheme. I do think that supplying all the kinds of music for all the kinds of musical taste in separate concerts and separate series of concerts would perform the public service better and that it would, in the long run, be more profitable. Beyond this innocent suggestion, I can only comment as a regular concert-goer that giving the same kind of thing to everybody does not seem to me a satisfactory system of operations. I find less and less memorable difference, as any season goes on, between one concert and another; and I do not believe this standardization to be culturally advantageous. Paternalism in cultural matters is pretty oppressive, even when practiced by enlightened governments. When practiced by business under the guise of philanthropy, it amounts to the forced consumption of an inferior product. Because art which is not full of variety and surprise is, by definition, second-rate.

This Clipping From
SAN DIEGO, CAL.
UNION
MAY 5 1946

Concerts by School Orchestras To Feature Music Week Programs

By CONSTANCE HERRESHOFF

Special celebrations of Music week, which is now under way, will be the concerts to be given by the elementary and junior high school orchestras of our city schools this afternoon and next Sunday afternoon.

The All-City Elementary Schools orchestra will lead off today at 3 o'clock with a concert in Hoover auditorium. The 200 young musicians who have been selected for this orchestra have been trained by De Forrest Gay, Paul Popejoy and Alma Marks. A chorale by Bach, a prelude by Chopin, Tchaikovsky's "Marche Slav," and Strauss waltzes will be included in their program.

Soloists will be Ronny Fos, oboist, and Stephen Fox, bassoonist, of La Jolla school; Jim Lauer, flutist, and Illa Miller, accompanist, of Florence school; Judy McKay, pianist, of John Adams school, and Richard Bouley and Jeremy Lustig, a likely team of duo-violinists from Ocean Beach school.

FESTIVAL DATE SET

The annual city-schools orchestra festival representing five junior high schools, will take place next Sunday afternoon at 2:30 in Russ auditorium, with 215 young musicians participating. After the orchestras of Dana, Memorial, Horace Mann, Woodrow Wilson, and Roosevelt Junior High schools have played separate groups under their own directors, an all-city orchestra of 84 musicians selected from these schools will play "The Shepherd King Overture" (Mozart); "Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring" (Bach); "Pizzicato Polka" (Strauss), and "Triumphal March" (Grieg), under Edward Janowsky's direction.

Leaders of the string section of this orchestra will be James Larkin, concertmaster; Dolores Geisler, principal of second violins; Claudine Miller, first viola; Dale Popejoy, first cellist; Alice Lopez, first bass viol.

Walter Kroon, piano soloist in this concert, will play "Concerto in G minor" by Joseph Wagner with the orchestra of Roosevelt Junior High school, with Walter Mentze directing.

* * *

Max Dalby, another member of the talented Dalby family, has decided to make San Diego his home. He arrived on Easter Sunday from Salt Lake City with his wife, Betty Marler Dalby, and two children, aged 3 and 2, who show promise as buglers. Dalby plays clarinet, sax and other woodwinds, and is studying violin. His wife plays piano and sings.

MAX DALBY
. . . will reside in San Diego.

Other Dalbys already here are a brother, John Philip, a baritone who plays brass instruments, and their father, Cleon Dalby, another brass man. Another brother, expected to report here later, is Glen Dalby, a composer and French horn player, who is now attending Brigham Young university. All these Dalbys compose and are experienced as directors and arrangers.

Max Dalby studied clarinet with his father and with Val P. Henrichs, first clarinet of the Denver Symphony. After being graduated from Brigham Young university in 1942, he served three years in the army, part of time as director of the 249th Army Ground Forces band in the Canal Zone. After his release from the service he played solo clarinet with the Salt Lake Symphony and band, also with the NBC staff orchestra. He did a great deal of band arranging, directed a chorus in a Momon chapel, and taught music classes in the schools. He believes in preparing young school musicians for symphonic work.

Dalby has accomplished a great deal in his first 25 years, and we are likely to hear more of him later. He may return to college for another degree, or he may just steam ahead at music, with poetry and painting as side lines.

TYERS IN OPERA

John Tyers, who made his debut as a baritone while attending Hoover High school, is now starring in "The Vagabond King," a Los Angeles Civic Light Opera production directed by Edwin Lester. "The Vagabond King" opened Friday night in Philharmonic auditorium. Dorothy Sarnoff, winner of the Met auditions in 1941, is co-starring with Tyers. Experts have classed Miss Sarnoff as a "lyrico spinto," meaning a lyric soprano of dramatic possibilities. Although Miss Sarnoff devotes herself principally to grand opera roles, she likes to limber up occasionally in light opera because it gives her "more of a chance to act."

* * *

Ruth Reynolds, mezzo-soprano, has assumed her new duties as soloist and choir director in Christ church, Coronado. Miss Reynolds is busy with other musical activities, such as attending rehearsals of San Diego's new light opera company, and learning the role of Katasha in "The Mikado," just in case. Miss Reynolds' mother, Belle Stewart, sang this role in a "Mikado" production put on in 1894 in the old Fisher Opera house. Jack Dodge was also a member of this cast.

* * *

In an invitational sonata recital to be given Tuesday night in the Keeney Studios, Russell Keeney, violinist, and Lyell Barbour, pianist, will play Beethoven's "Sonata in C minor," Haydn's Sonata in G major," and a sonata by Pierne.

* * *

As a result of recent auditions, Morris Kirshbaum, cellist, will play with the Berkshire Festival orchestra under Koussevitsky this summer, and will study cello with Piatigorsky, a member of the faculty in the summer session of the Berkshire Music Center.

CONCERT SUCCESSFUL

An extremely successful and popular event of Wednesday night in San Diego Woman's clubhouse was the ninth annual concerto concert presented by pianists from Lyell Barbour's studios. A capacity audience enjoyed the fine work of the eight pianists appearing in this novel program, also Lyell Barbour's expert support at a second piano throughout the concert. The program was devoted to concertos by Beethoven, Chopin and Bach.

Brilliance, clarity, musical quality of tone, and accuracy characterized the playing of the student pianists. Newcomers to these concerts, deserving special mention, were Tony Sonka, 13, and Judy McKay, 11. Judy played the "Allegro Moderato" from Bach's "Concerto in F minor." She will again be a soloist this afternoon in the elementary schools orchestra concert.

Other talented pianists of the concerto concert were Barbara Wenman, Genia Sprinkle, Eleanor Willis, Agnes Childs, Norman Sanger, and Warren Henry.

This Clipping From
TULSA, OKLA.
TRIBUNE
MAY 6 1946

PIANISSIMO: An informal photo of Maestro Serge Kousevitzsky conducting the Boston Symphony orchestra during the recording of Aaron Copland's "Appalachian Spring; Suite," a Victor release for May.

This Clipping From
STAMFORD, CONN.
ADVOCATE
MAY 6 - 1946

Artists To Give Concert At Jewish Center

Miss Rita LaPlante, pianist, and Miss Ruth Neal, soprano, shown above, will be presented in a joint concert by the Stamford Jewish Center tomorrow evening at 8:30 o'clock. Miss LaPlante gave her first public recital at the age of 13. After graduation from the New England Conservatory of Music with highest honors, she worked with several of the country's leading pianists. She has appeared with the Boston Symphony Summer Series, Berkshire Music Center Orchestras and Boston Symphony Pops. She has been acclaimed as a pianist of great talent. Miss Neal, in a few years on the concert stage after graduating from Julliard Institute, has already achieved a reputation for her classic repertoire and particularly as an interpreter of American folksongs.

This Clipping Fr
HUNTINGTON, W.
ADVERTISER
MAY 5 - 1946

THE M

THE HUNTINGTO millar music in a ethodist Church, an own after a week
ometimes the band
retty harum-scarum, hat keeps the majo nd below than with uavity of instrument
At the moment a b adly exposed window
"Storm King" and the y it looks snappy but s musical quality.
A skimmer respectfully hadwell, who is at the mo he last retreating band
GO Dean Harry E. Mu ver this afternoon's cloist rranger of flowers place
nnual club show.
The thing to do is t
hurch well ahead of tim nd go swarming out as so ymn has been finished,
ill follow that.

THE ANNUAL competi
the National Federatio
e held May 11 at the W ntrants, which is quite idered that Huntington hapter and all the partic t is the opportunity for ating. The program will b t is quite possible that it f the day. The judges are Only pianists and singers will come from as far aw Alderson. Last year ther
Somebody has got to see t
chapter here. Mrs. E. A. M that is about all the organ

ATTENDANTS at the school concert Friday njoyable and that nobody uals as well as Negroes.
and very appreciative and
New York, the soloist, rep fine impression, and the 10 pants made the home fo
Hortense Pace is director and also has built up a Ebenezer Methodist Churc to buy an organ for the

THE Alpha Kappa Alph
Paul Robeson in conce
municipal auditorium May Miss R. A. Fountaine and of Huntington can arran Fairfax said the sorority
zation of college women 72 undergraduate chapters, council that concerns itsel problems and a health pro that support public project hips to deserving young Nellie Lee, a graduate of was awarded the Huntingt ship. Paul Robeson, of cours

GEORGE OLSON and Joe Hart's Danceland s

This Clipping
WALTHAM, M
NEWS TRIBU
MAY 6 -

Prominen
At World

In the final session week-long observance
20th World Vision Institu had as its theme "R tions," the Newtonville dist Church yesterday en three prominent Negro field of theology and m
At the morning servi church the Rev. Cha Tobias, D.D., senior se the Department of I service of the Y.M.C.A.,
"The Race Problem in to American Leadersh the Nations." He stated erica will not be ready t place as leader amon tions unless she solve problems as minority crimination within the
He said that the othe such as Russia, will probably are saying now meetings, that as long is not granting the ful
to the minority groups,
Negroes in the South,
right to insist on free
Southern Europe. way the nations strong political States.
Dr. Tobias

This Clipping From
HUNTINGTON, W. VA.
ADVERTISER

THE MUSIC BOX

By James R. Haworth

THE HUNTINGTON Chapter of the American Guild of Organists will offer familiar music in a manner new to Huntington this afternoon at 3 at the First Methodist Church, and that is the place to be for those of us who would like to calm down after a week of more musical rumpus than we have ever heard before. Sometimes the band festival boys and girls played precisely, and sometimes it was pretty harum-scarum, and we were impressed somewhat more with wonderment what keeps the majorettes warm behind and below than with gratification over suavity of instrumental tone.

At the moment a band is going by our badly exposed window to the tune of the "Storm King" and the people looking out [illegible] looks snappy but [illegible] much about [illegible] musical quality.

A drummer respectfully doffed then, to Hen Sherwell who is at the moment vanishing behind the last retreating bandsman, and again to AGO Dean Harry E. Mueller who will preside over this afternoon's [illegible] music as a proud arranger of flowers places her exhibit at the annual club show.

The thing to do is to arrive at the First Church well ahead of time and not to get up and go swarming out as soon as the processional hymn has been finished, because the postlude will follow that.

THE ANNUAL competitive music festival of the National Federation of Music Clubs will be held May 11 at the Woman's Club with 54 entrants, which is quite a lot when it is considered that Huntington has no Federation chapter and all the participants will get out of it is the opportunity for local competition and [illegible]. The program will begin at 9:30 A. M. and it is quite possible that it will last a good part of the day. The judges are all from out of town. Only pianists and singers are entered, and some will come from as far away as Clarksburg and Alderson. Last year there were 53 entrants. Somebody has got to see that we have an active chapter here. Mrs. E. A. Mack is chairman, and that is about all the organization she has.

ATTENDANTS at the annual Douglass high school concert Friday night said it was most enjoyable and that nobody can sing Negro spirituals as well as Negroes. The audience was big and very appreciative and Miss Ruth Stewart of New York, the soloist, repeated her last year's fine impression, and the 100 Huntington participants made the home folks feel proud. Miss Hortense Pace is director of music at Douglass and also has built up a good 15-voice choir at Ebenezer Methodist Church. They are planning to buy an organ for the church.

THE Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority will present Paul Robeson in concert at the Charleston municipal auditorium May 12 at 3 P. M., and Miss R. A. Fountaine and Miss Myra E. Fairfax of Huntington can arrange for tickets. Miss Fairfax said the sorority is a national organization of college women with 94 graduate and 72 undergraduate chapters, with a non-partisan council that concerns itself with minority group problems and a health project, and local groups that support public projects and award scholarships to deserving young women. In 1943 Miss Nellie Lee, a graduate of Douglass high school, was awarded the Huntington chapter's scholarship. Paul Robeson, of course, needs no comment.

GEORGE OLSON and His Music will open Joe Hart's Danceland season at Camden Park on the evening of May 9, coming in from Chicago. Joe said he would have 50 pairs of nylon stockings for prizes to help unconfine the evening's joy.

WE SEE in Redbook Magazine that Deems Taylor says the 10 greatest composers were Bach, Handel, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, Schumann, Chopin, Wagner, Brahms and Debussy. Personally we like Gustav Luders and Sam Ridenour too.

OUR REASEARCH department is perpetually on the alert and all it takes is a simple inquiry to spring it into action. Somebody wanted to know what Bill Wiant is doing now, so we found out that he is living in St. Albans and is choir director at Asbury Methodist Church in Charleston. Bill is about the most versatile musician we know.

MUCH to everybody's regret, Aurora Leedom Townshend has resigned as organist and choir director at Trinity Episcopal Church. She said she had too little time for the work. At choir practice the other night there were speeches and Dr. Tyler presented her with a dozen roses which, he poetically put it, were a dozen drops of red blood from his heart.

So the vestry hired James R. Haworth to direct the choir, at least for the summer. Miss Ruth Simon, whom you know if you have been reading this column, was appointed organist.

SOME DAY there will surely be a letup in musical goings on that will let us give some adequate attention to recent recordings according to our desires. Meanwhile the golden flood of recordings goes on, and at the moment we can only suggest that you hie to your favorite record bar and hear such choice selections as Victor's "Kreisler Program," the Boston Symphony's performance of Copland's "Appalachian Spring," Toscanini's interpretation with the NBC Symphony of Ferde Grofe's "Grand Canyon Suite," and Cole Porter Show Hits, and Columbia's "Piano Music of Liszt played by Grygory Sandor, just making his record debut, and Kostelanetz's "Music of Tschaikowsky" with the Robin Hood Dell orchestra. Of course, you have to like the pink and plush Kostelanetz manner, which most people do, to get the full enjoyment out of his lovely album.

TODAY at 3, CBS, Columbia Broadcasting Symphony, Golschmann conducting: "Rameau's Second Suite from "Dardanus," Dukas' "La Peri," Satie's Gymnopedies, and Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn.

At 5, NBC, General Motors, Black conducting: Overture to "Galatea" by von Suppe, Spialek's Sinfonietta, and two movements from Rimsky's "Scheherazade." Hans Spialek dedicated his sinfonietta to Dr. Black, who first conducted it over NBC in 1936.

At 9, WSAZ, Ford Sunday Evening Hour, Reiner conducting, Traubel soloist, in an all-Wagner program. Mr. Reiner will remain through June 2, when Eugene Ormandy will take over.

THE SPRINGFIELD DAILY REPUBLICAN, SPRINGFIELD, MASS.: WEDNESDAY, MAY 8, 1946

'POPS' IS PACKED ON 'SMITH NIGHT'

Alumnae Enjoy Concert Held at Symphony Hall at Hub as Arthur Fiedler Instals New Life in Selections

By VICTOR PRAHL

Boston, May 7—Smith college night at the "pops" in Symphony hall tonight was a gala affair with the alumnae filling the tables to capacity.

Arthur Fiedler, in fine fettle, put a fresh breath of life in numbers from the old summer stock repertoire, giving Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance" a stentorian volume and rhythmical drive that was worthy of a major coronation. There was an elflike delicacy in the more imaginative portions of Weber's "Oberon Overture" and an expansive Viennese rhythm in the favorite Strauss waltz, "Roses From the South."

Give Fine Performance

Raymond Putman and Solon Robinson of the Smith music department lent the alma mater touch, giving the program a musical pickup with one of the finest performances of the Mozart concerto "E Flat for Two Pianos" we have ever heard. Having played it with the college orchestra as well as elsewhere, both players have mellowed and matured in the work until it has become a highly finished product.

There was elegance of phrasing, total refinement and musical clarity in the best Mozart manner in the opening "Allegro," a flowing lyricism well realized by both pianists in the lovely "Andante" and a sparkling gaiety in the "Rondo." Mr Fiedler and his forces augmented the performance with an ideal accompaniment. The artists received an ovation and were recalled repeatedly.

The concerto was preceded by the delightful "Theme and Variations" by Moszkowski and the program closed with lighter numbers by Cable, Gould and Smetana.

This Clipping From
RADIO DAILY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

MAY 7 - 1946

• • • An orchestra is currently being formed which will be fronted by Joe Louis as soon as his business with Billy Conn is finished. . . . Tony Martin coming east June 10th for the big fite. He'll do two shows from here. . . . Recommended reading for chiller-thriller fans: "Crime Is Of The Essence," by Joe Csida, gen'l mgr. of Billboard, and published by Five-Star Mysteries. . . . Jane Harvey, Blue Angel favorite, signed to an exclusive five-year deal by Manny Sachs, of Columbia records. . . . The next sensation to make B'way wolves watch their steppes will be Alix Trenall, sensational Russian songstress, due here soon. . . . Ben Grauer calls those radio fluffs—ad slibs. . . . CBS still going thru a reconversion program with more exec heads due to roll. . . . Ingrid Bergman is at the Drake Hotel. . . . Metro has offered Paul Lavalle a long-termer to head their modern music dep't. . . . Tenor Wm. Horne, who was handed the musical plum of the year by Serge Koussevitzky (title role in "Peter Grimes" at Berkshire Festival this summer) slated for a major publicity build-up. . . . Rhea Diamond new publicity director of WLIB starting June 1st. . . . Bob Haag, ABC's "Sheriff," re-opening his Red Barn summer theatre in Mass. . . . Wesley McKee takes over "2nd Mrs. Burton," formerly directed by Stuart Buchanan. . . . Walter Hackett, NBC staff director, who's penned over 600 air dramas, has come up with a legit play now being considered by Haila Stoddard. . . . Maggi McNellis' ass't, Eileen O'Connell, looks enuf like the glamorous column-miss to be her kid sister—and that's a compliment, son!

This Clipping From
WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE

Prominent Negroes Speak At World Vision Program

In the final sessions of the week-long observance of the 20th World Vision Institute which had as its theme "Race Relations," the Newtonville Methodist Church yesterday entertained three prominent Negroes in the field of theology and music.

At the morning service in the church the Rev. Channing H. Tobias, D.D., senior secretary of the Department of Inter-racial service of the Y.M.C.A., spoke on "The Race Problem in Relation to American Leadership among the Nations." He stated that America will not be ready to take her place as leader among the nations unless she solves her own problems as minority group discrimination within the country.

He said that the other nations, such as Russia, will say, and probably are saying now in closed meetings, that as long as America is not granting the full franchise to the minority groups, such as the Negroes in the South, she has no right to insist on free elections in Southern Europe. He said in this way the nations are getting a strong political hold on the United States.

Dr. Tobias recently was elected director of the Phelps-Stokes Fund. He was graduated from Payne College, Augusta, Ga., and from Drew Theological Seminary, Madison, N. J. He is a trustee of Howard University and Hampton Institute, and served on the National Advisory Committee of Selective Service and the Joint Army and Navy Committee on Welfare and Recreation.

At an evening session Heywood G. Knight, pastor of the Massachusetts Avenue Baptist Church in Cambridge, spoke on his experiences and called his talk "What it cost me to be a Negro." He stated that life in the South was very difficult for him, especially with respect to education, but said although he found it easier to acquire an education in the north, he still ran into racial discrimination.

Mr. Knight brought with him to the church a pianist who has played with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and who is studying for his Ph.D. at Harvard. He was Donald Shirley, who played piano solos and accompanied Mr. Knight when he rendered vocal selections.

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

MAY 5 - 1946

[illegible]

One of the comforts for the woes of the world is Bach's "Come Sweet Death," and you will go a long way to hear it more beautifully played than by, William Primrose's deep throated viola, with Vernon de Tar at the organ. Schubert's "Litany" is on the other side [Victor 11-9117]. . . . Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston orchestra do a magnificent job with Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" overture [Victor 11-9008]. . . . Just for fun, Arturo Toscanini and the NBC orchestra go to town with Waldteufel's "The Skater's Waltz" [Victor 11-8949]. . . . Eleanor Steber's beautiful soprano is beguiling tho not completely convincing Mozart bait in "Batti, Batti" from "Don Giovanni," sung in Italian, and Pamina's air from act two of "The Magic Flute," sung in English, both with Erich Leinsdorf and the Victor orchestra [Victor 11-9114]. . . . André Kostelanetz and his orchestra do a typical Kostelanetz job on Addinsell's Warsaw Concerto [Columbia 7443-M] and the same composer's Prelude and Waltz from "Blithe Spirit," film version, are deftly played by the London Philharmonic, Muir Mathieson conducting [Columbia 7441-M] tho they are ghostly going without theatrical ectoplasm. . . . And be sure to investigate Harold Bauer's beautiful playing of Liszt's Etude in D flat and "Waldesrauschen" [Victor 11-9113]. It's a piano performance worth owning.

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

MAY - 7 1946

Eastman Students Show Talent In Double Bass, Violin Recital

It was a real pleasure to attend last night's Kilbourn Hall concert at which two Eastman School of Music candidates for the performer's certificate turned in recitals of uniformly high caliber.

Phyllis Edwards, of the class of Oscar Zimmerman, showed herself a skilled master of that most formidable of instruments, the double bass.

Sharing the program was Dorothy McConnell, of the class of Jaques Gordon, a violinist of considerable talent and technical finish.

Double Bass Interesting

Beginning with the four movement "Sonate in G minor" by Henri Eccles, Miss Edwards, a member of the Rochester Philharmonic, showed herself fully equal to the demands imposed by the instrument's heavy strings and seemingly impossible reaches. Proceeding through the "Four Satires in the Modern Manner" by Diedrich, she succeeded in capturing the proper spirit of lightness, despite the instrument's ponderous tonal qualities.

Even in the passages played at rapdi tempo, such as those found in Franchi's "Introduction and Tarentelle" she maintained true pitch and clean execution. Even the harmonic passages were clear and pure. The Franchi number and Koussevitsk's "Chanson Triste" made up [illegible]cluding group.

Top Notch Performance

Miss McConnell chose a well-rounded program which included the Corelli-Kreisler "La Folia," the popular Brahms Sonata in A and Lalo's brilliant concert piece "Symphonie Espagnole."

It is difficult to know where to begin on Miss McConnell's performance except to say that it was uniformly top notch. She appears to have a matured musical sense and excellent mastery of dynamics which enabled her, for instance, to achieve the broad sweetness of the Kreisler number without falling into sentimentalism.

Her technic was clear and crisp and she executed difficult technical passages without straining for effect or causing them to detract from the overall continuity of the number. Her tones were firm, rich and full in even the hazardous passages.

All in all it was a concert reflecting credit on both of the performers as well as on the school.—M. R.

[126]

This Clipping From
HUNTINGTON, W. VA.
ADVERTISER

MAY 5 - 1946

THE MUSIC BOX

By James R. Haworth

▶THE HUNTINGTON Chapter of the American Guild of Organists will offer familiar music in a manner new to Huntington this afternoon at 3 at the First Methodist Church, and that is the place to be for those of us who would like to calm down after a week of more musical rumpus than we have ever heard before. Sometimes the band festival boys and girls played precisely, and sometimes it was pretty harum-scarum, and we were impressed somewhat more with wonderment what keeps the majorettes warm behind and below than with gratification over suavity of instrumental tone.

At the moment a band is going by our badly exposed window to the tune of the "Storm King" and the people looking out say it looks snappy but don't say much about its musical quality.

A skimmer respectfully doffed, then, to Hen Shadwell, who is at the moment vanishing behind the last retreating bandsman, and again to AGO Dean Harry E. Mueller who will preside over this afternoon's cloistered music as a proud arranger of flowers places her exhibit at the annual club show.

The thing to do is to arrive at the First Church well ahead of time and not to get up and go swarming out as soon as the processional hymn has been finished, because the postlude will follow that.

▶THE ANNUAL competitive music festival of the National Federation of Music Clubs will be held May 11 at the Woman's Club with 54 entrants, which is quite a lot when it is considered that Huntington has no Federation chapter and all the participants will get out of it is the opportunity for local competition and rating. The program will begin at 9:30 A. M. and it is quite possible that it will last a good part of the day. The judges are all from out of town. Only pianists and singers are entered, and some will come from as far away as Clarksburg and Alderson. Last year there were 53 entrants. Somebody has got to see that we have an active chapter here. Mrs. E. A. Mack is chairman, and that is about all the organization she has.

▶ATTENDANTS at the annual Douglass high school concert Friday night said it was most enjoyable and that nobody can sing Negro spirituals as well as Negroes. The audience was big and very appreciative and Miss Ruth Stewart of New York, the soloist, repeated her last year's fine impression, and the 100 Huntington participants made the home folks feel proud. Miss Hortense Pace is director of music at Douglass and also has built up a good 15-voice choir at Ebenezer Methodist Church. They are planning to buy an organ for the church.

▶THE Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority will present Paul Robeson in concert at the Charleston municipal auditorium May 12 at 3 P. M., and Miss R. A. Fountaine and Miss Myra E. Fairfax of Huntington can arrange for tickets. Miss Fairfax said the sorority is a national organization of college women with 94 graduate and 72 undergraduate chapters, with a non-partisan council that concerns itself with minority group problems and a health project, and local groups that support public projects and award scholarships to deserving young women. In 1943 Miss Nellie Lee, a graduate of Douglass high school, was awarded the Huntington chapter's scholarship. Paul Robeson, of course, needs no comment.

▶GEORGE OLSON and His Music will open Joe Hart's Danceland season at Camden Park on the evening of May 9, coming in from Chicago. Joe said he would have 50 pairs of nylon stockings for prizes to help unconfine the evening's joy.

▶WE SEE in Redbook Magazine that Deems Taylor says the 10 greatest composers were Bach, Handel, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, Schumann, Chopin, Wagner, Brahms and Debussy. Personally we like Gustav Luders and Sam Ridenour too.

▶OUR REASEARCH department is perpetually on the alert and all it takes is a simple inquiry to spring it into action. Somebody wanted to know what Bill Wiant is doing now, so we found out that he is living in St. Albans and is choir director at Asbury Methodist Church in Charleston. Bill is about the most versatile musician we know.

▶MUCH to everybody's regret, Aurora Leedom Townshend has resigned as organist and choir director at Trinity Episcopal Church. She said she had too little time for the work. At choir practice the other night there were speeches and Dr. Tyler presented her with a dozen roses which, he poetically put it, were a dozen drops of red blood from his heart.

So the vestry hired James R. Haworth to direct the choir, at least for the summer. Miss Ruth Simon, whom you know if you have been reading this column, was appointed organist.

▶SOME DAY there will surely be a letup in musical goings on that will let us give some adequate attention to recent recordings according to our desires. Meanwhile the golden flood of recordings goes on, and at the moment we can only suggest that you hie to your favorite record bar and hear such choice selections as Victor's "Kreisler Program," the Boston Symphony's performance of Copland's "Appalachian Spring," Toscanini's interpretation with the NBC Symphony of Ferde Grofe's "Grand Canyon Suite," and Cole Porter Show Hits, and Columbia's "Piano Music of Liszt played by Grygory Sandor, just making his record debut, and Kostelanetz's "Music of Tschaikowsky" with the Robin Hood Dell orchestra. Of course, you have to like the pink and plush Kostelanetz manner, which most people do, to get the full enjoyment out of his lovely album.

▶TODAY at 3, CBS, Columbia Broadcasting Symphony, Golschmann conducting: "Rameau's Second Suite from "Dardanus," Dukas' "La Peri," Satie's Gymnopedies, and Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn.

At 5, NBC, General Motors, Black conducting: Overture to "Galatea" by von Suppe, Spialek's Sinfonietta, and two movements from Rimsky's "Scheherazade." Hans Spialek dedicated his sinfonietta to Dr. Black, who first conducted it over NBC in 1936.

At 9, WSAZ, Ford Sunday Evening Hour, Reiner conducting, Traubel soloist, in an all-Wagner program. Mr. Reiner will remain through June 2, when Eugene Ormandy will take over.

THE SPRINGFIELD DAILY REPUBLICAN, SPRINGFIELD, MASS.: WEDNESDAY, MAY 8, 1946

'POPS' IS PACKED ON 'SMITH NIGHT'

Alumnae Enjoy Concert Held at Symphony Hall at Hub as Arthur Fiedler Instals New Life in Selections

By VICTOR PRAHL

Boston, May 7—Smith college night at the "pops" in Symphony hall tonight was a gala affair with the alumnae filling the tables to capacity.

Arthur Fiedler, in fine fettle, put a fresh breath of life in numbers from the old summer stock repertoire, giving Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance" a stentorian volume and rhythmical drive that was worthy of a major coronation. There was an elflike delicacy in the more imaginative portions of Weber's "Oberon Overture" and an expansive Viennese rhythm in the favorite Strauss waltz, "Roses From the South."

Give Fine Performance

Raymond Putman and Solon Robinson of the Smith music department lent the alma mater touch, giving the program a musical pickup with one of the finest performances of the Mozart concerto "E Flat for Two Pianos" we have ever heard. Having played it with the college orchestra as well as elsewhere, both players have mellowed and matured in the work until it has become a highly finished product.

There was elegance of phrasing, total refinement and musical clarity in the best Mozart manner in the opening "Allegro," a flowing lyricism well realized by both pianists in the lovely "Andante" and a sparkling gaiety in the "Rondo." Mr Fiedler and his forces augmented the performance with an ideal accompaniment. The artists received an ovation and were recalled repeatedly.

The concerto was preceded by the delightful "Theme and Variations" by Moszkowski and the program closed with lighter numbers by Cable, Gould and Smetana.

This Clipping From
RADIO DAILY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

MAY 7 - 1946

● ● ● An orchestra is currently being formed which will be fronted by Joe Louis as soon as his business with Billy Conn is finished. . . . Tony Martin coming east June 10th for the big fite. He'll do two shows from here. . . . Recommended reading for chiller-thriller fans: "Crime Is Of The Essence," by Joe Csida, gen'l mgr. of Billboard, and published by Five-Star Mysteries. . . . Jane Harvey, Blue Angel favorite, signed to an exclusive five-year deal by Manny Sachs, of Columbia records. . . . The next sensation to make B'way wolves watch their steppes will be Alix Trenall, sensational Russian songstress, due here soon. . . . Ben Grauer calls those radio fluffs—ad slibs. . . . CBS still going thru a reconversion program with more exec heads due to roll. . . . Ingrid Bergman is at the Drake Hotel. . . . Metro has offered Paul Lavalle a long-termer to head their modern music dep't. . . . Tenor Wm. Horne, who was handed the musical plum of the year by Serge Koussevitzky (title role in "Peter Grimes" at Berkshire Festival this summer) slated for a major publicity build-up. . . . Rhea Diamond new publicity director of WLIB starting June 1st. . . . Bob Haag, ABC's "Sheriff," re-opening his Red Barn summer theatre in Mass. . . . Wesley McKee takes over "2nd Mrs. Burton," formerly directed by Stuart Buchanan. . . . Walter Hackett, NBC staff director, who's penned over 600 air dramas, has come up with a legit play now being considered by Haila Stoddard. . . . Maggi McNellis' ass't, Eileen O'Connell, looks enuf like the glamorous column-miss to be her kid sister—and that's a compliment, son!

This Clipping From
WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE

MAY 6 - 1946

Prominent Negroes Speak At World Vision Program

In the final sessions of the week-long observance of the 20th World Vision Institute which had as its theme "Race Relations," the Newtonville Methodist Church yesterday entertained three prominent Negroes in the field of theology and music.

At the morning service in the church the Rev. Channing H. Tobias, D.D., senior secretary of the Department of Inter-racial service of the Y.M.C.A., spoke on "The Race Problem in Relation to American Leadership among the Nations." He stated that America will not be ready to take her place as leader among the nations unless she solves her own problems as minority group discrimination within the country.

He said that the other nations, such as Russia, will say, and probably are saying now in closed meetings, that as long as America is not granting the full franchise to the minority groups, such as the Negroes in the South, she has no right to insist on free elections in Southern Europe. He said in this way the nations are getting a strong political hold on the United States.

Dr. Tobias recently was elected director of the Phelps-Stokes Fund. He was graduated from Payne College, Augusta, Ga., and from Drew Theological Seminary, Madison, N. J. He is a trustee of Howard University and Hampton Institute, and served on the National Advisory Committee of Selective Service and the Joint Army and Navy Committee on Welfare and Recreation.

At an evening session Heywood G. Knight, pastor of the Massachusetts Avenue Baptist Church in Cambridge, spoke on his experiences and called his talk "What it cost me to be a Negro." He stated that life in the South was very difficult for him, especially with respect to education, but said although he found it easier to acquire an education in the north, he still ran into racial discrimination.

Mr. Knight brought with him to the church a pianist who has played with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and who is studying for his Ph.D. at Harvard. He was Donald Shirley, who played piano solos and accompanied Mr. Knight when he rendered vocal selections.

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

MAY 5 - 1946

[illegible]

One of the comforts for the woes of the world is Bach's "Come Sweet Death," and you will go a long way to hear it more beautifully played than by, William Primrose's deep throated viola, with Vernon de Tar at the organ. Schubert's "Litany" is on the other side [Victor 11-9117]. . . . Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston orchestra do a magnificent job with Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" overture [Victor 11-9008]. . . . Just for fun, Arturo Toscanini and the NBC orchestra go to town with Waldteufel's "The Skater's Waltz" [Victor 11-8949]. . . . Eleanor Steber's beautiful soprano is beguiling tho not completely convincing Mozart bait in "Batti, Batti" from "Don Giovanni," sung in Italian, and Pamina's air from act two of "The Magic Flute," sung in English, both with Erich Leinsdorf and the Victor orchestra [Victor 11-9114]. . . . André Kostelanetz and his orchestra do a typical Kostelanetz job on Addinsell's Warsaw Concerto [Columbia 7443-M] and the same composer's Prelude and Waltz from "Blithe Spirit," film version, are deftly played by the London Philharmonic, Muir Mathieson conducting [Columbia 7441-M] tho they are ghostly going without theatrical ectoplasm. . . . And be sure to investigate Harold Bauer's beautiful playing of Liszt's Etude in D flat and "Waldesrauschen" [Victor 11-9113]. It's a piano performance worth owning.

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

MAY - 7 1946

Eastman Students Show Talent In Double Bass, Violin Recital

It was a real pleasure to attend last night's Kilbourn Hall concert at which two Eastman School of Music candidates for the performer's certificate turned in recitals of uniformly high caliber.

Phyllis Edwards, of the class of Oscar Zimmerman, showed herself a skilled master of that most formidable of instruments, the double bass.

Sharing the program was Dorothy McConnell, of the class of Jaques Gordon, a violinist of considerable talent and technical finish.

Double Bass Interesting

Beginning with the four movement "Sonate in G minor" by Henri Eccles, Miss Edwards, a member of the Rochester Philharmonic, showed herself fully equal to the demands imposed by the instrument's heavy strings and seemingly impossible reaches. Proceeding through the "Four Satires in the Modern Manner" by Diedrich, she succeeded in capturing the proper spirit of lightness, despite the instrument's ponderous tonal qualities.

Even in the passages played at rapdi tempo, such as those found in Franchi's "Introduction and Tarentelle" she maintained true pitch and clean execution. Even the harmonic passages were clear and pure. The Franchi number and Koussevitsk's "Chanson Triste" made up the concluding group.

Top Notch Performance

Miss McConnell's [illegible] rounded program which included the Corelli-Kreisler "La Folia," the popular Brahms Sonata in A and Lalo's brilliant concert piece "Symphonie Espagnole."

It is difficult to know where to begin on Miss McConnell's performance except to say that it was uniformly top notch. She appeared to have a matured musical sense and excellent mastery of dynamics which enabled her, for instance, to achieve the broad sweetness of the Kreisler number without falling into sentimentalism.

Her technic was clear and crisp and she executed difficult technical passages without straining for effect or causing them to detract from the overall continuity of the number. Her tones were firm, rich and full in even the hazardous passages.

All in all it was a concert reflecting credit on both of the performers as well as on the school.—M. H.

[126]

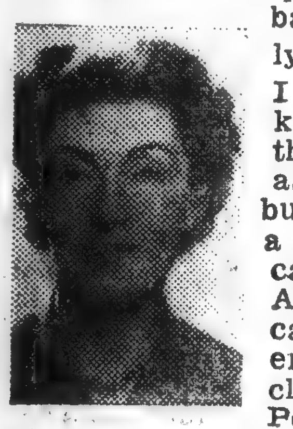
This Clipping From
CORNING, N. Y.
LEADER

MAY 7 - 1946

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

Fashions For National ..Baby Week, And The Two Los Angelenos



We have been having National Baby Week, though whether this is to promote more babies or merely better babies I don't quite know. By far the most devastating news bulletin for such a week recently came from Los Angeles, the capital of Everything, including babies. Perhaps you missed the report of Mrs. Mayadelle Bennett, of that city, to local police.

Mrs. Bennett excitedly told the cops that two bandits, aged two and four years, had beaten up her 22-months-old daughter and robbed her of two cents. This Southern California flash was indeed a high spot of baby week. And I still wait to hear whether or not the venerable thugs have been apprehended. We can report no baby items like that from Gotham, though I am constantly on the alert as this household has possessed a small infant now for nearly two years.

There was a wonderful fashion show of handmade baby clothes here the other day, which I eagerly attended. Not that these dainty duds are aimed at small boys like our Jake, who requires heavy reinforced corduroy raiment at present. These baby clothes we saw, created by Helen Graham and Esther Harmon, are not only made of dainty organdies and batistes but actually have a lot of style in their tiny way. Some of the little dresses have spray instead of flower embroidery, and delicate faggoting at necklines and sleeves. What do babies think they are these days—Mrs. Harrison Williams, or something?

I was particularly interested in the rayon crepe christening coats and bonnets as the long gown in which our baby was baptized a year and a half ago was borrowed for the one day only. These new coats are either 21 or 18 inches in length, and are quite fancily embroidered up the front. Such beautiful things. During Baby Week I suppose the nation's babies went on about as usual, save for that sensational crime story from Los Angles. After all, every naby is convinced that every week is his or hers. And the baby is absolutely right, too.

ANOTHER GOULD —The younger Gould girls are always at it, somehow. One was a Wave officer during the war. Now another, Silvia, is marrying a second time, the new choice being Bob Parker, Jr., an author. Silvia gave harp recitals when a very young girl, and also wrote poems which were published. Now 28, Silvia still lists herself as a "writer" which is a wonderfully elastic word indeed. Now we await a look at some of Silvia's newer writings... Still another French Wonder Man is among us in the person of Charles Trenet, now singing at our very classy Embassy Club. Trenet is handsome, with curly reddish blonde hair, and of the 20 songs he sand at his debut, only one was in English—and that dubious. That' an awful lot of French to be fired at an American crowd whose Gallic consists of "Oui." Still he went over very well, and is said by some to be a real rival of that other reigning Singing Wonder, Jean Sablon.

GLITTER—It's a strange costume these days that doesn't have a bit of glittering gold on it somewhere. At a fine fur show the other day we were allowed to look at a formal jacket of white broadtail. Sure enough—gold nailheads were around the neckline and down the front in a chain effect. We can all remember the simple, happy days when rich furs were enough without gold nails.

NO WAITING—Doris Shine, 19, said to be heiress to about $30,000,000, was to marry Dr. Morton Maxwell, 22-year-old interne at our Bellevue Hospital in August. A $3,000 bridal veil from Brussels, and all that. But the other day the girl and the doc were quietly married by a county judge on Long Island, thus avoiding the fancy nuptials planned for a Flordia Club. Doris went back to Miss Finch's finishing school, and Doc Maxwell took some more temperatures at Bellevue....Stately Carnegie Hall had its first "Pop" concert Saturday night, patterned after the famous Boston Symphony series. Light wines, beers and sandwiches were obtainable at a buffet, but the old seats were not taken out so that tables could be installed for the orchestra floor customers. I am told that beer aids the enjoyment of a Strauss waltz. I wouldn't know, as I dislike beer.

WINNEMUCCA, NEV.
HUMBOLDT STAR &
SILVER STATE

MAY 8 1946

POM-POM-POM!—Ever hear of a woman bassoonist? Here's one. She's Miss Anne de Guichard, member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Bassoon, you remember, is that wood instrument that is heavy on the bass. Girl's only teacher was man whose seat she took in orchestra after he died in 1944

This Clipping From
JACKSON, TENN.
SUN

MAY 12 1946

ered By Boston
ps Orchestra

moke Gets In Your Eyes" f berg's "Roberta," and t e of the Valkyries" from W
'Die Walkure' are inclu
e program for the third bro
by the Boston Pops Orches aturday, May 18, over WT at 7:30-8:30 p. m. Arthur Fi gain will conduct the ensem
he summer-garbed symph

e program also will includ
, selected by listeners dur previous week. Other numb ude the familiar "Rako ch" by Berlioz, the tune ture to Offenbach's "La Be ne," and "Soirees Musicale, of movements from Ros enjamin Britten. Numerous s will augment the list.
unded in 1885, the "Pops" h
under Fiedler's baton si
The players, according ler, "Get a kick out of shedd dignity" to play such va rams, and a "Gallup Poll is ssary to measure consumer n—applause is an immedi positive meter."
e series, part of the sum dule of the Boston Symph estra, is sponsored this year
-Chalmers Manufacturing C
. Oliver Daniel, who produ winter broadcast series, ag charge of the summer air

This Clipping From
TULSA, OKLA.
TRIBUNE

MAY 6 1946

* * *

RECORD REVIEWS: One of the most interesting of the recent albums issued by RCA Victor company is Aaron Copland's "Appalachian Spring, Suite" as recorded by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the sympathetic baton of Serge Koussevitzky, whose entire 22 years with the Boston symphony have included performances of works of moderns and American composers. This is the score which Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, 82-year-old Boston patron of music, commissioned Copland to do for a ballet by Martha Graham, and it won the Pulitzer prize in 1944 as the season's outstanding composition by an American. Martha Graham has won her fame by her modern dance technique, and the strength of both the ballet form and story and the music which the Brooklyn-born Copland wrote for it make it a work which should be familiar to American music lovers who want to keep abreast of modern music. The album itself is especially interesting for it contains seven illustrated and annotated pages covering the ballet, Martha Graham, the music and Aaron Copland, plus photographs of the Graham production, in which Miss Graham danced the role of the bride. The title "Appalachian Spring" was chosen by Miss Graham from the heading of one of Hart Crane's poems, though the ballet bears no relation to the text of the poem. It deals in a general sense with early pioneer days, and more specifically with the unfolding lives of a newly married couple who prepare to face the hardships of a new life. The music is simple and full of feeling and the orchestration and performance are masterfully done.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

MAY 9 - 1946

SYMPHONY EXHIBIT
JULY 23 TO AUG. 20

To be Presented by Berkshire Museum

An exhibition entitled "The History of the Symphony Orchestra" will be presented by the Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield, from July 23 to Aug. 20.

The exhibition will coincide with the Berkshire Symphonic festival, and material for it will be selected by the Boston Symphony orchestra. It will inc[illegible] great conductors, musicians and soloists, views of various homes occupied by the orchestra, program notes and memorabilia.

BLOOMINGTON, IND
COURIER
5/10/46

The Berkshire Music Center was founded in 1940 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a "school for music in performance," a comprehensive proving ground. Serge Koussevitzky has been from the first the guiding spirit. On the educational side there are four departments for advanced students: Composing, conducting, orchestral playing, and opera. Amateurs and less advanced students are taken care of in choral and ensemble classes.—For the general public the interest centers in the series of symphony concerts during August, closing the 1946 Center with a performance of Beethoven's Ninth ("Choral") Symphony.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

MAY 10 1946

The New Records

Copland's 'Appalachian Spring'—Singles—The Lighter Side.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

If one has veered around to talking about new standards in recording in terms of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—Berlioz's "Harold in Italy," Strauss's "Til Euelenspiegel," the Brahms third symphony and Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" overture are some examples which appeared, roughly, in the last year—there is good reason. The challenging orchestras, the Philadelphia and the New York Philharmonic, have no such able hands at the Columbia controls as Victor commands, while the Toscanini-NBC results are altogether too erratic to be a recognizable standard.

A paragon of wholesome, well-balanced sound is provided by Serge Koussevitzky's performance of Aaron Copland's score of "Appalachian Spring." The clarity and sweetness of sound that Koussevitzky draws from his players, and which the superb skill of the engineers has perpetuated on these disks, is singularly complementary to Copland's music, which itself evokes clarity of air and sweetness of mood. There are many scores in which the specific gravity of the sound is a minor factor; but there are almost as many others—Wagner's "Lohengrin" prelude, Debussy's "L'Apres midi," virtually anything by Mozart, to instance a few—in which the appropriate brightness of quality is as essential as pace or accent.

"Appalachian Spring' is now in this category, if only for the reason that Koussevitzky has made us conscious of the exceptional beauties that repose in Copland's colorations, in his blending of qualities to an expressive end. This should not be interpreted to mean that Copland's resources are limited to the graphic, for his work is infused with a remarkable warmth, flexibility and intelligence of manner which add to a distinguished work indeed. (V-Set 1046.)

CRANBURY, N.J
PRESS
5/10/46

Rutgers Announces Winter and Spring Concert Series

Three of the outstanding American symphony orchestras will appear in New Brunswick next Winter and Spring as featured offerings of the thirty-first annual Rutgers University Concert Series, Dr. Howard D. McKinney, head of the Rutgers Music Department, announced.

A world-famous Rutgers alumnus, Paul Robeson, great Negro basso, will come back to the campus to sing for one of the concerts and the fifth offering will be the Russian cellist, Gregor Piatigorsky. The orchestras to come to Rutgers are the Boston Symphony, Cleveland Orchestra and San Francisco Orchestra.

"We are featuring the orchestras this year because we have found that generally speaking, they are the most popular with our large family of subscribers," Professor McKinney, organizer and director of the series, declared, "At the same time I believe they offer the best opportunity for passing on an intelligent appreciation of music to the largest number."

"I don't need to add how happy everyone at Rutgers is that our own Paul Robeson is coming here for his third concert series appearance."

The series will open on November 14 with Serge Koussevitzky conducting Boston Symphony in its twelfth annual appearance in New Brunswick. Robeson will sing on December 13.

The Cleveland Orchestra, which is coming to New Brunswick for the first time, will appear on February 14, and Piatigorsky on March 13. The series will be concluded on April 9 with the appearance of the San Francisco Orchestra which will be making its first Eastern trip. This major musical organization will be under the baton of Pierre Monteux, whose capable leadership has brought it to the top rank of American orchestras.

The Rutgers gymnasium where the concert series is presented was sold out for three of the five offerings of the 1945-1946 series which was concluded on April 15 with the appearance of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Series subscribers now number more than 1,700.

This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
NEWS

MAY [illegible] 1946

Name Soloists For Berkshire Music Festival

BOSTON, May 18.—The programs and soloists for the Berkshire festival at Lenox, Mass., this summer were announced today. The Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will give nine concerts in the Music Shed at Tanglewood. The soloists will include Claudio Arrau and Eugene List, pianists; Carol Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists. The concerts will be given on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons (July 25-Aug. 11).

The programs of the first week will be: July 25—Beethoven's Eroica symphony and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2; July 27—Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony, Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2 (Eugene List), Moussorgsky's Prelude to Khovanstchina, and Wagner's Prelude to Die Meistersinger; July 28—Mendelssohn's Italian symphony, Copland's Suite Appalachian Spring, and Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 5.

The second week will be devoted to the music of Brahms, as follows: Aug. 1—Tragic Overture, Piano Concerto No. 1 (Claudio Arrau), Symphony No. 4; Aug. 3—Symphony No. 3, Rhapsody with contralto and male chorus (Carol Brice), Symphony No. 2; Aug. 4—Haydn Variations, Double Concerto (Erica Morini and Gregor Piatigorsky), Symphony No. 1.

For the third week, Aug. 8—Prokofieff's Symphony No. 5, Schumann's 'Cello concerto (Gregor Piatigorsky), Wagner's Prelude to Lohengrin, Strauss' Till Eulenspiegel; Aug. 10—Schumann's American Festival Overture, Martinu's Violin concerto (Mischa Elman), Tchaikowsky's Symphony No. 5; Aug. 11—Randall Thompson's The Testament of Freedom, Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 (with Festival chorus, quartet of soloists to be announced).

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

MAY 12 1946

erkshire

ighlands Provid ool, Invigoratin acation Settin

otographer's Paradi in Lake-Strewn Hills and Quaint Towns

it's upland scenery the va er is seeking, the Berksh
s and the highlands of we Massachusetts and northwe
Connecticut provide an id
ing.

ovely highland lakes sparkl clear New England sunsh ad, clean golf courses, woo dle paths, tennis courts kling mountain streams inv lulgence in sports against matic background of cool nig l invigorating day-time mo n air.

From Candlewood Lake in C cticut to the Pittsfield, Ma te Forest in the heart of kshires, the beauties of ghland scene provides a p rapher's paradise. In s ractive old towns as Sto dge, Kent, West Cornwall, chfield, Lenox and South E nt will be found charm
toric quaintness.

From the far corners of ntry come people by the ds to enjoy the Berks phonic Festival, to aceful world of villages, s, Colonial mansions
rch spires.

This Clipping From
JACKSON, TENN.
SUN

MAY 12 1946

Interesting Program Offered By Boston Pops Orchestra

"[illegible] Gets In Your Eyes" from [illegible] "Roberta" and the "Ride of the Valkyries" from Wagner's Die Walkure are included in the program for the third broadcast of the Boston Pops Orchestra on Saturday May 18, over WTJS-ABC at 7:30-8:30 p.m. Arthur Fiedler again will conduct the ensemble in the summer-garbed symphony hall.

The program [illegible] will include a waltz selected by listeners during the previous [illegible]. Other numbers include the [illegible] "Rakoczy March" by Berlioz, the tuneful overture to Offenbach's "La Belle Helene" and "Soirees Musicale," a suite of movements from Rossini by Benjamin Britten. Numerous encores will augment the list.

Founded in 1885 the "Pops" have been under Fiedler [illegible] since 1930. The players, according to Fiedler, get a kick [illegible] of shedding their dignity [illegible] such varied programs and a [illegible] Poll is not necessary to [illegible] summer re[illegible] immediate action—applause [illegible] and positive [illegible].

The series [illegible] the summer schedule of the [illegible] Symphony Orchestra is sponsored this year by Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Company. Oliver Da[illegible] who produces the winter broadcast series again [illegible] in charge of [illegible] summer airings.

This Clipping From
ST. PAUL, MINN.
PIONEER PRESS

MAY 12 1946

By John H. Harvey

MUST be that summer is icumen in. Recording companies' releases in the "long hair" division are slowing up.

However, there are a couple of things well worth mention, namely Aaron Copland's ballet suite, "Appalachian Spring," by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orcehstra ~~(Victor) and~~ Brahms' violin concerto by Joseph Szigeti with the Philadelphia orchestra under Eugene Ormandy (Columbia).

Harvey

Copland's suite, brilliantly executed by the Bostonians and clearly captured by the recording engineers, is probably the best score by this fine American composer. Like most later Copland, it is fairly conservative writing, lively and lyric by turns and distinguished by solid craftsmanship.

The theme of the ballet, in which the composer collaborated with the great American dancer, Martha Graham, is the beginnings of married life of a young couple in early pioneer days.

* * *

SZIGETI recorded the Brahms concerto years ago with Sir Hamilton Harty and the Halle orchestra. Since then, his interpretation has grown into a deeper and more individual one. The accompaniment by Ormandy is excellent and warm.

But there are recording faults. There are blurred spots in the first and last movements and generally a booming in the bass which on more than one occasion almost swallows up the solo instrument.

After my unfavorable report on Columbia's recent release of Rachmaninoff's second piano concerto April 14, I wanted to be sure I was absolutely fair on this one, Lyon & Healy obligingly let me play the Brahms job on one of their best new phonographs. While it came through better than on my aging machine it still revealed the faults I have mentioned.

Incidentally, through inadvertence, I said that the accompanying orchestra in the Rachmaninoff concerto was the Philadelphia. It's the New York Philharmonic-Symphony under Rodzinski.

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

MAY 12 1946

The Record Player

By Paul Hume

COPLAND: Appalachian Spring. Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitsky, Victor Set 1046. $3.50. Highest praise, equally distributed, is due this recording. First to Copland, one of our finest, most sensitive musicians today, for a score of great beauty standing on strength without choreography for which it was designed. Music moves from pastoral moments to scenes of high animation with ease and economy, yet never misses opportunity of a touch of genius at right point. Second praise to Serge Koussevitsky and his orchestra for one of the most beautiful performances of any work on discs. Third praise for Victor for promptness and excellence in reproducing this important work which won New York Music Critics' award and 1945 Pulitzer Prize. Engineering is beyond reproach, album beautifully decorated. And final praise to Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge for her commissioning of the work from Copland and Graham. Few individuals have contributed so much to the musical life of our Nation as she.

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE

MAY 12 1946

On The New RECORDS

Appalachian Spring, a deeply American suite, has been put on three 12-inch records for Victor by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, as an addition to the growing folk music of the United States.

The suite was commissioned two years ago by Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, 80-year-old Boston music patron, as a score for a ballet by Martha Graham. It was written by Aaron Copland, in the motif of his Pulitzer prize winning O Pioneer. The fidelity of the transfer of mountain Springtime to music is remarkable. These are permanent library pieces.

On the lighter side of popular music, almost everybody seems to be doing the Ee Bobba Lee Bob craze that is the rage at students' soda fountains. This time it's the Deep River Boys who find it perfect for their style. They have also added their foot stomping technique to the flipover with That Chick's Too Young to Fry.

The movie, No Leave, No Love, presents Vaughn Monroe and the Norton Sisters a chance to give out with Love On a Greyhound Bus and All the Time, both promising juke box favorites.

Charlie Spivak has made two dance rhythms of Along With Me and Spring Magic. The former is from the stage musical, Call Me Mister.

Eddie Arnold and his Tennessee Plowboys who delighted hillbilly fans at the Florida State Fair with their twangy tunes, offer Can't Win, Can't Place, Can't Show and All Alone in This World Without You, two songs of rural frustration in Arnold's own drawl with mandolin and electrical guitar accompaniment. These are two "musts" for roadside tavern coin phonographs.

This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
NEWS

MAY 11 1946

me Soloists r Berkshire sic Festival

TON, May 18.—The pro- rams and soloists for the hire festival at Lenox, Mass., ummer were announced today. Boston Symphony orchestra, Koussevitzky, conductor, give nine concerts in the Shed at Tanglewood. The ts will include Claudio Arrau Eugene List, pianists; Carol contralto; Gregor Piatigor- 'cellist; Mischa Elman and Morini, violinists. The con- will be given on Thursday aturday evenings and Sunday noons (July 25-Aug. 11).

programs of the first week be: July 25—Beethoven's Ero- ymphony and Sibelius' Sym- No. 2; July 27—Beethoven's ral Symphony, Rachmanin- Piano Concerto No. 2 (Eugene Moussorgsky's Prelude to anstchina, and Wagner's Pre- to Die Meistersinger; July 28 ndelssohn's Italian symphony, nd's Suite Appalachian g, and Shostakovitch's Sym- y No. 5.

second week will be devoted he music of Brahms, as fol- Aug. 1—Tragic Overture, Concerto No. 1 (Claudio u), Symphony No. 4; Aug. 3 mphony No. 3, Rhapsody with alto and male chorus (Carol), Symphony No. 2; Aug. 4— n Variations, Double Concerto a Morini and Gregor Piati- ky), Symphony No. 1. r the third week, Aug. 8— ofieff's Symphony No. 5, mann's 'Cello concerto (Gre- Piatigorsky), Wagner's Pre- to Lohengrin, Strauss' Till spiegel; Aug. 10—Schu- 's American Festival Over- Martinu's Violin concerto cha Elman), Tchaikowsky's phony No. 5; Aug. 11—Ran- Thompson's The Testament of iom, Beethoven's Symphony (with Festival chorus, quar- soloists to be announced).

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

MAY 12 1946

Berkshire Hills Abound in Charm of New England

Highlands Provide Cool, Invigorating Vacation Setting

Photographer's Paradise in Lake-Strewn Hills and Quaint Towns

If it's upland scenery the vacationer is seeking, the Berkshire Hills and the highlands of western Massachusetts and northwestern Connecticut provide an ideal setting.

Lovely highland lakes sparkle in the clear New England sunshine. Broad, clean golf courses, wooded bridle paths, tennis courts and tinkling mountain streams invite indulgence in sports against a climatic background of cool nights and invigorating day-time mountain air.

From Candlewood Lake in Connecticut to the Pittsfield, Mass., State Forest in the heart of the Berkshires, the beauties of this highland scene provides a photographer's paradise. In such attractive old towns as Stockbridge, Kent, West Cornwall, Lee, Litchfield, Lenox and South Egremont will be found charm and historic quaintness.

From the far corners of the country come people by the hundreds to enjoy the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, to visit a peaceful world of villages, tall elms, Colonial mansions and church spires.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

MAY 12 1946

Massachusetts Offers 6 Different Regions for Vacations

Historical Places Vie in Interest With Playground Areas

Wide Sport Facilities and Diversified Scenery Are Tourist Lures

The fact that there are six different vacation lands in Massachusetts is one of the reasons why vacationists come back year after year to the Old Bay State, according to the Massachusetts Development and Industrial Commission.

The six regions are (1) Cape Cod and the Islands of Nantucket and Martha's Vineyard, (2) the Berkshire Hills and western Massachusetts, (3) Boston and vicinity, (4) North Shore and Merrimac Valley, (5) the South Shore, and (6) Pioneer Valley and central Massachusetts.

Cape Cod, stretching 100 miles into the Atlantic, and the near-by islands of Nantucket and Martha's Vineyard are cooled by sea breezes. Here are wide, sandy beaches, popular sports, including golf, tennis, fishing, swimming, boating, horseback riding, hiking and bicycling, famous eating places specializing in such Cape delicacies as fresh lobster, Cotuit oysters, steamer clams, crabs, quahaug chowder, striped bass and bluefish; antique shops whose collections of rare glass, china, silver and ship models are a delight to the eye, and summer theaters.

In the Berkshires and western Massachusetts the tourist finds the wooded peaks, waterfalls and hillsides which flowering azalea, mountain laurel and lady slipper transform into a riot of color; great music by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the annual Berkshire music festival in Stockbridge and a number of excellent summer theaters. In addition to offering facilities for siwmming, fishing and other sports this region is a hiker's paradise.

This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE

MAY 12 1946

RECORDED MUSIC

APPALACHIAN SPRING is a ballet Aaron Copland, American composer, wrote two years ago for Martha Graham and her company, and is now available in a disc performance by Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky (Victor M-1064, $3.68). The story deals with a pioneer celebration centering on a bridal couple in their newly built farmhouse.

Copland's score is incisive and sparkling, ranging in mood from the tender to the exuberant, the latter being the dominant note. As usual, too, Copland pens an impetuous and forward-going piece full of tart harmonies and brisk rhythms. The orchestra plays brilliantly, reproduction has breadth and realism, and the album contains an informative picture-story of the ballet.

This Clipping From
GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.
HERALD

MAY 12 1946

Review of the Records

The immortal genius of Franz Schubert is recreated in all its depth and exquisite lyricism by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky in a new Victor Red Seal performance of the Symphony No. 8 in B Minor—the "Unfinished."

There is drama and richness of the warmest and most vital shades in this performance by one of the world's foremost interpreters of symphonic music.

Although the work is technically incomplete—the plan of a symphony consisting of four movements, not two—the Boston Symphony's recording gives a completeness to this expression from the pen of one of the greatest of all song writers.

[128]

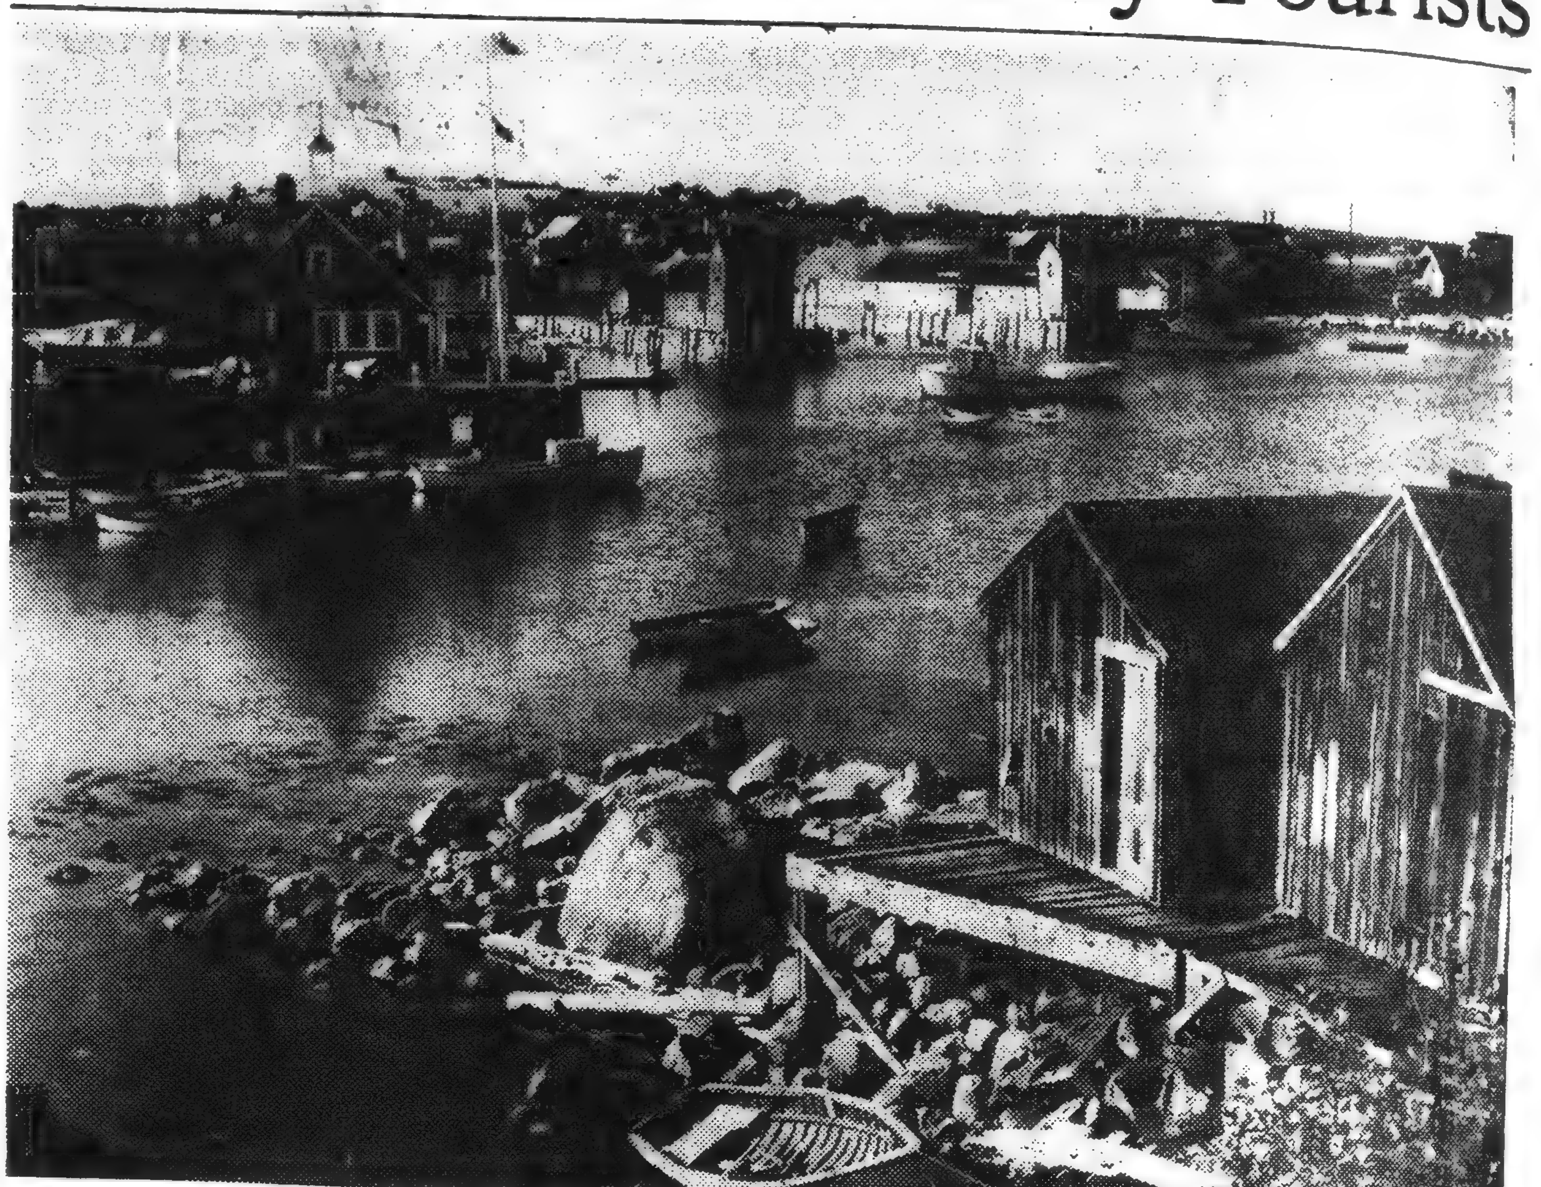
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

MAY 12 1946

New England Waiting To Be Rediscovered by Tourists

Six-State Holiday Land Provides A Rich Store of Summer Pleasures

Hotels, Noted Inns, Scenic Wonders and Historic Sites, Wildlife Paradises and Famous Theaters Are Ready for Visitors



LOW TIDE IN THE HARBOR AT ROCKPORT MASS., YACHT CLUB IS AT THE LEFT

In the northeasternmost corner of the country is a six-state vacation land where a rich store of summer pleasures will unfold with all their charm for the first season in five years. Hotels and summer theaters closed by the war, natural scenic wonders inaccessible during gasoline rationing, native curiosities such as the cog railway on Mt. Washington inoperative because of critical shortages, world-famous inns with their storied cuisines—now, in 1946, these pleasures and many more are available again. New England is waiting to be rediscovered.

From Long Island Sound to the St. John River, from Lake Champlain to Cape Cod, New England offers diversity of landscape and seascape. From Bar Harbor to Bretton Woods, from the Berkshires to Moosehead Lake, New England offers a variety of recreation and vacation facilities. And from Bennington to Bunker Hill, from the Charter Oak in Hartford to the Washington Elm in Cambridge, New England offers reminders of the nation's history.

Maine Pleasures

In Maine one may pass days sitting, walking, sleeping, soaking up the sun, cooling off in plunges, discovering what food can taste like—broiled live Maine lobster sizzling in melted butter, a steaming heap of tasty clams.

From the protecting islands of Bar Harbor, past the small harbors and inlets of Cape Ann, around Cape Cod or through its canal, in and out of Nantucket, Woods Hole, Block Island and Martha's Vineyard, into the shores of Narragansett Bay and along the Connecticut shore in Long Island Sound, New England serves those who carry its seafaring traditions to schooner and yacht, sloop and yawl.

In Connecticut are the Litchfield Hills, broken by winding rivers and valleys, with the roads wandering among picturesque villages. The Berkshires in Massachusetts are important in the cultural heritage of New England as well as in its literary and colonial history. Its famous Tanglewood, made immortal by Hawthorne, is now the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and its Berkshire Music Festival is world-renowned.

To the north are the Green Mountains of Vermont. The Long Trail winds across the range from peak to peak, offering magnificent views of Lake Champlain, which forms the western boundary of the state for 116 miles.

In the White Mountains of New Hampshire one may pass a day above the timber line hiking along the many trails or riding up on the roads or tramway. At Tuckerman Ravine, Pinkham Notch . . . in Franconia Notch, a resort both in summer and winter, there are natural curiosities to see. Dominating the entire region is the Great Stone Face, or the Old Man of the Mountain, looking down upon the Flume, Lost River, Echo Lake, Polar Caves and Indian Head.

Farther north, Maine stretches out in the splendor of lake-dotted forests and high-cragged peaks. In the forests which cover most of Maine abound wildlife which makes it a hunter's paradise: bobcat, deer, bear, fox, raccoon. There are Sebago and Moosehead and Rangeley and Belgrade lakes, Farmington and Poland Springs and Old Town, Cadillac and Katahdin. Duck shooting is excellent along the coast, and the streams are famous for trout. Fighting tuna and swordfish in the Atlantic make fine deep-sea sport.

SIGHTSEEING FROM A SURREY ON QUIET, HISTORIC NANTUCKET ISLAND

Wherever one goes in New England are historic pages of Indian days and the firing of the shot "heard round the world," the homes of noted authors and poets, the birthplaces of the nation's leaders.

Tying together the natural wonders of New England with its cities and towns, the resorts with the historical sites, is a network of thousands of miles of up-to-date highways.

Summer theaters—Cambridge, Ogunquit, Provincetown, Skowhegan, Tamworth, Brattleboro, Kingston and Westport—have become one of the principal nocturnal diversions of summertime New England.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

MAY 13 1946

Choralist Shaw Still Taps Foot to Jive Beat

By WILLIAM HAWKINS.

"I've conducted so much popular music that unless I hear a beat I'm not happy at all," is one explanation of Robert Shaw's for the precise work of his Collegiate Chorale, which tomorrow night will present a premiere of a new Hindemith work at the New York City Center.

"Choral work can be a great influence for democracy," he went on, "because it is a group endeavor. I'm proud of the democratic character of our group. We used to flaunt it, but now we've calmed down to becoming essentially a musical organization."

How It Started.

Shaw pushed a lock of blond hair out of his eyes and tackled a steak. He has a remarkable capacity for talking while he eats, without making conversation with his mouth full.

"The Chorale started just before the war," he continued. "I put an ad in the paper and got 500 replies. We started with 185 voices and it's still the same size. I was curious to see how much of the professional and popular technique used in my work with Fred Waring would apply to large amateur groups singing classical music.

"We have acquired a critical point of view about ourselves now until we are singing William Schumann and Hindemith instead of Cole Porter. I think today's choruses should be singing today's music.

"Now we're in a position to commission new works. That's the way we got the Hindemith. He is a significant composer in the great tradition.

"The whole thing grew out of a song he had written on a fragment of the Whitman text. The poet is universally personal—the great I Am.

"It seemed appropriate for us, because we were beginning to understand form instead of the interpretive sock of popular stuff. If you study Hindemith's form you realize that it is not necessarily pedantic, but has real heart significance.

Enthusiasm, Sincerity.

"To prepare the work we spent eight hours studying the architecture of the score and the text without singing a note or ever mentioning voice production."

The progress of the Chorale is a tribute to the enthusiasm of Shaw and the sincerity of the members. The group operates on a completely amateur basis. During the winter, with one rehearsal a week, it averaged a concert every month.

"That's only possible because the group has disciplined itself to sight read," Shaw explains.

"Our progress ought to make subsidies possible now. I've been afraid before of the pressure they might involve, but now our objectives are established."

Shaw says he would like to award membership in the Chorale on a scholarship basis, and give classes and lectures for the singers. He himself will teach at Juilliard this summer and also work at Koussevitzky's Berkshire Festival.

Encouraged by Conductors.

Such renowned conductors as Stokowski, Mitropoulos, and Toscanini have attended rehearsals of the group and suggested music to Shaw. The young choral director's proudest moment was when Toscanini heard the group sing Beethoven's Ninth, and afterwards addressed him as maestro.

He means to continue commissioning new works as often as he can afford it, in an effort to build up the literature of modern choral music.

"The musical scene is geared to stars today," Shaw complains. "It is always the conductor or the soloist who is paid the most attention. I want to place more emphasis on the composer—the one who really creates."

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
Sunday Union & Republican

MUSEUM WILL DISPLAY HISTORY OF SYMPHONY

Pittsfield Showing Scheduled to Coincide With Festival During July and August

Pittsfield, May 11—The [illegible] museum will present for [illegible] during July and August an [illegible] tion, "The History of the [illegible] Orchestra." The exhibition [illegible] cides with the Berkshire [illegible] der the direction of Dr. [illegible] Koussevitzky with the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood, near Lenox.

The material for the [illegible] be selected by the Boston [illegible] orchestra and will include [illegible] mous Sargent portrait of [illegible] son, founder of the orchestra, [illegible] now owned by the [illegible] Harvard University. Pictures of [illegible] great conductors, musicians and [illegible] ists, together with views of [illegible] ious homes occupied by the [illegible] program notes, and [illegible] be included.

The exhibition will open on July [illegible] and will continue through August [illegible] It will be open to the [illegible] rists

HE LEFT

pping From IELD, MASS.
on & Republican

12 1946

ILL DISPLAY OF SYMPHONY

owing Scheduled de With Festival
ly and August

y 11—The Berkshire present for one month
nd August an exhibi-tory of the Symphony
e exhibition will coin-Berkshire Festival un-n of Dr. Serge Kousse-e Boston Symphony at ar Lenox.
for the exhibition will
the Boston Symphony
will include the fa-portrait of Maj Higginof the orchestra, and the Corporation of rsity. Pictures of the musicians and soloith views of the var-pied by the orchestra, and memorabilia will n will open on July 23
ue through August 20.
public.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

MAY 12 1946

THE ORCHESTRAS

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

EXCEPT for one concert still to be given by the National Orchestral Association the New York Orchestral season of 1945-'46 has completed its course. Considered as a whole, this course was of a routine rather than of a particularly memorable character, but some of its statistics are worth citation, both as a matter of record and as a basis for impressions and comparisons.

The concerts on which the following figures and remarks are based are those given by resident and visiting orchestras at Carnegie Hall and the New York City Center between Sept. 25 and May 2. These include the concerts of the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra (except for the Young People's series), Philadelphia Orchestra, Boston Symphony, New York City Symphony, American Youth Orchestra and the Rochester Philharmonic, plus a Beethoven program played by the NBC Symphony under Arturo Toscanini and a Czech and a Sibelius program in which Philharmonic musicians took part—155 performances in all.

In these programs, which are analyzed with advance apologies for arithmetical or other errors, there were 548 performances of 269 works by 104 composers. This total includes ninety-four performances of forty-six works by thirty-two American composers. Thirty-three works were heard for the first time, and six others had their first local concert performances. This total does not include six new works arranged from or based upon music by other composers. Twenty-two of this season's thirty-three novelties are American works.

For the purposes of this enumeration, works by native-born composers and by naturalized composers who have lived in this country for many years or have pursued the major part of their careers here are considered as American compositions.

The twenty composers who had the greatest representation in the programs under consideration are:

Beethoven, 18 works, 51 performances; Tchaikovsky, 13, 33; Brahms, 12, 32; Stravinsky, 10, 22; Mozart, 11, 21; Wagner, 9, 20; Prokofieff, 8, 17; R. Strauss, 7, 16; Bach, 9, 14; Mendelssohn, 4, 14; Copland, 6, 13; Sibelius, 8, 12; Gershwin, 5, 11; Ravel, 5, 11; Rachmaninoff, [illegible], 11; Debussy, 4, 10; Bartok, 6, 9; Schumann, 4, 8; Shostakovitch, 2, 8; Milhaud, 4, 7.

In the corresponding programs of the season of 1935-'36, Beethoven, as now, led the list, followed in order by Bach, Wagner, Mozart, Brahms, Sibelius, Debussy, Tchaikovsky, Ravel and Schumann. Twenty-nine works in the 1945-'46 list were played by two or more orchestras, including three works by Aaron Copland and one by George Gershwin. Brahms's first piano concerto, Shostakovitch's fifth symphony and Rachmaninoff's second concerto were played by three orchestras, scoring six performances apiece. But the championship goes to Prokofieff's fifth symphony, which, between the Philharmonic and the Boston Symphony, scored seven hearings. Beethoven's third "Leonore" overture completes the list of works which scored more than five performances.

The list of works introduced to the local repertoire by the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra has already been published. The list of novelties presented by other orchestras here is:

New York City Symphony—First time: *Blitzstein, Airborne Symphony. First time in New York: *Bartók, Portrait in D; *Diamond, Symphony No. 2; *Foss, Symphony in G. First New York concert performance: *Antheil, Symphony No. 4.

National Orchestral Association—First time: Arnell, Violin Concerto; Bate, Sinfonietta No. 2.

Philadelphia Orchestra—First time in New York: Stravinsky, Four Norwegian Moods; *Bloch, Suite Symphonique; Bartók, Piano Concerto No. 3; Martinu, Symphony No. 4; Milhaud, Suite for Violin and Orchestra. First New York concert performance: *Rogers, Soliloquy.

Boston Symphony—First time in New York: *Barber, Cello Concerto; Britten, Interludes and Passacaglia from "Peter Grimes"; *Dukelsky, Cello Concerto; Prokofieff, Symphony No. 5.

Rochester Philharmonic—First time: *Shapero, Suite for Strings (1st movement). First time in New York: *Copland, Danzon Cubano.

American Youth Orchestra—First time: *Morgenstern, The Warsaw Ghetto. First time in America: [illegible] [illegible] About [illegible]. First time in New York: *Kay, Danse Calinda. First time in concert: *Cooper, The Last Speech.

*American work.

The following works by American composers were performed:

By the Philharmonic-Symphony: Barrymore, Partita; Bergsma, Music on a Quiet Theme; Bloch, Schelomo; Carpenter, The Seven Ages; Copland, A Lincoln Portrait, Appalachian Spring; Gershwin, An American in Paris, Piano Concerto in F, Rhapsody in Blue, songs from "Porgy and Bess"; Gershwin-Bennett, "Porgy and Bess," a Symphonic Picture; Gould, Spirituals for String Choir and Orchestra; Griffes, The White Peacock; Gruenberg, Violin Concerto; Hanson, Symphony No. 2 (Romantic); Harris, Memories of a Child's Sunday; Kern, "Show Boat" Scenario; Loeffler, A Pagan Poem; Mennin, A Folk Overture; Piston, Suite from "The Incredible Flutist," Symphony No. 2; Rogers, In Memory of Franklin D. Roosevelt; Schelling, A Victory Ball; Sousa, The Stars and Stripes Forever; Still, In Memoriam, Poem for Orchestra; Two Negro Spirituals (anon).

By the Boston Symphony: Barber, Cello Concerto; Copland, Quiet City, Appalachian Spring; Diamond, Rounds for String Orchestra; Dukelsky, Cello Concerto; Hanson, Symphony No. 4.

By the Philadelphia Orchestra: Bloch, Suite Symphonique; Rogers, Soliloquy.

By the New York City Symphony: Antheil, Symphony No. 4; Bernstein, Variations from "Fancy Free"; Blitzstein, Airborne Symphony; Copland, Outdoor Overture; Diamond, Symphony No. 2; Foss, Symphony in G; Thompson, Symphony No. 2.

By the Rochester Philharmonic: Gilbert, Comedy Overture on Negro Themes; Copland, Quiet City, Danzon Cubano; Bernstein, Episodes from "On the Town"; Gershwin, Rhapsody in Blue; Shapero, Serenade for Strings (first movement).

By the American Youth Orchestra: Bernstein, Jeremiah Symphony; Cooper, The Last Speech; Copland, Our Town; Kay, Danse Calinda; Morgenstern, The Warsaw Ghetto; Siegmeister, Ozark Suite.

The Philharmonic-Symphony, playing twenty-eight American works in a total of 139 compositions, devoted slightly over 20 per cent of its repertoire to American music. The Boston Symphony, with six American works in a total list of thirty-one, scored slightly under 20 per cent; the Philadelphia Orchestra, with two works out of forty, only 4½ per cent. The City Symphony's American proportion of the repertoire was 17½ per cent, but its American list was the most interesting of those offered by our resident or regularly visiting professional orchestras.

Ten years ago, twenty-one American composers were represented by thirty-five performances of twenty-one works. The number of works played in 152 concerts was 285, by 112 composers. Thirty-seven works were heard for the first time in New York.

A comparison of the orchestral statistics of 1945-'46 with those of 1935-'36 suggests that there has been a considerable gain in the representation afforded American composers, although this would be less pronounced if the figures were limited to the regular subscription concerts in Carnegie Hall and the New York City Center. Contemporary composers have also gained to some extent, while the proportion of novelties was substantially the same in both seasons.

While American composers are gaining ground in our orchestral programs, much further progress will have to be made before it can be said that we have a representative, significant and frequently played American repertoire. Similar comment could be made in regard to contemporary music, both American and foreign. One curious feature in this season's programs was the slight attention paid to British music of this century. The total was four works: two played by the National Orchestral Association in an English program and one apiece played by the Philharmonic and the Boston Symphony.

Among the various local subscription series, there was a vitality and interest in the City Symphony's concerts under Leonard Bernstein which were sometimes lacking in the concerts of the older orchestras. It is unfortunate that the City Symphony must limit itself to two series of ten concerts each next fall, instead of having an expanded and extensive schedule throughout the entire season. It is to be hoped that some means can be found for placing this orchestra on a firmer economic basis.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

MAY 12 1946

Record Makers Working to End Long Shortage

Classics Already Moving to Stores; 'Long-Hair' Items Proving Popular

By Edward Malkin

Major record producers have begun a program of concentrated production slated to last through the summer to end the severe shortage that has prevailed during the war in many items of standard classical music. The improvement is already beginning to be felt by purchasers of classical music recordings whose current demands are at the rate of 30,000,000 disks annually.

The R. C. A.-Victor division of Radio Corp. of America is pushing output on a list of seventy-five separate albums of favorite classical selections and several hundred individual disks, apart from current releases. Because of war shortages and restrictions, most of these, while listed in R. C. A.-Victor's catalogue, appeared only occasionally on dealers' shelves and didn't last there long enough to be counted as inventory.

Retail outlets, from whom the information was gathered, were enthusiastic over the projected replenishment of their stocks, which is intended to see them through the Christmas buying season. One well informed retail source said that the list received from Victor "was very meaty—the heart of the scarcer war casualties of the Victor classical catalogue."

Victor officials confirmed the issuance of the list of "long-hair" favorites and said it resulted from a survey of dealers made throughout the country by distributors. Issuance of albums on the list has begun, and the bulk of them will be in dealers' hands by the end of the summer, it was said.

The company would not go into the question of how much production was involved except to state that the amount would be "huge." As an example, it was said that one of the first releases on the list, Rachmaninoff's Second Piano Concerto, played by the composer, already has been issued in 50,000 copies.

Victor officials pointed out that during the summer months appointments for recording of current artists are not as heavy as usual and that advantage is being taken of this fact, as well as of the increased supply of materials, to concentrate on replenishing catalogued selections.

Officials of Columbia Recording Corp. said that company's scarcer items would also be substantially restocked by the fall.

Catching up with their catalogues is, of course, only a part of the record companies' function. Their major job in the classical field is to keep a steady flow of recordings by the artists and orchestras on their current lists going out to the public each month. But they also make an effort to keep available representative works and renditions that are musically and historically important, even though their market prospects may not be too bright.

This last factor is not too important now. The industry, which will reach an estimated peak of 300,000,000 recordings in 1946, has had no difficulty in recent months in selling out virtually anything and everything, classical or popular, which reached the dealers' shelves, record men report.

Classical recordings are at a new peak of popular acceptance, "long-hair" music having won many thousands of new converts through the V-disks heard by service men in every quarter of the globe during the war. The Boston Symphony alone collects royalties on more than 100,000 records a year made by R. C. A.-Victor. The estate of Enrico Caruso already has been paid more than $3,000,000 by Victor in royalties, and they still roll in. A leading violinist has collected as much as $150,000 in one year in royalties.

(Continued from page one)

When it is considered that the roster of R. C. A.-Victor Red Seal artists and organizations now numbers eighty, it is apparent that classical recordings are big business.

About 80 per cent of the entire record industry's output is devoted to popular records, trade estimates show. In the case of R. C. A.-Victor, with its more than 60,000,000 record output annually (scheduled to reach some 130,000,000 through construction of new facilities) the proportion is probably closer to three popular recordings for every classical disk.

R. C. A.-Victor badly underestimated the demand for the recently issued Goldberg Variations of Bach, played on the harpsichord by Wanda Landowska. This release, issued as a collectors' item, vanished from stocks within two weeks.

The selection is "long-hair" music at its deepest, and the strength of the favorable reaction to it jolted even Victor men, who are not known to be pessimists about the increasing sophistication of the public's musical taste. Retail sources say this work will be one of those reissued this summer, and possibly within a month.

This Clipping From
MADISON, WIS.
CAPITAL TIMES

MAY 12 1946

ON THE RECORDS

[By Dewey Dunn]

APPALACHIAN SPRING SONG

AARON COPLAND'S Appalachian Spring, Pulitzer prize winning composition in 1945, has been made the subject of a new RCA Victor Record-Story album (DM-1046, three 12-inch) which offers a sturdy and vigorous interpretation of the work by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the baton of Serge Koussevitsky.

Copland was commissioned in 1942 by Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, Boston music patron, to prepare the score for one of three new ballets to be created by Martha Graham. Miss Graham's script revolves around a pioneer celebration in spring at a newly built farmhouse in the Pennsylvania hills. Copland's music has caught with surprising realism the austerity of American pioneer life. It depicts the apprehension with which the bride and her young farmer-husband begin their domestic partnership, the joy of young love, the warnings and cautioning from the old folk, and the stern reminders by the Shaker Revivalist and his flock.

The musical score is written in eight parts. The concluding sections are based on old Shaker melodies and Copland brings his work to a close on a note of assurance as the neighbors depart leaving the young couple strong and full of hope in their new house.

The album contains seven pages with action studies of the Graham performance, texts discusing the music and the plot of the dance, and articles on the careers of Miss Graham and Mr. Copland. For those who like contemporary music and the allied arts this album will make an excellent addition to a record collection.

✦ ✦ ✦

BENNY GOODMAN SEXTET

THE LAST word in modern swing music can be found between the covers of Columbia's new Benny Goodman album (C-113, four 10-inch) which presents the Goodman Sextet in a rousing set of eight favorites in which improvisation and jam session freedom spark the group to a peak performance.

Members of the group are Benny Goodman, clarinet; Mel Powell and Teddy Wilson, piano; Red Norvo, vibraphone; Mike Bryan, guitar; Slam Stewart, bass; Morey Feld, drums. The selections consist of Tiger Rag, Ain't Misbehavin', She's Funny That Way, I Got Rhythm, Just One of Those Things, China Boy, Shine, and Rachel's Dream.

Here is a great collection of instrumental artists performing individually, in pairs, in trios and in ensemble. Powell and Wilson alternate at the keyboard with equal success. Benny's clarinet work is a standout on every side, some of which are entirely new to the Goodman repertoire. Jane Harvey handles the only vocal in the set, an intriguing interpretation of She's Funny That Way. Rachel's Dream is a Goodman original which Benny named for his daughter. It features Mr. B's clarinet and Norvo on the vibraphone.

This Clipping From
RALEIGH, N. C.
NEWS-OBSERVER

MAY 12 1946

Speaking of Records

Strauss Polkas. Boston "Pops" Orchestra. Arthur Fiedler, conductor. Victor Album M-1049.

The names of Strauss and Vienna are almost synonymous, so frequently does one associate the name of the great composers with the once radiant city of Austria. Today, in old Vienna hover ghosts of the centuries. Ghosts that lurk in the shadows of reawakening life. Through the fashionable promenades that another day vibrated with rhythm and color; through the corners of the narrow cobbled lanes that wind their way to the green banks of the Danube; about the ruins of old St. Stefan's Cathedral, whose Gothic spire once glistened in the sunlight—there echoes a voice of the great art and spirit that never can be lost to the world.

Johann Strauss and his three sons probably did more than any other person or group of people to keep alive the undying spirit of romance and gaiety of old Vienna. When Strauss died in 1849, he left the world a brilliant repertoire. His complete works were published in 1899 in seven volumes. They comprise 152 waltzes, 24 galops, six cotillions, 32 quadrilles, 13 polkas, and 18 marches.

Victor has released a three-record album of Strauss polkas. Included in the set are "Tik Tak Polka," from "Die Fledermaus" by Johann Strauss, Jr.; "Pizzicato Polka," by Johann, Jr., and Josef Strauss; "Bahn Frei-Polka" by Eduard Strauss; "Annen Polka," by Johann, Jr.; and and "Sans Souci-Polka" by Johann, Sr.

The Boston "Pops," under the baton of Fiedler, presents brilliant orchestration of some of the world's loveliest music.

This Clipping From
DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
MAY 14 1946

The Passing Show

Philadelphia Orchestra and the Big Three Among the Symphonies

By John Rosenfield.

The visit of the Philadelphia Orchestra to Fort Worth Thursday again launches the subject of what constitutes a major symphony orchestra in this country. The American Federation of Musicians figures any orchestra with at least a $100,000-a-year budget as a major symphony. According to a survey of the Petrillo organization, there are now twenty-five such orchestras in North America, including the revived Dallas Symphony of 1945-46. With a budget of around $210,000 a year the Dallas Symphony is as impressive financially as it has been artistically.

Cities with major symphonies in the AFM rating are Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Cleveland, Dallas, Detroit, Pittsburgh, Los Angeles, Washington, Minneapolis, San Francisco, Indianapolis, San Antonio, Houston, St. Louis, Denver, Rochester, Kansas City, Baltimore, New Orleans, Oklahoma City, Buffalo (by a few cents) and Toronto.

Of the twenty-five there are three in an upper-bracket class by themselves, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the New York Philharmonic-Symphony and the Philadelphia Orchestra. This last is not the Philadelphia Symphony but merely the Phildelphia Orchestra. These pay the highest fees to their players and engage in the most widespread activities. All three are considered superb symphonic instruments on which the symphonic music reaches its most complete ne plus ultra expression.

The NBC Symphony, organized for broadcast purposes only, is not included although its budgetary and artistic eminence is comparable to that of the big three.

◆

The Philharmonic-Symphony of New York is clearly No. 3 of the three, a fact known to all New Yorkers and nettling to civic pride. The orchestra is occasionally intractable and unresponsive to some of the many guest conductors who handle it. It is hard-driven, playing almost too many programs within a given week. Great orchestra that it is, the Philharmonic has lost distinctive personality.

The champion symphony of the country is either the Boston or the Philadelphia, according to one's taste. The Boston has the more glorious balance of tone, the Philadelphia a greater sumptuousness of tone, especially in the strings.

The Boston Symphony of today is the creation of Serge Koussevitzky, its conductor since 1924. Stokowski built the Philadelphia Orchestra and its tradition between 1912 and 1936. When he retired, a decline was predicted. However, in the ten years that Eugene Ormandy has controlled it, the Philadelphia Orchestra has retained all its Stokowskian elegance. It is perhaps more versatile than it was in the last seasons of Stokowski, which were given over to specializing in Bach-transcription sonorities.

◆

Most critics haven't given Ormandy credit for his personal growth as a virtuoso conductor. It was generally admitted from the start that he was lively, efficient, musical and tasteful. Larger music, while well played, was never as revelatory as when conducted by Stokowski, Koussevitzky or Toscanini. But Ormandy's musical sensibilities have matured and deepened as his years and experience approach those of the elder maestros. It is only a question of time before he is accepted as one of the most interesting and stirring interpretative personalities on the podium.

The Koussevitzky era is drawing to a close in Boston. He is almost 72. Dimitri Mitropoulos of Minneapolis is mentioned as a possible successor. Rodzinki's contract with the Philharmonic-Symphony has one more season to run. Toscanini plans only a season or two more activity.

Eugene Ormandy in another season may be the dean of conductors among the A-plus major symphonies. And at 46 or 47, too. His reign may be long.

Progress of the Pops

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR
4/16/46

'Paganini' Rhapsody Heard, Bernhard Weiser at Piano

Something serious and yet remarkably appropriate to a springtime musical event slipped into the program of the Boston Pops, Arthur Fiedler, conductor, at Symphony Hall last night—the composition that bears the title, Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini for Piano and Orchestra, op. 43, by Rachmaninov. The soloist, Bernhard Weiser, the orchestral players, and the director of the music all got into the jump and go of the piece, which is indeed a rhapsody if the word possesses definition anywhere in the dictionaries; and it probably does not. For we must learn what rhapsodies are by hearing them performed rather than by reading about them. They are beyond ordinary classification, and perhaps beyond what we usually think of as appreciation.

Either talk or thought of themes and developments is useless in the matter. A rhapsody is a rhapsody, a running wild and loose of the composer's fancy, and it will not submit to the restraints of what theorists call form. The name of Paganini associated with the Rachmaninov Piano Rhapsody should be enough to cover what wants explaining. With that name we associate wizardry—a talent much fostered in Romantic times and often referred to as diabolical—plentifully satirical; gay, and at the same time a little melancholy.

Well, this was the night of the May full moon. Russian folklore is fond of such a night; and Rachmaninov was a Russian of the old order. He was never Americanized out of that character; and nothing he ever wrote more genuinely expressed his sentiments than the work in which Mr. Weiser on this occasion appeared as soloist. The Rhapsody, regarded as an item on an orchestral program, is really a full-length Piano Concerto, and written with perfect consideration for balance of solo and accompanying tone. Mr. Weiser evinced understanding of these points and secured the respectful support of the Boston Symphony players. Mr. Fiedler, too, with the baton, showed himself advancing to the dignity of a No. 1 orchestral interpreter.

But these concerts after all are the Pops, and while they may be spoken of frequently in high artistic terms, they remain informal entertainment—"Barber of Seville" Overture, Ave Maria, with Mr. Theodorowicz as solo violinist, and other particulars, witty, heart-warming, or whatever else. For an interlude here, Janice McCourt, soprano, sang charmingly the "Last Rose of Summer," against the background of a women's chorus—Emmanuel College Glee Club, Theodore N. Marier director.

W. P. T.

This Clipping From
NEW YORKER
NEW YORK CITY

MAY 18 1946

CONCERT RECORDS

[illegible] to Choir

AARON COPLAND's orchestral suite from Martha Graham's ballet "Appalachian Spring" has been recorded for Victor by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky (Album M- or DM-1046). This music has already earned two awards—that of the Music Critics' Circle of New York, for being the outstanding theatrical composition of last season, and the 1945 Pulitzer Prize for music—and, to my mind, it represents Copland at his best. Writing a score to one of Martha Graham's cryptic scenarios is a considerable task, and Mr. Copland not only wrote a good one but was also able to extract a remarkable concert suite from it. Serge Koussevitzky, an old Copland admirer, treats the suite with affectionate attention, which is reflected in the work of his musicians. The recording itself is clear and clean. The music comes through well, the only flaw being an almost unnoticeably boggled horn passage. Victor has dressed the album up with several pages of text about the music and the ballet as well as some handsome photographs of the stage presentation of "Appalachian Spring."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

MAY 12 1946

AMERICAN MUSIC SURVEY

A Study of Conditions in This Field Is Made by Dr. Hugo Leichtentritt

By OLIN DOWNES

THE Festival of Contemporary American Music given under the auspices of Columbia University, ending today, has been of a nature to remind its audiences of the exceptional rapidity with which the musical situation in this country changes, almost year by year. Technics develop, styles evolve and mature at a rate which make it baffling to attempt appraisal of the progress made.

A study of the conditions in this field is being made by Dr. Hugo Leichtentritt, early chapters of which have been printed in successive issues of "More Books," the monthly bulletin of the Boston Public Library. It is a brief but highly suggestive survey. Thus the history of American music is divided, not like Gaul, in four periods. The English influence was paramount in the eighteenth century. The German dominated the nineteenth, to give place to the French at the turn of the century and up to about 1930; until, in the present period, "the quest for an American style in composition and for modernism, together with the discovery of American folk-music, are the paramount considerations."

The German influence had much to do with the development in the nineteenth century of American symphonic orchestras. At the same time our students flocked to the big German music centers for their instruction. The Leipzig Conservatory, Weimar and Franz Liszt; the Vienna Conservatory with Leschetizky; the Berlin Hochschule and Joachim; the Klindworth-Scharwenka Conservatory in Berlin; Rheinberger in Munich; Raff and the Frankfurt Conservatory. In New York this tendency is still predominant. Boston, at the turn of the century, became strongly Francophile in its musical tastes and tendencies. Only with the advent of Koussevitzky as conductor of the Boston Symphony did a more international view of music and musicians begin to obtain.

Ives Cited

Meanwhile, what of the American spirit and style in composition? Had it manifested itself significantly in any particular locality or way? Dr. Leichtentritt finds that "the first wave of outspoken Americanism got under way in the Twenties." He mentions particularly Charles Ives (1874—), Carl Ruggles (1876—), a companion soul of the formerly mentioned composers. He names three "naughty boys," George Antheil, who is the youngest (1900—), the Russian-born Leo Ornstein, and the French-born Edgar Varese, who remains a pioneer of his art.

Meanwhile Rheinberger of Munich had given place to Nadia Boulanger of Paris, with her pupils, among them Aaron Copland, Roy Harris, Walter Piston, Virgil Thomson, and others. "What they learned in Paris was certainly not Americanism but modernism of the Stravinsky brand. The Parisian Stravinsky, with his neo-classicism, not the vigorous young Stravinsky, is the patron saint of the Boulanger school. For the young Americans it was a brave problem how to digest this formally interesting but emotionally indifferent tendency, and yet to give their art an American accent and content. To what extent they succeed will finally determine their place in the history of the internationally modern and at the same time national American music."

Call From Dvorak

Dr. Leichtentritt speaks of folksong. Dvorak, in his "New World" symphony, used American melodies and showed, not that he was able thereby to compose American music, but that music of the most serious and imposing sort could be made from folk-melodies flourishing on our soil. But Dvorak's "provocative call" did not arouse a wide response from American composers. "American music more than any other should be all-embracing and universal, like the American civilization." Old B. J. Lang joined the chorus, stating his belief that it was "not natural for a white man to write a symphony using real plantation melodies." But MacDowell took Dvorak's words to heart, and his Indian Suite was based upon Indian folk themes.

The two Americans of the present period whom Dr. Leichtentritt finds most representative of the American spirit in their works are Roy Harris and Aaron Copland. Harris's "incarnate Americanism could not," he says, be spoiled by the Parisian admiration for Stravinsky's latest cool, objective phase, which allured so many young American musicians to Paris, or even by "the sophisticated school of Nadia Boulanger, and the strict constructivism and severe counterpoint there acquired."

The music of Aaron Copland is far more complex. It draws much more upon Negro music. "It does not avoid an occasional reference to the sophisticated night club, as in "Salon Mexico"; on the other hand, it exploits primitive effects taken over from the German 'Gebrauchsmusik' of a Hindemith or Weill. . . . Through Copland's works runs a strange, apparently contradictory diversity. He accentuates not only his Americanism; he also feels obliged to demonstrate his up-to-date modernism.

Dr. Leichtentritt believes that American composers are more than ever before becoming conscious of the fact that the richest source of inspiration is in their homeland. "A truly American school is rapidly growing in strength, prestige and importance."

What is the greatest need of our musical culture today? It is State and Federal support of art. "Wherever a national school has flourished, from the time of ancient Greece to the twentieth century, the nation has supported it, and the nation is represented by its government. To a foreign observer it is incomprehensible that the Federal Government, the governments of single states, and the city administrations have as yet done hardly anything for the support of a national music." Everywhere in the country there is clamor for American operas; yet how can they be written when there are no opera houses to perform them in? And how can opera houses be established without financial aid?

Triumph Foreseen

"At present America is a vast basin into which all the countries pour their musical surplus. The mixture of nationalities and the assemblage of the great musical artists and scholars of all nations cannot be without profound effect. The problem is to utilize properly this huge capital, to organize sensibly the various activities and to foster intelligently the creative impulses. A generation may pass before a rich harvest can be reaped, but there is no reason why America should not be able to solve the problem. In the international contest for musical leadership one may confidently predict an American victory. Only negligence, ignorance and indifference, on the part of the government or the calamity of a third world war should be able to deprive this country of a triumph in art."

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

MAY 19 1946

Berkshire Festival Programs Announced

The itemized programs and the soloists are announced for the Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., this Summer. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will give nine concerts in the Music Shed at Tanglewood. The soloists will include Claudio Arrau and Eugene List, pianists; Carol Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists. The concerts will be given on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons from July 25 to Aug. 11.

This Clipping
SCHENECTADY
UNION-STA

MAY 16 194

Lenox, Mas
Music Fest
Opens July

Boston Sympho
Nine Concerts;
Morini Among S

The Boston Sympho
tra with Serge Kouss conductor will open its Festival at Lenox, Mas
The festival will end Au concerts will be given a will be Claudio Arrau a List, pianists; Carol traltor; Gregor Piatigor Mischa Elman and Er violinists.

The concerts will Thursday and Satur and Sunday afternoons

The programs of the will be: July 25 —
"Eroica" Symphony a Symphony No. 2; Jul thoven's "Pastoral"
Rachmaninoff's Piano
No. 2 (Eugene List), Mo
Prelude to "Khovansto Wagner's Prelude to "T singers;" July 28—Me Italian" Symphony, C
Suite 'Appalachian Sp
stakovitch's Symphony

She second week will to the music of Braha lows: Aug. 1—Tragic
Piano Concerto No.
Arrau), Symphony No.
Symphony No. 3, Rha
contralto and male ch
Brice), Symphony No.
Haydn Variations, dou (Erica Morini and G gorsky), Symphony No.

For the third week
Prokofieff's Symphony
mann's 'Cello Concer Piatigorsky), Wagner's
"Lohengrin," Strauss's spiegel;" Aug 10 —
American Festival Ove
tinu's Violin Concert
Elman), Tchaikovsky's
No. 5; Aug. 11—Rand son's "The Testamen dom", Beethoven's Sy 9 (with Festival chorus soloists to be announc

This Clipping
GLENS FALLS,
POST STAR

MAY 17 19

The Berkshire museu field, Mass., will sponsor
"The History of the Sy chestra" from July 23
The exhibit will be o
public and will coincid
Berkshire Festival und rection of Dr. Serge

Material for the exhi selected by the Bostor orchestra and will famous Sargent portra Higginson, founder of t
now owned by the Co
Harvard University.
the great conductors,
soloists, together with various homes occupied chestra, program not morabilia will be inclu

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
MAY 14 1946

The Passing Show

Philadelphia Orchestra and the Big Three Among the Symphonies

By John Rosenfield.

The visit of the Philadelphia Orchestra to Fort Worth Thursday again launches the subject of what constitutes a major symphony orchestra in this country. The American Federation of Musicians figures any orchestra with at least a $100,000-a-year budget as a major symphony. According to a survey of the Petrillo organization, there are now twenty-five such orchestras in North America, including the revived Dallas Symphony of 1945-46. With a budget of around $210,000 a year the Dallas Symphony is as impressive financially as it has been artistically.

Cities with major symphonies in the AFM rating are Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Cleveland, Dallas, Detroit, Pittsburgh, Los Angeles, Washington, Minneapolis, San Francisco, Indianapolis, San Antonio, Houston, St. Louis, Denver, Rochester, Kansas City, Baltimore, New Orleans, Oklahoma City, Buffalo (by a few cents) and Toronto.

Of the twenty-five there are three in an upper-bracket class by themselves, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the New York Philharmonic-Symphony and the Philadelphia Orchestra. This last is not the Philadelphia Symphony but merely the Phildelphia Orchestra. These pay the highest fees to their players and engage in the most widespread activities. All three are considered superb symphonic instruments on which the symphonic music reaches its most complete ne plus ultra expression.

The NBC Symphony, organized for broadcast purposes only, is not included although its budgetary and artistic eminence is comparable to that of the big three.

The Philharmonic-Symphony of New York is clearly No. 3 of the three, a fact known to all New Yorkers and nettling to civic pride. The orchestra is occasionally intractable and unresponsive to some of the many guest conductors who handle it. It is hard-driven, playing almost too many programs within a given week. Great orchestra that it is, the Philharmonic has lost distinctive personality.

The champion symphony of the country is either the Boston or the Philadelphia, according to one's taste. The Boston has the more glorious balance of tone, the Philadelphia a greater sumptuousness of tone, especially in the strings.

The Boston Symphony of today is the creation of Serge Koussevitzky, its conductor since 1924. Stokowski built the Philadelphia Orchestra and its tradition between 1912 and 1936. When he retired, a decline was predicted. However, in the ten years that Eugene Ormandy has controlled it, the Philadelphia Orchestra has retained all its Stokowskian elegance. It is perhaps more versatile than it was in the last seasons of Stokowski, which were given over to specializing in Bach-transcription sonorities.

Most critics haven't given Ormandy credit for his personal growth as a virtuoso conductor. It was generally admitted from the start that he was lively, efficient, musical and tasteful. Larger music, while well played, was never as revelatory as when conducted by Stokowski, Koussevitzky or Toscanini. But Ormandy's musical sensibilities have matured and deepened as his years and experience approach those of the elder maestros. It is only a question of time before he is accepted as one of the most interesting and stirring interpretative personalities on the podium.

The Koussevitzky era is drawing to a close in Boston. He is almost 72. Dimitri Mitropoulos of Minneapolis is mentioned as a possible successor. Rodzinki's contract with the Philharmonic-Symphony has one more season to run. Toscanini plans only a season or two more activity.

Eugene Ormandy in another season may be the dean of conductors among the A-plus major symphonies. And at 46 or 47, too. His reign may be long.

Progress of the Pops

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR 4/16/46

'Paganini' Rhapsody Heard, Bernhard Weiser at Piano

Something serious and yet remarkably appropriate to a springtime musical event slipped into the program of the Boston Pops, Arthur Fiedler, conductor, at Symphony Hall last night—the composition that bears the title, Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini for Piano and Orchestra, op. 43, by Rachmaninov. The soloist, Bernhard Weiser, the orchestral players, and the director of the music all got into the jump and go of the piece, which is indeed a rhapsody if the word possesses definition anywhere in the dictionaries; and it probably does not. For we must learn what rhapsodies are by hearing them performed rather than by reading about them. They are beyond ordinary classification, and perhaps beyond what we usually think of as appreciation.

Either talk or thought of themes and developments is useless in the matter. A rhapsody is a rhapsody, a running wild and loose of the composer's fancy, and it will not submit to the restraints of what theorists call form. The name of Paganini associated with the Rachmaninov Piano Rhapsody should be enough to cover what wants explaining. With that name we associate wizardry—a talent much fostered in Romantic times and often referred to as diabolical—plentifully satirical; gay, and at the same time a little melancholy.

Well, this was the night of the May full moon. Russian folklore is fond of such a night; and Rachmaninov was a Russian of the old order. He was never Americanized out of that character; and nothing he ever wrote more genuinely expressed his sentiments than the work in which Mr. Weiser on this occasion appeared as soloist. The Rhapsody, regarded as an item on an orchestral program, is really a full-length Piano Concerto, and written with perfect consideration for balance of solo and accompanying tone. Mr. Weiser evinced understanding of these points and secured the respectful support of the Boston Symphony players. Mr. Fiedler, too, with the baton, showed himself advancing to the dignity of a No. 1 orchestral interpreter.

But these concerts after all are the Pops, and while they may be spoken of frequently in high artistic terms, they remain informal entertainment—"Barber of Seville" Overture, Ave Maria, with Mr. Theodorowicz as solo violinist, and other particulars, witty, heart-warming, or whatever else. For an interlude here, Janice McCourt, soprano, sang charmingly the "Last Rose of Summer," against the background of a women's chorus—Emmanuel College Glee Club, Theodore N. Marier director.

W. P. T.

This Clipping From
NEW YORKER
NEW YORK CITY

MAY 18 1946

CONCERT RECORDS

Ballet to Choir

Aaron Copland's orchestral suite from Martha Graham's ballet "Appalachian Spring" has been recorded for Victor by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky (Album M- or DM-1046). This music has already earned two awards—that of the Music Critics' Circle of New York, for being the outstanding theatrical composition of last season, and the 1945 Pulitzer Prize for music—and, to my mind, it represents Copland at his best. Writing a score to one of Martha Graham's cryptic scenarios is a considerable task, and Mr. Copland not only wrote a good one but was also able to extract a remarkable concert suite from it. Serge Koussevitzky, an old Copland admirer, treats the suite with affectionate attention, which is reflected in the work of his musicians. The recording itself is clear and clean. The music comes through well, the only flaw being an almost unnoticeably boggled horn passage. Victor has dressed the album up with several pages of text about the music and the ballet as well as some handsome photographs of the stage presentation of "Appalachian Spring."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

MAY 12 1946

AMERICAN MUSIC SURVEY

A Study of Conditions in This Field Is Made by Dr. Hugo Leichtentritt

By OLIN DOWNES

The Festival of Contemporary American Music given under the auspices of Columbia University, ending today, has been of a nature to remind its audiences of the exceptional rapidity with which the musical situation in this country changes, almost year by year. Technics develop, styles evolve and mature at a rate which make it baffling to attempt appraisal of the progress made.

A study of the conditions in this field is being made by Dr. Hugo Leichtentritt, early chapters of which have been printed in successive issues of "More Books," the monthly bulletin of the Boston Public Library. It is a brief but highly suggestive survey. Thus the history of American music is divided—not like Gaul, in four periods. The English influence was paramount in the eighteenth century. The German dominated the nineteenth, to give place to the French at the turn of the century and up to about 1930; until, in the present period, "the quest for an American style in composition and for modernism, together with the discovery of American folk-music, are the paramount considerations."

The German influence had much to do with the development in the nineteenth century of American symphonic orchestras. At the same time our students flocked to the big German music centers for their instruction. The Leipzig Conservatory, Weimar and Franz Liszt; the Vienna Conservatory with Leschetizky; the Berlin Hochschule and Joachim; the Klindworth-Scharwenka Conservatory in Berlin; Rheinberger in Munich; Raff and the Frankfurt Conservatory. In New York this tendency is still predominant. Boston, at the turn of the century, became strongly Francophile in its musical tastes and tendencies. Only with the advent of Koussevitzky as conductor of the Boston Symphony did a more international view of music and musicians begin to obtain.

Ives Cited

Meanwhile, what of the American spirit and style in composition? Had it manifested itself significantly in any particular locality or way? Dr. Leichtentritt finds that "the first wave of outspoken Americanism got under way in the Twenties." He mentions particularly Charles Ives (1874—), Carl Ruggles (1876—), a companion soul of the formerly mentioned composers. He names three "naughty boys," George Antheil, who is the youngest (1900—), the Russian-born Leo Ornstein, and the French-born Edgar Varese, who remains a pioneer of his art.

Meanwhile Rheinberger of Munich had given place to Nadia Boulanger of Paris, with her pupils, among them Aaron Copland, Roy Harris, Walter Piston, Virgil Thomson, and others. "What they learned in Paris was certainly not Americanism but modernism of the Stravinsky brand. The Parisian Stravinsky, with his neo-classicism, not the vigorous young Stravinsky, is the patron saint of the Boulanger school. For the young Americans it was a brave problem how to digest this formally interesting but emotionally indifferent tendency, and yet to give their art an American accent and content. To what extent they succeed will finally determine their place in the history of the internationally modern and at the same time national American music."

Call From Dvorak

Dr. Leichtentritt speaks of folksong. Dvorak, in his "New World" symphony, used American melodies and showed, not that he was able thereby to compose American music, but that music of the most serious and imposing sort could be made from folk-melodies flourishing on our soil. But Dvorak's "provocative call" did not arouse a wide response from American composers. "American music more than any other should be all-embracing and universal, like the American civilization." Old B. J. Lang joined the chorus, stating his belief that it was "not natural for a white man to write a symphony using real plantation melodies." But MacDowell took Dvorak's words to heart, and his Indian Suite was based upon Indian folk themes.

The two Americans of the present period whom Dr. Leichtentritt finds most representative of the American spirit in their works are Roy Harris and Aaron Copland. Harris's "incarnate Americanism could not," he says, be spoiled by the Parisian admiration for Stravinsky's latest cool, objective phase, which allured so many young American musicians to Paris, or even by "the sophisticated school of Nadia Boulanger, and the strict constructivism and severe counterpoint there acquired."

The music of Aaron Copland is far more complex. It draws much more upon Negro music. "It does not avoid an occasional reference to the sophisticated night club, as in "Salon Mexico"; on the other hand, it exploits primitive effects taken over from the German 'Gebrauchsmusik' of a Hindemith or Weill. . . . Through Copland's works runs a strange, apparently contradictory diversity. He accentuates not only his Americanism; he also feels obliged to demonstrate his up-to-date modernism.

Dr. Leichtentritt believes that American composers are more than ever before becoming conscious of the fact that the richest source of inspiration is in their homeland. "A truly American school is rapidly growing in strength, prestige and importance."

What is the greatest need of our musical culture today? It is State and Federal support of art. "Wherever a national school has flourished, from the time of ancient Greece to the twentieth century, the nation has supported it, and the nation is represented by its government. To a foreign observer it is incomprehensible that the Federal Government, the governments of single states, and the city administrations have as yet done hardly anything for the support of a national music." Everywhere in the country there is clamor for American operas; yet how can they be written when there are no opera houses to perform them in? And how can opera houses be established without financial aid?

Triumph Foreseen

"At present America is a vast basin into which all the countries pour their musical surplus. The mixture of nationalities and the assemblage of the great musical artists and scholars of all nations cannot be without profound effect. The problem is to utilize properly this huge capital, to organize sensibly the various activities and to foster intelligently the creative impulses. A generation may pass before a rich harvest can be reaped, but there is no reason why America should not be able to solve the problem. In the international contest for musical leadership one may confidently predict an American victory. Only negligence, ignorance and indifference, on the part of the government or the calamity of a third world war should be able to deprive this country of a triumph in art."

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

MAY 19 1946

Berkshire Festival Programs Announced

The itemized programs and the soloists are announced for the Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., this Summer. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will give nine concerts in the Music Shed at Tanglewood. The soloists will include Claudio Arra and Eugene List, pianists; Caro Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists. The concerts will be given on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons from July 25 to Aug. 11.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

[illegible]

Lenox, Mass., Music Festival Opens July 25

Boston Symphony Plans Nine Concerts; Elman, Morini Among Soloists

The Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky, as conductor will open its Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., July 25. The festival will end Aug. 11. Nine concerts will be given and soloists will be Claudio Arrau and Eugene List, pianists; Carol Brice, contraltor; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist; Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists.

The concerts will be given Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons.

The programs of the first week will be: July 25 — Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2; July 27—Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony, Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2 (Eugene List), Moussorgsky's Prelude to "Khovanstchina," and Wagner's Prelude to "The Mastersingers;" July 28—Mendelssohn's Italian" Symphony, Copland's Suite 'Appalachian Spring," Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 5.

She second week will be devoted to the music of Brahams, as follows: Aug. 1—Tragic Overture, Piano Concerto No. 1 (Claudio Arrau), Symphony No. 4; Aug. 3—Symphony No. 3, Rhapsody with contralto and male chorus (Carol Brice), Symphony No. 2; Aug. 4—Haydn Variations, double concerto (Erica Morini and Gregor Piatigorsky), Symphony No. 1.

For the third week: Aug. 8—Prokofieff's Symphony No. 5, Schumann's 'Cello Concerto (Gregor Piatigorsky), Wagner's Prelude to "Lohengrin," Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel;" Aug 10 — Schumann's American Festival Overture, Martinu's Violin Concerto (Mischa Elman), Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5; Aug. 11—Randall Thompson's "The Testament of Freedom", Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 (with Festival chorus, quartet of soloists to be announced).

This Clipping From
GLENS FALLS, N. Y.
POST STAR

MAY 17 1946

[illegible] Berkshire museum in Pitts- [illegible] will sponsor an exhibit, [illegible] of the Symphony Or- [illegible] from July 23 to Aug. 30. [illegible] will be open to the [illegible] will coincide with the [illegible] Festival under the di- [illegible] Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. [illegible] will be [illegible] Boston Symphony [illegible] include the [illegible] portrait of Major [illegible] founder of the orchestra. [illegible] the Corporation of [illegible] Pictures of [illegible] musicians and [illegible] with views of the [illegible] by the or- [illegible] and me- [illegible]

This Clipping From
NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD

MAY 17 1946
MAY 17

Hub Socialite Wins $1,000 Bet By Walking 28 Miles in 7 Hours

Boston, May 17 (UP)—The attractive socialite wife of a Boston banker was $1,000 richer today—the pay-off of a bet that she couldn't walk the 28 miles from Boston to Prides Crossing in less than seven hours.

Six weeks ago, Mrs. Orson Adams, Jr., of Beacon Hill accepted the wager from Boston society sportswoman Eleonora Sears. Since then she has trained by walking six miles daily.

Paced by Miss Sears in a chauffeur-driven automobile, Mrs. Adams set out at 9:30 a. m. yesterday. She traveled through Charlestown, Chelsea, Everett, Lynn, Salem, Beverly and Beverly Farms. Her rate roughly was about 14 minutes a mile or six hours and 39 minutes for the entire trip.

When the destination was reached, Miss Sears offered Mrs. Adams another $1,000 if she would turn around and walk back to Boston.

"But I told her I wouldn't walk the two miles more to her house in Prides Crossing for that money," Mrs. Adams explained.

Mrs. Adams, who has sung with the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Opera Comique in Paris under her professional name of Cleora Wood, disclaims any walking records for her hike. She said Miss Sears had made the round trip—about 56 miles—in nine hours and 20 min[illegible]s.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

MAY 1 8 1946

NEW GROUP'S CONCERT

American-Russian Works to Be Heard Here on May 27

Serge Koussevitzky, chairman of the recently organized American-Soviet Music Society, has announced that the society's first concert of contemporary American-Russian chamber music will be given at Times Hall on Monday, May 27, at 8:30 P. M.

Featured on the program will be the first New York performances of a Soviet work and an American work. These are the Shebalin Sonata for violin and viola (1945), to be played by Joseph E. and Lillian Fuchs, and Norman Dello Joio's "Rhumba," to be performed by Arthur Gold and Robert Fitzdale, duo pianists.

The Shostakovich Trio (1945) will be played by r. Fuchs, Vivian Rivkin and Nicholai Graudan. Muriel Smith, star of "Carmen Jones," will sing a group of contemporary American songs, with Leon Pommers at the piano. The concert will be open only to members of the society.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

MAY 1 8 1946

SOLOISTS ANNOUNCED IN TANGLEWOOD FETE

Claudio Arrau and Eugene List, pianists; Carol Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists, have been announced as soloists with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, for the nine concerts to be given in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., in the Berkshire Festival this summer. The concerts will take place on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons from July 25 through Aug. 11.

The programs for the first week will be as follows: July 25, Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2; July 27, Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony, Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2, with Mr. List, Mussorgsky's prelude to "Khovantchina" and Wagner's prelude to "Die Meistersinger"; July 28, Mendelssohn's "Italian Symphony," Copland's suite, "Appalachian Spring," and Shostakovitch's Fifth symphony.

The second week will be given over entirely to Brahms: Aug. 1, "Tragic Overture," Piano Concerto No. 1, with Mr. Arrau, and Symphony No. 4; Aug. 3, Third Symphony, Rhapsody with contralto and male chorus with Miss Brice, and Second Symphony; Aug. 4, Haydn Variations, Double Concerto, with Miss Morini and Mr. Piatigorsky, and First Symphony.

The programs for the third week follow: Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony, Schumann's 'Cello Concerto, with Mr. Piatigorsky, Wagner's Prelude to "Lohengrin," Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel"; Aug. 10, Schuman's "American Festival Overture," Martinu's Violin Concerto with Mr. Elman, and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony; Aug. 11, Randall Thompson's "The Testament of Freedom," and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, with Festival chorus and four soloists to be announced.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

MAY 18 1946

Berkshire Festival Soloists And Programs Are Announced

Soloists for the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood have been announced by the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. They will inc[illegible] Arrau and Eugene List, pianists; Carol Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsgy, 'cellist; Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists.

The nine concerts will be given on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons July 25 thru August 11.

The programs of the first week will be: July 25—Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2; July 27—Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony, Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2 (Eugene List), Moussorgsky's Prelude to "Khovanstchina," and Wagner's Prelude to "The Mastersingers;" July 28—Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony, Copland's Suite "Appalachian Spring," Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 5.

The second week will be devoted to the music of Brahms, as follows: August 1—Tragic Overture, Piano Concerto No. 1 (Claudio Arrau), Symphony No. 4; August 3—Symphony No. 3, Rhapsody with Contralto and male chorus (Carol Brice), Symphony No. 2; August 4—Haydn Variations, Double Concerto (Erica Morini and Gregor Piatigorsky) Symphony No. 1.

For the third week, August 8—Prokofieff's Symphony No. 5, Schumann's Cello Concerto (Gregor Piatigorsky), Wagner's Prelude to "Lohengrin," Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel"; August 10-Schumann's American Festival Overture, Martinu's Violin Concerto (Mischa Elman), Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5; August 11—Randall Thompson's "The Testament of Freedom Beethoven's Symphony No. [illegible] (with Festival chorus, quartet [illegible] soloists to be announced.)

SHARON, CONN
NEWS
4/18/46

The Berkshire Music Center Resumes At Tanglewood, July 1st

Music Students Enroll From Every State

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky To Conduct Last Three Weeks Of School Term

AT LENOX, MASS.

Applications Are Still Being Received For All Departments Of The Center

Students from every state in the Union and from foreign countries have applied to Symphony Hall in Boston for enrollment in the Berkshire Music Center, the school for music in performance founded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1940 and directed by Serge Koussevitzky. The Center is to be resumed at Tanglewood (in Lenox, Mass.) next July 1 and will continue through the Berkshire Festival, which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct through the last three of the six weeks' school term.

Four of the five departments (conducting, composing, orchestral playing and opera) are for advanced students. The fifth department, which includes choral singing, chamber music and orchestral playing, offers an opportunity for amateurs and those less advanced in musical training to benefit by singing or playing under the most expert guidance, and to partake in Festival and opera, as well as school performances.

The chorus for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, which is to conclude the Festival, will be prepared by Robert Shaw. Mr. Shaw will also train a smaller choral group for weekly school concerts. The choral part in Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes," which is to have its American premiere at Tanglewood, will be prepared by Hugh Ross. Mr. Ross will also have a smaller group to study and perform madrigals. The orchestra in this department will be under the direction of Richard Burgin, the concert master and associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Harmonic analysis, solfege, and country dancing will be available to this department, as well as forums, lectures, all Festival and other concerts at Tanglewood.

(Continued from Page One)

Applications are still being rereceived for all departments of the Center, including the class in conducting (under Dr. Koussevitzky), the advanced orchestra (under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, Stanley Chapple and Leonard Bernstein), the Opera Department (Dr. Herbert Graf, Boris Goldevsky, Richard Rychtarik), chamber music (Gregor Patigorsky). Bohuslav Martinu will divide with Aaron Copland the class in composition. The faculty will otherwise consist of thirty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, including all the principals.

Auditions for the advanced orchestra were held in New York Thursday afternoon, April 11, at Carnegie Hall, and in Boston Thursday morning, April 18, at Symphony Hall. The place and date for the final opera auditions will shortly be announced.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

MAY 1 8 1946

Berkshire Festival Lists Summer Plans

Programs and the soloists were announced today for the Berkshire Festival this summer at Lenox, Mass.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will give nine concerts in the Music Shed at Tanglewood. Soloists will include Claudio Arrau and Eugene List, pianists; Carol Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists. The concerts will be given on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, July 25 to Aug. 11.

Programs the first week will be: July 25, Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2; July 27, Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony, Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2 (Eugene List), Moussorgsky's Prelude to "Khovanstchina," and Wagner's Prelude to "The Mastersingers"; July 28, Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony, Copland's Suite "Appalachian Spring," Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 5.

The second week will be devoted to the music of Brahms, as follows: Aug. 1, Tragic Overture, Piano Concerto No. 1 (Claudio Arrau),, Symphony No. 4; Aug. 3, Symphony No. 3, Rhapsody with contralto and male chorus (Carol Brice), Symphony No. 2; Aug. 4, Haydn Variations, Double Concerto (Erica Morini and Gregor Piatigorsky), Symphony No. 1.

For the third week, Aug. 8, Prokofieff's Symphony No. 5, Schumann's 'Cello Concerto (Gregor Piatigorsky), Wagner's Prelude to "Lohengrin," Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel"; Aug. 10, Schumann's American Festival Overture, Matinu's Violin Concerto (Mischa Elman), Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5; Aug. 11, Randall Thompson's "The Testament of Freedom," Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 (with Festival chorus, quartet of soloists to be announced.)

This Clipping From
DULUTH, MINN.
NEWS TRIBUNE

MAY 1 9 1946

Recorded Music

"APPALACHIAN Spring" by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra is presented on three 12-inch Victor records housed in Record-Story Album M or DM 1046. "Appalachian Spring" was commissioned in 1944 by the octogenarian Boston music patron, Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, as a score for a ballet for the American woman dancer, Martha Graham.

Aaron Copeland turned out the score on an "O, Pioneer" motif which won the Pulitzer prize as the season's outstanding composition by an American. Serge Koussevitzky, who has so consistently championed modern music, has recorded Copeland's latest major composition in fine fashion.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

MAY 19 1946

Berkshire Festival's Programs Announced

Boston Symphony to Give Nine Concerts

The 1946 Berkshire Festival will consist of nine concerts by the Boston Symphony next July and August under Serge Koussevitzky's direction at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The program and soloists will be as follows:

Thursday night, July 25: Beethoven, "Eroica" Symphony; Sibelius, Symphony No. 2.

Saturday night, July 27: Beethoven, "Pastoral" Symphony; Rachmaninoff, Piano Concerto No. 2 (Eugene List); Moussorgsky, prelude to "Khovanstchina"; Wagner, Prelude to "Die Meistersinger."

Sunday afternoon, July 28: Mendelssohn, "Italian" Symphony; Copland, "Appalachian Spring" Suite; Shostakovitch, Symphony No. 5.

Thursday night, Aug. 1: Brahms, Tragic Overture, Piano Concerto No. 1 (Claudio Arrau); Symphony No. 4.

Saturday night, Aug. 3: Brahms, Symphony No. 3, Rhapsody with contralto (Carol Brice) and male chorus; Symphony No. 2.

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 4: Brahms: Haydn Variations; Double Concerto (Erica Morini and Gregor Piatigorsky); Symphony No. 1.

Thursday night, Aug. 8: Prokofieff, Symphony No. 5; Schumann, cello concerto (Gregor Piatigorsky); Wagner, Prelude to "Lohengrin"; Strauss, Till Eulenspiegel.

Saturday night, Aug. 10: Schumann, American Festival Overture; Martinu, Violin Concerto (Mischa Elman); Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 5.

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 11: Thompson, The Testament of Freedom; Beethoven, Symphony No. 9, with Festival Chorus (soloists to be announced later).

Information about tickets may be obtained from the Boston Symphony at Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass.

The festival, now one of the most important American summer musical events, began in 1934 with three concerts given by Philharmonic-Symphony musicians under the late Henry Hadley's direction on the Dan R. Hanna estate in Stockbridge. Three more concerts were given under Dr. Hadley in 1935. The Boston Symphony and Dr. Koussevitzky began their association with this festival in 1936, when three concerts were held on the "Holmwood" estate on the Lenox-Stockbridge border line. In 1937, the number of concerts was doubled, and the festival moved to Tanglewood, which had been donated for this purpose by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston. The Music Shed was opened in 1938. In 1940, the number of concerts was increased to nine, and Berkshire Music Center held its first session.

Owing to the war, the Boston Symphony did not come to Tanglewood, but a festival was presented by the Music Center's students under Dr. Koussevitzky. There were no concerts in 1943 and 1944, but Dr. Koussevitzky conducted a chamber orchestra in Bach and Mozart programs last summer.

This Clipping From TOPEKA, KAN.
CAPITAL

MAY 19 1946.

Modern Ballet Music On New Record Set

"Applachian Spring," is presented by Victor on three double-twelve-inch discs as an appropriately timed record-story album for May. The work by Aaron Copeland one of the leading contemporary composers is performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Sergi Koussevitsky.

Written as a score for a ballet by the leading American dancer, Martha Graham, the tone poem immediately won the Pulitzer prize. This recorded interpretation is delicately phrased and admirably performed and should put Copeland on par with some of the best by the French masters who originated the style.

One of the outstanding singles of the current list is the double disc devoted to two numbers performed by William Primrose, violist and Vernor de Tar, organist. They are Schubert's "Litany" and Bach's "Come Sweet Death." Primrose is playing his American-made viola, which many critics for months thought was the precious made by Antonio Amati.—Ki.

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD AMERICAN

MAY 19 1946

Beethoven's Ninth, With Chorus, in Thornden Concert Series

By E. V. W.

A SERIES of eight summer concerts is planned in Thornden Park, with the Syracuse Department of Parks and Syracuse University as joint sponsors. An orchestra of 70 pieces will play under the baton of Prof. Andre Polah of the School of Music, Syracuse University. There will be soloists at all concerts. The dates: Wednesday nights, June 19 and 26; July 3, 10, 17, 24, 31 and Aug. 7. Should it rain, the concert will be postponed until the following night. William S. O'Brien is business manager.

Prof. Polah

PROF. POLAH plans to play the Beethoven Ninth Symphony with Chorus. Those desiring to become members of the Chorus should communicate with Prof. Polah in the College of Fine Arts, Syracuse University, or with Mr. O'Brien, concert manager, 310 Montgomery st. Director Polah also plans to play at the same concert the Symphonic Chorale "Red Wing Prelude" from "Introduction to Spring" by Harold Packer, a Canadian composer of note. The words "The Door of Dawn" are by Wallace Havelock Robb.

PROGRAMS AND THE soloists are announced for the Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., this summer. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky, conductor, will give nine concerts in the Music Shed at Tanglewood. Soloists will include Claudio Arrau and Eugene List, pianists; Carol Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists. The concerts will be given on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons (July 25-Aug. 11). The programs of the first week will be: July 25, Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2; July 27, Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony, Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2 (Eugene List), Moussorgsky's Prelude to "Khovanstchina," and Wagner's Prelude to "The Mastersingers"; July 28, Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony, Copland's Suite "Appalachian Spring," Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 5.

Mr. List

N.Y TRIBUNE... MAY 19...

Berkshire Festival's Programs Announced

Boston Symphony to Give Nine Concerts

The 1946 Berkshire Festival will consist of nine concerts by the Boston Symphony next July and August under Serge Koussevitzky's direction at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The program and soloists will be as follows:

Thursday night, July 25: Beethoven, "Eroica" Symphony; Sibelius, Symphony No. 2.

Saturday night, July 27: Beethoven, "Pastoral" Symphony; Rachmaninoff, Piano Concerto No. 2 (Eugene List); Moussorgsky, prelude to "Khovanstchina"; Wagner, Prelude to "Die Meistersinger."

Sunday afternoon, July 28: Mendelssohn, "Italian" Symphony; Copland, "Appalachian Spring" Suite; Shostakovitch, Symphony No. 5.

Thursday night, Aug. 1: Brahms, Tragic Overture, Piano Concerto No. 1 (Claudio Arrau); Symphony No. 4.

Saturday night, Aug. 3: Brahms, Symphony No. 3, Rhapsody with contralto (Carol Brice) and male chorus; Symphony No. 2.

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 4: Brahms: Haydn Variations; Double Concerto (Erica Morini and Gregor Piatigorsky); Symphony No. 1.

Thursday night, Aug. 8: Prokofieff, Symphony No. 5; Schumann, cello concerto (Gregor Piatigorsky); Wagner, Prelude to "Lohengrin"; Strauss, Till Eulenspiegel.

Saturday night, Aug. 10: Schumann, American Festival Overture; Martinu, Violin Concerto (Mischa Elman); Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 5.

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 11: Thompson, The Testament of Freedom; Beethoven, Symphony No. 9, with Festival Chorus (soloists to be announced later).

Information about tickets may be obtained from the Boston Symphony at Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass.

The festival, now one of the most important American summer musical events, began in 1934 with three concerts given by Philharmonic-Symphony musicians under the late Henry Hadley's direction on the Dan R. Hanna estate in Stockbridge. Three more concerts were given under Dr. Hadley in 1935. The Boston Symphony and Dr. Koussevitzky began their association with this festival in 1936, when three concerts were held on the "Holmwood" estate on the Lenox-Stockbridge border line. In 1937, the number of concerts was doubled, and the festival moved to Tanglewood, which had been donated for this purpose by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston. The Music Shed was opened in 1938. In 1940, the number of concerts was increased to nine, and Berkshire Music Center held its first session.

Owing to the war, the Boston Symphony did not come to Tanglewood, but a festival was presented by the Music Center's students under Dr. Koussevitzky. There were no concerts in 1943 and 1944 but Dr. Koussevitzky conducted a chamber orchestra in Bach and Mozart programs last summer.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

MAY 20 1946

Berkshire Programs Are Listed

Boston Symphony and Soloists in July and August Concerts

The itemized programs and the soloists are announced for the Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Massachusetts, this summer. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will give nine concerts in the Music Shed at Tanglewood. The soloists will include Claudo Arran and Eugene List, pianists; Carol Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists. The concerts will be given on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, July 25 to August 11.

The program of the first week will be: July 15—Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2; July 27—Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony, Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2 (Eugene List), Moussorgsky's Prelude to "Khovanstchina", and Wagner's Prelude to "The Mastersingers"; July 28—Medelssohn's "Italian" Symphony, Copland's Suite "Appalachian Spring," Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 5.

The second week will be devoted to the music of Brahms, as follows: August 1—Tragic Overture, Piano Concerto No. 1 (Claudio Arrau), Symphony No. 4; August 3—Symphony No. 3, Rhapsody with Contralto and Male Chorus (Carol Brice), Symphony No. 2; August 4—Haydn Variations, Double Concerto (Erica Morini and Gregor Piatigorsky), Symphony No. 1.

For the third week, August 8 —Prokofieff's Symphony No. 5, Schumann's ('Cello Concerto) Gregor Piatigorsky), Wagner's P relude to "Lohengrin," Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel"; August 10—Schumann's American Festival Overture, Martinu's Violin Concerto (Mischa Elman), Tchaiskovsky's Symphony No. 5; August 11—Randall Thompson's "The Testament of Freedom," Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 (with Festival chorus, quartet of soloists to be announced).

This Clipping From
TUCSON, ARIZ.
ARIZONA STAR

MAY 19 1946

Record Turntable

By ELIZABETH SHAW

It is futile but tempting to speculate on how the old composers would feel if they could hear their music played by the great modern orchestras, with all the powers of sound engineering and reproduction for enhancement. There is one school which holds that the oldsters liked what they had and might recoil from contemporary musical overgrowth of sound and effect. Others feel that Bach, for example, would have liked nothing better than carte blanche with the Radio City pipe organ. The belief here is that in some marvelously prophetic fashion, he wrote his great music for greater vehicles than existed in his time.

Of course no one can say. But considering the broad humanity of the great, it seems safe to assume that almost any of them would have been curious and like to tinker with the musical facilities of our luxurious century. From here it is a short distance to guessing that these men would have employed their new equipment to incomparably magnificent ends, the great in any time being the masters and manipulators of their material.

All this leads up to the comment we read recently within the album covers of Victor's new "Unfinished Symphony" recording (D-1939). The commentator allows as how Schubert would have "been overjoyed to hear his lovely lines rendered in this fashion"—the fashion of the Boston Symphony, under Serge Koussevitsky.

This indeed is a soaring hypothesis. In the first place Franz Schubert did not live to hear his Eighth Symphony played at all. With frequent playing, whatever concept he had formed of the music might have changed greatly. Sometimes we can roughly gauge a composer's probable reaction to a performance by reading what he thought of the performance in his own day. Here we have nothing but the barrenness of score notation to tell us what Schubert wanted and nothing really to tell us that he could have sustained affection for the B Minor Symphony at all. After all, the work was abandoned, for reasons we shall probably never learn.

Nothwithstanding, the people have taken this work to heart and loved it for a long time. Many conductors have brooded over its romantic sweetness and many interpretations of it have been recorded. Whether or not Koussevitsky in this recent version reads it as Schubert would have liked it is not apparent, but he does seem literally faithful to the score. Nevertheless a certain fire of lyricism that has been heard to run through the melodies of the "Unfinished" are strangely absent in the new recording. This is a matter of no small astonishment to many of us, who if we were composers, might like to think of the luminous, customarily exciting works through the distant centuries.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

MAY 19 1946

Berkshire Festival Programs, Soloists

The itemized programs and the soloists are announced for the Berkshire festival at Lenox this summer. The Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will give nine concerts in the Music shed at Tanglewood. The soloists will include Claudio Arrau and Eugene List, pianists; Carol Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists. The concerts will be given Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons (July 25-August 11).

The programs of the first week will be: July 25—Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius "Symphony No. 2"; July 27—Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony, Rachmaninoff's "Piano Concerto No. 2" (Eugene List), Moussorgsky's prelude to "Khovanstchina," and Wagner's prelude to "The Mastersingers"; July 28—Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony, Copland's suite "Appalachian Spring," Shostakovitch's "Symphony No. 5."

The second week will be devoted to the music of Brahms, as follows: August 1—"Tragic Overture," "Piano Concerto No. 1" (Claudio Arrau) "Symphony No. 4"; August 3—"Symphony No. 3," "Rhapsody" with contralto and male chorus (Carol Brice), "Symphony No. 2"; August 4—Haydn "Variations," "Double Concerto" (Erica Morini and Gregor Piatigorsky), "Symphony No. 1."

For the third week, August 8—Prokofieff's "Symphony No. 5," Schumann's "Cello Concerto" (Gregor Piatigorsky), Wagner's prelude to "Lohengrin," Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel"; August 10—Schumann's "American Festival Overture," Martinu's "Violin Concerto" (Mischa Elman), Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. "; August 11—Randall Thompson's "The Testament of Freedom," Beethoven's "Symphony No. 9" (with Festival chorus, quartet of soloists to be announced).

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN

MAY 19

Philharmonic Selects 1946-47 Players

29 Veterans Earn Orchestra Chairs In Auditions

By NORMAN NADEL

Twenty-nine war veterans have been engaged to fill permanent chairs in the Columbus Philharmonic Orchestra, Izler Solomon conducting for its first professional season in November. Nineteen of these veterans were with the Philharmonic before they were called into service and the balance have gained their experience with other orchestras. Some of them being enrolled now as students at Ohio State or Capital universities.

Fifty-three members of the 75-piece orchestra next season are regular players in the orchestra, many of whom have been with the local symphony since its inception. Most of these 53 musicians are being compensated for the first time on a professional scale, a move made possible by the recent expansion to a full-time orchestra. Some of the regular members of the orchestra who were offered contracts found it impossible to accept the heavier schedule of concerts because of regular year-'round employment in other work. Wherever possible, Solomon gave preference to local musicians, several who will be playing with the orchestra for the first time.

The 1946-47 orchestra personnel will include the following:

Helen Aronoff, viola; Catherine Barnhart, cello; Dale Bechtel, violin; Winifred Bechtel, violin; Lois Behrle, violin; Melvin H. Berger, viola; Samuel Boghossian, viola; Alma Boreman, violin; Benson Breitman, violin; James R. Brightwell, trombone; Fred Brobst, flute; Mila Buchsbaum, violin; Robert Buchsbaum, violin; George D. Campbell, bassoon; Leopold Cichocki, french horn; William Cramer, trombone; Rosemary Curtin, bassoon; Clivio Del Signora, oboe and English horn; Frances Dick, violin.

Lowell Drum, violin; Fred Dubois, violin; James Franck, trombone; John Frey, trumpet; John C. Garvey, viola; Morton Goldberg, violin; George Hardesty, concert master; Harriet Heine, violin; Glenn Heinlen, trombone; David Hite, clarinet and bass clarinet; Elaine Hoffhines, violin; David Horine, bass.

Esther Isenstadt, bass; John Jusek, violin; Dorothy Kaplan, French horn; Harold Katz, violin; Imogene Holcomb King, flute; Robert King, violin; Frank Kinnan, clarinet and E flat clarinet; John Kline, violin; Mary Lane, viola; Theron McClure, bass; Wilbur McKinstry, cello; Mario Mancinelli, violin; Madeleine Milner, cello.

Harold Mueller, flute and piccolo; Shirley Myerovich, cello; Karel Neumann, cello; Nelle Noble, violin; Mary Jane Parkinson, bass; William Phillips, cello; Eva Polokoff, violin; Martha Radike, bass; Howard N. Rose, percussion.

True Sachrison, cello; D. L. Scappucci, viola; Harry Schmidt, clarinet; William H. Sims, viola; Jack C. Smith, bass; Marguerite Smith, oboe; Loren Sobel, violin; Lois Stahl, viola; Mary Stahl, violin; Marjorie Sutter, harpist; Wilbur Turlesky, violin.

Carolyn Utz, bass; Jerry Van Velson, percussion; Donald Volpe, trumpet; Henrietta Voyvodich, cello; Walter B. Voyvodich, tuba; David Wakser, trumpet; William Wendelgelst, violin; Rita Will, violin; Milan Yancich, French horn; Lillian Yenkin, violin, and Gene Garner, librarian.

During the month of May, the Women's Committee is conducting an intensive campaign for the sale of season tickets. It is a necessary part of the expansion of the Philharmonic into a full-time orchestra that the entire capacity of Memorial Hall be sold out and the women's group has this achievement set for June 1.

The Philharmonic box office is located on the second floor of Heaton's, 50 N. High-st, MA. 4754.

CHARLES L. WAGNER, whose opera companies have toured this country for six seasons, is offering a prize of $1000 for an opera based on American theme.

Mr. Wagner's company of 70 will present "Il Trovatore" Thursday, Oct. 10, at Memorial Hall as the opening attraction on the Carl Summers' 1946-1947 series.

Mr. Wagner and his associate, Edward W. Snowden, will produce the winning work and give it at least 25 performances in leading cities and college communities.

An opera in English is sought which could be given with such works as "Pagliacci" or "Cavalleria Rusticana," therefore the performance time is limited to 75 minutes. The proposed opera should be a production easily transportable. Exclusive rights to all productions for the first season shall belong to Mr. Wagner and Mr. Snowden at royalties to be mutually agreed upon.

A committee made up of five prominent musicians and two laymen will judge the works entered and their decisions will be final.

The manuscripts will be examined first by Fritz Mahler, conductor, and Desire Defrere, stage director of Mr. Wagner's opera staff, who will consider their possibilities for practical use on the road. All scores should be submitted to Mr. Wagner's office at 511 Fifth-av, New York, by Oct. 1, 1947, for production in the fall of 1948.

MEMBERSHIP headquarters for the Women's Music Club Chamber Music Society will open tomorrow at the Deshler-Wallick Hotel and will be open from 10 a. m. to 4 p. m. daily through May 31. Prospective members are urged by the club to make their reservations early for next season's four chamber music events, in order to get the most satisfactory seats.

OTTERBEIN COLLEGE will present its orchestra in concert at 3 p. m. today in the college chapel. Mabel Dunn Hopkins will conduct. Glenn Grant Grabill will assist at the organ, and James Montgomery, baritone, will be soloist. The public is invited to attend.

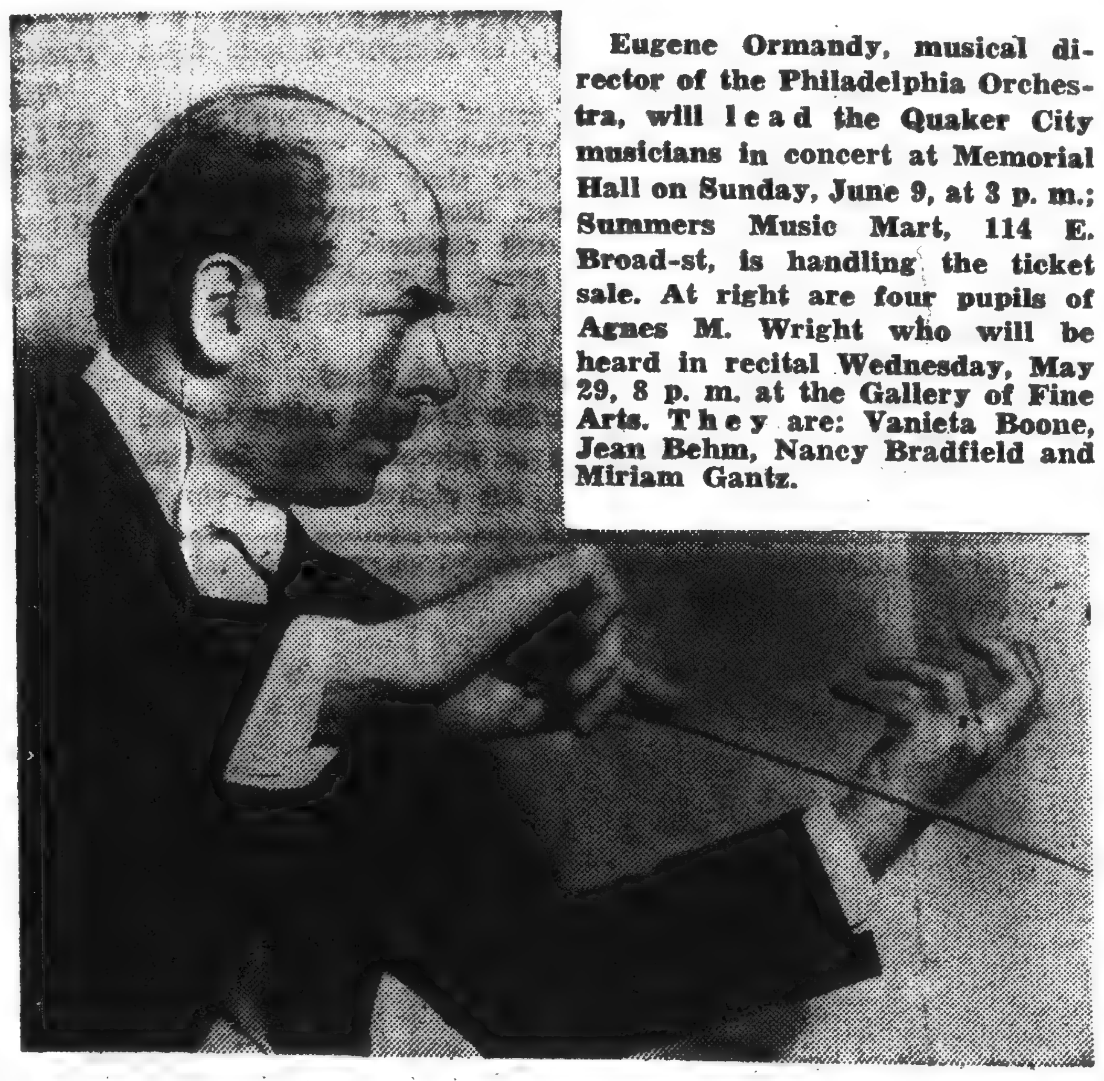
SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY has planed the program for the Berkshire Festival to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this summer under his direction at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. There will be nine concerts over a period of three weeks on Thursday evenings, Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons.

The three programs of the first week (July 25, 27, 28) will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 (Eroica), a symphony of Haydn, Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony, Sibelius' Second Symphony, Rachmaninoff's Second Piano Concerto, Wagner's Prelude to "Die Meistersinger," Stravinsky's Petrouchka Suite, Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony, and Copland's Suite, "Appalachian Spring."

The second week (Aug. 1, 3, 4) will consist of a Brahms Festival, the programs to include the Tragic Overture, all four symphonies, the First Piano Concerto, the Haydn the Double Concerto for Violin and 'Cello.

The third week (Aug. 8, 10, 11)—Berlioz' Fantastic Symphony, Schumann's 'Cello Concerto, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegal," Moussorgsky's "Khovanstchina" Prelude, Prokofieff's Fifth Symphony, Martinu's Violin Concerto, Thompson's "Testament of Freedom," and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Subscription inquiries should be addressed to Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.



Eugene Ormandy, musical director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will lead the Quaker City musicians in concert at Memorial Hall on Sunday, June 9, at 3 p. m.; Summers Music Mart, 114 E. Broad-st, is handling the ticket sale. At right are four pupils of Agnes M. Wright who will be heard in recital Wednesday, May 29, 8 p. m. at the Gallery of Fine Arts. They are: Vanieta Boone, Jean Behm, Nancy Bradfield and Miriam Gantz.

RECENT RECORDS

By JEROME D. BOHM

COLUMBIA'S May list includes an album containing Liszt's Sonata Quasi Fantasia, "Apres une lecture de Dante," Concert Etude No. 2 in F minor, "Funerailles," "Liebestraum" No. 3 in A flat and fifteenth Hungarian rhapsody, "Rakoczy March," played by the pianist Gyorgy Sandor.

This is a rather large dose of Liszt to listen to at a single sitting, especially since most of it, with the exception of the F minor Etude, which because of its Chopinesque qualities is still viable, is representative of the composer at his worst in its admixture of bombast and sentimentality. Mr. Sandor does little to make this music more palatable; for despite his formidable technique, his interpretations lack the sensitivity and romantic glow essential to a convincing revelation of these works, in two of which, the "Dante" sonata and "Rakoczy March" he has made welcome cuts. The tone of the piano has been well recorded and there is a gratifying absence for the most part of the rattlings and buzzings which bedevil so many piano recordings.

Other Columbia Sets

The bridal chamber scene from Wagner's "Lohengrin" is sung by Helen Traubel and Kurt Baum accompanied by the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra under Artur Rodzinski's direction. This is the most faithful transference to the disks of Miss Traubel's voice thus far by Columbia and she invests Elsa's music with considerable tonal loveliness and telling expressivity. Mr. Baum's delivery of Lohengrin's music too is tonally persuasive and ardent. There are two cuts, one of considerable length in Lohengrin's part and a shorter one in Elsa's. Mr. Rodzinski and his musicians provide a satisfactory accompaniment and the recording is good.

Brahms's violin concerto is set forth by Joseph Szigeti with the assistance of the Philadelphia Orchestra conducted by Eugene Ormandy. The Hungarian violinist's account of the solo part is characterized by his technical excellence and musical perceptiveness. The balance between the solo instrument and the orchestral accompaniment has been better preserved on the whole than in some of the earlier disk versions of this work, but whereas the tendency in other recordings has been to give undue importance to the soloist's performance, there are moments in the present recording, such as in the closing measures of the finale, where Mr. Szigeti's violin sounds too weak to be effective. The surfaces are smooth.

Dvorak's "New World" Symphony is admirably set forth by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Mr. Ormandy's leadership, excepting for an out-of-tune chord at the conclusion of the slow movement. The recording is otherwise excellent.

Beethoven's Sonata Op. 30, No. 2 in C minor for violin and piano is accorded a carefully proportioned, understanding interpretation by Isaac Stern and Alexander Zakin. Satisfactory recording.

Victor May Sets

Bach's Cantata No. 78, "Jesus, Thou My Wearied Spirit," is performed by the Bach Choir of Bethlehem under the direction of Ifor Jones, with Lucius Metz, tenor, and Mack Harrell, barytone, as soloists. Only the opening chorus of the cantata is first-rate Bach. The ensuing duet for soprano and alto (for some inexplicable reason sung here by the chorus) is pretty trivial stuff, and neither the tenor nor barytone arias is the best Bach. The choir sings solidly, and Mr. Harrell's fine, flawlessly produced voice lends distinction to his delivery of the barytone aria. Mr. Metz's, tightly emitted tones are considerably less pleasurable to listen to in the tenor aria. One wonders why the entire English translation in which the cantata is sung was not published along with the less essential program notes printed on the inside cover of the album. The recording is mechanically regarded a good one.

A selection of Bach's organ works including the Passacaglia, Choral Prelude, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott," the "Fanfare" Fugue in C, the "Little" G minor Fugue and the player's arrangement of "Schafe koennen sicher weiden" are set forth ably by E. Power Biggs, although much of the music, especially in rapid passages, sounds jumbled in the recording.

Copland's "Appalachian Spring" Suite, culled from his score for Martha Graham's ballet as listened to in the superb recording by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky's direction, renews the conviction that it is one of the composer's most enduring products.

The duo-pianists Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff play a set of three romantic works—Schumann's rather feeble Andante and Variations, Op. 46; Chopin's attractive Rondo, Op. 43, and Mendelssohn's superficial "Allegro Brilliant" with aplomb. Some of the surfaces are noisy.

This reviewer finds six polkas by Johann Strauss as performed by the Boston "Pops" Orchestra directed by Arthur Fiedler more than a little trying to listen to successively.

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

MAY 19 1946

On the Record

By Claudia Cassidy

Aaron Copland

It is no news to the balletomane that the best dance music needs no dancing, but only recently have the modern dancers achieved major new scores, possibly because they could not afford the luxury of commissioning them or of engaging orchestras to play them. Martha Graham has been financially more fortunate of late, and two of her more attractive recent scores are Aaron Copland's "Appalachian Spring" and Paul Hindemith's "Herodiade," as effective in the concert hall as in her superbly theatrical productions.

The Copland score in particular won such widespread approval, including a Pulitzer award, it is no surprise, merely a delight, to find it eloquently recorded by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston orchestra [Victor M-1046; three 12 inch records] and encased in an illustrated album well supplied with material about the composer, the dancer, and the ballet. Like Copland's music for "Billy the Kid" and the later score for "Rodeo," "Appalachian Spring" has the genuine texture of early Americana—the sound of far places, a sense of distances peculiar to pioneer life, a quality [ideal for Graham] of courageous humanity pitted against infinity, and a way of incorporating folk tunes so that they seem indigenous. But its special charm is its spontaneous freshness, which only a good orchestra can hope to capture.

A strong and vital but considerably less than profound performance of Beethoven's Sonata in C minor, Opus 30, No. 2, has just been recorded by Isaac Stern, violinist, with Alexander Zakin at the piano [Columbia M-604; four 12 inch records]. Mr. Stern has a valiant tone, a feeling for the dramatic, and some of the sweep and fire that first made Nathan Milstein famous, and Mr. Zakin is an accomplished accompanist. Together they make the sonata arresting listening without revealing why it so often is considered the supreme example of Beethoven's art in that category. The final record side holds a spirited performance of Handel's Allegro from the Sonata in D major.

Many a fairy story has disturbingly adult overtones and one of them is Hans Christian Andersen's story of the Chinese emperor who sickened and almost died for want of his nightingale, once Chief Court Musician, which had been permitted to fly away in neglect when the Japanese emperor sent his gift of a jeweled songbird that lasted just as long as its mechanical spring. Igor Stravinsky was fascinated by the tale and composed music for it, first in opera form, then for ballet and orchestra. The symphonic poem, "The Song of the Nightingale," recorded by Eugene Goossens and the Cincinnati orchestra [Victor M-1041; three 12 inch records], includes what the composer called the "baroque luxury" of the Chinese court and the scene in the emperor's bedchamber. The performance is better in the jeweled glitter of the court than in capturing the purity of the flute as the real nightingale by contrast with the clarinet song of its artificial rival. This music fills five record sides, and the sixth is taken over by an echoing performance of Chabrier's "Joyous March."

BOSTON HERALD

THE ROVING REPORTER

By Rudolph Elie, Jr.

Pops Goers More Ready to Share Their Fun
Concerts Best Bet to Back Up the Psychologists

If what the psychologists tell us is true—and even if it isn't, it's interesting—about having to have 32 or more pleasant reactions a day to make that day count as a good one, then you can depend on the Pops to supply the whole batch at one whack if it's necessary. For, of all the things to do around town in the evening at this time of year, there's no questioning that going to the Pops is tops.

They're not quite the same as they were the last time I went to them, of course. There weren't any uniforms to speak of, the other night, no "Star Spangled Banner" (and I rather missed it, too), no "From the Halls of Montezuma" or "Blue Sky Yonder," no British or French sailors, no crowds of soldiers and sailors waiting in the lobbies, no Red Cross girls or Gray Ladies, no Army or Navy nurses.

But it is no hardship to part with all that. It was thrilling and exciting then, but somehow it always made you feel that your only excuse for being there was to find a moment's relaxation from your own insignificant war work. And the Pops cannot be the Pops if you have to justify yourself being there.

The other night it was as if there had been no war interlude at all. They seem gayer, more informal, more fun than they had ever seemed before. They've been trending that way ever since Arthur Fiedler took over 15 or 16 years ago, and now they seem to have taken on just the proper note of camaraderie without familiarity, friendliness without affectation, fellow-feeling without chumminess, glamour without ostentation. People somehow seem to like people more than they used to, or perhaps it's just that they understand one another better than they used to, or maybe it's just my imagination, but the Pops do seem to bring out the best in people.

Take the way they listen to the music, for instance. It's hard to say why, but somehow Pops-goers instinctively give each piece on the program the sort of hearing suited to the character of the piece. If it's a joke—and this year the biggest joke is "Jingles All the Way," a clever musical parody of radio's singing commercials—then everybody dies laughing. If it's an "Oklahoma" medley, everybody hums. If it's a waltz, everybody lilts a little. If it's The Slaying of the Mosquito, everybody cheers. And if it's one of the more serious things that crops up on one of Mr. Fiedler's wide-ranging program, or a serious young artist making his first flight before so vast an audience, everybody listens respectfully and appreciatively—yet doesn't stuffily shush someone who pops a champagne bottle at the wrong time.

Or take the way people at the Pops look over the latecomers (or rather those who come later than they) as they march down the aisles, their heels making a staccato clatter on the floor. Or the way they examine, with child-like curiosity, the goings-on at a nearby table as others arrive and try to figure out who will sit where. Even these things are done with a certain air at the Pops; the remarks made are rather more funny than mean, more marveling than critical, more commiserating than contemptuous.

Of course it may be merely because the Pops nowadays seldom sell tickets or tables to the general catch-as-catch-can public. Instead, tickets are sold in blocks to schools, charities, business institutions and so on, which, in turn, sell them to friends or well-wishers. Thus an average Pops audience these days consists largely of people or groups of people who, if they don't actually know each other, are at least held loosely together by a bond of mutual interest.

But I like to think it is because the audiences are a little more civilized these days, a little more ready to share their fun with others, a little more ready to recognize that we're all in the same boat together and that we all have the same basic needs and hopes. Also that they're more willing to be tolerant of little thoughtlessnesses in others, and less hasty to condemn a point of view or a taste different from our own. And I like to think that music more than any other agency, is a catalyst for this happy occurrence.

Yet, whatever the reason, there's no denying that the phenomenon of 2500 or so persons sitting around listening to good music, drinking colored ice water or beer, eating ice cream sundaes or pretzels, looking naively at other peoples' hairdos or whatever it is they look at when just looking, and conveying all the time the impression that everybody loves everybody, happens at the Pops as it seldom happens elsewhere.

Of course there's no sense in telling you all this because you'll probably think you'd better rush up and get a ticket or two and see for yourself. And there'd be nothing wrong with that—except that they haven't got any.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST

MAY 20 1946

He Smiles on the Podium

Close-up
May 20, 1946

By MARY BRAGGIOTTI

Robert Zeller, 27-year-old conductor who recently wound up a cross-country tour and Metropolitan Opera House season with the Ballet Theatre, often does something unusual right in the middle of conducting a major orchestra work: he smiles. The members of the orchestra like him for it—and warn him never to get over it.

ROBERT ZELLER—50 cents a rehearsal chorus boy.

Post Photo by Carten

"I don't believe in making music into a noisome drudgery," explained Zeller over a dish of fancy eggs at Longchamps the other day. (He's always trying to find a new way to prepare eggs). "Here's why a lot of conductors get grim: somewhere along the way they come across a louse or two. They become cynical. They begin to think all musicians are like that — and that's the beginning of the battle between orchestra and conductor.

"Orchestras respect a conductor for his musicianship—not for some sort of authority that has nothing to do with music. Anyway," he added, "it would be folly on my part to try to be a disciplinarian at my age."

Bob Zeller looks even younger than he is. This new member of the small group of amazingly youthful big-time conductors who are appearing on America's musical horizon is slim, agile, not very tall, with dark, curly hair, aquiline features, enthusiastic eyes—and that smile.

Became a Life Saver At Age of 20

He's an expert swimmer. At sixteen, in the Adirondacks, he won an inter-county lightweight swimming championship, and became a registered life saver at 20, a year before you're supposed to. Off the podium, he seems more like the captain of the college swimming team than a serious musician—even to his penchant for wide-striped ties. (At rehearsals he wears what he calls a "thousand-miler red shirt"; for "contract meetings" he outfits himself decorously in white shirt, chalk-striped blue suit and solid blue tie.)

But Zeller didn't go to college. He spent that time getting a musical education. He and his younger brother (now in the plastics business) were born here, in the West 70s, of American-born parents flavored with Hungarian, French, Russian and Connecticut.

At four, Bob is told, he clambered up onto the band stand at a summer resort and started to conduct the band. At nine, he remembers vividly, he earned his first money—50 cents a rehearsal—singing in the boys' chorus of the Metropolitan Opera Co. "Carmen" was his first vehicle.

He didn't consider music from a serious angle, however, until his voice began to change. At high school, his soprano gone, he took up other instruments—brasses in particular—to compensate. He conducted the band and made arrangements for the orchestra. He never went in for boogie-woogie and still doesn't, except for such jazz-like passages as he comes across in his friend, Leonard Bernstein's, "Fancy Free," Morton Gould's "Interplay," and other serious modern works.

Wins Scholarship To Juilliard School

For a year after graduation from high school, he served as assistant to Hugh Ross, leader of the Schola Cantorum, then won a scholarship to the Juilliard School. After completing the undergraduate and post-graduate courses at Juilliard in two years—an unusually short time—he was awarded a fellowship in conducting at the graduate school. His teacher was the late Albert Stoessel.

Zeller feels he has been lucky about teachers. During the summer between his two seasons at the graduate school he was one of the very few budding conductors chosen by Koussevitzky to study with him at the Berkshire Music Festival. Another summer he studied with Monteux at his school in Maine. Ross, Stoessel, Koussevitzky and Monteux have all had a great influence on his life, musically and otherwise, he says.

But Zeller is a musician who believes in "basic, grinding experience," besides academic study.

"You can't expect to go to school and be immersed in some extraordinary solution and come out a finished musician," he stated.

He started getting his "basic, grinding experience" in October, 1942, just after leaving Juilliard, when he took the American Symphony Orchestra on a tour of Army camps and hospitals for the USO. It was the first symphony to make such a tour.

Then he proceeded on a coast-to-coast tour as conductor of a Shubert production of "The Merry Widow." A season of light opera in Newark prepared him further for the "big break."

It was on the recommendation of Koussevitzky, Monteux and several top-drawer composers that he was invited to take up conducting duties with the Ballet Theatre in San Francisco last January. Since then he has learned 18 ballets and conducted 160 performances from coast to coast—having seen only a few ballets, and very casually, before.

Bob Zeller lives with his mother in a New York apartment. He was once engaged to be married, but one of his long tours broke up the engagement. He claims to have no prospects at the moment.

"It's a risky thing to talk about marriage until you're settled in life," he said solemnly.

In the meantime, he reads Thomas Mann and an occasional detective story, goes to the theatre as often as he can, and seldom to the movies. He enjoys a glass of wine or beer with his meals, drinks a cocktail now and then, and "cafe diable" as a pick-me-up. He thinks "good living and good eating are important."

"Interpretive art, such as musicianship, is, he believes, an emotional thing.

"If an audience can't get a couple of goose bumps out of a piece of music," he said, "they go away with a feeling of frustration. In order to re-create beautiful music, you have to have the emotional basis. Art is a very warm and vital thing."

[135]

This Clipping
N. ADAMS, M
TRANSCRIP

MAY 21

oussevitzky
Summer Co

ymphonic Festiva Announce

LENOX

rogram Dates Se
25, 27 and 28;
3 and 4; and Au
and 11.

Soloists at the Berks onic festival in Lenox r will include Claudio gene List, pianists; C
ntralto; Gregor Piatig
, and Mischa Elman rini, violinists. The B ony orchestra, under S
itzky, will give nine c
The program of the l be: July 25, Beethov Symphony and Sibe
ony No. 2; July 27,
astoral" Symphony,
ff's Piano Concerto No t), Mousorgsky's hovanstchina," and lude to "The Mast
y 28. Mendelssohn's mphony, Copland's
achian Spring," Shos
mphony No. 5.
The second week will
he music of Brahms,
1, Tragic Overture,
o No. 1 (Claudio Ar
ny No. 4; Aug. 3, Sym Rhapsody with Con
e Chorus (Carol Br ny No. 2; Aug. 4, Hay s, Double Concert rini and Gregor P
mphony No. 1.
or the third week: A
eff's Symphony No.
nn's Cello concert tigorsky), Wagner's hengrin," Strauss's egal;" Aug. 10,
erican Festival Over
's Violin Concerto
), Tchaikovsky's Sym
Aug. 11, Randall
e Testament of thoven's Symphony
tival chorus, quartet
e announced).

This Clipping
WINNEMUCCA,
HUMBOLDT ST
SILVER STA

MAY 22 194

Programs and solo n announced for r's Berkshire Festi
Mass., during Jul
The Boston Symp ra, Serge Koussevi will give nine con
sic shed at Tangle
Soloists will inclu
t and Claudio Arr ol Brice, contral
tigorsky, 'cellist
nan and Erica M
Composers repr
Beethoven, Ra ussorgsky, Wag
hn, Aaron Coplan umann, Richard slov Martinu ndall Thompson programs of three weeks w irely to the wo

This Clipping
JERSEY CIT
JERSEY JO

MAY 2 1

MUSIC ALBUMS
enox, Mass., which awthorne named a ood Tales." It w axed Dr. Kou erformance of the ere is an album of

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

[illegible]

Koussevitzky Plans 9 Summer Concerts

Symphonic Festival Soloists Announced

LENOX

Program Dates Set as July 25, 27 and 28; Aug. 1, 3 and 4; and Aug. 8, 10 and 11.

Soloists at the Berkshire Symphonic festival in Lenox this summer will include Claudio Arrau and Eugene List, pianists; Carol Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists. The Boston Symphony orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, will give nine concerts.

The program of the first week will be: July 25, Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2; July 27, Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony, Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2 (Eugene List), Mousorgsky's Prelude to "Khovanstchina" and Wagner's Prelude to "The Mastersingers;" July 28 Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony, Copland's Suite "Appalachian Spring," Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 5.

The second week will be devoted to the music of Brahms, as follows: Aug. 1, Tragic Overture, Piano Concerto No. 1 (Claudio Arrau), Symphony No. 4; Aug. 3, Symphony No. 3 Rhapsody with Contralto and Male Chorus (Carol Brice), Symphony No. 2; Aug. 4, Haydn Variations, Double Concerto (Enrica Morini and Gregor Piatigorsky), Symphony No. 1.

For the third week: Aug. 8, Prokofieff's Symphony No. 5, Schumann's Cello concerto (Gregor Piatigorsky), Wagner's Prelude to "Lohengrin," Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel;" Aug. 10, Schumann's American Festival Overture, Martinu's Violin Concerto (Mischa Elman) Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5; Aug. 11, Randall Thompson's "The Testament of Freedom," Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 (with Festival chorus, quartet of soloists to be announced).

This Clipping From
WINNEMUCCA, NEV.
HUMBOLDT STAR &
SILVER STATE

MAY 22 1946

* * *

Programs and soloists have been announced for this summer's Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., during July and August. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Konssevitzy, conductor will give nine concerts in the music shed at Tanglewood.

Soloists will include Eugene List and Claudio Arrau, pianists; Carol Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist and Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists. Composers represented will be Beethoven, Rachmaninoff, Moussorgsky, Wagner, Mendelssohn, Aaron Copland, Prokifieff, Schumann, Richard Strauss, Bohuslov Martinu Tchaikovsky Randall Thompson and Brahms. The programs of the second of the three weeks will be devoted entirely to the works of Brahms.

This Clipping From
JERSEY CITY, N. J.
JERSEY JOURNAL

MUSIC ALBUMS:—Tanglewood is a pleasant estate on a lake near Lenox, Mass., which first made history when the novelist Nathaniel Hawthorne named a collection of his stories, written there, "Tanglewood Tales." It was here, also, that Victor's recording engineers waxed Dr. Koussevitsky's and the Boston Symphony's much-admired performance of the J. S. Bach "Brandenburg Concertos No. 3 and 4." Here is an album of classical music which no person can afford not to own. . . .

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS

MAY 23 1946

Young Pianist Is Pops Soloist

Tomorrow night, 17-year-old Cynthia Brown, daughter of Mrs. Osborne E. Browne of 801 Chestnut Street, Waban, the former Agnes Dowd of this city, will realize one of her life's ambitions as a musician when she appears as piano soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler, conducting, at a Pops Night, sponsored by the American Newspaper Guild. She will play the first movement of Rubinstein's Fourth Piano Concerto in D Minor.

CYNTHIA BROWN

Her father, who died in January, was for many years promotion manager of the Boston Record-American and a member of the Newspaper Guild.

One of the youngest soloists to ever appear at the Pops, Miss Brown has won highest honors four times in the National Federation of Music Festivals and because of her talent, has attended the famous Norfleet Trio Camp in Peterborough, N. H. four Summers on scholarships.

An honor student at Brimmer and May School, Boston, from which she will be graduated on June 7, she has been awarded a scholarship to Smith College by the Newton Smith College Club. She plans to major in music.

Her maternal grandparents were Mr. and Mrs. James W. Dowd, formerly of this city.

Several relatives and friends from this city and New Bedford plan to attend the concert.

This Clipping From
CLIFTON FORGE, VA.
REVIEW

MAY 25 1946

Programs and soloists have been announced for this summer's Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., during July and August. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will give nine concerts in the music shed at Tanglewood.

Soloists will include Eugene List and Claudio Arrau, pianists; Carol Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists. Composers represented will be Beethoven, Rachmaninoff, Moussorgsky, Wagner, Mendelssohn, Aaron Copland, Prokofieff, Schuman, Richard Strauss, Bohuslav Martinu, Tchaikovsy, Randall Thompson and Brahms. The programs of the second of the three weeks will be devoted entirely to the works of Brahms.

LEWISBURG, PA
JOURNAL
5/23/46

B.U. ARTIST COURSE TO PRESENT CONCERT PIANIST NEXT THURS.

Miss Constance Keene, young American pianist who will appear as Bucknell's last Artist Course presentation this year on Thursday, May 30, made her debut as a Naumburg Foundaton award winner in New York's Town Hall two years ago.

A native of Brooklyn, N. Y., the 23-year-old artist is making her first professional concert tour during 1945-1946. Following her debut, Miss Keene gave over 100 concerts for USO-Camp Shows in the East. She has made numerous appearances over both the CBS and NBC networks.

In 1941 she received from orchestra conductor Serge Koussevitzky a scholarship to study at the Berkshire Music Center under Gregor Piatigorsky.

Miss Keene was signed by Arthur Judson, president of Columbia Concerts, in 1945 and launched her first country-wide tour as soloist with the Boston Symphony under Koussevitsky at the Berkshire Festival.

The young pianist will present her Bucknell concert Thursday evening at 8:15 o'clock in the Lewisburg High School auditorium.

This Clipping From
LATROBE, PA.
BULLETIN

MAY 24 1946

Programs and soloists have been announced for this summer's Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., during July and August. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevisky, conductor, will give nine concerts in the music shed at Tanglewood.

Soloists will include Eugene List and Claudio Arrau, pianists; Carol Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists. Composers represented will be Beethoven, Rachmaninoff, Moussorgsky, Wagner, Mendelssohn, Aaron Copland, Prokofieff, Schumann, Richard Strauss, Bohuslav Martinu, Tchaikovsky, Randall Thompson and Brahms. The programs of the second of the three weeks will be devoted to the works of Brahms.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

MAY 24 1946

The New Records

Two Brandenburgs by Koussevitzky—Stern's Beethoven—'State' Jazz.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

On behalf of its catalogue, Victor has recorded Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony in performances of the Brandenburg Concertos Nos. 3 and 4. That seems the simplest way of stating the matter, for the classic versions of these works by the Busch Chamber Music Players on Columbia disks are still wholly satisfying for any requirements.

Koussevitzky's playing of the third concerto is particularly unsatisfactory, not merely for its romanticized swells and accents, but also for its inclusion of a slow movement where Bach wrote none. He duplicates his concert-hall practice of interpolating the "Sinfonia" from "Christ lag in Todesbanden" and plays it more beautifully than the two-movement concerto itself. However, I can see no point to it, especially as it begins in the middle of a side, and can hardly be by-passed.

There is more that is interesting in the recording of the fourth, since it offers solo opportunities for the fine flutist George Laurent and his associate George Madison. Together with Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the orchestra, they play the concertino parts with exemplary skill and musicianship. Also the conducting of Koussevitzky is not as "dramatic" as it is in the more famous work.

There is something pertinent to be said about the recording, which was done in Tanglewood, in the Music Shed of the famous festival. It is Grade A Victor reproduction, though the string tone thins out a bit due to lack of sufficient resonance in the empty shed, and some of the neater details of the fourth concerto are slighted. Due to the inclusion of the spurious slow movement (which uses a side) and the use of an odd side for a needless duplication of the E major Prelude for violin (an arrangement in F by Pick-Mangiagalli) the album bulks out to eight sides, whereas Busch and his men provide the basic material in six sides, at a proportionately lower cost. (V-Set 1050.)

This Clipping From TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES

MAY 26 1946

SHARPS AND FLATS

By FREDERICK KOUNTZ

THE soloists who will perform in the various concerts of the Berkshire festival have been announced. On July 27 Eugene List will play with the Boston orchestra, Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2, Claudio Arrau will be the soloist in Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 1 on Aug. 1. On Aug. 3 Carol Brice will sing the Brahms Rhapsody for Contralto and Male Chorus and the next day Erica Morini will be the violinist and Gregor Blatigorsky the 'cellist in the Brahms Double Concerto.

During the last week of the festival, Piatigorsky will play the Schumann 'Cello Concerto on Aug. 8 and on Aug. 10 Mischa Elman will be soloist in the Martinu Violin Concerto.

As was announced previously in this column the three weeks of concerts will run from July 25 to Aug. 11. They will be given at Tanglewood which lies between Lenox and Stockbridge in Massachusetts. Anyone who is interested may obtain further information about the whole undertaking from Thomas D. Perry at Symphony hall in Boston.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

MAY 24 1946

Records

'Appalachian Spring' a First Rate Disc

Other New Records Include Vincent Youmans Album

By ROBERT BAGAR.

Some weeks ago Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave us all a kind of illustrated lecture, in Carnegie Hall, as to the manner in which should be played Aaron Copland's concert suite from his score to the Martha Graham ballet "Appalachian Spring." This was not so much a revelation as it was a factual and business-like and unaffected performance of very good music for the concert auditorium.

Robert Bagar.

Now the same Bostonians with, of course, the same Serge Koussevitzky at their head have recorded this same music for Victor, which you will find in Album M or DM 1046 (three 12-inch discs). And it is quite needless to report that the performance is, in toto, a repetition of a former triumph—only this time it's been made permanent.

The piece has been handsomely packaged, modern art cover and all, plus a very readable account of the Ballet itself, together with attractive illustrations from its sequences. Aaron Copland, I should judge, has been very nobly done by, and his Suite certainly earns that attention for him.

This Clipping From HOUSTON, TEX.
POST

MAY 26 1946

Record Reviews:

Boston Orchestra Performs An Eloquent Ballet Suite

COPLAND, AARON—"Appalachian Spring," ballet suite, played by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. Victor album DM-1046.

✦ ✦ ✦

This excellent score, which won the Pulitzer prize for music in 1945, is of equal interest to those concerned with the trend of American composition and the native ballet. The result of a collaboration between Copland and choreographer Martha Graham, the suite accompanies a dance dealing with a wedding celebration in the hills of Pennsylvania 150 years ago.

Copland's ideas are most engagingly handled. His great value in this age is that he proves a composer can be at once fresh and harmonious. There is inherent drama as well as some haunting beauty in his collection of episodes, and I would go to much trouble to see a production of this work in the theater.

The Boston Symphony gives a splendid performance of the score, bright, searching and resonant, and the recording is all you could ask. Admirers of Copland's "Rodeo" will do well to investigate. "Appalachian Spring" is a fuller development of the style and nostalgic effects he contributed to the Agnes De Mille ballet, and the music is entirely worth hearing apart from the dance.

✦ ✦ ✦

The Boston Symphony monopolizes the new recordings of Victor. In another handsome album (DM-1050), Koussevitzky and his ensemble give attention to Bach's Brandenburg concertos Nos. 3 and 4, playing with great brilliance and spirit.

The flowing power and impressive resilience of the Boston strings are the ideal answer to the polyphonic complexities of these numbers, and Bach lovers will find the records a treasure.

✦ ✦ ✦

Marian Anderson shows off her magnificent timbres and high style as a singer of lieder in two Schumann selections, "Der Nussbaum" and "Stille Tranen," which make imperative claims on any collector of vocal records. The performances are on opposite sides of Victor's No. 11-9173. —Hubert Roussel

This Clipping From
ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES

MAY 26 1946

PROGRAMS AND SOLOISTS have been announced for this summer's Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., during July and August. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will give nine concerts in the music shed at Tanglewood.

Soloists will include Eugene List and Claudio Arrau, pianists; Carol Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists. Composers represented will be Beethoven, Rachmaninoff, Moussorgsky, Wagner, Mendelssohn, Aaron Copland, Prokofieff, Schumann, Richard Strauss, Bohuslav Martinu, Tchaikovsy, Randall Thompson and Brahms. The programs of the second of the three weeks will be devoted entirely to the works of Brahms.

This Clipping From
WHEELING, W. VA.
NEWS REGISTER

MAY 26 1946

Programs and soloists have been announced for this summer's Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., during July and August. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky, conductor, will give nine concerts in the music shed at Tanglewood.

Soloists will include Eugene List and Claudio Arrau, pianists; Carol Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists. Composers represented will be Beethoven, Rachmaninoff, Moussorgsky, Wagner, Mendelssohn, Aaron Copland, Prokofieff, Schumann, Richard Strauss, Bohuslav Marinu, Tschaikovsy, Randall Thompson and Brahms. The programs of the second of the three weeks will be devoted entirely to the works of Brahms.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
PM

MAY 26 1946

Hague

On Discs . . .

Copland and Bizet

This month Victor has made a welcome addition to the regrettably few available waxings of contemporary American compositions by releasing Aaron Copland's Suite, Appalachian Spring, in a superb recording by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky (Album M or DM 1046, $4.20).

The Pulitzer-prize-winning score, which was composed for Martha Graham's ballet of the same name, sounds even more cherishable and beguiling in its full orchestral dress than it did when played by the small orchestra utilized at Miss Graham's performances in the theater. It is music of rare distinction, lyric and appealingly sincere, beautifully orchestrated and singularly evocative of the pioneer Spring in the Pennsylvania hills which Miss Graham celebrates in her dance work. Particularly affecting are the interlude which accompanies the dance of the bride and groom, the section later on where Copland builds up five variations on the old Shaker melody, Simple Gifts, and the tender coda which leaves the young pioneer couple, to quote the words of Edwin Denby, "quiet and strong in their new house."

Dr. Koussevitzky's reading of the score is finely sensitive and truly inspired, and the playing of the Bostonians, especially the solo woodwinds, is of virtuosic proportions. The album contains several pages of commentary and descriptive matter on the ballet and the music, illustrated with excellent photographs of the Graham production.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
~~KNICKERBOCKER NEWS~~
Times Union
MAY 26 1946

Tattletales of OLD ALBANY

By Edgar S. Van Olinda

THIS morning we are tossing a verbal bouquet right into the lap of a fellow who is going to hate us for it, because he is the soul of modesty. His name is J. Reid Callanan, successful businessman and amateur musician, who is never too tied up "in conference" to lend a helping hand to less fortunate students who are endeavoring to get a foothold on the musical ladder to fame.

We say "successful businessman," for he is president of the Callanan Road Improvement company, which maintains stone quarries and an agricultural limestone plant in South Bethlehem and Kingston and an asphalt subsidiary in Feura Bush. You might think, offhand, that the supervision of his multitudinous daytime duties might leave little time for his extra-curricular avocation, which is Music, with a capital "M." He is the hard-working president of the Albany Symphony orchestra; accompanist for the Mendelssohn club; pianist for the Schola Cantorum of New York city; sparodic student in piano with the finest teachers with whom he can eke out time to perfect a truly professional technical equipment allied with an innate musical heritage. Whoever coined the saying: "If you want a job well done, give it to a busy man," must have had some such person as Reid Callanan in mind.

Just before World War II curtailed the activities of the Berkshire Music center at "Tanglewood" near Stockbridge, Mass., Mr. Callanan gave a piano recital in the Albany Institute, devoting the entire proceeds of the concert to sending a talented young French horn player to this music center for instruction with the first horn of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Last ~~Monday~~ night he again gave a joint recital with Miss Margrit Werle, 'cellist, of New York, to underwrite the expenses of sending four of the most talented younger members of the Albany Symphony orchestra to the same school, an opportunity for these young Albany Area students to receive the stimulation of daily contact and study with the world's finest instrumentalists.

When we spoke of Reid as an "amateur," we used the term in its strictest dictionary sense. We are one who holds to the opinion that there are many "amateurs" who can play rings around many "professionals." Reid is one of these. Had he chosen to go on the concert stage, he undoubtedly would have been among the elect. But he would not have had nearly as much fun as he gets out of playing, as they say, for his "own amazement," or the "amazement" of his close friends and appreciators.

But do not get the impression that he fools around only with the "long-haired" stuff. Get him in the right mood and he can beguile you with the best of George Gershwin's output—and we suspect, a reasonable amount of boogie-woogie. At any rate, he has the digital dexterity to encompass this jagged, left hand ground bass.

But of course, his Institute concert was for an elite clientele. So he gave a prodigious performance of Debussy's "Sunken Cathedral," "Fireworks" and a short, pyrotechnical vignette by Dohnanyi, in addition to the masterful coadjutorship with Miss Werle in a Brahms and a Strauss sonata. Now, one does not just sit down at the piano and play these things at sight. They require a tremendous amount of practice, first to have the actual notes under control, and second, to be able to generate enough elasticity with one's fellow artist, so that neither becomes subservient to the other. As Edgar A. Guest might have written it: "It takes a heap of playin' to make a good sonatatist."

We can see Reid's face when he reads this little appreciation of his generous gifts to the making of the soul of Albany. It was, probably, as red as mine when I saw my review of his concert the next morning in the paper. Some unimaginative person had simply tossed out the most flattering part of the article in order to fit it into the space which had to be vacated from the first edition. So we are fooling them, and placing it on record, today.

What we are trying to say is that there are hundreds of worthy young musicians in this area, talented, sincere and willing to give their all, for just "a break"; that little touch of humanity by some one, more fortunate, which may be the turning point in their career. Nearly every great singer and instrumentalist before the public today has had someone with the necessary financial backing to assist them during their student days and nights.

It COULD be a very profitable investment for any financially secure person in Albany to sponsor the career of one or more of these deserving young people.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

MAY 26 1946

Isabelle Evans'

Thoughts About Music

National interest will be focused on the production of Peter Grimes, scheduled for this Summer at Tanglewood, the Berkshire home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A Buffalo girl, Carol Anne Brown, will have a prominent role in the performance.

Carol A. Brown

Miss Brown, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. Merrill Brown of Williamsville, was graduated from Williamsville High School and the University of Buffalo. She also was a voice pupil of Isabelle Stranahan Yeager. Miss Brown (whom I remember as possessing absolute pitch), now is in her second year as a scholarship student at the Academy of Vocal Art in Philadelphia.

In a letter written last February, Miss Brown said: "We gave two performances of Peter Grimes, which has been given in London with great success and is being introduced in America at the Berkshire Festival this Summer. Mr. Hawkes of Boosey and Hawkes was here from London and asked for a portion of the opéra to be presented (privately in New York) for Koussevitzky, Leonard Bernstein, Hugh Ross, Herbert Graf, George Szell,—also a few others."

In a letter dated May 16th, Carol Anne, said, "Hugh Ross, the director of the Schola Cantorum in New York, has awarded me a scholarship to the Berkshire Music Center this Summer, to lead the Peter Grimes ensemble and to do some solo work with him in some other work. Through Boris Goldovsky I shall have the opportunity of hearing the opera classes."

This Clipping From TOPEKA, KAN.
CAPITAL
MAY 26 1946

Brandenburg Concertos Top Victor's June List

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have recorded Back's "Brandenburg Concertos Nos. 3 and 4" for Victor's outstanding album release for June. The concertos are on the eight sides of four discs—a complete program in themselves.

The recording was made by RCA's engineers at Tanglewood, an estate near Lenox, Mass., after which Nathaniel Hawthorne names a collection of short stories. It was also made famous in 1940 when Dr. Koussevitsky and his musicians gave the series of Berkshire Music Festivals.

for the Margrave of Brandenburg, that worthy placed a value of eight groschen on them. Wouldn't the old boys eyes pop if he could just When Back wrote the concertos hear this one recording? —Ki.

This Clipping From
ELMIRA, N. Y.
TELEGRAM

MAY 26 1946

PROGRAMS and soloists have been announced for this summer's Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., during July and August. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will give nine concerts in the music shed at Tanglewood.

Soloists will include Eugene List and Claudio Arrau, pianists; Carol Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists. Composers represented will be Beethoven, Rachmaninoff, Moussorgsky, Wagner, Mendelssohn, Aaron Copland, Prokofieff, Schumann, Richard Strauss, Bohuslav Martinu, Tchaikovsky, Randall Thompson and Brahms. The programs of the second of the three weeks will be devoted entirely to the works of Brahms.

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH

MAY 26 1946

Tanglewood Programs Announced

BOSTON — The itemized programs and the soloists are announced for the Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., this summer. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will give nine concerts in the Music Shed at Tanglewood. The soloists will include Claudio Arrau and Eugene List, pianists; Carol Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists. The concerts will be given on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons (July 25-August 11).

The programs of the first week will be: July 25, Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2; July 27, Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony, Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2 (Eugene List), Moussorgsky's Prelude to "Khovanstchina" and Wagner's Prelude to "The Mastersingers;" July 28, Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony, Copland's Suite "Appalachian Spring," Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 5.

The second week will be devoted to the music of Brahms, as follows: Aug. 1, Tragic Overture, Piano Concerto No. 1 (Claudio Arrau), Symphony No. 4; Aug. 3, Symphony No. 3, Rhapsody with Contralto and Male Chorus (Carol Brice), Symphony No. 2; Aug. 4, Haydn Variations, Double Concerto (Erica Morini and Gregor Piatigorsky), Symphony No. 1.

For the third week, Aug. 8, Prokofieff's Symphony No. 5, Schumann's 'Cello Concerto (Gregor Piatigorsky), Wagner's Prelude to "Lohengrin," Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel;" Aug. 10, Schumann's American Festival Overture, Martinu's Violin Concerto (Mischa Elman), Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5; Aug. 11, Randall Thompson's "The Testament of Freedom," Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 (with Festival chorus, quartet of soloists to be announced).

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

MAY 26 1946

Tanglewood Novelties

Of the three or four orchestral works most highly acclaimed following their first Boston Symphony performances last winter two will be heard during the three-week Berkshire festival this summer. One is Aaron Copland's ballet music, "Appalachian Spring," middle number on the program for the first Saturday night, and the other is Prokofieff's "Symphony No. 5," opening item of the third Thursday night concert. Bela Bartok's violin concerto, with Yehudi Menuhin as soloist, and interludes from Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," were the other newer offerings most warmly welcomed during the Boston season.

If the Shostakovitch fifth symphony can be so classified, all the other numbers scheduled for presentation at Lenox are standard save Randall Thompson's "The Testament of Freedom," and all the special artists who will appear are to play familiar compositions. Dr Serge Koussevitdky is to conduct all nine concerts, but Boston musical patrons are beginning to fear that the master hand that brought their orchestra to such perfection may not much longer wield the baton with regularity.

During the past two seasons Dr Koussevitzky has conducted fewer concerts than formerly and he announces that next year he will appear only 13 weeks at Symphony hall, and when the orchestra is on tour. It is pointed out that his repertory has been shrinking of late years, and sooner or later a successor may be expected. The style and suavity of the Boston orchestra were subjected to the direction of eight other conductors during its recent 65th season. The two who most strongly impressed home audiences were the veteran Fritz Reiner and the youthful Leonard Bernstein, not yet 30. Richard Burgin, concert master and assistant conductor, also is held in high esteem.

This Clipping From
[illegible]

MAY 27 1946

High points of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood in late July and early August were revealed this past week when programs for the concert series to be given by Serge Koussevitsky and his Bostonians were announced. Soloists for the series will be Eugene List and Claudio Arrau, pianists, Erica Morini and Mischa Elman, violinists, Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Carol Brice, contralto.

The Beethoven Eroica Symphony and Sibelius's Symphony No. 2 will be given at the opening concert; Rachmaninoff's Concerto No. 2 featuring Mr. List as soloist July 27; the Piano Concerto No. 1 with Mr. Arrau on the all-Brahms program August 3; the Brahms Rhapsody with contralto Carol Bride and a male chorus on a second all-Brahms program August 3; the Brahms Double Concerto with Miss Morini and Mr. Piatigorsky on a third Brahms program August 4; the Schuman 'cello concerto by Mr. Piatigorsky August 8; Bohuslav Martinu's Violin Concerto, played by Mischa Elman August 10; and the Beethoven Ninth Symphony August 11, with chorus and soloists to be announced. Rounding out these various programs will be orchestral works presented as only the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of its impeccable conductor can present them.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

MAY - 6 1946

Student Performances, School Concert, Yale Commencement Music Program, Jewish Chorus Are Included in Events

By H. PHILIP DUDLEY

Only two women have thus far been engaged as piano soloists with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra for its 1946-47 season. One is the well established artist, Ania Dorfmann. The other is Sylvia Zaremba, the 15-year-old genius whom New Haven will have an opportunity to hear on Monday evening.

Miss Zaremba has passed the child prodigy stage, and now comes to us as a mature artist, with three Town Hall recitals in New York and 18 engagements with major symphony orchestras to her credit. She is now completing her course at the Curtis Institute, where she has been a pupil of Mme. Isabelle Vengerova since 1940, and she plans next year to finish her high school work.

Her program here will include the Organ Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach-Liszt; Sonata, Op. 27, No. 2, in C sharp minor, Beethoven; "Papillons," Op. 2, Schumann; Toccata, Ravel; Nocturne in F, Op. 15, No. 1; Mazurka, Op. 17, No. 4; Mazurka, Op. 24, No. 2, and Ballade in A flat, Op. 47, Chopin; Caprice in A minor, Paganini-Liszt; Etude de Concert, in F minor, Liszt; and Blue Danube Waltz, Strauss-Schulz-Elver.

Miss Zaremba will be presented by St. John's Episcopal Church in the St. Thomas parish house, 830 Whitney Avenue, on Monday at 8 15 P. M. Proceeds will be used by the church for the reconstruction and advance fund, in this instance for church rebuilding in the Philippines. In addition to the regular tickets a limited number are available at reduced rates for pupils of any New Haven music teacher. Applications for these should be made to Mrs. Harold Belshaw, telephone 5-7127.

NEIGHBORHOOD CONCERT

In Sprague Memorial Hall this coming Friday evening, May 31, the annual concert of the Neighborhood Music School will be presented. The event will mark the quarter-century milestone in the history of these presentations by what has become one of New Haven's most important institutions in the teaching of music to both beginners and adult students. Between 40 and 50 pupils in the school will participate in the concert; and Director Jessie C. Beecher has arranged a program designed to show the talented performers to their best advantage in solo, duo, trio and orchestral selections.

The evening of music will open with the school orchestra in a suite by J. B. Lully, followed by a group of solo performances by young members of the student body.

Three trios are listed on the varied program. The Junior Trio consisting of Alec Ramadei, violin; Clara Lucibelli, 'cello, and Larry Midolo, piano; the Neighborhood Trio: Serafina Viaggarde, violin; Marilyn Blynder, 'cello, and Barbera Schoenrock, piano; and the Ensemble Group: Joseph Coppolo, violin; Claire Gruneis, flute, and Joseph Brown, piano. Works of [illegible]entry and Loillet are the scheduled selections in these instances.

Anna Jensen will perform Mozart's Sonata in A Minor as one of the solo piano pieces on the program, and the concluding group will feature the school orchestra in H. [illegible] Johnson's Passacaglia and Fu[illegible]etta, Grieg's "The Last Spring," Wieniawski's "Romance," and Mendelssohn's "Ruy Blas" Overture.

The concert is open to the public without charge. Tickets of admission may be obtained from members of the school, the advisory committee or at the door on the night of the performance.

TWO-PIANO RECITAL

The Bach Goldberg Variations will be presented by Richard Murphy and Rhea Kuleske on Sunday evening, June 2, in the last event of the current Clinton Concert Series in St. Andrews Memorial Hall in Clinton.

Miss Kuleske has studied at the Yale School of Music and has appeared in recital at Sprague Hall. Mr. Murphy is serving as supervisor of music in the Guilford schools, and as organist at Christ Church in that town, while studying musicology in the Yale Graduate School.

Tickets for the recital may be obtained at the Loomis Temple of Music or at the box office.

GRAND POP

The first of the outdoor Pop Concerts, to be given in the Yale Bowl June 18, will be an outstanding event, with the Choral Club of Hartford and the University Glee Club of New Haven as guest artists. Gov. Raymond E. Baldwin and the Second Company of the Governor's Foot Guards will be the guests of honor.

RECITAL OF PUPILS

Miss Nancy Maisano will present her pupils in a piano recital on Sunday afternoon, June 2, at 3:30, in the Medical Association auditorium at 362 Whitney Avenue. Vocal selections will be sung by Maureen Moore, Janice Fiondella, and Miss Maisano.

Those participating are Maryann Mettler, Louise Perelli, Jay Cretella, Ann Milane, William Torello, Royce Usher, Danny Morgan, Anita Larsen, Craig Molsberry, Benita Schiff, Marie Cacchiaro, Robert Torello, Joan Cretella, Rosemarie Salperto, Bernard Moore, Jeanne Duguette, Beverly Wiedenmann, Richard De Capua, Ann Marie Ericchello, Rose Ruoppolo, Sam Velleca, Rosemary Giannotti, Frances Cottiero, Marie De Felice, Walter Bennett, Dolores Amore, Marcia Vena, Nancy St. George, Nancy Pierce, Bert Sacco and Patricia Guthrie.

The public is cordially invited.

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

At the Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., this Summer, the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, will give nine concerts. Soloists will include Claudio Arrau and Eugene List, pianists; Carol Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists. The concerts will be given on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, July 25 to August 11.

The programs of the first week will be: July 25, Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2; July 27, Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony, Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2 (Eugene List), Moussorgsky's Prelude to "Knovanstchina," and Wagner's Prelude to "The Mastersingers;" July 28, Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony, Copland's Suite "Appalachian Spring," Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 5.

The second week will be devoted to the music of Brahms, as follows: August 1, Tragic Overture, Piano Concerto No. 1 (Claudio Arrau), Symphony No. 4; August 3, Symphony No. 3, Rhapsody with Contralto and Male Chorus (Carol Brice), Symphony No. 2; August 4, Haydn Variations, Double Concerto (Erica Morini and Gregor Piatigorsky), Symphony No. 1.

For the third week August 8, Prokofieff's Symphony No. 5, Schumann's Cello Concerto (Gregor Piatigorsky), Wagner's Prelude to "Lohengrin," Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel;" August 10, Schumann's American Festival Overture, Martinu's Violin Concerto (Mischa Elman), Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5; August 11, Randall Thompson's "The Testament of Freedom," Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 (with festival chorus).

This Clipping From
NEW KENSINGTON, PA.
DISPATCH

MAY 27 1946

Programs and soloists have been announced for the summer's Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., during July and August. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will give nine concerts in the music shed at Tanglewood.

Soloists will include Eugene List and Claudio Arrau, pianists; Carol Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists. Composers represented will be Beethoven, Rachmaninoff, Moussorgsky, Wagner, Mendelssohn, Aaron Copland, Prokofieff, Schumann, Richard Strauss, Bohuslav Martinu, Tchaikovsy, Randall Thompson and Brahms. The programs of the second of the three weeks will be devoted entirely to the works of Brahms.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE-STATES

MAY 26 1946

New Recordings

In Victor Album DM-1050, Dr. Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony provide superbly played and magnificently recorded performances of Bach's Brandenburg Concertos Nos. 3 and 4. The two concertos were recorded at the orchestra's summer "home," at Tanglewood, and the results are extraordinary. The strings are crystal clear; the balance between the different sections is perfect; and the music itself is projected with such transparent beauty of tone as to make the achievement almost unique.

Terry once said that the Brandenburg Concertos "arouse enthusiasm by their rotund polyphony, splendid vigor, and glorious melody," and this is a just and sober estimate of their perennial appeal. As exhibits of Bach's incredible fertility of invention, they are of paramount interest and importance; as sheer music, they are irresistible. Concerto No. 3 is in two movements, with two adagio chords bridging the pause between the first and second allegros. In his performance of this work, Dr. Koussevitsky interpolates the sinfonia from the cantata, "Christ lag in Todesbanden," as a slow movement. This is a wonderful excerpt, but it seems out of place in mood and meaning as a movement in this concerto. It is beautifully played, however.

The Third Concerto is scored for stringed instruments alone; the Fourth, for violin and two flutes as the concertino, with strings as tutti. Dr. Koussevitsky's crisp and decisive reading of this music gives full scope to its astonishing strength and to its fascinating variety. The extra eighth side in the set is occupied by a scintillating performance of the Pick-Mangiagalli arrangement of the prelude to Bach's Violin Sonata No. 6.

extraordinary pianism on some of Liszt's less well known transcriptions, rather than on the works in this album. The engineers have managed with considerable success to keep the surging piano tone on these records both clear and bright.

* * *

Helen Traubel and Kurt Baum appear in Columbia Set MX-261, in a performance of the "Lohengrin" bridal chamber scene, Act III, Scene 2, with Artur Rodzinski and the New York Philharmonic-Symphony providing the excellent orchestral background (four sides). Elsa, in this performance, is more convincing than Lohengrin, whose vocal equipment seems pallid in comparison with Miss Traubel's opulent voice. We did not find this set exactly exciting.

Selections from Jerome Kern's evergreen "Showboat" score are offered in Columbia Set MM-611 (10 sides). The music is performed by members of the cast in the current hit revival in New York, and include Jan Clayton, Carol Bruce, Charles Fredricks,, Kenneth Spencer, and Colette Lyons. The young American conductor, Edwin McArthur, guides the orchestra. The set is somewhat uneven in performance, but Frederick is exceptionally good; Miss Bruce sings "Bill" with fine success; and Spencer's "Ol' Man River" is well done.

Some months ago, Columbia issued a fascinating single which you may have missed. It is "Bachianas Brasileiras" No. 5, by Villa-Lobos (Columbia—71670-D). It is sung in Portuguese by Bidu Sayao, with an accompaniment by eight celli and bass. We recommend this disc as being one of the most charming and beguiling records of the year. —C. S.

This Clipping From DENVER, COLO.
POST

MAY 27 1946

"A year ago this week the people of Prague made a revolution against their invaders," writes Leonard Bernstein, who will conduct the symphony there as the American representative to the Czech Musical Festival. "This is the first anniversary of that liberation. National peasant costumes, parades, cheers, singing, fellowship—such festivity as restores your faith in Shubert operettas. All day and all night there has been wild rejoicing in the streets of this city whose people are so unneurotic that there are only four psychiatrists listed. The youngsters have been jitterbugging to highly milked-up records of 'Big Noise From Winetka' and Strauss waltzes, 'Honky Tonk Train' and 'Last Year's Crop of Kisses.' It is a town gone mad with joy and love. It is the greatest of Ninth Symphonies.

* * *

"The queues form for hours at the box-offices for the Music Festival of forty concerts. Every ticket has been sold, without advertising or imprecation of the public. Its conductor, 31-year-old Raphael Kubelik, is a devoted, inspired and noble musician. And if I am subjected to an overdose of Smetana and Dvorak, it is understandable in this nationalistic moment. Yesterday there was a huge demonstration at the Masaryk Stadium and when 10,000 Czech troops shouted 'Nazdar' to Konev and McNarny, and 250,000 Czechs responded with immaculate spontaneous singing, I could swear that Koussevitzky had been rehearsing all the inhabitants of Prague for three weeks . . . See you soon . . . Nazdar."

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

MAY 29 1946

BACH-MOZART SERIES BY CHAMBER GROUP

Serge Koussevitzky, conducting at Tan[illegible] orchestra consisting of Boston Symphony players, will present two programs (each repeated) devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart. These concerts will take place before the Berkshire festival by the full orchestra (July 25—August [illegible]) and will be given in the Theater-Concert hall. The concerts preserve a custom established in the last two summers at Tanglewood, when the festival by the full orchestra was necessarily suspended.

Dr Koussevitzky will present the first Bach-Mozart program on Saturday evening, July 13 and Sunday afternoon, July 14, the second on Saturday evening, July 20 and Sunday afternoon, July 21.

First prgram—Mozart, Symphony in B-flat, No. 33 (K. 319); Bach, Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G major, for String Orchestra; Bach, Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 in D major; Mozart, Serenade in B-flat for Wind Instruments (k. 361).

Second program—Bach, Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 in F major; Mozart, Violin Concerto in A major No. 5 (K. 219) (Soloist: William Kroll); Bach, Suite (Overature) in D major, No. 4; Mozart, Symphony ("Jupiter") No. 41 (L. 551).

This Clipping From
BURBANK, CALIF.
REVIEW

MAY 28 1946

Programs and soloists have been announced for this summer's Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., during July and Augst. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will give nine concerts in the music shed at Tanglewood.

Soloists will include Eugene List and Claudio Arrau, pianists; Carol Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists. Composers represented will be Beethoven, Rachmininoff, Moussorgsky, Wagner, Mendelssohn, Aaron Copland, Prokofieff, Schumann, Richard Strauss, Bohuslav Martinu, Tchaikovsky, Randall Thompson and Brahms. The programs of the second of the three weeks will be devoted entirely to the works of Brahms.

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE

MAY 29 1946

Berkshire Festival Programs Announced

Lenox, Mass., May 28. — The itemized programs and the soloists are announced for the Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., this summer. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will give nine concerts in the Music Shed at Tanglewood. The soloists will include Claudio Arrau and Eugene List, pianists; Carol Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists. The concerts will be given on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons (July 25-August 11).

The programs of the first week will be as follows: July 25, Beethoven's Eroica Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2; July 27, Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony, Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2 (Eugene List), Moussorgsky's Prelude to Khovanstchina, and Wagner's Prelude to The Mastersingers; July 28, Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony, Copland's Suite Appalachian Spring, Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 5.

The second week will be devoted to the music of Brahms, as follows: August 1—Tragic Overture, Piano Concerto No. 1 (Claudio Arrau), Symphony No. 4; August 3— Symphony No. 3, Rhapsody with Contralto and Male Chorus (Carol Brice), Symphony No. 2; August 4—Haydn Variations, Double Concerto (Erica Morini and Gregor Piatigorsky), Symphony No. 1.

For the third week, August 8 — Prokofieff's Symphony No. 5, Schumann's Cello Concerto (Piatigorsky), Wagner's Prelude to "Lohengrin," Strauss's Till Eulenspiegel; August 10 — Schumann's American Festival Overture, Martinu's Violin Concerto (Mischa Elman), Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5; August 11—Randall Thompson's The Testament of Freedom, Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 (with Festival chorus, quartet of soloists to be announced.)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

MAY 26 1946

RECORDS: COPLAND WORK

By MARK A. SCHUBART

THE suite from Aaron Copland's score for the Martha Graham ballet "Appalachian Spring" has been recorded for Victor by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra (Victor, DM-1046, three twelve-inch records), and it is refreshing to encounter in this album a contemporary work receiving the same care and devotion that would be accorded a Mozart concerto or a Beethoven symphony. Much misunderstanding concerning our new music has been spread by lacklustre, slipshod and insensitive interpretation, and it is in combating this attitude that Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra have made such a monumental contribution to the art.

The score itself is one of Copland's most enchanting. It is rich in that peculiar brand of Americanism which Copland developed and which dominates so many of his works—especially "Billy the Kid." It is American by virtue of its generous use of a kind of extract or essence of folk-music, as well as for its outspoken sentimentality. Copland is one of the most expert orchestrators in this country today, and the possessor of one of the most remarkable senses of rhythm. Both these pleasant traits find ample outlet in "Appalachian Spring." Some portions of the score —particularly the slow opening and closing sections — seem somewhat overlong. But this is stage music and mood music, and these blemishes do nothing to impair the effectiveness and eloquence of the music.

Dr. Koussevitzky's reading is, of course, both sympathetic and colorful. A perusal of the score indicates that he has chosen to take some of the slower portions of the music at a more deliberate pace than the composer has indicated, but in a new and untried work, such experiments — especially when the results are not harmful—are more than justifiable. The orchestra plays with its accustomed virtuosity and the recording is resonant and clear.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

MAY 26 1946

THE ORCHESTRAS

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

BEFORE taking a reminiscent leave of the orchestral season of 1945-'46, it might be interesting to cast a comparative glance over the programs of the three longest established orchestras of the Eastern states, our Philharmonic-Symphony, the Boston Symphony and the Philadelphia Orchestra, in their home concerts at Carnegie Hall, Symphony Hall and the Academy of Music.

Not counting junior concerts, and with apologies for possible statistical or mathemathical errors in this department's compilation, the Philharmonic gave 100 subscription and pension fund benefit concerts this past season on its home grounds; the Philadelphia Orchestra sixty-six and the Boston Symphony sixty-one. The Philharmonic offered 139 works by seventy-one composers, the Philadelphians 110 works by fifty-two composers and the Bostonians 104 works by fifty composers. Twenty-eight works by nineteen American composers were played by the Philharmonic; seventeen works by eleven American composers by the Boston Symphony. The Philadelphia Orchestra limited this season's American total to seven works by seven composers. Those considered as American composers in these statistical remarks are native-born musicians or naturalized citizens who have pursued their career mainly in this country or lived here for many years.

The Philharmonic presented six works for the first time in public and two for the first time in the United States. Five other works had first New York hearings and ten were played for the first time by this orchestra. One work had its first public concert performance and two others had their local concert premieres.

The Philadelphia Orchestra played five works for the first time and eleven others made their debuts in this organization's programs. One work had its first Philadelphian concert performance. Among works compiled or arranged from other music one had a first public performance, another an American premiere and two others had their first Philadelphian hearings. The Bostonians played five works for the first time anywhere, two for the first time in Boston, sixteen for the first time in Boston and two for the first time in their own programs. The works performed for the first time anywhere or for the first time in this country by these three orchestras in 1945-'46 are:

Philharmonic-Symphony: First time, Carpenter, The Seven Ages; Fitelberg, Nocturnes for orchestra; Harris, Memories of a Child's Sunday; Milhaud, Le Bal Martiniquais; Rogers, In Memory of Franklin Delano Roosevelt; Stravinsky, Symphony in Three Movements. First time in U. S. A., Ibert, Festival Overture; Prokofieff, Summer Day.

Philadelphia Orchestra: First time, Bloch, Suite Symphonique; Bartok, Piano Concerto No. 3; Martinu, Symphony No. 4; Milhaud, Suite for violin and orchestra; Zimbalist, Portrait of an Artist.

Boston Symphony: First time, Barber, Cello Concerto; Dukelsky, Cello Concerto; Gretchaninoff, Elegy; Martinu, Symphony No. 3; Menotti, Piano Concerto in F. First time in U. S. A., Britten, Interludes and Passacaglia from "Peter Grimes"; Prokofieff, Symphony No. 5.

A list of the American works played by the Philharmonic-Symphony has already been published in these columns. The following American works were presented by the other two orchestras:

Philadelphia Orchestra: Barber, Essay No. 2; Bloch, Suite Symphonique; Creston, Chant of 1942; Haussermann, Concerto for Voice and Orchestra; Piston, Symphony No. 2; Rogers, Soliloquy; Zimbalist, Portrait of an Artist.

Boston Symphony: Barber, Cello Concerto; Berezowsky, Symphony No. 3; Copland, Appalachian Spring, Danzon Cubano, Quiet City; Cowell, Hymn and Fuguing Tune; Diamond, Rounds for String Orchestra; Dukelsky, Cello Concerto; Gould, Spirituals for String Orchestra, Concerto for Orchestra, Harvest, Cowboy Rhapsody; Gershwin-Bennett, "Porgy and Bess" (a Symphonic Picture); Hanson, Symphony No. 4; Menotti, Piano Concerto in F, Interludes from "The Island God," Schuman, American Festival Overture.

The following composers were represented by two or more works in the programs under consideration:

Philharmonic-Symphony: Beethoven, 12; Tchaikovsky, 9; Wagner, 9; Brahms, 6; Mozart, 6; *Gershwin, 5; Prokofieff, 5; Stravinsky, 5; Debussy, 3; Rachmaninoff, 3; Strauss, R., 3; Mahler, 3; Mendelssohn, 3; Bach, 2; *Copland, 2; Corelli, 2; Milhaud, 2; *Piston, 2; Ravel, 2; Sibelius, 2; *Still, 2; Weber, 2.

Philadelphia Orchestra: Beethoven, 10; Wagner 10; Brahms, 9; Strauss, R., 6; Tchaikovsky, 6; Debussy, 5; Mozart, 5; Handel, 4; Ravel, 3; Sibelius, 3; Respighi, 3; Bach, 3; Bartok, 2; Corelli, 2; Haydn, 2; Strauss, J., 2; Stravinsky, 2.

Boston Symphony: Beethoven, 9; Brahms, 6; Mozart, 6; Sibelius, 6; Tchaikovsky, 5; Wagner, 6; *Gould, 4; Stravinsky, 4; *Copland, 3; Haydn, 3; Prokofieff, 3; R. Strauss, 3; Berlioz, 2; Debussy, 2; *Menotti, 2; Ravel, 2.

*American Composer.

A hasty glance at the three repertoires under consideration shows differences, but no particularly radical ones, and it might not be too rash to suggest that, in a survey of the 1945-'46 programs of all the major orchestras, the similarities would prove to be more striking than the differences. One might also venture the suggestion that the widespread employment of guest conductors tends to diminish the difference between one repertoire and another, if most of the guests appear with several orchestras in one season. Whether extensive guest conducting aids or handicaps the prospects of American composers depends, of course, on the peripatetic leaders' receptivity to American music.

Meanwhile, the National Orchestral Association's American program of last Monday night raises the 1945-'46 American total for orchestral concerts (apart from children's concert and the current "Pops") in Carnegie Hall and the City Center to ninety-eight performances of fifty works by thirty-six composers.

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
~~STAR~~
Times Herald
MAY 31 1946

Auditions Started For 'Street Scene'

NEW YORK (N. Y. News). Producer Dwight Wiman is back from the wars and is hearing persons for a musical version of "Street Scene" and looking over material for a "Fourth Little Show" which he'll do with Tom Weatherly. Wiman is cagey about this new "Little Show." "In other revues," he says, "the scenes all take place in different settings. In this one, they won't. Also lighting will play an awfully important part in the show."

Wiman snatches recollections from his three years, just ended, in England as entertainment director for the American Red Cross. His units alone played to 4,500,000 troops and when you add this to the USO-camp-shows audiences, he thinks you come up with a host of hungry playgoers to support the post-war theater.

"Street Scene" for which Elmer Rice is writing a new libretto and Kurt Weill, the music, will be an American opera, Wiman says, and will come first on his fall schedule.

"Peter Grimes," the Benjamin Britten opera which Eddie Dowling said he might do on Broadway next season, is going to need more than one cast, according to William Horne. Horne is the young American tenor who'll sing the title role in the Berkshire ~~festival~~ production, August 6, at Lennox, Mass.

"Nobody could do it on Broadway," Horne says. "Peter is the toughest part I've ever studied. You couldn't sing it every night in the week. You'd need two or three singers for this part and a couple of the others and that would make it awfully expensive."

Still, there was the alternate leads in "Porgy and Bess," in "Rosalinda" and in "Carmen Jones."

"Peter Grimes" in opera is the role of the year and people will come to Lennox from all over the world to see the first American production of Britten's work.

Britten is an Englishman and his opera is built around "The Borough," an 1810 poem by George Crabbe and describing the life of an early Nineteenth century seacoast village in England. It's been given 24 times in London during the past year.

Horne introduced Irving Berlin's "I'm getting tired so I can sleep" in "This Is the Army." Shortly after the GI revue opened, he was taken ill, laid up for a year and got a medical discharge. Then he got the role of Paris in Broadway's "Helen Goes to Troy." Last year he sang with the N. Y. City Center Opera Co.

◆

Alfred Lunt, who still hasn't completely given up plans to revive "The Guardsman," is spending considerable of his time these days examining actors and production ideas for Terence Rattigan's "The Winslow Boy." This play will be done by John C. Wilson for the Lunts. It's now touring England and would be in London if a theater were only available. The Lunts' current "O Mistress Mine" is a Rattigan comedy, of course, and will probably last well into next season.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

MAY 30 1946

Koussevitsky Lists Bach-Mozart Events

Serge Koussevitsky, conducting a chamber orchestra consisting of Boston Symphony players, will present two programs of Bach and Mozart.

These concerts will take place before the Berkshire Festival by the full orchestra, July 25-Aug. 11, and will be given in the Theater-Concert Hall. The concerts preserve a custom established the last two summers at Tanglewood, when the festival by the full orchestra was necessarily suspended.

Dr. Koussevitsky will present the first Bach-Mozart program Saturday evening, July 13, and Sunday afternoon, July 14 the second on Saturday evening, July 20, and Sunday afternoon, July 21.

First program — Mozart Symphony in B-flat, No. 33 (K. 319); Mozart, Adagio ma non troppo from the Quintet in G minor for Strings (K. 516); Bach, Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G major, for String Orchestra; Bach, Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 in D major; Mozart, Serenade in B-flat for Wind Instruments (K. 361).

Second program — Bach, Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 in F major; Mozart, Violin Concerto in A major, No. 5 (K. 219) (Soloist: William Kroll); Bach, Suite (Overture) in D major, No. 4; Mozart, Symphony ("Jupiter") No. 41

This Clipping From
JACKSON, TENN.
SUN

MAY 31 1946

Leo Litwin, pianist, will be soloist in the familiar "Warsaw Concerto" of Addinsell on the sixth broadcast over ABC by the Boston "Pops" Orchestra under the baton of Arthur Fiedler. The program will be heard Saturday, June 8, at 7:30-8:30 p. m.

Fiedler also will present Ganne's "Marche Lorraine," the overture to Rossini's "Barber of Seville," and "The 9th Hungarian Rhapsody" of Liszt, subtitled "Carnival at Pesth."

The feature of the program will be a movement from a symphony, chosen by the votes of listeners and not announced until just before its performances. Each week listeners select their favorite work in a particular category and their choice is played the following Saturday.

At the end of June,, the broadcast move to the Esplanade on the Charles River for one program. In July and August, the programs will come from the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The entire summer series is sponsored for the first time this year by the Allis-Chamlers Manufacturing Company, which also sponsors the fall and winter broadcasts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This Clipping From
SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
TRIBUNE SUN

MAY 31 1946

TURNTABLE TALK

BY BRUNO DAVID USSHER

I wonder how many teachers of literature, drama, music appreciation make George Jean Nathan's "The Morning After the First Night," (Knopf, 1938), part of their text or even "must" reading for students? Nathan is probably the outstanding theater critic in America, although he has close seconds in Brooks Atkinson, of the New York Times, and John Mason Brown, of the New York Post. Beating his own breast, Nathan regrets the "pulling of silk-hats out of rabbits" . . . to the accompaniment of a patter of apologies for the rabbit.

BRUNO USSHER

Actually Nathan touches but lightly on music, referring occasionally to musical shows. However a good many points in his searching witty and trenchant sermon apply to music and make a tonic for every music critic. The critic of music, as of other arts, recurrently is faced with the problem of stating or explaining why a certain star does not continue to give stellar performances, while astute managers, zealous fans and the sons of medicine showmen (press agents) put silver painting and indirect lighting on their rather spasmodically incandescent star.

From a standpoint of absolute, high standards it is reprehensible if reviewers begin to apologize for this lessening luminosity of a star. Critics however, also are human, hence their longing for superlative. truly stellar and consistently maintained values in a star artist.

* * *

This is an all-too-brief glance then at a "star" of first size for whom, if memory serves me well, one has never had to make camouflaged apologies by way of explanations. I refer really to two stars, Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, and his Boston Symphony.

If one ever had to explain for Dr. Koussevitzky, then it is because his devoted interest in new works, especially by younger Americans of the last two decades, has led him to over-rate certain talents and their successive manifestations. But this error of commission is much, much smaller than would be one of omission in cases of worth.

As a conductor of classics, the maestro never fails in the matter of sheer performance, which leads one to say that the Boston orchestra is a consistently great orchestra. Koussevitzky would not be the re-creative and broad-minded artist, if type and intensity of mood, treatment of certain episodes in a classic work, did not differ from those of other eminent directors. ("Hamlet" lends itself to different readings, yet all of them convincing impersonations.

* * *

Suffice to recommend two albums Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony lately have made for RCA Victor. In musical character, they are as far apart as the historic difference between the composers. These would not be Boston performances, if they were not both of technical excellency and strength in conveying the message of the music.

I refer to Bach's "Brandenburg Concertos" No. 3 and 4, (DM-1050, four 12-inch disks) and to Aaron Copland's "Appalachian Spring." (DM-1046, three 12-inch disks.) The Copland particularly calls for added comment. The music will bring back memories to those who beheld Martha Graham's ballet of that name here earlier in the season. In the recorded version, the composer uses only those portions of his music which are not primarily choreographic, yet the superlative Boston performance recalls definite and sympathetic visions of the celebrated American dancer and her company.

This musical record of the Graham ballet has been made interesting to ballet lovers and students by seven album-size pages of commentary and good photographs. After hearing the Bostonians in the score, the Graham pantomime has come to mean more to me in retrospect than it did at the moment of performance.

* * *

Really, one feels grateful for performances and recordings such as these. They compensate wondrously for those self-imposed efforts of "pulling silk-hats out of rabbits," to return once more to Nathan's castigations of eagerly compromising fellow-reviewers. But then, Koussevitzky and his Bostonians are "rabbits" of a size far, far beyond the dimensions of the bunny in "Alice in Wonderland." Indeed, as one listens to Koussevitzky's imaginative narrations, one grows small as did Alice. In "wonderland" it is not standards which change, only human perspective.

This process, however, need not restrain me, and other listeners from voicing a large and not unpractical wish, namely that RCA Victor Recording Co. (emulating Columbia's example set by the Philadelphia and New York Orchestra tours), send the Boston Symphony on a transcontinental tour. One wishes many more active years to Koussevitzky, but he has reached the biblical age, and what a privilege it would be to hear him dispense his mature musical wisdom in person.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

MAY 31 1946

Record

News an

By CL

The "Appalachian Spring" a one of the most constructive ste time in getting contemporary A collecting public.

There are two outstanding feat ures about the three-record al bum beyond the fact it arise from a fortunate teaming of th composer with the dancer, Mar tha Graham, for whom Aaron Copland wrote the music. It i Copland at his best, with grea breadth of scope, richness of or chestration and forthright use o American sources. It also i played with a considerable degre of respect by the Boston Sym phony Orchestra under the di rection of Serge Koussevitzky
With exception of one rathe spotty side in the discs reviewed the recording also is excellent.

On the current list from Co lumbia is a large eight-side al bum of Franz Liszt works playe by the highly facile pianis Gyorgy Sandor. Most of the wa the music selected is of the mor flamboyant Liszt repertoire an includes the Concert Etude No
2 in F Minor, which is the mos interesting; the "Sonata Quasi Fantasia," "Funerailles," the No
3 "Liebestraum" and the rhap sody better known as the "Ra koczy March." Sandor takes

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
JOURNAL-GAZETTE

JUN 2 1946

At the end of June, the broad cast will move to the esplanad on the Charles River for one pr gram. In July and August, th programs will come from the Ber shire Festival at Tanglewood, wi
Dr. Serge Koussevitsky conduc ing members of the Boston Sy phony Orchestra.

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
STAR

JUN 1 1946

'Platter Patter . . .

BOSTON'S BRAN TRIBUTE TO BA

By JO

AS THRILLING an albu listen to is the new RC fourth Brandenburg Concer by members of the Boston
tion of Serge Koussevitsky.

The set of four 12-inch recor is a sincere tribute to Bach fr the Bostonian musicians and the the RCA Victor studio crew; a p fection that could only be impro by recording on vinylite is fou in these discs.

The musical ingenuity of D
Koussevotsky has worked the Sinfonia from Bach's "Christ lay Todesbanded" cantata in betw the two original adagio movem of the No. 3 creating a three-ment work of remarkable and interest. The No. 3 is a thing, almost coquetish in its heartedness.

A greater delicacy, voiced by flutes and a violin against ing strings, sets the No. 4 entirely different mood. The feminine quality about the of this one; a reserved fem in contrast to the "a la charm of the other.

Together these two conce
as mint and bourbon; cool, lating and strictly for the ative.

[139]

TALK USSHER

ture, drama, music appreciation rning After the First Night,"
"must" reading for students ter critic in America, although
, of the New York Times, and e to mean more to me in retrothan it did at the moment of rmance.

* * *

ally, one feels grateful for per-ances and recordings such as
. They compensate wondrous-r those self-imposed efforts of ing silk-hats out of rabbits," to n once more to Nathan's casti-ns of eagerly compromising w-reviewers. But then, Koussey and his Bostonians are "rabof a size far, far beyond the nsions of the bunny in "Alice Vonderland." Indeed, as one s to Koussevitzky's imaginative tions, one grows small as did
. In "wonderland" it is not ards which change, only hu-perspective.
s process, however, need not in me, and other listeners voicing a large and not im-ical wish, namely that RCA
r Recording Co. (emulating mbia's example set by the Phil-hia and New York Orchestra
), send the Boston Symphony transcontinental tour. One s many more active years to sevitzky, but he has reached iblical age, and what a priviit would be to hear him dis-his mature musical wisdom
n.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

Recorded Music

News and Reviews

By CLIF BRADT

The "Appalachian Spring" album issued by Victor is probably one of the most constructive steps the company has taken in some time in getting contemporary American music before the record-collecting public.

There are two outstanding features about the three-record album beyond the fact it arises from a fortunate teaming of the composer with the dancer, Martha Graham, for whom Aaron Copland wrote the music. It is Copland at his best, with great breadth of scope, richness of orchestration and forthright use of American sources. It also is played with a considerable degree of respect by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. With exception of one rather spotty side in the discs reviewed, the recording also is excellent.

On the current list from Columbia is a large eight-side album of Franz Liszt works played by the highly facile pianist, Gyorgy Sandor. Most of the way the music selected is of the more flamboyant Liszt repertoire and includes the Concert Etude No. 2 in F Minor, which is the most interesting; the "Sonata Quaisi Fantasia," "Funerailles," the No. 3 "Liebestraum" and the rhapsody better known as the "Rakoczy March." Sandor takes it all in the spirit of the composer with no compensating values that might have improved the flavor.

In the lighter music, Columbia has a large five-record volume of highlights from the 1946 revival of Jerome Kern's "Show Boat," for which Oscar Hammerstein 2d wrote the book from Edna Ferber's novel. It has the original 1946 Broadway cast, together with the "Show Boat" chorus and orchestra conducted by Edwin McArthur. Inasmuch as this is the outstanding example of enduring qualities revealed through revival in this type of show, it is a worthwhile item to have on the shelf.

This Clipping From
FORT WAYNE, IND.
JOURNAL-GAZETTE

JUN 2 1946

At the end of June, the broadcast will move to the esplanade on the Charles River for one program. In July and August, the programs will come from the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
STAR

"Platter Patter . . ."

BOSTON'S BRANDENBURG ALBUM TRIBUTE TO BACH AND VICTOR

By JOE R. MILLS

AS THRILLING an album of records as I ever hope to listen to is the new RCA Victor release of the third and fourth Brandenburg Concerti in G by J. S. Bach and played by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under direction of Serge Koussevitsky.

The set of four 12-inch records is a sincere tribute to Bach from the Bostonian musicians and from the RCA Victor studio crew; a perfection that could only be improved by recording on vinylite is found in these discs.

The musical ingenuity of Dr. Koussevotsky has worked the lyric Sinfonia from Bach's "Christ lag in Todesbanded" cantata in between the two original adagio movements of the No. 3 creating a three-movement work of remarkable unity and interest. The No. 3 is a blithe thing, almost coquetish in its lightheartedness.

A greater delicacy, voiced by two flutes and a violin against supporting strings, sets the No. 4 in an entirely different mood. There is a feminine quality about the beauty of this one; a reserved femininity in contrast to the "a la soubrette" charm of the other.

Together these two concerti are as mint and bourbon: cool, stimulating and strictly for the appreciative.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN 2 - 1946

This Clipping From
DAYTON, O.
HERALD

JUN 1 1946

Bach Concertos Well Recorded

Among the headliners on Victor's June releases are Bach's Brandenburg Concertos Numbers 3 and 4 recorded in superlative manner by the Boston Symphony orchestra directed by Serge ~~Koussevitzky~~.

Licia Albanese, soprano, and Robert Merrill, baritone, have recorded from Verdi's "La Traviata" two arias. These beautifully sung selections are "Ah! Dite Alla Giovine" and "Imponete." Marian Anderson's voice is reproduced in a glorious manner in Schumann's "Der Nussbaum" and "Stille Traenen." Franz Rupp is at the piano.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

JUN - 1 1946

Koussevitzky To Direct Tanglewood Concerts

A chamber orchestra comprised of Boston Symphony players will ~~present two programs of~~ Bach and Mozart music at four concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., in July and August, it was announced yesterday. Serge ~~Koussevitzky~~ will conduct ~~the~~ orchestra July 13 and 14 in its first group of selections, and on July 20 and 21 in the second concert.

This Clipping From
DAYTON, O.
HERALD

JUN 1 1946

Berkshire Festival Concerts And Guest Artists Named

Programs and soloists have been announced for the Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., during July and August.

The Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by Serge ~~Koussevitsky~~ will give nine concerts. Soloists are to include, Eugene List and Claudio Arrau, pianists; Carol Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists. The program of the second of the three weeks will be devoted in entirety to the works of Brahms.

This Clipping From DETROIT, MICH.
TIMES

JUN - 2 1946

Variety of Soloists

Programs and soloists have been announced for this summer's Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., during July and August. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will give nine concerts in the music shed at Tanglewood.

Soloists will include Eugene List and Claudio Arrau, pianists; Carol Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists. Composers represented will be Beethoven, Rachmaninoff, Moussorgsky, Wagner, Mendelssohn, Aaron Copland, Prokofieff, Schumann, Richard Strauss, Bohuslav Martinu, Tchaikovsky, Randall Thompson and Brahms. The programs of the second of the three weeks will be devoted entirely to the works of Brahms.

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
CALL

JUN - 2 1946

Latest Records

Key: V, Victor; C, Columbia; M, Majestic; D, Decca.

(V) "Appalachian Spring," Aaron Copland's suite from his score for the Martha Graham ballet, is admirably recorded by Sergé Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The plot of the dance deals with early American pioneer days. The music is simple and enchanting. The interpretation by Dr. Koussevitzky of this contemporary stage music is colorful and imaginative.

This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE

JUN 2 - 1946

Serge Koussevitzky conducts the Boston ~~symphony in~~ BRANDENBURG CONCERTOS NOS. 3 & 4 (Bach) and gives the music a light, airy touch and firm tempos. The quick and lithe quality of a chamber orchestra is well achieved. The No. 3 has an interpolated slow movement — a sinfonia from a cantata. This arbitrary maneuver is a conductor's prerogative, we suppose, but the excerpt doesn't belong there. Reproduction is extremely good (Victor M-1050, $4.73).

All who derive special enjoyment from a good musical show will find the new SHOW BOAT album (Columbia M-611, $5.78) a source of continuing pleasure. The performance is by the current New York "Show Boat" company, with our old friend, Carol Bruce in the cast along with Jan Clayton, Charles Fredericks, Kenneth Spencer and the other leads. Ten numbers, plus the "Show Boat" orchestra under Edwin McArthur, make a swell musical comedy album.—J. K. S.

APPRENTICE TO A CONDUCTOR

By OLIN DOWNES

FOLLOWING the engagement of George Szell as conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra comes the announcement that he seeks two "apprentice conductors" as his assistants next season; and that these two appointees, upon passing exact tests of their abilities, will work with the orchestra as "master students" under the personal guidance and supervision of Mr. Szell.

These "apprentice conductors"—Mr. Szell uses the term deliberately and with specific intent—will be employed at the union rates of $85 a week as members of the orchestra. They will attend all the rehearsals and concerts, including those of Dr. Rudolph Ringwall, the orchestra's associate conductor, and of Mr. Szell and his guest leaders of next season, who are Bruno Walter, Georges Enesco, and Igor Stravinsky. The "apprentices" will play the piano or another instrument in the orchestra from time to time. They will be expected to conduct at rehearsals when called upon and to rehearse orchestral groups as required. They will work in the library in the preparation of scores and parts and have as daily experience all the chores and practical aspects of the routine of their job. The applicants for these positions, who must submit full information of their studies and experience before being interviewed, must be under twenty-five years of age and must be citizens of the United States or Canada.

Fruitful Gift

These openings for young conductors have been made possible through the cooperation of the Kulas Foundation, established by Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Kulas, trustees of the Musical Arts Association which operates the Cleveland Orchestra. This can only be described as one of the most fruitful benefactions to music that a foundation could offer. For the lot of the young American conductor is not an easy one, and openings for him as arranged by the Cleveland Orchestra have not existed in any equivalent measure. They are sorely needed. We seldom give our American conductors opportunities to lead our principal orchestras, for the sound reason that they have not the necessary experience, repertoire, and authority for the work. At the same time we have failed as a nation to afford them the opportunities to gain the training and experience indispensable to fill great positions. It is a vicious circle, only broken in the past by Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Centre, which has already accomplished signal results in the development of young conductors' talent, and found assistant conductorships for more than one of its students with leading American orchestras. Music conservatories and other training schools which include preparatory studies and practice for their conductor students we have in some number. The great orchestras have assistant conductors, usually from their ranks. But the great need for the graduate conductor is the opportunity to develop professionally in his art under exacting supervision; to learn its lessons from the ground up, step by step, in ways which will afford him the knowledge and authority for the fulfillment of a great task. Here is a very important step toward this end.

Only a Step

"Mr. Szell is aware," reads the announcement, "that the two Cleveland appointments are only a step in the right direction, but he hopes that other important musical institutions will follow suit so that in the future all the important orchestras and opera companies in this country will provide opportunities for two or more apprentices to gain a thorough knowledge of the repertory as well as practical experience in meeting the various problems that confront the musical director of a large artistic organization. The numerous opera companies in Europe provided this kind of opportunity in a way that has not existed in the United States. Each company had its staff of assistant conductors, chorus masters of repétiteurs. Mr. Szell himself obtained the practical experience of acting as assistant to Richard Strauss at the Berlin Royal Opera."

But it is safe to say that the Berlin experience was not the first or the second stage of Mr. Szell's training as a conductor. He concludes, on the basis of his own experience, that a system of apprenticeship on the most thorough lines, and one which includes the inculcation of the principles of responsibility, respect and humility in the presence of art, as well as genuine musicianship and technical skill with the baton, is most needed in the preparation of the young American conductor of today.

The initial qualifications that he asks of his candidates are indicative of the purposes involved. The candidate should play the piano efficiently and should have technical command of at least one other instrument. The emphasis, however, is on the piano. The candidate must have a thorough knowledge of musical theory including harmony, counterpoint, composition and orchestration. On presenting himself with the necessary credentials he will be examined in hearing, rhythm and memory. He will play a piano piece of his choice from the classical repertory. He will conduct from memory the first movement of a symphony of his choice by Mozart, Beethoven or Brahms — humming — and he will be expected to describe the instrumentation at any point. He will also be expected to play a movement of a classical symphony on the piano from orchestral score at sight. If his piano technic is inadequate for such performance the movement will be played to him and he will be asked to point out any mistakes. He will orchestrate a page of piano music in a given time and will transpose at sight from a piano or orchestral score.

Piano Important

Asked why he so emphasized piano playing Mr. Szell expatiated: the piano is not only the conductor's good man Friday in the perusal of scores; it is also the instrument which develops the harmonic and the contrapuntal point of view in studying a composition as no other instrument, save the organ, can. The pianist thinks of a score in terms of its entirety. He is predisposed to read it vertically as well as horizontally, with complete cognizance of its harmonic and contrapuntal elements.

"Of course," he continued, "the great conductor is born. He cannot be made. This does not, however, disturb the fundamental consideration. We must give our conductors the best equipment.

"Finally, something extremely essential which I will call the moral responsibility of the interpreter of an art. Part of our instruction must be emphasis of the need of self-forgetfulness in the face of the conductor's obligation to the music that he interprets. This is not merely artistic decency. It would be recommendable if only on the grounds of enlightened self-interest. The temptations to vanity and vainglory where conducting is concerned are many and dangerous. The artist is impregnable whose knowledge is genuine and whose conscience is in his task."

This Clipping From
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERET NEWS

JUN - 1 1946

New Records

Acoustical excellence of Tanglewood's wooden concert hall, the wonders of Bach, the great combination of Conductor Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra and an unusual effort by recording engineers were joined to produce the outstanding offering that is the only classic album on Victor's June list. On four 12-inch records are included the Bach Brandenburg Concertos No. 3 and 4 and Prelude in E (Vic. M-DM 1050). If you like Bach with brilliance, you'll like this set, for the traditional brilliant quality of the Boston Symphony has been retained with high fidelity through those famed Tanglewood acoustics. At the same time, the performance is crisp, fresh, and moving, as only great musicianship can produce. It was recorded last summer during the Berkshire Music Festival at the spot near Lenox, Mass.

Koussevitzky

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUN 1 1946

Koussevitzky Records Brandenburg Concertos

By C. E. I

There is no more joyously young music than one of the oldest scores in the symphonic repertory, the G major Brandenburg Concerto No. 3. It has more vitality than the most exuberant of today's revolutionaries. It has a formal perfection that has not even been approached since Mozart. It sings irrepressibly — particularly the first movement.

In the same key as No. 4, with which it is paired in a Victor album recording Koussevitzky's interpretation with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the concerto No. 3 has been scheduled for performance at the Bach-Mozart series which will be part of the Tanglewood Festival this summer.

Both are informed with the characteristic luminosity of the Boston Orchestra. It is in classics of this type that the unapproachable precision of this band comes into its own. The cantabile as well as the sparkling passages have been happily captured on first-class discs.

This Clipping From
BATON ROUGE, LA.
ADVOCATE

JUN 2 1946

SATURDAY

Boston 'Pops' Orchestra

Leo Litwin, pianist, will be soloist in the familiar "Warsaw Concerto" of Addinsell on the sixth broadcast over WJBO and ABC [illegible] Boston "Pops" orchestra under the baton of Arthur Fiedler. The program will be heard Saturday, June 8, at 7:30 to 8:30 p. m.

Fiedler also will present Ganne's "Marche Lorraine," the overture to Rossini's "Barber of Seville," and the "Ninth Hungarian Rhapsody" of Liszt, subtitled, "Carnival at Pesth."

The feature of the program will be a movement from a symphony, chosen by the votes of listeners and not announced until just before its performances. Each week listeners select their favorite work in a particular category and their choice is played the following Saturday.

At the end of June, the broadcasts move to the Esplanade on the Charles river for one program. In July and August, the programs will come from the Berkshire festival at Tanglewood, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting members of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

This Clipping From MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS

JUN 2 - 1946

Speaking Of Records

By JINNY CONSTANCE

Copeland: Appalachian Spring, Suite: Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky conductor. Three 12-inch Victor records DM-1046.

Aaron Copeland's musical score for "Appalachian Spring" provides Victor's latest "Record-Story." The music, based upon a modern dance ballet created by Martha Graham, pioneer of modern American dance. The suite, divided into eight sections is thoroughly American in character, with a fresh, lyric melodic line, and vividly orchestrated with accents on the wood-wind section. Recorded in a warm, impressive, and colorful performance by the superb Boston Symphony under Koussevitsky, its an album which no contemporary library can afford to miss.

Serge Koussevitsky

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN

JUN 2 - 1946

By Felix Borowski.

IT IS one of the ironies of music history that Johann Sebastian Bach, practically unknown during his lifetime, and unhonored and unsung for nearly a century after having been put into an unmarked grave at Leipzig, should now be one of the most beloved of all composers. This is certainly so with the record-buying public. The "Brandenburg" Concertos, discussed below, have been recorded in Berlin, London, Paris and now in America.

J. S. BACH. BRANDENBURG CONCERTOS Nos. 3 AND 4. Played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitzky. Victor Red Seal. Four 12-inch records.

These two concertos were composed for the Margrave of Brandenburg, a musical amateur who maintained an orchestra at his Potsdam palace, and a large library of concertos for it to play. The third concerto is beautifully performed by the strings of Koussevitzky's orchestra, and, as the work contained only two Allegros, the conductor added the sinfonia, "Christ lag in Todes banden," as a contrasting section. The fourth concerto, not less admirably performed, adds a solo violin and two flutes to the strings. Also there is included the Prelude from Bach's E Major Sonata for solo violin in an orchestral transcription.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

JUN - 2 1946

Chamber Orchestra To Give Programs

Special to The Standard-Times

BOSTON, June 1—Serge Koussevitzky, conducting at Tanglewood a chamber orchestra consisting of Boston Symphony players, will present two programs, each repeated, devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart. These concerts will take place before the Berkshire Festival by the full orchestra July 26-Aug. 11, and will be given in the Theatre-Concert Hall. The concerts preserve a custom established in the last two Summers at Tanglewood, when the festival by the full orchestra was necessarily suspended.

Dr. Koussevitzky will present the first Bach-Mozart program on the night of July 13 and the afternoon, July 14.

This Clipping From
DALLAS, TEX.
TIMES HERALD

JUN - 2 1946

Berkshire Music Festival To Be Resumed This Year

By EVELYN BROWN

United Press Staff Correspondent.

Lenox, Mass., June 1. — The Berkshire Music Festival will be held in gala pre-war style this summer at Tanglewood, rambling 200-acre estate in the hills of Western Massachusetts.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is planning a series of nine concerts extending over three week ends, one of which will be devoted exclusively to Brahms.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven. However, Conductor Serge Koussevitzky has included modern composers, including Rachmaninoff, Copland, Shostakovitch and Martinu. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend.

Prior to opening of the festival, July 25, the orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Included are long-time favorites — Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony.

Tanglewood's music shed seats 6,000, but thousands of others sprawled helter-skelter on the lawn, will find themselves out of luck if it rains.

First inaugurated in the summer of 1934, the festivals have been held annually, each time drawing a bigger crowd. In the winter of 1936, the estate of Tanglewood, where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote the classic "Tanglewood Tales," was presented to the symphony orchestra by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. Highest attendance was in 1941, when a crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for nine concerts given over a period of three weeks.

◆ ◆ ◆

Talented Faculty.

Operating concurrently with the festival is the Berkshire Music Center, which opens for six weeks July 1. It is a unique school for performance of music, and is designed to polish young musicians about to become professional.

The faculty of the school is composed of the nation's big names in music. Among them are Composer Leonard Bernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Aaron Copland and Opera Expert Boris Goldolvsky.

Also under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky, the center opens its doors to students for the first time since 1942. The opera department of the school is planning to perform Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," which was composed for Tanglewood and produced in England last summer.

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN

JUN 2 1946

Recordings

Tanglewood is a pleasant estate on a lake near Lenox, Mass., which first made history when the novelist Nathaniel Hawthorne named a collection of his stories, written there, "Tanglewood Tales." The big house in the trees reappeared in the public eye in 1940, as scene of the Berkshire Music Festivals, at which Dr. Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra established an unsurpassed standard of summer performances of great music. It was here, then, that RCA Victor's recording engineers waxed Dr. Koussevitzky's and the Boston Symphony's much-admired performance of the J. S. Bach "Brandenburg Concertos No. 3 and 4. These were dedicated by composer in 1719 to the Margrave of Brandenburg, whose estate subsequently evaluated the originals at four groschen (eight cents). Delighted at the opportunity to work with one of the world's great orchestras in an acoustically perfect wooden concert hall, RCA Victor's expert engineers outdid themselves; the result is an album (four 12-inch records) which no musically literate person can afford not to own.

Popular recordings by Columbia include those by Kay Kyser and his orchestra; Tommy Tucker and his musicians and Happy Perryman and his Happy-Go-Lucky Mountaineers.

Kyser's new song, "Love on a Greyhound Bus," has a vocal chorus by Lucyann Polk and the Campus Kids, who have an interesting song experience as they travel along the countryside. On the reverse, that popular singer, Michael Douglas, sings "All the Time" with the Kyser Orchestra at its best. Both songs are from "No Leave Love."

New songs introduced by Tommy Tucker are tongue-twisters. They are "Ashby de la Zooch" (Castle Abbey), the name of an English town where GI's were stationed during the war. Partner on the Columbia popular disc is "Pin Marin," Mexican version of our "Eenie Meenie" counting song. Don Brown and the Three Two Timers do the pronouncing of these new songs in high style.

Not all folk songs are tragic or sad, as Happy Perruman demonstrates in his new release for Columbia. They are "There's a Palace Down in Dallas" and "Don't Feel Sorry for Me,' with instrumental accompaniment by the Happy-Go-Lucky Mountaineers.

Dinah Shore, Columbia recording artist, has unanimously been voted to receive the American Legion Cinema Post No. 561 (Los Angeles) Distinguished Service Award "in recognition of her many notable wartime services, for tirelessly upholding, fostering and perpetuating the morale of the Nations fighting forces during World War II, and for being an outstanding personal example of the principles America stands for."

This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEXAS
MORNING STAR-TELEGRAM

JUN 2 - 1946

AS THE TURNTABLE TURNS

Stravinsky: "The Song of the Nightingale," symphonic poem, played by Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, Eugene Goossens, conductor. Album of three Victor records (M-DM1041), $4.05.

This, an earlier work, was one of those which established Stravinsky's as a new voice in the world of music. Begun as an opera in 1909, it was condensed into a symphonic poem in 1919, and finally into a ballet in 1920.

Goossens conducted it in London as a ballet for Diaghileff, and reads it with authority and full knowledge of the score.

SCHUBERT: "Symphony No. 8 in B Minor" (the "Unfinished"), played by Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky. Album of three Victor records (M-DM1039), $4.05.

Replacing an older recording by the same performers, this new waxing of one of the orchestral masterpieces of all time is thoroughly satisfying, barring a little noise in the earlier part.

The tempo of both movements is leisurely and the dynamic scale subdued. The work is played with evident affection and care, and the contemplative, poetic aspects of the music are stressed. A fine feature is the unchanging, unhurried tempo of the slow movement, which rarely is maintained.

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE

JUN 2 - 1946

The Bach Brandenburg concertos numbers 3 and 4 in G and the Brahms Symphony number 1 in C minor are the big news in the latest Victor record releases

The Bach album of four 12-inch records, made by the Boston Symphony with Serge Koussevitzky conducting, is a special treat of great music superbly performed. The Brahms, by the Hollywood Bowl Symphony conducted by Leopold Stokowski, runs to five of the large "deluxe" nonbreakable disks.

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

JUN - 2 1946

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Serge Koussevitsky, conducting at Tanglewood, near Pittsfield, a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony players, at the Berkshire Festival, July 25 to Aug. 11 will present two Bach and Mozart programs July 13 and 14 and the second Bach program July 20 and Sunday afternoon, July 21.

The concerts preserve a custom established in the last two summers when the festival with full orchestra was suspended.

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

PROGRAMS and soloists have been announced for this summer's Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., during July and August. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will give nine concerts in the music shed at Tanglewood.

Soloists will include Eugene List and Claudio Arrau, pianists; Carol Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists. Composers represented will be Beethoven, Rachmaninoff, Moussorgsky, Wagner, Mendelssohn, Aaron Copland, Prokofieff, Schumann, Richard Strauss, Bohuslav Martinu, Tchaikovsy, Randall Thompson and Brahms. The programs of the second of the three weeks will be devoted entirely to the works of Brahms.

[141]

This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE

UN 2 - 1946

n Brandenburg concertos and 4 in G and the Brahms number 1 in C minor are ws in the latest Victor rec-es
ch album of four 12-inch nade by the Boston Symth Serge Koussevitzky cons a special treat of great perbly performed. The by the Hollywood Bowl Symnducted by Leopold Stokowto five of the large "deluxe" able disks.

This Clipping From
DGEPORT, CONN.
POST

- 2 1946

ERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Koussevitzky, conducting glewood, near Pittsfield, a r orchestra of Boston Sym-players, at the Berkshire
, July 25 to Aug. 11 will two Bach and Mozart prouly 13 and 14 and the sec-ch program July 20 and afternoon, July 21.
concerts preserve a custom hed in the last two summers e festival with full orches-suspended.

LE TURNS

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

JUN - 2 1946

OGRAMS and soloists have announced for this summer's hire Festival at Lenox, during July and August.
oston Symphony Orchestra, Koussevitzky, conductor, give nine concerts in the shed at Tanglewood.
ists will include Eugene List laudio Arrau, pianists; Carol contralto; Gregor Piatigor-cellist, and Mischa Elman rica Morini, violinists. Com-represented will be Bee-
, Rachmaninoff, Moussorg-Vagner, Mendelssohn, Aaron
d, Prokofieff, Schumann, d Strauss, Bohuslav Mar-Tchaikovsy, Randall Thompnd Brahms. The programs second of the three weeks e devoted entirely to the of Brahms.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

JUN 2 - 1946

Books And The Arts

By W. G. ROGERS

New York June 1 - (AP) - John McNulty's short stories have just been published under the title, "Third Avenue, New York." They are about the seamy side of life, and so the publisher threw a cocktail party for author, friends and critics . . . two groups identical in this case . . . in a saloon on the East Side of town.

There was nothing seamy about party or drinks. The only one who perhaps didn't have a good time was the author who, in the midst of being introduced to everybody and his cousin, asked me in a whisper: "What's the guy who wrote the book supposed to do at these parties?"

He's an old AP man, though not so old but what he took up horseback riding for the first time last winter on an Arizona ranch. That explained why a man supposed to haunt barrooms had a rich, red complexion instead of a pasty one. He got along all right, he said, because the horse was old, too.

W. H. Hindle, foreign editor for Holt is in Europe to contact authors . . . Robert K Straus is in England arranging for Omnibook distribution . . . Krishnalal Shridharani, author of "The Mahatma and the World," will return to India in July . . . Earl Parker Hanson, editor of "The New World Guides to the Latin American Republics," recently returned here from Liberia says Duell, Sloan & Pearce.

ART

"I used to want to be going abroad all the time, until I finally realized I could see Europe's people and color up and down 59th Street," says Lionel Reiss in explanation of his current show, "Manhattan Crosstown," in the Associated American Artists Galleries.

Born in Austria, Reiss was brought to this country when he was four, and has made New York his home. He has a studio between Second and Third Avenues on 59th St., and for five years he has been busy painting the hustle and bustle of this thoroughfare from the East River to the Hudson.

The nearly 40 oils and water colors have as subjects crowds pushing up an elevated stairway, a newsstand, men thumbing books at a second hand stall, boys in a roughhouse, a sidewalk in the rain, a man feeding piegons, cabbies waiting for fares, the big sweep of the Queensboro bridge:

The gray-haired artist talked gladly about his work and lovingly about 59th St. Reiss likes to point in series; his first big project was a study of the Jews which he developed into a book, and he has another in mind that would take him abroad several months. He got his start iin commerical art. . . . "You have to make a living" . . .but George Bellows told him to quit and he's been making a go of it in his chosen field ever since.

MUSIC

If you haven't played Chopsticks, you've certainly heard it, but it's a safe bet you've never seen it in print. This sad lack is now remedied by the publisher John Lee Burton, who does an eight-page version with variations in music-box, tango, jazz, lament and other moods by himself and Irwin Heilner.

Unable to discover the origin of what is perhaps the most popular piano piece of all time, he learned at least that the melody is in the public domain. Music teachers like his edition, he reports, and he is having fun out of a business venture.

The Bach Brandenburg concertos numbers 3 and 4 in G and the Brahms symphony number 1 in C minor are the big news in the latest victor record releases.

The Bach album of four 12-inch records, made by the Boston Symphony with Serge Koussevitzky conducting, is a special treat of great music superbly performed. The Brahms, by the Hollywood Bowl Symphony conducted by Leopold Stokowski, runs to five of the large "de luxe" non - breakable disks.

This Clipping From MONMOUTH, ILL.
REVIEW ATLAS

JUN 3 1946

—o—

Russell Baldwin furnishes the following news of recordings: Schubert's B Minor Symphony, though actually only half finished, is one of the most beautiful works ever written for orchestra. The lovely themes are among the best known in all classical literature, and the work has been a favorite since its first performance in 1865. It has been recorded many times, but there is ample justification for another recording when it is as good as the new one by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky.

—o—

In "The Song of the Nightingale," Stravinsky's score tells the story of a Chinese emperor long ago, who made his favorite nightingale Chief Court Musician. At the height of her popularity, a mechanical songstress arrives from the Emperor of Japan. The nightingale flies away, but returns when the Japanese toy suffers a mechanical collapse The score is fascinating and the Cincinnati Orchestra under Eugene Goosens gives a good performance.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

JUN 2 - 1946

MUSIC'S OVERTONES

Two Recordings of Boston Symphony Highlight of Recent Victor Output

By MILES KASTENDIECK

Having splurged in April, Victor has restrained itself a bit in its May and June recordings. But for each month the key album has been a superior one. It happens that in both cases they are performances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led inevitably by Koussevitzky. One of them, Aaron Copland's "Appalachian Spring," is representative of the best in the contemporary field, while the other, Bach's Brandenburg Concertos No. 3 and 4, is representative of some of the finest at the beginning of the classic period.

Enthusiasm for Copland's music written for the Martha Graham ballet sprang up immediately at the time of the first performances. It increased this season when the music was made into an orchestral suite and sought a right to be considered as concert music. Succeeding performances only increase the enthusiasm as the appreciation grows. This is contemporary music at its finest and Copland at the peak of his creative writing.

As the years have tempered Copland's style of writing, they have also increased his ability to express emotional values. This work is so outstanding because it has warmth and sweetness. Copland has gone beyond the stage of making an effort; he now expresses the enrichment of experience. The quality is sustained throughout all the eight sections of the Suite. There is a strong, pristine flavor; there is a quiet, haunting beauty; there is a real enfoldment of personality. Copland has caught the idea that Martha Graham had when she saw beyond the title into the meaning of Spring in the lives of maturing youth in a pioneering world. His style and her style appear to grow out of each other. The result is a work of art entirely American.

Keenly appreciative of contemporary values and peculiarly sensitive to Copland's music, Koussevitzky fashions a singularly engrossing performance. The Boston Symphony responds accordingly. The album is one of the prize releases of the year.

The Bach of the Brandenburg Concertos is too familiar to call for an extended discussion. The music is set forth with discerning attention to the rhythmic life of the scores and geared to the chamber music style. Music lovers will be delighted to have this latest recording of works that should be considered standard repertory.

There is an album now available called "Kreisler Program," in which will be found: "The Old Refrain," "Miniature Viennese March," "Rondino on a Theme by Beethoven," "Midnight Bells," "Londonderry Air" and "Hungarian Rondo (Haydn-Kreisler)." The typical Kreisler performance infuses this album with the customary magic. Less attractive perhaps are the accompaniments of the Victor Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Donald Voorhees, who sees to it that the music is quite juicy.

Still another album is devoted to Strauss Polkas. Played by the Boston "Pops" Orchestra conducted by Arthur Fiedler, they enjoy all the infectious spirit associated with the gaiety of this dance. The album serves as a refresher course, keeping the heart young and the step lighter than usual.

Several single records deserve mention for their general excelence. Licia Albanese, soprano, and Robert Merrill, baritone, sing Verdi's "Ah! Dite Alla Giovine" and "Imponete" from Act II of "Traviata" effectively. Marian Anderson sings Schumann's "Der Nussbaum" and "Stille Tranen" in her own inimitable way. William Primrose, the violist, plays Schubert's Litany, and Bach's "Come, Sweet Death" expressively.

This Clipping From
MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS

JUN 3 - 1946

J. S. Bach: Brandenburg Concertos No. 3 and 4: Prelude in E (arranged by Pick-Maniagalli): Boston Symphony Orchestra, Koussevitsky, conductor, four 12-inch Victor records DM-1050.

Few compositions of Bach's have attained such universal popularity as his Brandenburg Concertos. Six concertos in all—each representing the purest form of polyphonic music. This present recording of numbers 3 and 4 is significant in the fact that they were recorded at Tanglewood near Lenox, Mass., the site of the famous Berkshire Music Festivals, held under the distinguished Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Together with the excellent interpretations and the fine accoustical qualities, they emerge beautifully done and well recorded. They deserve to be on your shelves.

* * *

Schumann: Der Nussbaum; Stille Tranen: Marian Anderson, contralto. Franz Rupp, pianist. One 12-inch Victor record, 11-9173.

Few composers have captured the art of lieder as superbly as the romanticist, Robert Schumann. Here's a splendid example of his prolific writing recorded by the fine lieder interpreter, Marian Anderson. "Stille Tranen" (Hidden Tears) is a melancholy song, and together with the equally sensitive "Der Nussbaum", this disc is a gem and should be a happy addition to your library. Franz Rupp supplies refined accompaniments.

* * *

Ibert: Escales (Port of Calls): New York Philharmonic Symphony, Artur Rodzinski, conductor. Two 12-inch Columbia records MX-263.

* * *

From the pen of Jacques Ibert, French composer, comes this impressionistic music portrait of a Mediterranean cruise. "Escales" is divided into three sections — "Palermo," "Tunis-Nefta" and "Valencia"—each containing lovely melodies characteristic of the screen. "Palermo" is depicted by a broad, calm Italian melody; "Tunis-Nefta" with an oriental flavor; and "Valencia" is somewhat of a Spanish mood. The Philharmonic under Rodzinski freely interprets this music. The lyric lines are particularly beautifully done with calls for Harold Gomberg for his oboe solo. However, one is inclined to recommend the album for large machines as the percussion section definitely has excess vibration.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUN 3 1946

To Give Programs Of Bach and Mozart

Koussevitzky Plans Presentations for July 13 and 14 and July 20 and 21 at Tanglewood.

Serge Koussevitzky, conducting at Tanglewood a chamber consisting of Boston Symphony players, will present two programs (each repeated) devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart. These concerts will take place before the Berkshire Festival by the full orchestra, July 25-August 11, and will be given in the theater-concert hall. The concerts preserve a custom established in the last two summers at Tanglewood, when the Festival by the full orchestra was necessarily suspended.

Dr. Koussevitzky will present the first Bach-Mozart program on Saturday evening, July 13 and Sunday afternoon, July 14, the second on Saturday evening, July 20 and Sunday afternoon, July 21.

First program: Mozart, "Symphony in B-flat," No. 33 (K. 319); Mozart, "Adagio ma non troppo" from the "Quintet in G Minor" for Strings (K. 516); Bach, "Brandenburg Concerto," No. 3 in G major, for string orchestra; Bach, "Brandenburg Concerto," No. 5 in D major; Mozart, "Serenade in B-flat" for wind instruments (K. 361).

Second pogram: Bach, "Brandenburg Concerto," No. 2 in F major; Mozart. "Violin Concerto" in A major, No. 5 (K. 219), soloist, William Kroll; Bach, "Suite (Overture) in D major," No. 4; Mozart, Symphony, "Jupiter", No 41 (K. 551).

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUN 2 - 1946

Music, Drama, Arts and Sports To Be Resumed in Berkshires

Hotel Reservations Indicate Return of Resort Towns to Pre-War Scale; Pittsfield Has Polo Team and Professional Baseball Club

[illegible] Mass., June 1.—Preparations are being [illegible] towns of western Massachusetts for a [illegible] scale of pre-war activities in music, drama, [illegible]ations [illegible] tour- [illegible] York [illegible] miles [illegible] trout [illegible]wed in [illegible] in- [illegible] bank- [illegible] of [illegible] pro- [illegible] for [illegible] in [illegible] League.

At [illegible] Hillsdale, Pittsfield, [illegible] Mrs. Donald [illegible] the Pittsfield Polo Club will again play for the first time in five years. Organized in 1930 by the late Zenas Marshall Crane, of Dalton, the club before the war won the W. Cameron Forbes cup. Present officers are: President, Mr. Carey Russell Kinney; vice-president, Mr. Zenas Crane Colt; treasurer, Mr. Gardner S. Morse; secretary, Mr. Carey Titus Kinney, who will have a string of polo ponies on a farm he has just bought in Stockbridge. Mr. Hale Holden jr. and Mr. William Thompson Rice are directors with the executive officers.

Extensive improvements are being made at Tanglewood, midway between Lenox and Stockbridge, for the approaching summer of music, which will include nine concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra over three week ends, starting July 26. Ventfort Hall, onetime Lenox summer home of the late George Hall Morgan, first cousin of J. Pierpont Morgan the elder, will be a rendezvous for 200 students at Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's summer school.

Berkshire Playhouse, Stockbridge, one of the first summer theaters, will be reopened June 24.

Mr. Leighton Rollins is establishing at Astalula, the former Gaston Drake place at Lenox, the Rollins Theater School and he has rented as an adjunct the near-by Orchard, summer home of Mrs. Henry Hollister Pease.

Lenox Club was opened for its eighty-first year with the Memorial Day luncheon. Thursday night dinners will be resumed at the club.

This is the fiftieth year of golf in Berkshire where fourteen courses furnish a wide variety of terrain from Great Barrington to Williamstown. The Stockbridge Golf Club, Mr. Lowell M. Clucas, president, will hold in July its fiftieth annual golf tournament. The first two Stockbridge cups were won by Walter Tuckerman and Malcolm McBurney.

Sunday afternoon sailboat races on Lake Mahkeenac at Stockbridge will be revived by Mr. and Mrs. William E. Dodge Stokes and others. Parked at Mahkeenac Boat Club, Mr. John Shepard jr., president, are a number of small Scot craft, blue ribbon winners of pre-war days.

This Clipping From
ADVERTISING AGE
CHICAGO, ILL.
JUN 3 - 1946

42

Allis-Chalmers Shifts to Mass Copy Approach

Drops Technical Campaign in Favor of Consumer Appeal

Milwaukee, May 28.—Probably no other corporation in the country has the size and range of products turned out by Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Company. In 1939, while the term still had complimentary elements, Fortune called the company the "Krupp Works of America." It is the largest corporation in Wisconsin, its sales amount to more than $400,000,000 annually, and the public knew practically nothing about it. Until last fall, that is.

A. R. Tofte

Last fall, A. R. Tofte took over as advertising and public relations director for Allis-Chalmers, coming up from inside the corporation. For many years, Mr. Tofte had felt that the technical copy employed by the company—livened only by its institutional advertising during the war years—was not sufficient to bring the story of the company's products to the public.

Another hitch in the company's technical advertising policy lay in the field. There A-C salesmen reported that plant engineers were sold on A-C equipment, but that top management, which was not being reached by A-C advertising, was indifferent.

There was, naturally, some opposition in switching from straight technical copy to the new approach. And when the copy core developed, a slogan which declares "One of the Big Three in Electric Power Equipment—Biggest of All in Range of Industrial Products," there developed sizable opposition. The company knew that General Electric Company and Westinghouse Electric Corporation were biting large segments out of the electric power equipment market, but they were opposed to admitting it in copy. Eventually, however, Mr. Tofte and the agency, Compton Advertising, won out. The slogan was adopted.

Diversity Played Up

The campaign emphasizes the number and diversity of Allis-Chalmers products, and centers on their relation to the public. In copy headed "Never out of the woods—and glad of it," the company discusses the many applications of wood, adding "you see . . . the hand of Allis-Chalmers making machines and equipment that help to expand the mighty wood industry—that enrich your life by bringing the new [illegible] wood closer to you!

"How big is Allis-Chalmers [illegible] this picture? Not only Amer[illegible] No. 1 builder of sawmill ma[illegible]ery—but important source [illegible] barkers, chip screens, kilns [illegible] allied equipment for [illegible] paper mills—one of the nat[illegible] leading producers of processing machinery for the chemical industries!"

With this copy, A-C expects to make the public realize the extent of its production for industry. With only one of its hundreds of products, tractors, does the consumer meet the company directly.

Uses Two Product Appeals

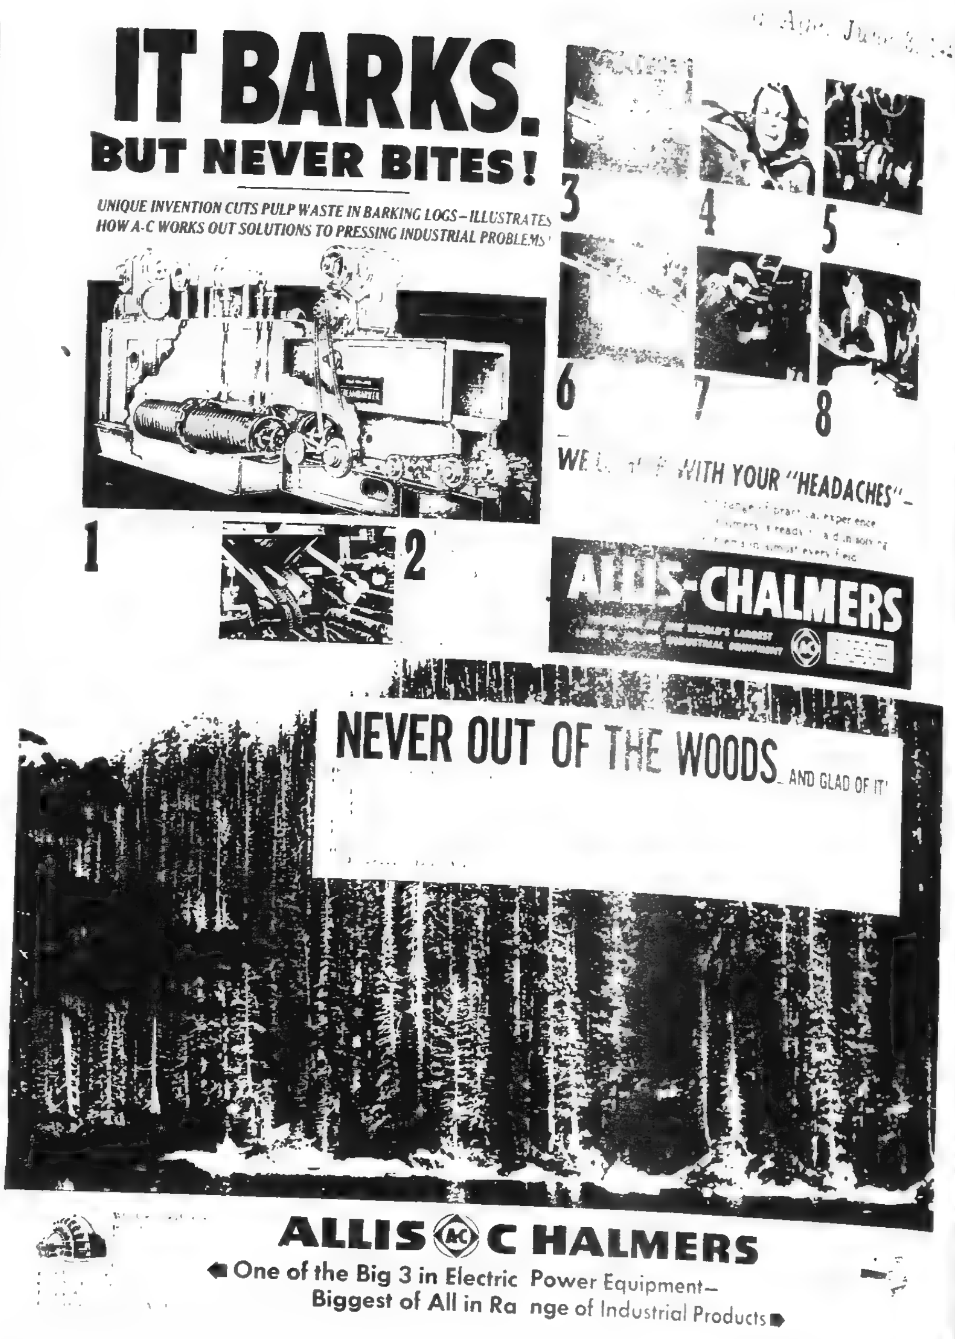
In [illegible] the spreads for Business Week, Science Illustrated and Time (including air express [illegible] editions), as well as [illegible] pages appearing in the Chicago Journal of Commerce [illegible] Wall Street Journal [illegible] the [illegible]ation of the [illegible] [illegible]een the [illegible] ture [illegible] copy—such as [illegible] [illegible] and ele[illegible] equip[illegible]

The [illegible] basic [illegible] on the [illegible]any's [illegible] the B[illegible] Symphony [illegible] The [illegible] marketing [illegible] for [illegible] commercials [illegible] which [illegible] equip[illegible] the [illegible] makes [illegible] The [illegible] industrial [illegible]

[illegible]stically Received

[illegible] campa[illegible] Mr. T[illegible] was [illegible] Partic[illegible] mana[illegible] offices [illegible] aimed [illegible] had n[illegible] compa[illegible] becaus[illegible] presti[illegible]

Nex[illegible] pany's [illegible] uct i[illegible] is sti[illegible] manufa[illegible] spen[illegible] in pro[illegible]



Age, June 3, '4
IT BARKS.
BUT NEVER BITES!
UNIQUE INVENTION CUTS PULP WASTE IN BARKING LOGS—ILLUSTRATES HOW A-C WORKS OUT SOLUTIONS TO PRESSING INDUSTRIAL PROBLEMS
1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
WE [illegible] WITH YOUR "HEADACHES"—
ALLIS-CHALMERS
NEVER OUT OF THE WOODS AND GLAD OF IT
ALLIS-CHALMERS
One of the Big 3 in Electric Power Equipment—
Biggest of All in Range of Industrial Products

OLD AND NEW—Here Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co. switches its copy theme from industrial, technical selling (such as that shown above) to copy calculated to interest consumers in the benefits received from the wide range of industrial products made by the company (at bottom).

THIS CLIPPING FROM
Theatre Arts Monthly
NEW YORK CITY

MAY -- 1946

IN THE BERKSHIRES, Serge Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony Orchestra present their Tanglewood Festival from July 1 to August 11, the first part given over to invitation performances of chamber music, two Bach-Mozart programs and a production of Benjamin Britten's opera, Peter Grimes, and the second part from July 25 to August 11 offering three week-end series of concerts including an all-Brahms.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
JUN 4 - 1946

There was a time when string players sent to Europe for their strings as the quality was superior to those manufactured in this country. Apparently that day is past—at least it is reported that Arturo Toscanini took two sets of violin strings for each of the La Scala players when he left to conduct the famous orchestra.

Two programs (each repeated) devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart will be presented in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood on July 13 and 14 and July 20 and 21 by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony players conducted by Serge Koussevitzky.

The concerts will preserve the custom established in the last two summers at Tanglewood and will precede the Berkshire Festival by the full orchestra which will be held from July 25 through Aug. 11.

Dr. Koussevitzky will direct the first Bach-Mozart program on Saturday evening, July 13 and repeat it on Sunday afternoon, July 14. The second program will be given on Saturday evening, July 20, and Sunday afternoon, July 21.

The first program will include the Mozart Symphony in B flat, No. 33 (K. 319); Mozart, Adagio ma non troppo from the Quintet in G minor for string (K. 516); Bach, Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G major for string orchestra; Bach, Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 in D major; Mozart, Serenade in B flat for Wind Instruments (K. 361).

The second program will include the Bach, Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 in F Major; Mozart, Violin Concerto in A major, No. 5 (K. 219) with William Kroll as soloist; Bach, Suite (Overture) in D major No. 4; Mozart, Symphony ("Jupiter") No. 41 (K. 551).

RECORDS: COPLAND WORK

By MARK A. SCHUBART

THE suite from Aaron Copland's score for the Martha Graham ballet "Appalachian Spring" has been recorded for Victor by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra (Victor, DM-1046, three twelve-inch records), and it is refreshing to encounter in this album a contemporary work receiving the same care and devotion that would be accorded a Mozart concerto or a Beethoven symphony. Much misunderstanding concerning our new music has been spread by lacklustre, slipshod and insensitive interpretation, and it is in combating this attitude that Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra have made such a monumental contribution to the art.

The score itself is one of Copland's most enchanting. It is rich in that peculiar brand of Americanism which Copland developed and which dominates so many of his works—especially "Billy the Kid." It is American by virtue of its generous use of a kind of extract or essence of folk-music, as well as for its outspoken sentimentality. Copland is one of the most expert orchestrators in this country today, and the possessor of one of the most remarkable senses of rhythm. Both these pleasant traits find ample outlet in "Appalachian Spring." Some portions of the score—particularly the slow opening and closing sections—seem somewhat overlong. But this is stage music and mood music, and these blemishes do nothing to impair the effectiveness and eloquence of the music.

Dr. Koussevitzky's reading is, of course, both sympathetic and colorful. A perusal of the score indicates that he has chosen to take some of the slower portions of the music at a more deliberate pace than the composer has indicated, but in a new and untried work, such experiments—especially when the results are not harmful—are more than justifiable. The orchestra plays with its accustomed virtuosity and the recording is resonant and clear.

This Clipping From
ALIQUIPPA, PA.
TIMES

JUN 5 - 1946

Music Festival To Open July 25 In Berkshires

By EVELYN BROWN
United Press Staff Correspondent

LENOX, Mass (UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala prewar style at Tanglewood, in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate—are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However, conductor Serge Koussevitzky has included the works of modern composers, among whom are Rachmaninoff, Copland, Shostakovitch and Martinu.

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Long-time favorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales," was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

Nearly a month before the o ening of the festival the Ber shire music center opens for s weeks beginning July 1. Uniqu in purpose, the school giv young musicians a chance to p lish their performance before e tering the professional fields.

The faculty of the school i composed of the nation's bi names in music, including com poser Leonard Bernstein, Grego Piatigorsky, Aaron Copland an opera expert Boris Goldovsky.

The school was closed durin the war, but now has accepte more than 300 students in variou departments such as composition instrumentation, conducting, an opera. The opera department plans a performance of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," a piece that was composed for Tanglewood and produced in England last summer.

Tanglewood Times
ON SALE
at Tanglewood Music Shop
and on NEWSSTANDS
10c

Eagle June 25

This Clipping From
MAYFIELD, KY.
MESSENGER

JUN 5 - 1946

OFF THE Records

Stokowski Directs Brahms Number

Another album of the plastic recordings having the pleasing quality of non-breakable is released—Brahms symphony No. 1 with Stokowski directing the Hollywood Bowl orchestra. This vigorous and sweeping work, reminiscent of Beethoven but without his clear cut thematic material has been called by certain who do not care for Brahms "Beethoven 10th".

This technically-superior recording points up superbly the dramatic first movement and tender andante, the third—an allegretto, and the fourth with its familiar theme for the entire work which shows most closely the influence of the elder composer. Composed when Brahms was 43 years old, after working on it for 20 years, the number is forceful and profound. Surface noise is reduced to a minimum and reproduction is rich, vibrant, true.

Orchestral discs of fairly recent release include Grofe's "Grand Canyon Suite" directed by the NBC under Toscanini (Victor M-DM-4 discs). Also in demand is the ever-popular "Unfinished symphony" with Koussevitzky directing the Boston orchestra. (Victor M-DM-1039, three discs). The incomparable Lily Pons has a collection called "Waltz Album" with selections from Herbert, Strauss, Howard and Gounod. "I'll Follow My Secret Heart," "Fledermaus Fantasy" and the Romeo and Juliet Waltz are included.

[143]

This Clipping From
ADVERTISING AGE
CHICAGO, ILL.
JUN 3 - 1946

42

Allis-Chalmers Shifts to Mass Copy Approach

Drops Technical Campaign in Favor of Consumer Appeal

Milwaukee, May 28.—Probably no other corporation in the country has the size and range of products turned out by Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Company. In 1939, while the term still had complimentary elements, Fortune called the company the "Krupp Works of America." It is the largest corporation in Wisconsin, its sales amount to more than $400,000,000 annually, and the public knew practically nothing about it. Until last fall, that is.

A. R. Tofte

Last fall, A. R. Tofte took over as advertising and public relations director for Allis-Chalmers, coming up from inside the corporation. For many years, Mr. Tofte had felt that the technical copy employed by the company—livened only by its institutional advertising during the war years—was not sufficient to bring the story of the company's products to the public.

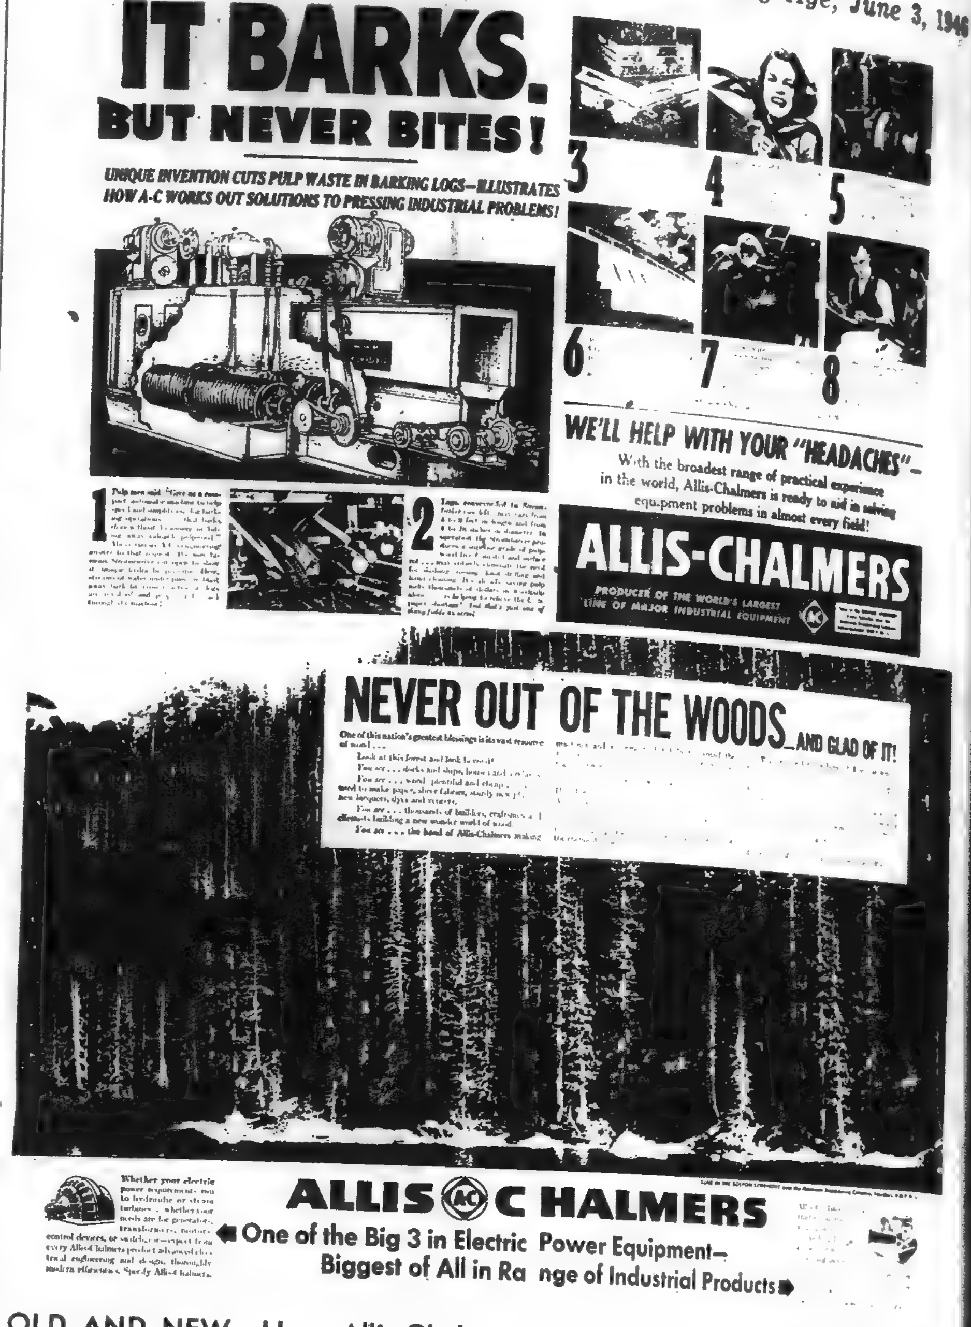
Another hitch in the company's technical advertising policy lay in the field. There A-C salesmen reported that plant engineers were sold on A-C equipment, but that top management, which was not being reached by A-C advertising, was indifferent.

There was, naturally, some opposition in switching from straight technical copy to the new approach. And when the copy core developed, a slogan which declares "One of the Big Three in Electric Power Equipment—Biggest of All in Range of Industrial Products," there developed sizable opposition. The company knew that General Electric Company and Westinghouse Electric Corporation were biting large segments out of the electric power equipment market, but they were opposed to admitting it in copy. Eventually, however, Mr. Tofte and the agency, Compton Advertising, won out. The slogan was adopted.

Diversity Played Up

The campaign emphasizes the number and diversity of Allis-Chalmers products, and centers

Advertising Age, June 3, 1946



IT BARKS. BUT NEVER BITES!
UNIQUE INVENTION CUTS PULP WASTE IN BARKING LOGS—ILLUSTRATES HOW A-C WORKS OUT SOLUTIONS TO PRESSING INDUSTRIAL PROBLEMS!
1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
WE'LL HELP WITH YOUR "HEADACHES"—
With the broadest range of practical experience in the world, Allis-Chalmers is ready to aid in solving equipment problems in almost every field!
ALLIS-CHALMERS
PRODUCER OF THE WORLD'S LARGEST LINE OF MAJOR INDUSTRIAL EQUIPMENT
NEVER OUT OF THE WOODS...AND GLAD OF IT!
ALLIS-CHALMERS
One of the Big 3 in Electric Power Equipment—Biggest of All in Range of Industrial Products

OLD AND NEW—Here Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co. switches its copy theme from industrial, technical selling (such as that shown above) to copy calculated to interest consumers in the benefits received from the wide range of industrial products made by the company (at bottom).

on their relation to the public. In copy headed "Never out of the woods—and glad of it," the company discusses the many applications of wood, adding "you see . . . the hand of Allis-Chalmers making machines and equipment that help to expand the mighty wood industry—that enrich your life by bringing the new world of wood closer to you!

"How big is Allis-Chalmers in this picture? Not only America's No. 1 builder of sawmill machinery—but important source of barkers, chip screens, kilns and allied equipment for pulp and paper mills—one of the nation's leading producers of processing machinery for the chemical industries!"

With this copy, A-C expects to make the public realize the the extent of its production for industry. With only one of its hundreds of products, tractors, does the consumer meet the company directly.

Uses Two Product Appeals

In each of the spreads for Business Week, Science Illustrated and Time (including air express and overseas editions), as well as the half pages appearing in the Chicago Journal of Commerce and Wall Street Journal, the lower portion of the ad is divided between the product featured in the copy—such as lumber equipment—and electrical equipment.

The same basic format is used on the company's broadcast of the Boston Symphony over ABC. The program's makeup allows for two commercials, one of which is devoted to electrical equipment, the other to one of the fields for which the company makes industrial products.

The company will continue its technical copy in industrial papers, however, in each field where its products are used.

Enthusiastically Received

Initial response to the new campaign, which broke last month, was enthusiastic, Mr. Tofte said. Particularly happy were the sales managers of the company's branch offices, primarily because it was aimed at the level which they felt had not been reached by previous company advertising, and secondly because it gave them added prestige.

Next year will be the company's centennial, and the product it started with—millstones—is still one of the hundreds it manufactures. The company spent approximately $2,000,000 in promotional activities last year

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM
Theatre Arts Monthly
NEW YORK CITY

MAY --. 1946

IN THE BERKSHIRES, Serge Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony Orchestra present their Tanglewood Festival from July 1 to August 11, the first part given over to invitation performances of chamber music, two Bach-Mozart programs and a production of Benjamin Britten's opera, Peter Grimes, and the second part from July 25 to August 11 offering three week-end series of concerts including an all-Brahms.

RECORDS: COPLAND WORK

By MARK A. SCHUBART

THE suite from Aaron Copland's score for the Martha Graham ballet "Appalachian Spring" has been recorded for Victor by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra (Victor, DM-1046, three twelve-inch records), and it is refreshing to encounter in this album a contemporary work receiving the same care and devotion that would be accorded a Mozart concerto or a Beethoven symphony. Much misunderstanding concerning our new music has been spread by lacklustre, slipshod and insensitive interpretation, and it is in combating this attitude that Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra have made such a monumental contribution to the art.

The score itself is one of Copland's most enchanting. It is rich in that peculiar brand of Americanism which Copland developed and which dominates so many of his works—especially "Billy the Kid." It is American by virtue of its generous use of a kind of extract or essence of folk-music, as well as for its outspoken sentimentality. Copland is one of the most expert orchestrators in this country today, and the possessor of one of the most remarkable senses of rhythm. Both these pleasant traits find ample outlet in "Appalachian Spring." Some portions of the score—particularly the slow opening and closing sections—seem somewhat overlong. But this is stage music and mood music, and these blemishes do nothing to impair the effectiveness and eloquence of the music.

Dr. Koussevitzky's reading is, of course, both sympathetic and colorful. A perusal of the score indicates that he has chosen to take some of the slower portions of the music at a more deliberate pace than the composer has indicated, but in a new and untried work, such experiments—especially when the results are not harmful—are more than justifiable. The orchestra plays with its accustomed virtuosity and the recording is resonant and clear.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
JUN 4 - 1946

There was a time when string players sent to Europe for their strings as the quality was superior to those manufactured in this country. Apparently that day is past—at least it is reported that Arturo Toscanini took two sets of violin strings for each of the La Scala players when he left to conduct the famous orchestra.

Two programs (each repeated) devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart will be presented in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood on July 13 and 14 and July 20 and 21 by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony players conducted by Serge Koussevitzky.

The concerts will preserve the custom established in the last two summers at Tanglewood and will precede the Berkshire Festival by the full orchestra which will be held from July 25 through Aug. 11.

Dr. Koussevitzky will direct the first Bach-Mozart program on Saturday evening, July 13 and repeat it on Sunday afternoon, July 14. The second program will be given on Saturday evening, July 20, and Sunday afternoon, July 21.

The first program will include the Mozart Symphony in B flat, No. 33 (K. 319); Mozart, Adagio ma non troppo from the Quintet in G minor for string (K. 516); Bach, Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G major for string orchestra; Bach, Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 in D major; Mozart, Serenade in B flat for Wind Instruments (K. 361).

The second program will include the Bach, Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 in F Major; Mozart, Violin Concerto in A major, No. 5 (K. 219) with William Kroll as soloist; Bach, Suite (Overture) in D major No. 4; Mozart, Symphony ("Jupiter") No. 41 (K. 551).

This Clipping From
ALIQUIPPA, PA.
TIMES
JUN 5 - 1946

Music Festival To Open July 25 In Berkshires

By EVELYN BROWN
United Press Staff Correspondent

LENOX, Mass (UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala prewar style at Tanglewood, in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate—are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However, conducter Serge Koussevitzky has included the works of modern composers, among whom are Rachmaninoff, Copland, Shostakovitch and Martinu.

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Longtime favorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales," was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

Nearly a month before the o ening of the festival the Ber shire music center opens for s weeks beginning July 1. Uniq in purpose, the school giv young musicians a chance to p lish their performance before e tering the professional fields.

The faculty of the school composed of the nation's bi names in music, including com poser Leonard Bernstein, Grego Piatigorsky, Aaron Copland an opera expert Boris Goldovsky.

The school was closed durin the war, but now has accepte more than 300 students in variou departments such as compositio instrumentation, conducting, an opera. The opera departmen plans a performance of Benjami Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," a piece that was composed fo Tanglewood and produced in Eng land last summer.

Tanglewood Times
ON SALE
at Tanglewood Music Shop
and on NEWSSTANDS
10c

EAGLE
JUNE 25

This Clipping From
MAYFIELD, KY.
MESSENGER
JUN 5 - 1946

OFF THE Records

Stokowski Directs Brahms Number

Another album of the plastic recordings having the pleasing quality of non-breakable is released—Brahms symphony No. 1 with Stokowski directing the Hollywood Bowl orchestra. This vigorous and sweeping work, reminiscent of Beethoven but without his clear cut thematic material has been called by certain who do not care for Brahms "Beethoven 10th".

This technically-superior recording points up superbly the dramatic first movement and tender andante, the third—an allegretto, and the fourth with its familiar theme for the entire work which shows most closely the influence of the elder composer. Composed when Brahms was 43 years old, after working on it for 20 years, the number is forceful and profound. Surface noise is reduced to a minimum and reproduction is rich, vibrant, true.

Orchestral discs of fairly recent release include Grofe's "Grand Canyon Suite" directed by the NBC under Toscanini (Victor M-DM-4 discs). Also in demand is the ever-popular "Unfinished symphony" with Koussevitzky directing the Boston orchestra. (Victor M-DM-1039, three discs). The incomparable Lily Pons has a collection called "Waltz Album" with selections from Herbert, Strauss, Howard and Gounod. "I'll Follow My Secret Heart," "Fledermaus Fantasy" and the Romeo and Juliet Waltz are included.

bang

Official Publication of NEWSPAPER GUILD of BOSTON

"Which one is Fiedler?"

SOUVENIR PROGRAM EDITION NEWSPAPER GUILD NIGHT May 24, 1946

GUILD GOES TO POPS - TELLS ALL

SUMMER STOCK TO SYMPHONY HALL SPELLS HUMPHREY SAGA

By CHARLES L. WHIPPLE

If the Boston Symphony Orchestra is the King of all orchestras, Laning Humphrey is the aristocrat of all press agents — and Newspaper Guild Night at the Pops is a good time to introduce him.

Unknown to the general public but known very well to the working press, he shudders if you call him a press agent. As a matter of fact, he isn't — because the orchestra he represents doesn't need any press agentry. It can stand on its own feet without puffing.

But it does have what people of taste and refinement call "public relations." Hard-boiled newspapermen may say the terms mean the same thing — but even they will agree that Humphrey is tops in whatever it is.

What's in a name?

Humphrey describes himself as "a press contact man." He's in charge of press relations for the Symphony Orchestra and publicity director for the Esplanade Concerts, at whose somewhat hectic birth in 1929 he assisted Arthur Fiedler in an acoustic accomplishment that has since been heard 'round the world.

★ Continued on page Four

READER PLEASE NOTE.... OUR CONSCIENCE IS CLEAR

By JAMES LYONS

Nobody ever accused the American Newspaper Guild of being a cultural or philanthropic organization. Certainly it never subsidized any foundations for the study of biological minutiae or Incan Philology. Here in the Boston Guild, however, we are guilty of being cultural-conscious, because our contribution, along with others, helped to pull last year's Esplanade Concerts out of the red.

This is as it should be. The cynic can sneer, but it is a proven fact that good public relations in this town go hand in hand with the muses, and no individual or group of individuals can hope to find the sympathy or understanding of the public unless due homage is payed to the arts. We needed the profits which accrued to the Local from last year's Guild Pops Night, but Arthur Fiedler's Esplanade Fund needed it even more, so we turned the net receipts right over to him. It was a sensible move and one which need never trouble our collective conscience, because there is no more worthy cause in Boston than the Esplanade Fund.

It is really a sad commentary on Boston folk that they have been

★ Continued on page Four

While the strings are getting an A and the brass is working up a lip — and while you have nothing better to do than gawk around at the strange hats everyone else is wearing — this seems as good a time as any to tell you who and what the sponsoring organization is.

Fiedler Breaks Traditions To Put Pops Over

By CATHERINE COYNE

Arthur Fiedler did NOT originate Pops. But he made Pops what it is today, a spring concert series of two parts classics to one part current music that reaches the great music-minded public untapped by the formal symphony orchestra . . . The formula, now world-known, was evolved from 17 years of experience as conductor here in Symphony Hall and from the experience that was his as a violinist . . . "As a young fellow in the orchestra," he said recently, "I saw that disregard for the public mood did not go here in Boston. I think the public has become more educated to music as a result of children's concerts, good records and the radio. The public definitely is music-minded."

Fiedler hit on the right formula when, as an American planning to entertain Americans, he tossed aside the shackles of tradition to bring gaiety and humor to Americans into this spring concert series . . . Like the wonderfully funny "Jingles All the Way," on

★ Continued on page Three

So, clutching your lapel, we should like to tell you that this is the fourth consecutive year that American Newspaper Guild Night has been held at Pops under the auspices of the Newspaper Guild of Boston, the largest New England affiliate.

Bunch of devils

The Guild is a labor organization. All right, swallow your gum! You shouldn't be chomping Wrigley's in Symphony Hall anyway..

The American Newspaper Guild was formed thirteen years ago, in the depths of the depression, by Heywood Broun and a small group of other top-notch newspapermen. These men had nothing to gain for themselves by forming a labor organization; but they believed that the working newspapermen and women needed a lift; they believed the community needed some help; and they believed that even the Publishers could do with a little assistance.

As their basic tenets they set up the propositions that the Guild should improve the economic status of the working newspaper people, that the Guild should foster "in so far as is possible" constant honesty in the news, and that the Guild should try to improve the standards of Journalism.

Start at zero

You might like to know how well the Guild has done with these pious plans in thirteen years.

★ Continued on page Two

This Clipping From
BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE-TIMES

JUN 6 - 1946

Music Festival In Berkshires Opens July 25

LENOX—(UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens ~~its annual Berkshire music~~ festival July 25 in gala prewar style at Tanglewood, in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week-ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate—are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However conductor Serge Koussevitzky has included the works of modern composers, among whom are Rachmaninoff, Copland, Shostakovitch and Martinu.

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Longtime favorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales," was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

Nearly a month before the opening of the festival the Berkshire music centre opens for six weeks beginning July 1. Unique in purpose the school gives young musicians a chance to polish their performance before entering the professional fields.

The faculty of the school is composed of the nation's big names in music, including composer Leonard Bernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Aaron Copland and opera expert Boris Goldovsky.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

JUN 6 - 1946

Band Members To Have Outing

Visit Boston Saturday For Game and Concert

New Bedford and Fairhaven High School band members will enjoy their annual outing to Boston Saturday.

Four chartered buses will transport the groups, leaving the two High schools at 9 in the morning and meeting at Frates Milk Bottle on Acushnet Avenue to travel together the remainder of the trip.

Upon arrival in Boston, luncheon will be served them in the Old France Restaurant, after which the boys, and some of the girls, will attend the Detroit-Boston baseball game, while the other girls will go to a theater.

The group will assemble for a turkey dinner at 6 in the Old France, after which all will attend the Boston Symphony Pop Concert ~~in Symphony Hall~~ across the street. They will return in the same four buses.

Clarence W. Arey, conductor of the two bands, has made arrangements for the outing, which is the seventh annual. He has obtained front row seats at the concert and has all the tickets necessary for the day's program.

Members of the bands save a dime each week through the school year to help defray cost of the outing. Interested citizens contribute any additional funds needed, Mr. Arey said.

[144]

bang

Official Publication of NEWSPAPER GUILD of BOSTON

"Which one is Fiedler?"

SOUVENIR PROGRAM EDITION NEWSPAPER GUILD NIGHT May 24, 1946

GUILD GOES TO POPS - TELLS ALL

SUMMER STOCK TO SYMPHONY HALL SPELLS HUMPHREY SAGA

By CHARLES L. WHIPPLE

If the Boston Symphony Orchestra is the King of all orchestras, Laning Humphrey is the aristocrat of all press agents — and Newspaper Guild Night at the Pops is a good time to introduce him.

Unknown to the general public but known very well to the working press, he shudders if you call him a press agent. As a matter of fact, he isn't — because the orchestra he represents doesn't need any press agentry. It can stand on its own feet without puffing.

But it does have what people of taste and refinement call "public relations." Hard-boiled newspapermen may say the terms mean the same thing — but even they will agree that Humphrey is tops in whatever it is.

What's in a name?

Humphrey describes himself as "a press contact man." He's in charge of press relations for the Symphony Orchestra and publicity director for the Esplanade Concerts, at whose somewhat hectic birth in 1929 he assisted Arthur Fiedler in an acoustic accomplishment that has since been heard 'round the world.

★ Continued on page Four

READER PLEASE NOTE.... OUR CONSCIENCE IS CLEAR

By JAMES LYONS

Nobody ever accused the American Newspaper Guild of being a cultural or philanthropic organization. Certainly it never subsidized any foundations for the study of biological minutiae or Incan Philology. Here in the Boston Guild, however, we are guilty of being cultural-conscious, because our contribution, along with others, helped to pull last year's Esplanade Concerts out of the red.

This is as it should be. The cynic can sneer, but it is a proven fact that good public relations in this town go hand in hand with the muses, and no individual or group of individuals can hope to find the sympathy or understanding of the public unless due homage is payed to the arts. We needed the profits which accrued to the Local from last year's Guild Pops Night, but Arthur Fiedler's Esplanade Fund needed it even more, so we turned the net receipts right over to him. It was a sensible move and one which need never trouble our collective conscience, because there is no more worthy cause in Boston than the Esplanade Fund.

It is really a sad commentary on Boston folk that they have been

★ Continued on page Four

While the strings are getting an A and the brass is working up a lip — and while you have nothing better to do than gawk around at the strange hats everyone else is wearing — this seems as good a time as any to tell you who and what the sponsoring organization is.

Fiedler Breaks Traditions To Put Pops Over

By CATHERINE COYNE

Arthur Fiedler did NOT originate Pops. But he made Pops what it is today, a spring concert series of two parts classics to one part current music that reaches the great music-minded public untapped by the formal symphony orchestra . . . The formula, now world-known, was evolved from 17 years of experience as conductor here in Symphony Hall and from the experience that was his as a violinist . . . "As a young fellow in the orchestra," he said recently, "I saw that disregard for the public mood did not go here in Boston. I think the public has become more educated to music as a result of children's concerts, good records and the radio. The public definitely is music-minded."

Fiedler hit on the right formula when, as an American planning to entertain Americans, he tossed aside the shackles of tradition to bring gaiety and humor to Americans into this spring concert series . . . Like the wonderfully funny "Jingles All the Way," on

★ Continued on page Three

So, clutching your lapel, we should like to tell you that this is the fourth consecutive year that American Newspaper Guild Night has been held at Pops under the auspices of the Newspaper Guild of Boston, the largest New England affiliate.

Bunch of devils

The Guild is a labor organization. All right, swallow your gum! You shouldn't be chomping Wrigley's in Symphony Hall anyway...

The American Newspaper Guild was formed thirteen years ago, in the depths of the depression, by Heywood Broun and a small group of other top-notch newspapermen. These men had nothing to gain for themselves by forming a labor organization; but they believed that the working newspapermen and women needed a lift; they believed the community needed some help; and they believed that even the Publishers could do with a little assistance.

As their basic tenets they set up the propositions that the Guild should improve the economic status of the working newspaper people, that the Guild should foster "in so far as is possible" constant honesty in the news, and that the Guild should try to improve the standards of Journalism.

Start at zero

You might like to know how well the Guild has done with these pious plans in thirteen years.

★ Continued on page Two

This Clipping From
BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE-TIMES

JUN 6 - 1946

Music Festival In Berkshires Opens July 25

LENOX—(UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala prewar style at Tanglewood in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week-ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate—are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However conductor Serge Koussevitzky has included the works of modern composers, among whom are Rachmaninoff, Copland, Shostakovitch and Martinu.

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Longtime favorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales," was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andrew Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

Nearly a month before the opening of the festival the Berkshire music centre opens for six weeks beginning July 1. Unique in purpose the school gives young musicians a chance to polish their performance before entering the professional fields.

The faculty of the school is composed of the nation's big names in music, including composer Leonard Bernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Aaron Copland and opera expert Boris

---

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

JUN 6 - 1946

Band Members To Have Outing

Visit Boston Saturday For Game and Concert

New Bedford and Fairhaven High School band members will enjoy their annual outing to Boston Saturday.

Four chartered buses will transport the groups, leaving the two High schools at 9 in the morning and meeting at Frates Milk Bottle on Acushnet Avenue to travel together the remainder of the trip. Upon arrival in Boston, luncheon will be served them in the Old France Restaurant, after which the boys, and some of the girls, will attend the Detroit-Boston baseball game, while the other girls will go to a theater.

The group will assemble for a turkey dinner at 6 in the Old France, after which all will attend the Boston Symphony Pop Concert in Symphony Hall across the street. They will return in the same four buses.

Clarence W. Arey, conductor of the two bands, has made arrangements for the outing, which is the seventh annual. He has obtained front row seats at the concert and has all the tickets necessary for the day's program.

Members of the bands save a dime each week through the school year to help defray cost of the outing. Interested citizens contribute any additional funds needed, Mr. Arey said.

POPS

American Newspaper Guild Night

May 24, 1946 — 8:30 P. M.

ARTHUR FIEDLER, Conductor

Programme

Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin" .... WAGNER

Overture to "The Beautiful Galatea" .... von SUPPE

At Dawning .... CADMAN

Ballet Music from "Faust" .... GOUNOD

Waltz — Dance of Phryne — Bacchanale

Suite from "Raymonda" .... GLAZOUNOV

Moonlight — Prelude and Romanesque — Variations — Raymonda's Dream — Valse Fantastique

"Espana" Rhapsody .... CHABRIER

First Movement, Concerto No. 4, in D minor, for Piano and Orchestra .... RUBENSTEIN

Soloist: CYNTHIA BROWN

Jingles All The Way .... CABLE

Song Fest Medley

"Pack Up Your Troubles" — "Smiles" — "Till We Meet Again" — "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree" — "My Wild Irish Rose" — "Take Me Out to the Ball Game" — Sweet Adeline" "Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet" — "There is a Tavern in the Town" — "Maine Stein Song" — "Let Me Call You Sweetheart"

"The Stars and Stripes Forever," March .... SOUSA

GUILD POPS COMMITTEE

FRANK M. O'DONNELL, Chairman

JAMES GLENNON, Vice-Chairman

Edna Allen
Alice Megley
Barbara Tibbetts
Alta Maloney
Elmer DeLew
Elizabeth Schoppe

Leo McElwain
Earl Banner
Gertrude Crowley
Arthur Hill
Trivia Frissora

Grace Nihan
Dorothea Culkin
Israel Siperstein
Charles Leveroni
Thayer Taylor
John Mason Potter

THE PROCEEDS FROM THE SALE OF FLOOR SEATS TO-NIGHT WILL BE DONATED TO THE

ESPLANADE CONCERTS FUND

GUILD (Cont.)

As far as improving the economic status of the newspaper worker is concerned, we haven't done badly at all. In the early 1930's starting wages for reporters were somewhere between zero per week and $15. Thousands of bright young people, lured by the romance of newspaper work were glad to go to work for nothing — and Publishers were glad to have them.

A few practical beginners insisted, however, on being paid a salary. Publishers complied, where they had to, and lavishly laid out starting salaries which, in big cities like New York and Chicago, might be as high as $25 per week, but usually were not. The scrivener of these immortal lines started as a cub in 1930 at $5 a week; was raised to $10 a week after only six months, and by the end of the year had achieved $15. Out of the scores of Boston veterans now serving the Hub, probably two-thirds started newspaper work at $10 per week or less.

Pay for "journeymen" reporters — experienced newshawks who know the ropes — was, of course, substantially higher. Right here in Boston a man with ten years in the city room, a good education, and a genuine nose for news could be pretty sure of $30 a week. Some outstanding performers got astronomical wages — $35, $40, and even, in dramatic cases, $50.

Dependable work week

The work week was pretty dependable in those days (fifteen years ago). A man knew from Monday through Sunday that he would have at least one day off a week if no one on the staff was sick, or if no big story broke, or if he didn't happen to drop by the office and get pressed into service. If he was drunk, he could take the day off, usually. If he had a bad cold, he was expected to work. Many a sober newspaperman called up with a vaudeville hiccup and pretended intoxication if he wanted to go to a movie with his wife. No experienced reporter called up if he had a cold.

The work day itself, on an afternoon paper, seldom started before 7 a. m., and was pretty sure to be over by 6 o'clock that night, unless there was an electrocution or some other late story for which an edition was held up. Some papers even promised a vacation in the Summer — and if few newspaper men ever actually got one, it was only because news seemed to pop up in such heavy volume then that no conscientious worker would cripple the business by disappearing into the mountains.

Wreck newspapers

The American Newspaper Guild plunged itself, uninvited, into this idyll — and within a very few years had made a shambles of this perfectly happy situation.

Newspaper workers were forced to draw paychecks in the higher brackets — $25 for beginners, and as high as $50 in Metropolitan areas for experts. In Boston, for instance, the amateur standing of newspaper workers was completely destroyed. Seven years ago, after a few years of Guild activity, the Boston papers were paying veterans as much as $45 a week. (Today, the paper which proclaims itself the community leader, pays journeymen reporters the princely salary of $73.25 per week — and $3 more if they work nights.)

Worse still, the workday was chopped down to eight hours, and the work week to five days.

From bad to worse

But the end of the Guild's perfidy is not yet. We labor goons had another idea, this one truly vicious. We believed that raising wages and cutting the work week down to a convenient size were of little practicality if the jobs didn't last very long. So we began muscling in on what the Publishers called their "rights, privileges and prerogatives."

These rights, privileges and prerogatives always seemed to turn out to be the right to fire without notice, the privilege of shifting a married man from a day shift to a night shift without warning, and the prerogative of whimsical dismissal without giving a reason.

So hamstrung has newspaper publishing become today that on Guild papers an employe is given notice before he is fired, and quite often even given a reason — something he can explain to his wife.

Ah, but there is worse to come. Nowadays when an old timer is fired he gets a subversive subsidy called "severance pay". A man with five years continuous service on a Guild paper will get ten weeks pay when he's let go. And on one Boston paper, this practice has reached the point where a veteran of thirteen and two-thirds years of service gets 34 weeks pay.

Needs reason

The old, carefree days of the frivolous discharge have vanished. When a publisher wants to fire a man today, he has to sit down and figure out with a pencil what the discharge will cost him. It sometimes happens that a man has become more valuable working than he would be fired.

★ Continued on page Three

ipple the business by disg into the mountains.

Wreck newspapers

merican Newspaper Guild itself, uninvited, into this and within a very few d made a shambles of this happy situation.

aper workers were forced paychecks in the higher — $25 for beginners, and as $50 in Metropolitan experts. In Boston, for the amateur standing of r workers was completely . Seven years ago, after ars of Guild activity, the apers were paying veteruch as $45 a week. (Topaper which proclaims community leader, pays en reporters the princely $73.25 per week — and if they work nights.) still, the workday was down to eight hours, and week to five days.

rom bad to worse

end of the Guild's perfidy t. We labor goons had dea, this one truly vicious. eved that raising wages ng the work week down venient size were of little ity if the jobs didn't last g. So we began muscling hat the Publishers called ghts, privileges and prero-rights, privileges and ves always seemed to to be the right to fire notice, the privilege of a married man from a to a night shift without and the prerogative of dismissal without giving nstrung has newspaper become today that on pers an employe is given fore he is fired, and quite given a reason — somecan explain to his wife. there is worse to come. when an old timer is ets a subversive subsidy everance pay". A man years continuous service ild paper will get ten when he's let go. And ston paper, this practice ed the point where a thirteen and two-thirds ervice gets 34 weeks pay.

Needs reason

, carefree days of the discharge have vanished. ublisher wants to fire a , he has to sit down and with a pencil what the will cost him. It somepens that a man has bevaluable working than be fired.

★ Continued on page Three

GUILD (Cont.)

It is apparent, then, that this irresponsible labor organization, the Guild, has forced its wild eyed notions on Publishers and has actually made them stick. More than 20,000 newspaper men and women in the country are covered by Guild contracts on more than 200 newspapers, magazines and wire services.

As far as the economic status of the workers is concerned the Guild has moved quite far along the road.

Honesty in the news, the Guild is told, is the right, privilege and prerogative of the Publishers — and anyway, newspapers are constantly honest. And anyway, it is no affair of the Guild's. And anyway, newspapers are private enterprises and should be run by the owners as the owners see fit.

Can only smile

Thus, if a Publisher wants to print a nasty column which declares that the American Newspaper Guild is a hotbed of Communism, that is his right, his privilege and his prerogative. If the Publisher wants to print an editorial to the effect that prices wouldn't be so high if the OPA were killed and ceilings lifted, that is his right, for the paper is his property. (We can smile when we are told that sort of thing but we can't protest.)

All for Joe Doakes

The Guild takes the pious stand that if Joe Doakes is worth a story on Page One when he is arrested for drunken driving, so is the Publisher's son.

So far we must report dismal failure in getting this point of view across.

On the matter of improving the standards of journalism, we claim progress largely by indirection. Papers have improved since we started our career of interference with the rights, privileges and prerogatives of publishers. We suspect that newspapers exercise slightly more care in selecting their staffs since the Guild put the wage brackets so high. The lush, the brilliant undependable, the hoax writer, the fact twister still exist on newspapers. But as the cost of supporting him gets more burdensome, his tenure becomes less assured. If the reader gets the benefit of better trained men with a more responsible cast of mind, the Guild will leap to the foreground and take a modest bow.

New England principle

Understand, dear Popsicle, that the American Newspaper Guild is a union for all newspaper workers, not just for reporters. We bargain for the clerks, the telephone operators, the janitors and the stenographers — the advertising men and the circulation men — in fact, for everyone not a member of an established craft union.

The story of the Guild is, in reality, the story of the trade union. Wherever workers exist in large groups, unions are either established, or hovering around the edges.

The principle of the labor union is, after all, only the principle of unity and collective strength. New Englanders know the value of acting together from a reading of their history. This home of the rugged individualist exists at all because the first settlers banded together to fight off attacking Indians.

Wherever intelligent people have a common problem, that problem usually yields to collective action — the combining of forces to solve a joint headache. Thus, employers have unions, too: The American Newspaper Publisher's Association and the National Association of Manufacturers, for example.

Unions of any kind, whether unions of working men on newspapers or of farmers on cotton plantations, are as good or as bad as the work they do. We are no exception. If we continue to improve the economic status of the working newspaperman and woman, the shopkeepers, the landlords, and the professional men who serve them — and who profit from them — will continue to urge us on. For thus we serve the community.

If the time ever comes that we begin to operate selfishly and against the best interests of the community as a whole — then can you demand that we give an accounting of our performance. For no group has, we believe, the right to place its own welfare above the welfare of the whole community.

JOHN ULLMAN

ARTHUR FIEDLER

FIEDLER (Cont.)

tonight's program, a bit of Americana based on radio's singing commercials, offered him in Toronto . . . This musical satire pleases rather than offends advertisers, who try to buy up tables when it is on the program, and it is a joy to long-suffering radio listeners . . . And he broke with tradition, too, when he based his selections on the music rather than the prestige of the composer . . . "A good tune is a good tune," he said, "I don't give a damn who wrote it." So he includes "Stardust" and "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes," both in his opinion, minor classics . . . And he puts schmaltz on a par with European folk music, as you and he together will demonstrate tonight, singing old American tunes that give a lift almost as high though less disastrous than champagne. . .

Fiedler tries to please everyone, which is difficult, of course, but somehow he manages to sidestep disaster . . . When the Overture to "Merry Wives of Winsor" is on the program, the chances are it was requested by his cook, Marie Smith . . . But he thrills with that something new we Americans always want . . . like "Warsaw Concerto," by Adinsell, given its first American performance by Fiedler . . . and "Jealousy," that gypsy tango written by a Dane named Jacob Gade . . . Fiedler found the music for that tango in a pile of manuscripts set aside for a bargain clearance sale in a Boston music shop . . . The Pops orchestra's recording of that has been its most popular based on sales, and the tango has been taken up by Mexico City . . . He is pleasing Frank O'Donnell, treasurer of the Boston Newspaper Guild, tonight with "At Dawning" . . . it is O'Donnell's mother's favorite.

The baton he wields as he conduct this world-renowned orchestra, is called by the muscians "The Club." The flyer listing programs for the coming week is known to them as "The Sausage." The percussion section is "The Kitchen." And over in Europe, where I found English and British sailors to be record fans of Fiedler . . . so is Toscanini! . . . the Pops Orchestra is known as the Boston Promenade Orchestra . . . But, if a good tune is a good tune, a good orchestra is a good orchestra, whether it be called the Pops Orchestra or the Promenade Orchestra . . . And it's ours for the enjoyment.

BANG is published in the interests of Newspaper Guild of Boston, 294 Washington Street, Boston 8, Mass. HUBbard 2637.

Flock To Esplanade At Day's End

---

h held ed.

ally Received se to the new broke last month, , Mr. Tofte said. py were the sales company's branch y because it was el which they felt ached by previous sing, and secondly ve them added ill be the comal, and the prodwith—millstones— the hundreds it The company nately $2,000,000 activities last year.

This Clipping From
BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE-TIMES

JUN 6 - 1946

Music Festival In Berkshires Opens July 25

LENOX—(UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala prewar style at Tanglewood in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week-ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate—are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However conductor Serge Koussevitsky has included the works of modern composers, among whom are Rachmaninoff, Copland, Shostakovitch and Martinu.

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Longtime favorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales," was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andrea Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

Nearly a month before the opening of the festival the Berkshire music centre opens for six weeks beginning July 1. Unique in purpose the school gives young musicians a chance to polish their performance before entering the professional fields.

The faculty of the school is composed of the nation's big names in music, including composer Leonard Bernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Aaron Copland and opera expert Boris Goldovsky.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

JUN 6 - 1946

Band Members To Have Outing

Visit Boston Saturday For Game and Concert

New Bedford and Fairhaven High School band members will enjoy their annual outing to Boston Saturday.

Four chartered buses will transport the groups, leaving the two High schools at 9 in the morning and meeting at Frates Milk Bottle on Acushnet Avenue to travel together the remainder of the trip.

Upon arrival in Boston, luncheon will be served them in the Old France Restaurant, after which the boys, and some of the girls, will attend the Detroit-Boston baseball game, while the other girls will go to a theater.

The group will assemble for a turkey dinner at 6 in the Old France, after which all will attend the Boston Symphony Pop Concert in Symphony Hall across the street. They will return in the same four buses.

Clarence W. Arey, conductor of the two bands, has made arrangements for the outing, which is the seventh annual. He has obtained front row seats at the concert and has all the tickets necessary for the day's program.

Members of the bands save a dime each week through the school year to help defray cost of the outing. Interested citizens contribute any additional funds needed, Mr. Arey said.

[144]

CONSCIENCE (Cont.)

on the whole so miserly towards Mr. Fiedler's Esplanade appeals. As many as 30,000 people assemble nightly during the summer season to hear the free concerts. Yet the average daily "take" of the voluntary contribution boxes is about $80.

Trouble, Trouble, Trouble

From the very beginning, one financial trouble after another has beset Mr. Fiedler's Esplanade Concerts. The idea for the project came to him one day as he sat on the banks of the Charles River. He reasoned that there was a genuine need for good music in the warmer months, and that people would be more receptive to it if it were presented to them in the open air, on the theory that most successful summer enterprises take place out of doors. So he went to influential persons around town trying to convince them that the idea had merit. Unfortunately, even in those lush years (it was 1928) Brahmins were Brahmins to the core, and no subsidization was forthcoming. Nobody would bother to attend the concerts, it was said; New England weather would play havoc; the orchestral sound would not carry on the breezy river site.

At length, however, a small number of patrons were won over, and a crude wooden stand was erected near the foot of Mt. Vernon street. The first concert was given on the Fourth of July in 1929. It must have been something to see, not to say hear. Gusts of wind sent instrumental parts flying, and listeners hurried around the Basin picking them up while some of the musicians played hopefully from memory. Acoustically, the old shell was a mess. The shrill woodwinds pierced the night. The brass drowned out the strings.

"Baby" grows up

Still Fiedler persisted. After all, as he puts it, "this was my baby". Clamps were installed on each desk to secure the sheet scores, the orchestra seating arrangement was shuffled a few times for balance, and ultimately the Esplanade Concerts began to assume some semblance of artistic order.

Wary at first, Mr. Fiedler soon became adventurous in his programmes. Unlike his practice at the Pops he has presented complete symphonies at the Esplanade. One year he played the entire Brahms cycle, and another he performed all but the last of Beethoven's Nine. There was a time, too, in the depths of the Depression when Fiedler got together with a psychologist in an attempt to cheer up the army of unemployed who gathered to hear his riverbank concerts. Did he play bright, sunlit music? He did not. He played among other things the Pathetique Symphony and the brooding Egmont Overture. And the crowd was perceptibly happy about it.

Public support of this venture continued on the parsimonious side, as it is today. Private and often anonymous donations from wellathy patrons have borne the brunt of the expenses. The most princely of these enabled Fiedler to carry out his most ambitious plan which resulted, in 1940, in the magnificent teakwood and granite structure known as the Edward Hatch Memorial Shell, acoustically and architecturally one of the finest edifices for the production of music in America.

HUMPHREY (Cont.)

Not many people know that besides being a former newspaperman on the Boston Post, Humphrey had begun a promising musical and theatrical career himself in the twenties. He gave a recital as a baritone at the Peabody Playhouse April 17, 1928, and got some pretty good press notices.

It was during this period that Laning Humphrey "killed" Alexander Knox, whom you saw recently in "Woodrow Wilson." His 140-pound, five-foot seven-inch frame also took the role of "Simon Legree" in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" after that part had been played here by the great John L. Sullivan, the South Boston Strongboy.

"My sister ran a little theatre stock company which put on standard English plays taught in the schools, at the Peabody Playhouse. I used to play there as 'The Singing Clown,' among other things," says Humphrey.

Boston Press Kind

Humphrey has been with the Symphony since 1936, after he left the Post, but he's done publicity for the Esplanade Concerts since their inception July 4, 1929.

"Thanks to my mother who read about it in the paper, I went to the first concert — and it really was a lulu! Everything was wrong! The piccolo and the bass tuba or oomph horn were about the only things you could hear. The wind blew most of the sheet-music into the river, leaving a bunch of musicians in the wooden shell to tootle as best they could without it.

"The Boston press was very gentlemanly the next day. They gave us a break and skipped all that. But I talked with Fiedler, whose impression was the same as mine, and he agreed with my suggestion that we ask advice from the M. I. T. acoustic laboratory across the river.

"Dr. William R. Barss, knowing we couldn't afford to reconstruct the shell, worked out some suggestions including a radical new seating arrangement for the players so no reconstruction would be necessary. Leslie J. Rogers, who is still the orchestra's librarian, doubted Fiedler would agree to the change but said he'd ask him.

"I was late getting to the performance because of an assignment, but as I drove down Beacon Hill I could hear the music and it sounded perfect. Sure enough, the players were shuffled all around.

"Fiedler said later, 'I've been throwing gestures at the wrong places — conducting in front of this puzzle is like trying to write your name in front of a mirror — but it sure works!' "

Mutual Benefit Society

Humphrey and the Boston papers owe a great debt to each other. On one hand Humphrey tries "to give the papers news they want — as if I were a member of their staff. I change my approach according to the papers' policies. Some want it on an intellectual plane; others on a mass level. On the other hand the papers help out tremendously — especially during the fund drives."

Dauntless Courier

There was the time Humphrey ran all the way through a pouring rain to the office of the old Transcript to tell them the Children's Esplanade Concert had been cancelled. An erudite editor had him photographed and printed the picture of a very drenched Laning Humphrey over the quote:

" 'The Children's concert is called off,'
The dauntless courier cried."

Humphrey's age is 51. He's married to a talented photographer named Martha Burnham, who uses her maiden name in her work. They have one child, Patricia Ann, aged 2½, and live at 364 Woodward st., Waban.

And that about completes our write-up of Laning Humphrey. The Newspaper Guild believes this to be the first case in journalistic history where a very able publicity man both needed his own press agent, and richly deserved it.

THIS PROGRAM
FOR THE Newspaper Guild of Boston's Fourth Annual Pops Concert IS PRINTED
THROUGH THE COURTESY OF MERCHANTS
CO-OPERATIVE BANK
HENRY H. PIERCE, President
Largest Co-operative Bank in Massachusetts
24 SCHOOL STREET BOSTON

This Clipping From
TIFFIN, OHIO
ADVERTISER-TRIBUNE

JUN 6-1946

BERKSHIRES MUSIC FETE JULY EVENT

Series of Concerts to be Given in Bucolic Setting of Eastern Hills

By EVELYN BROWN

LENOX, Mass. — The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in a gala prewar style at Tanglewood, in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate—are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However, conductor Serge Koussevitzky has included the works of modern composers, among whom are Rachmaninoff, Copland, Shostakovitch and Martinu.

Pre-Festival Series

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Longtime favorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales," was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

School To Reopen

Nearly a month before the opening of the festival the Berkshire music center opens for six weeks beginning July 1. Unique in purpose, the school gives young musicians a chance to polish their performance before entering the professional fields.

The faculty of the school is composed of the nation's big names in music, including composer Leonard Bernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Aaron Copeland and opera expert Boris Goldovsky.

The school was closed during the war but now has accepted more than 300 students in various departments such as composition, instrumentation, conducting, and opera. The opera department plans a performance of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," a piece that was composed for Tanglewood and produced in England last summer.

This Clipping From
BERKELEY, CALIF.
GAZETTE

JUN 5 1946

MISS ANNE DE GUICHARD . . .
—member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is one of the few women bassoonists in the country. She took over the place in the orchestra of her only teacher when he died in 1944.

WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

JUN 6 1946

Music Festival Opens July 25 in Berkshires

Series of Nine Concerts to Begin and End Beethoven Symphonies; Other Modern Composers to Be Included

By EVELYN BROWN
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

Lenox, Mass., June 5.—(UP)—The Boston ~~Symphony~~ Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala pre-war style at Tanglewood, in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thoustands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate—are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However, conductor Serge Koussevizky has included the works of modern composers, among whom are Rach maninoff, Copland, Shostakovitch and Martinu.

Pre-Festival Series

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Longtime favorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales," was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt. Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

School to Reopen

Nearly a month before the opening of the festival the Berkshire music center opens for six weeks beginning July 1. Unique in purpose, the school gives young musicians a chance to polish their performance before entering the professional fields.

The faculty of the school is composed of the nation's big names in music, including composer Leonard Bernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky. Aaron Copland and opera expert Boris Goldovsky.

The school was closed during the war, but now has accepted more than 300 students in various departments such as composition, instrumentation, conducting, and opera. The opera department plans a performance of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," a piece that was composed for Tanglewood and produced in England last summer.

HOLDENVILLE
NEWS

JUN 6 194

erkshirt Mu estival to O
Prewar St

NOX, Mass. (U.P.)— phony Orchestra op
Berkshire music f gala prewar style
, in the hills of west
etts.
series of nine conce
over three weekends
a bucolic setting. Th lovers from every nation are expected will have seats in
The others sit hel
he lawns of the ram estate—are out of

e program begins and hoven symphonies.
uctor Serge Koussevi
ded the works of mod
s, among whom are R
Copland, Shostakov
tinu.
fore the opening of th orchestra under the
r. Koussevitzky will giv our chamber music prised solely of the and Mozart. Longtim including Bach's Bra erto and Mozart's Jupi
y, are on the program
e festivals have been y since their inaugur
Each time they draw
d. The Tanglewood
e once Nathaniel H and wrote "Tanglewoo presented to the symp ra in 1936 by Mrs. And and her aunt, Miss an. The shed was buil owd of 95,000 persons he series of concerts in arly a month before th of the festival the B center opens for six w ng July 1. Unique in school gives young mus ce to polish their per e entering the pro

e faculty of the school of the nation's big n
, including compeser
stein, Gregor Piatigorsky nd and opera expert ovsky.
e school was closed du but now has accepted 300 students in vari ments such as composi entation, conducting,
The opera department
rmance of Benjamin
, "Peter Grimes," a pi composed for Tanglewo uced in England last sum

This Clipping From
HOT SPRINGS, ARK.
SENTINEL-RECORD

JUN 6 1946

Music Festival To Open July 25 In Berkshires

By EVELYN BROWN

Lenox, Mass. (UP).— The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala prewar style at Tanglewood, in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate — are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However, conductor Serge Koussevitzky has included the works of modern composers, among whom are Rachmaninoff, Copland, Shostakovitch and Martinu.

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the director of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Longtime favorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathanial Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales," was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

Nearly a month before the opening of the festival the Berkshire music center opens for six weeks beginning July 1. Unique in purpose, the school gives young musicians a chance to polish their performance before entering the professional fields.

The faculty of the school is composed of the nation's big names in music, including composer Leonard Berstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Aaron Gopland and opera expert Boris Goldovsky.

The school was closed during the war, but now has accepted more than 300 students in various departments such as composition, in-opera. The opera department plans a performance of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," piece that was composed for Tanglewood and produced in England last sum-

---

This Clipping From
BELOIT, WIS.
NEWS

JUN 6 1946

Boston [illegible] Music Festival In Berkshires

Lenox, Mass.—(U.P.)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala prewar style at Tanglewood, in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate—are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However, conductor Serge Koussevitzky has included the works of modern composers, among whom are Rachmaninoff, Copland, Shostakovitch and Martinu.

Pre-Festival Series

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Longtime favorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales," was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUN 7-1946

Neighborly

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Dr Serge Koussevitzky will conduct a chamber orchestra of Boston symphony players in the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood prior to the opening of the usual three weeks' Berkshire festival this summer. The programs, devoted to Bach and Mozart compositions, will be given Saturday evening, July 13, and Sunday afternoon, July 14. Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston orchestra, will be among the soloists on both programs. Tickets are $3.60 and $4.80 each, and parkees on the lawn will pay $2 each. Tickets are available at Tanglewood, Lenox, now.

INDEPENDENCE, MO.
EXAMINER

JUN 7 1946

Music Festival Last of July

Boston Symphony Orchestra Opens Annual Event July 25 at Tangle-Wood, Mass.

Lenox, Mass. (UP) The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala prewar style at Tanglewood, in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate—are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However, conductor Serge Koussevitzky has included the works of modern composers, among whom are Rachmaninoff, Copland, Shostakovich and Martinu.

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Longtime favorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales," was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

Nearly a month before the opening of the festival the Berkshire music center opens for six weeks beginning July 1. Unique in purpose, the school gives young musicians a chance to polish their performance before entering the professional fields.

The faculty of the school is composed of the nation's big names in music, including composer Leonard Bernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky. Aaron Copland and opera expert Boris Goldovsky.

The school was closed during the war, but now has accepted more than 300 students in various departments such as composition, instrumentation, conducting, and opera. The opera department plans a performance of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," a piece that was composed for Tanglewood and produced in England last summer.

This Clipping From
DAILY VARIETY
HOLLYWOOD, CALIF.

JUN 7-1946

TIOMKIN GATHERS 'SUN' ORCHESTRA

Dimitri Tiomkin has [illegible] piece symphony orche[illegible] score for "Duel in the S[illegible] players from 10 symph[illegible] tions in the country [illegible] clude musicians fr[illegible] House orchestra, Boston [illegible] National Symphony of [illegible] D.C., New York Philharm[illegible] don String Quartet, [illegible] Symphony, Pittsburgh Symp[illegible], San Francisco Symphony, Los Angeles Philharmonic and Hollyw[illegible] Bow Symphony.

This Clipping From NILES, OHIO
TIMES

JUN 8-1946

Boston Pops'
Vill Present
opular Marc

OSTON — With listene sections of the country requests, the Boston P stra will present a marc n its weekly poll, on th
, June 15, concert over
MJ and ABC from 9:30
., EDT.
rthur Fiedler again wil podium. He has chose ia Sanroma, pianist, fo ppearance as soloist, th
George Gershwin's Conc

edler also will prese zes from Strauss' "Der lier" and a novelty n gles All the Way" by C llowing the last "Pop on June 29, ABC will the Esplanade progr
6.
e Berkshire Festival at d, with Dr. Serge Kous ducting members of the phony Orchestra, also rd over ABC on July 13, nd on August 3 and 10.

TIFFIN, OHIO
ADVERTISER-TRIBUNE

JUN 6-1946

BERKSHIRES MUSIC FETE JULY EVENT

Series of Concerts to be Given in Bucolic Setting of Eastern Hills

By EVELYN BROWN

LENOX, Mass.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in a gala prewar style at Tanglewood, in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate—are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However, conductor Serge Koussevitzky has included the works of modern composers, among whom are Rachmaninoff, Copland, Shostakovitch and Martinu.

Pre-Festival Series

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Longtime favorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales," was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

School To Reopen

Nearly a month before the opening of the festival the Berkshire music center opens for six weeks beginning July 1. Unique in purpose, the school gives young musicians a chance to polish their performance before entering the professional fields.

The faculty of the school is composed of the nation's big names in music, including composer Leonard Bernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Aaron Copeland and opera expert Boris Goldovsky.

The school was closed during the war but now has accepted more than 300 students in various departments such as composition, instrumentation, conducting, and opera. The opera department plans a performance of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," a piece that was composed for Tanglewood and produced in England last summer.

BERKELEY, CALIF.
GAZETTE

JUN 5 1946

MISS ANNE DE GUICHARD . . .
—member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is one of the few women bassoonists in the country. She took over the place in the orchestra of her only teacher when he died in 1944.

WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

JUN 5 1946

Music Festival Opens July 25 in Berkshires

Series of Nine Concerts to Begin and End Beethoven Symphonies; Other Modern Composers to Be Included

By EVELYN BROWN
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

Lenox, Mass., June 5.—(UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala pre-war style at Tanglewood, in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thoustands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate—are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However, conductor Serge Koussevizky has included the works of modern composers, among whom are Rach naninoff, Copland, Shostakovitch and Martinu.

Pre-Festival Series

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Longtime favorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales," was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

School to Reopen

Nearly a month before the opening of the festival the Berkshire music center opens for six weeks beginning July 1. Unique in purpose, the school gives young musicians a chance to polish their performance before entering the professional fields.

The faculty of the school is composed of the nation's big names in music, including composer Leonard Bernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Aaron Copland and opera expert Boris Goldovsky.

The school was closed during the war, but now has accepted more than 300 students in various departments such as composition, instrumentation, conducting, and opera. The opera department plans a performance of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," a piece that was composed for Tanglewood and produced in England last summer.

This Clipping From
HOT SPRINGS, ARK.
SENTINEL-RECORD

JUN 6 1946

Music Festival To Open July 25 In Berkshires

By EVELYN BROWN

Lenox, Mass. (UP).— The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala prewar style at Tanglewood, in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate — are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However, conductor Serge Koussevitzky has included the works of modern composers, among whom are Rachmaninoff, Copland, Shostakovitch and Martinu.

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the director of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Longtime favorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathanial Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales," was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

Nearly a month before the opening of the festival the Berkshire music center opens for six weeks beginning July 1. Unique in purpose, the school gives young musicians a chance to polish their performance before entering the professional fields.

The faculty of the school is composed of the nation's big names in music, including composer Leonard Berstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Aaron Copland and opera expert Boris Goldovsky.

The school was closed during the war, but now has accepted more than 300 students in various departments such as composition, in-

opera. The opera department plans a performance of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," piece that was composed for Tanglewood and produced in England last sum-

---

This Clipping From
BELOIT, WIS.
NEWS

JUN 6 1946

Boston Hol Music Festival In Berkshires

Lenox, Mass.—(U.P.)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala prewar style at Tanglewood, in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate—are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However, conductor Serge Koussevitzky has included the works of modern composers, among whom are Rachmaninoff, Copland, Shostakovitch and Martinu.

Pre-Festival Series

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Longtime favorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales," was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUN 7-1946

Neighborly

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Dr Serge Koussevitzky will conduct a chamber orchestra of Boston symphony players in the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood prior to the opening of the usual three weeks' Berkshire festival this summer. The programs, devoted to Bach and Mozart compositions, will be given Saturday evening, July 13, and Sunday afternoon, July 14. Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston orchestra, will be among the soloists on both programs. Tickets are $3.60 and $4.80 each, and parkees on the lawn will pay $2 each. Tickets are available at Tanglewood, Lenox, now.

INDEPENDENCE, MO.
EXAMINER

JUN 7 1946

Music Festival Last of July

Boston Symphony Orchestra Opens Annual Event July 25 at Tangle-Wood, Mass.

Lenox, Mass. (UP) The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala prewar style at Tanglewood, in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate—are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However, conductor Serge Koussevitzky has included the works of modern composers, among whom are Rachmaninoff, Copland, Shostakovich and Martinu.

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Longtime favorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales," was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

Nearly a month before the opening of the festival the Berkshire music center opens for six weeks beginning July 1. Unique in purpose, the school gives young musicians a chance to polish their performance before entering the professional fields.

The faculty of the school is composed of the nation's big names in music, including composer Leonard Bernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Aaron Copland and opera expert Boris Goldovsky.

The school was closed during the war, but now has accepted more than 300 students in various departments such as composition, instrumentation, conducting, and opera. The opera department plans a performance of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," a piece that was composed for Tanglewood and produced in England last summer.

This Clipping From
DAILY VARIETY
HOLLYWOOD, CALIF.

JUN 7- 1946

TIOMKIN GATHERS 'SUN' ORCHESTRA

Dimitri Tiomkin has assembled 90-piece symphony orchestra to record score for "Duel in the Sun," with top players from 10 symphony aggregations in the country. Members include musicians from Metopera House orchestra, Boston Symphony, National Symphony of Washington, D.C., New York Philharmonic, London String Quartet, Indianapolis Symphony, Pittsburgh Symphony, San Francisco Symphony, Los Angeles Philharmonic and Hollywood Bowl Symphony.

[145]

This Clipping From
HOLDENVILLE, OKLA.
NEWS

JUN 6 1946

Berkshirt Music Festival to Open In Prewar Style

LENOX Mass. UP—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala prewar style at Tanglewood in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three weekends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sit helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate—are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However conductor Serge Koussevitzky has included the works of modern composers, among whom are Rachmaninoff, Copland, Shostakovitch and Martinu.

Before the opening of the festival orchestra under the direction Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series four chamber music concerts nprised solely of the music of ich and Mozart. Longtime favors, including Bach's Brandenburg ncerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held anally since their inauguration in 34. Each time they draw a bigger wd. The Tanglewood estate ere once Nathaniel Hawthorne ed and wrote "Tanglewood Tales," is presented to the symphony orstra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. ppan. The shed was built in 1938 crowd of 95,000 persons gathered r the series of concerts in 1941.

Nearly a month before the opening of the festival the Berkshire usic center opens for six weeks beinning July 1. Unique in purpose, e school gives young musicians a ance to polish their performance fore entering the professional lds.

The faculty of the school is comsed of the nation's big names in usic, including composer Leonard rnstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Aaron opland and opera expert Boris oldovsky.

The school was closed during the ar, but now has accepted more an 300 students in various dertments such as composition, inrumentation, conducting, and opa. The opera department plans erformance of Benjamin Britten pera, "Peter Grimes," a piece tha as composed for Tanglewood an oduced in England last summer.

This Clipping From NILES, OHIO
TIMES

JUN 8 - 19

"Boston Pops" Will Present Popular March

BOSTON — With listeners from all sections of the country sending in requests, the Boston Pops Orchestra will present a march, chosen in its weekly poll, on the Saturday, June 15, concert over Station [illegible] and ABC from 9:30 to 10:30 p.m., EDT.

Arthur Fiedler again will be on the podium. He has chosen Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, for another appearance as soloist, this time in George Gershwin's Concerto in F.

[illegible] also will present the waltz from Strauss' "Der Rosenkavalier" and a novelty number, "[illegible] All the Way" by Cable.

[illegible] "Pops" concert, June 29, ABC will broadcast the Esplanade program of [illegible]

The Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky [illegible] members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, also will be heard over ABC on July 13, 20 and 27 and August 3 and 10.

This Clipping From GREENSBURG, PA.
TRIBUNE

JUN 7 1946

Julian Orbon, 20-year-old Cuban composer, has been awarded a scholarship for study this summer with Aaron Copland at the Berkshire Music Center conducted by Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony. The scholarship, which is competitive, is provided by the American Steel Corp. of Cuba and the American Tropical Products Corp. of Cuba, under the auspices of the Cuban-American Music Group.

* * *

Arthur Toscanini's third pair of concerts at La Scala, in Milan, Italy, will start on June 25 instead of June 24, as originally scheduled. The change has been made to coincide with the 60th anniversary of Toscanini's debut ae a conductor in Rio de Janeiro. On that occasion he stepped into the conductor's box from his desk as 'celist in the orchestra and conducted without score or rehearsal.

After the June concerts, Toscanini will return to the United States to resume direction of the NBC Symphony Orchestra.

* * *

Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will leave for South America by air on June 17 to direct a series of concerts in Latin American countries, starting with six in Rio de Janeiro. Ormandy has just finished a transcontinental tour with the Philadelphia Orchestra during which he conducted 37 concerts in 30 cities of the United States and Canada.

* * *

Two young musicians will be picked for concert careers at a "stairway to stardom" talent concert sponsored by the Margaret Walters Talent Registry Division at Town Hall, New York, on June 11, 12 and 13. Seventy-five members of the registry will compete, with each allowed six minutes to show what they can do. One winner will be picked b ya committee of well-known musicians and the other by audience ballot. Each will receive a $500 award and assistance toward a career.

This Clipping From
CAMDEN, N. J.
COURIER

JUN 7 - 1946

Phila. Forum Prepares Highly Selective Season

For its twenty-sixth season at the Academy of Music, next October to the following May, the Philadelphia Forum will present the Boston Symphony; Randolph Churchill, member of Parliament and former major, British Commandos; the First Piano Quartet; the Jooss Ballet, from England; Maryla Jonas, pianist; the Monte Carlo Ballet Russe; Drew Pearson, newspaper columnist; Egon Petri, in an all-Chopin recital; the Philadelphia Award with the Philadelphia Orchestra; Paul Robeson, actor and singer.

Also, Trudi Schoop and her Comic Ballet, returning to America after eight years; Gladys Swarthout, Metropolitan mezzo-soprano; Alec Templeton, pianist and composer; [illegible] "Il Trovatore," with Philadelphia's Florence Kirk, of Met fame, and a distinguished cast; Efrem Zimbalist, world-famous violinist, and other outstanding events.

This Clipping From
BALTIMORE, MD.
NEWS-POST

JUN 8 - 1946

...not surprising to us!

PORTABLE FLASHES—Boston Symphony-goers were stunned on June 3rd when Conductor Arthur Fiedler suddenly led the orchestra into the strains of "Chiquita Banana" and Elsa Miranda walked out on the stage to sing the commercial that she made a household word throughout the world . . . Vic Damone, the seventeen-year-old crooner (local cafe owners please grab) heard on WHN's (New York) "Gloom Dodgers" program, is being backed to the tune of $100,000 which should make for some nice singing.

This Clipping From
LATROBE, PA.
BULLETIN

JUN 7 1946

Music Festival To Open July 25 In Berkshires

by Evelyn Brown
United Press Staff Correspondent

Lenox, Mass. (U.P.)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala prewar style at Tanglewood, in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. Others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate—are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However, conductor Serge Koussevitzky has included the works of modern composers, among whom are Rachmaninoff, Copland, Shostakovitch and Martinu.

Pre-Festival Series

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Longtime favorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales," was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

School to Reopen

Nearly a month before the opening of the festival the Berkshire music center opens for six weeks beginning July 1. Unique in purpose, the school gives young musicians a chance to polish their performance before entering the professional fields.

The faculty of the school is composed of the nation's big names in music, including composer Leonard ernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Aaro opland and opera expert Boris Golc sky.

The school was closed during th ır, but now has accepted more tha) students in various department ch as composition, instrumentatior nducting, and opera. The opera de tment plans a performance of Ben in Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," ece that was composed for Tangle d and produced in England las mer.

This Clipping From
GLENS FALLS, N. Y.
POST STAR

JUN 7 - 1946

Of Music and Musicians

By Brunnhilde Decker McCune

Preparations are being made in the Berkshire resort towns of western Massachusetts for the resumption of an enlarged scale of prewar activities in music, drama, arts and sports.

Musical interest centers on Berkshire festival, where an outstanding program of concerts has been arranged. Extensive improvements are being made at Tanglewood, midway between Lenox and Stockbridge, where the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given on three week-ends beginning July 25. Ventfort Hall, one-time Lenox Summer home of George Hall Morgan, first cousin of J. Pierpont Morgan, the elder, will house 200 students at Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's Summer school.

Soloists for the festival will be Claudio Arrau and Eugene List, pianists; Carol Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists.

Concerts will be held on Thursday and Saturday evenings, and Sunday afternoons—July 25 through August 11. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the orchestra.

* * *

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS

JUN 7 - 1946

RECORDING the RECORDS

By MILTON WIDDER

Bach's BRANDENBURG CONCERTOS NO. 3 AND 4 definitely belong to the discriminating classical record library, both for the material and for the performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by the distinguished Serge Koussevitzky. (Victor, M-1050, $4.85.)

Recorded in the Tanglewood shed of the Berkshire Music Festivals, Victor engineers outdid themselves in presenting on wax these exquisite compositions from the pen of the Leipzig master. Only the highest praise can be showered on the interpretation by the conductor, the playing of the orchestra and the acoustical results as preserved on the records.

Koussevitzky

Rachmaninov's SECOND CONCERTO (which will be performed by Beryl Rubinstein later this season with the Cleveland Summer Orchestra) is presented on the current Columbia list with Gyorgy Sandor, prominent Hungarian pianist, in the solo role, and the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, directed by Artur Rodzinski, providing the accompaniment. (M 605, $4.73).

Sandor's performance is swift, accurate and dramatic. Rodzinski is at his very best with Russian composers—both modern and classical—and in this recording he backs up that reputation with much conductorial steam.

As this is the light music sesason, record enthusiasts may be interested in another album of Boston "Pops" Orchestra offerings by Victor, directed by Arthur Fiedler. (Album M 1049, $3). In it are Strauss polkas such as FAST TRACK and PIZZICATO POLKA written by the different Strausses—Johann, Johann Jr., Joseph and Eduard.

This Clipping From
MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL

JUN 8 - 1946

Turning the Tables

"Boston Symphony" fans were slightly stunned last Saturday when Conductor Arthur Fiedler suddenly led the orchestra into the strains of "Chiquita Banana" and Elsa Miranda walked out on the stage singing her commercial. . . . Last week Jose Iturbi provided a bit of ivory magic with a swing version of Grieg's "Concerto in A Minor," during the warmup for the CBS "Radio Theater" broadcast. His audience included 20 students from John Scott Trotter's University of Southern California music class. . . .

This Clipping From
HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN RECORD

JUN 8 - 1946

There will also be two Bach-Mozart programs in July, preceding the period of the Festival, given by Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, including instrumental faculty of the Berkshire Music Center.

The Music Center, a school for music in performance founded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1940 and directed by Koussevitzky, will open July 1 and continue for the duration of the Festival.

~~[illegible], N.Y.~~
[illegible]
6/7/46

Music Festival To Open July 25 In Berkshires

By EVELYN BROWN
United Press Staff Correspondent

LENOX, Mass. (UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala prewar style at Tanglewood, in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week ends will be given in a bucolic setting Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate—are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However, conductor Serge Koussevitzky has included the works of modern composers, among whom are Rachmaninoff, Copland, Shostakovitch and Martinu.

—Pre-Festival Series

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Longtime favorites. including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Juptier Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they drew a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales," was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

—School to Reopen

Nearly a month before the opening of the festival the Berkshire music center opens for six weeks beginning July 1. Unique in purpose, the school gives young musicians a chance to polish their performance before entering the professional fields.

The faculty of the school is composed of the nation's big names in music. including composer Leonard Bernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Aaron Copland and opera expert, Boris Goldovsky.

The school was closed during the war, but now has accepted more than 300 students in various departments such as composition, instrumentation, conducting, and opera. The opera department plans a performance of Benjamin Britten's opera. "Peter Grimes," a piece that was composed for Tanglewood and produced in England last summer.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

JUN 7 - 1946

The New Records

'Lohengrin' by Baum and Traubel—A 'Peer Gynt' Suite—Lighter Side.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

Had I not heard Kurt Baum at a recent Carnegie "Pop" concert, I would be inclined to regard his part in a current Columbia album as one of the things that happens only in a recording studio. However, the strength and color of Baum's voice in the third act duet of "Lohengrin" are no microphone marvel—they duplicate the quality one heard from him in the hall, and which one hopes to hear at greater length in the opera house soon.

It is well that Baum contributes the vocal interest that he does, for his partner is Helen Traubel, whose Elsa has never been a favorite of mine. Even though Miss Traubel's name is printed several times larger than Baum's on the album cover, and her picture decorates the inside, she is hardly the star of the enterprise. Her tones—aside from the full-voiced top—are edgy and shrill, with little of the bright youthfulness this music requires.

Though Artur Rodzinski is the conductor and the Philharmonic Symphony is the orchestra, there is too much of the spirit of an accompaniment about his part in this recording. In this, the deficiency is similar to that of the Victor album in which Kirsten Flagstad and Lauritz Melchior were "directed" by Edwin MacArthur. I would hardly dare bracket Rodzinski with MacArthur, but the fact that he does not take charge of this performance, as he should, robs it of the one element that would give it superiority to the other. The recording is powerful but lacking in the richness of sound that the music contains. (Columbia Set 261X.)

'Peer Gynt.'

It is a formidable challenge for a conductor to undertake the recording of any work of which there is a contemporary version by Sir Thomas Beecham. Eugene Goossens has had the experience in the past and now again with a recording of the "Peer Gynt" suite with the Cincinnati Symphony. This version is a replacement for the one (by Goossens) which Victor inserted in its Set 404, formerly assigned to a Barbirolli performance.

There is a glint and sharpness of outline in these disks that Beecham's London Philharmonic set cannot provide, but all of Goossens's effort and ingenuity still leaves him short of the goal to which he aspires. However, for sheer volume, the "Hall of the Mountain King" in this set has few peers. In a more resonant hall than the one in which this was made, it would be even more impressive. (V-Set SP-10.)

Department of Further Facts.

Apropos of records and the halls in which they are made, Victor sends along further word about the Brandenburg Concerti No. 3 and 4, recently reviewed here in performances by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony. The inscription "Recorded in Tanglewood, Mass.," should not be interpreted to mean the large Music Shed, but, rather, the smaller Theater-Concert Hall. As for the "thinness of sound" to which I alluded, I am now informed that the works were played by approximately thirty men. The album and the individual records read merely, "Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra," for those who might be interested.

The Lighter Side.

With becoming modesty, Leonard Feather has written only three of the four tunes in the album of "Esquire Hot Jazz," which are played by some of that magazine's selections of the outstanding jazz musicians of last year. The other place of honor goes to Magdison and Wrubel's "Gone With the Wind." I say "some," for Dave Tough is replaced by Sonny Greer on drums, and Niel Hefti is an alternative for Charlie Shavers on trumpet. However, it is more than a little exciting to listen to Duke Ellington and Louis Armstrong on the same disk ("Long Long Journey"). If you think that Billy Strayhorn is an all-American pianist and Jimmy Hamilton "the" new clarinetist, then you will find this volume of "1946 Award Winners" to your taste. (Victor HJ-8).

This Clipping From
PITTSBURGH, PA.
POST-GAZETTE

JUN 8 - 1946

The NEW RECORDS

By Donald Steinfirst

Mozart—Concerto No. 5 in A Major for Violin and Piano—Adolf Busch, violin with the Busch Chamber Players—Columbia M-609.

★★★★ The only recent pressing of this rich Concerto, and long past due, too, is this marvelously clear and sympathetic recording by a Mozart performer of distinction and elegance. The Concerto itself is the most attractive of all the Mozart violin writings, an exemplary example of lucid melodic 18th Century Concerto composing. Mr. Busch's peculiar non-vibrato style of playing is particularly effective here and his musical understanding of Mozartean difficulties is a joy to listen to. The album is technically excellent with no rough surfaces.

Copland—Appalachian Spring Suite—Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor—Victor DM-1046.

★★★★ Make way for one of the bright spots in our modern repertoire. In "Appalachian Spring," originally created for the dancer, Martha Graham, Aaron Copland has written strongly and yet with such deep purposeful intelligence, that the work takes fire from the spark at once. There is no need to rehear "Appalachian Spring" to fall in love with it. You do it at one listening. Original, dignified. magnificiently constructed for orchesta, hauntingly beautiful, strikingly balanced, it is a work of our day that will be heard again and again. The Bostonians play with eloquence as they do all modern scores and Victor has given the set a clear pressing.

This Clipping From
GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS

JUN 9 - 1946

COPLAND: APPALACHIAN SPRING. Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky (Victor set DM 1046).

Recipient of two awards, the 1945 Pulitzer Prize for music and the award of the Music Critics circle of New York for 1944-45, Copland's "Appalachian Spring" provides something new in musical experience. Written in collaboration with the famous dancer, Martha Graham, the composition was originally conceived as a background for a dance drama depicting the strength, love and religion of pioneer life.'

The music exceeds that one goal, however. It encompasses a whole host of emotions: wonder, fear, spiritual elation, the strong pull of life.—M. A. G.

BRAHMS: Concerto in D major for Violin and Orchestra, Opus 77. Joseph Szigeti, violin, with the Philadelphia orchestra conducted by Eugene Ormandy (Columbia Set M-MM-603).

The Brahms violin concerto, like his piano concertos, may be regarded as a symphony with a part for solo instrument. Brahms lovers will be particularly pleased with the brilliant performance of this concerto by Joseph Szigeti and Eugene Ormandy. Theirs is a beautiful and intelligent interpretation of one of the most famous works in all musical literature.—M. F. C.

This Clipping From
NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUN 9 - 1946

Julian Orbon, 20-year-old Cuban composer, has been awarded a scholarship for study this summer with Aaron Copland at the Berkshire Music Center conducted by Serge Kousevitzky of the Boston Symphony. The scholarship, which is competitive, is provided by the American Steel corporation of Cuba and the American Tropical Products corporation of Cuba, under the auspices of the Cuban-American Music Group.

Artur Toscannini's third pair of concerts at La Scala, in Milan, Italy will start on June 25 instead of June 24, as originally scheduled. The change has been made to coincide with the 60th anniversary of Toscanini's debut as a conductor in Rio de Janeiro. On that occasion he stepped into the conductor's box from his desk as 'cellist in the orchestra and conducted without score or rehearsal.

After the June concerts, Toscanini will return to the United States to resume direction of the NBC Symphony Orchestra.

Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will leave for South America by air on June 17 to direct a series of concerts in Latin-American countries. starting with siv in Rio de Janeiro, Ormandy has just finished a transcontinental tour with the Philadelphia Orchestra during which he conducted 37 concerts in 30 cities of the United States and Canada.

Two young musicians will be picked for concert careers at a "stairway to stardom" talent concert sponsored by the Margaret Walter Talent Registry division at Town Hall, New York, on June 11, 12 and 13. Seventy-five members of the registry will compete, with each allowed six minutes to show what they can do. One winner will be picked by a committee of well-known musicians and the other by audience ballot. Each will receive a $500 award and assistance toward a career.

This Clipping From
NATION
NEW YORK, N.Y.

JUN 8 - 1946

Any new recorded performances of Bach's "Brandenburg" Concertos have to meet the test of comparison with the ones that Adolf Busch's Chamber Players recorded in Europe a number of years ago; and I am sorry to have to report that the performances of Nos. 3 and 4 by part of the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky (Set 1050; $4.85) do not stand the comparison well. The Busch performance of the first movement of No. 3 has the lightness, clarity, and subtle inflection of playing by a small chamber group, and these qualities are preserved by recording which defines the sound clearly in live quiet; the Boston Symphony performance has the more massive and less flexible sound of a considerably larger group of strings in a reverberant empty auditorium. And to this difference there is added, in the last movement, a difference in pace that makes the Boston Symphony performance stodgy as compared with the brilliantly light-footed Busch. The first movement of No. 4 the Boston Symphony plays very beautifully—with lightness and delicacy and the exquisite sound of Laurent's flute; but Busch himself plays the violin part far better than Burgin, and the Busch group as a whole achieves a more integrated ensemble performance. And in the last movement there are again differences in sonority and pace which make the Boston Symphony performance opaque and stodgy where the Busch is clear and buoyant. The concertos take seven sides of the Victor set; and on the eighth is Pick-Mangiagalli's monstrous transcription for full orchestra of the great Prelude of Bach's E major Sonata for unaccompanied violin.

the second-act ballet and the Jules Munshin burlesque of Maurice Evans—one of the best musical shows of recent years. But "Annie Get Your Gun" has nothing but a few good lyrics that provide Ethel Merman with material for her very efficient technique of being very funny.

This Clipping From
PUBLISHER'S WEEKLY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUN 8 - 1946

► THE READERS' PRESS has several announcements about some of its forthcoming books. The titles of two books have been changed. The book edited by Thurston Macauley, editor of the firm (PW, June 1) will be called "The Horse Omnibus" instead of "The Great Horse Omnibus." Mr. Macauley tells us the press is now hard at work on the production, arranging 32 pages of illustrations, which will include Franz Marc's famous picture "Golden Horses" as frontispiece and color illustration for the jacket, and photos by Bert Clark Thayer, well known as a photographer of horses. The other title to be changed will be that of Jerome Davis's book, to be called "Behind Soviet Power—Stalin and the Russians," instead of "Behind the Iron Curtain." Readers' Press also announces it has signed a contract with April Taylor to bring out her book "Love Is A Four-Letter Word," which, according to Mr. Macauley, "should cause some eyebrows to be raised." "Kousevitsky" by Moses Smith has just gone to press.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JUN 9 - 1946

Berkshire Festival's Programs Announced

Programs and soloists have been announced for the Summer's Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., during July and August. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will give nine concerts in the music shed at Tanglewood.

Soloists will include Eugene List and Claudio Arrau, pianists; Carol Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists. Composers represented will be Beethoven, Rachmaninoff, Moussorgsky, Wagner, Mendelssohn, Aaron Copland, Prokofieff. Schumann, Richard Strauss, Bohuslav Martinu, Tchaikovsy, Randall Thompson and Brahms. The programs of the second of the three weeks will be devoted entirely to the works of Brahms.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

JUN 8 - 1946

Disc Data

THE melodic New World Symphony by Dvorak gets excellent treatment from Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra in a new Columbia album. Ormandy's interpretation should find favor with music lovers. Another Columbia album which will be well received is Beethoven's Sonata No. 7 in C-Minor for violin and piano by Isaac Stern and Alexander Zakin. Both albums offer real music well played.

* * *

Victor includes two outstanding albums in its June releases. Some of the mightiest and most majestic moments in music will be found in the recording of Brahms Symphony No. 1 in C-Minor by the Hollywood Bowl Symphony Orchestra directed by Leopold Stokowski. Issued in nonbreakable plastic platters, there seems to be a third dimension lacking in other records. The other highlight is offered by the Boston Symphony. Serge Koussevitsky Conducting, in the Brandenburg Concertos 3 and 4 by Bach. A most satisfying performance is the result.

* * *

Two timely salutes dedicated to great figures in the popular field have just been released. Two 12-inch platters have been waxed by Russ Case and his orchestra and chorus (Victor) in honor of the late Vincent Youmans and they contain hits from Great Day, No, No, Nanette and Hit the Deck. We've heard better arrangements of these numbers, but it's a nice gesture. The Modernaires with Paula Kelly (Columbia) honor the memory of Glenn Miller with four numbers—Moonlight Serenade, Elmer's Tune, Don't Sit Under the Apple Tree and Chattanooga Choo Choo—in grand fashion.

* * *

Two swell platters have been waxed for Majestic by George Olsen and his orchestra. One features "Surrender" while the other has the popular "Pin Marin." Lovers of "Cement Mixer" will like the way Jimmy Lunceford's orchestra does it. Another Majestic offers Eddy Howard's orchestra in a pleasing arrangement of "Cynthia's in Love." You're sure to like Frankie Carle's orchestra in "One More Tomorrow" and the danceable "It Couldn't Be True" as waxed for Columbia by Les Brown and his band. Freddy Martin and his musicians are clever in their disc of "Doin' What Comes Natur'lly." Johnny Desmond has a sure fire hit in his smooth waxing of "In Love in Vain." The latter two are Victors.

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER

JUN 9 - 1946

positions.

* * *

The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire festival July 25 in gala premiere style at Tanglewood in the Berkshires of western Massachusetts. Nine concerts extending over three week ends will be given in a bucolic setting.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

JUN 9 - 194

On the Reco

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
JUN 7 - 1946

The New Records

'Lohengrin' by Baum and Traubel—A 'Peer Gynt' Suite—Lighter Side.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

Had I not heard Kurt Baum at a recent Carnegie "Pop" concert, I would be inclined to regard his part in a current Columbia album as one of the things that happens only in a recording studio. However, the strength and color of Baum's voice in the third act duet of "Lohengrin" are no microphone marvel—they duplicate the quality one heard from him in the hall, and which one hopes to hear at greater length in the opera house soon.

It is well that Baum contributes the vocal interest that he does, for his partner is Helen Traubel, whose Elsa has never been a favorite of mine. Even though Miss Traubel's name is printed several times larger than Baum's on the album cover, and her picture decorates the inside, she is hardly the star of the enterprise. Her tones—aside from the full-voiced top—are edgy and shrill, with little of the bright youthfulness this music requires.

Though Artur Rodzinski is the conductor and the Philharmonic Symphony is the orchestra, there is too much of the spirit of an accompaniment about his part in this recording. In this, the deficiency is similar to that of the Victor album in which Kirsten Flagstad and Lauritz Melchior were "directed" by Edwin MacArthur. I would hardly dare bracket Rodzinski with MacArthur, but the fact that he does not take charge of this performance, as he should, robs it of the one element that would give it superiority to the other. The recording is powerful but lacking in the richness of sound that the music contains. (Columbia Set 261X.)

'Peer Gynt.'

It is a formidable challenge for a conductor to undertake the recording of any work of which there is a contemporary version by Sir Thomas Beecham. Eugene Goossens has had the experience in the past and now again with a recording of the "Peer Gynt" suite with the Cincinnati Symphony. This version is a replacement for the one (by Goossens) which Victor inserted in its Set 404, formerly assigned to a Barbirolli performance.

There is a glint and sharpness of outline in these disks that Beecham's London Philharmonic set cannot provide, but all of Goossens's effort and ingenuity still leaves him short of the goal to which he aspires. However, for sheer volume, the "Hall of the Mountain King" in this set has few peers. In a more resonant hall than the one in which this was made, it would be even more impressive. (V-Set SP-10.)

Department of Further Facts.

Apropos of records and the halls in which they are made, Victor sends along further word about the Brandenburg Concerti No. 3 and 4, recently reviewed here in performances by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony. The inscription "Recorded in Tanglewood, Mass.," should not be interpreted to mean the large Music Shed, but, rather, the smaller Theater-Concert Hall.

As for the "thinness of sound" to which I alluded, I am now informed that the works were played by approximately thirty men. The album and the individual records read merely, "Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra," for those who might be interested.

The Lighter Side.

With becoming modesty, Leonard Feather has written only three of the four tunes in the album of "Esquire Hot Jazz," which are played by some of that magazine's selections of the outstanding jazz musicians of last year. The other place of honor goes to Magdison and Wrubel's "Gone With the Wind." I say "some," for Dave Tough is replaced by Sonny Greer on drums, and Niel Hefti is an alternative for Charlie Shavers on trumpet. However, it is more than a little exciting to listen to Duke Ellington and Louis Armstrong on the same disk ("Long Long Journey"). If you think that Billy Strayhorn is an all-American pianist and Jimmy Hamilton "the" new clarinetist, then you will find this volume of "1946 Award Winners" to your taste. (Victor HJ-8).

This Clipping From
PITTSBURGH, PA.
POST-GAZETTE
JUN 8 - 1946

The NEW RECORDS

By Donald Steinfirst

Mozart—Concerto No. 5 in A Major for Violin and Piano—Adolf Busch, violin with the Busch Chamber Players—Columbia M-609.

* The only recent pressing of this rich Concerto, and long past due, too, is this marvelously clear and sympathetic recording by a Mozart performer of distinction and elegance. The Concerto itself is the most attractive of all the Mozart violin writings, an exemplary example of lucid melodic 18th Century Concerto composing. Mr. Busch's peculiar non-vibrato style of playing is particularly effective here and his musical understanding of Mozartean difficulties is a joy to listen to. The album is technically excellent with no rough surfaces.

Copland—Appalachian Spring Suite—Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor—Victor DM-1046.

* Make way for one of the bright spots in our modern repertoire. In "Appalachian Spring," originally created for the dancer, Martha Graham, Aaron Copland has written strongly and yet with such deep purposeful intelligence, that the work takes fire from the spark at once. There is no need to rehear "Appalachian Spring" to fall in love with it. You do it at one listening. Original, dignified, magnificiently constructed for orchesta, hauntingly beautiful, strikingly balanced, it is a work of our day that will be heard again and again. The Bostonians play with eloquence as they do all modern scores and Victor has given the set a clear pressing.

This Clipping From
GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS
JUN 8 - 1946

COPLAND: APPALACHIAN SPRING. Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky (Victor set DM 1046).

Recipient of two awards, the 1945 Pulitzer Prize for music and the award of the Music Critics circle of New York for 1944-45, Copland's "Appalachian Spring" provides something new in musical experience. Written in collaboration with the famous dancer, Martha Graham, the composition was originally conceived as a background for a dance drama depicting the strength, love and religion of pioneer life.

The music exceeds that one goal, however. It encompasses a whole host of emotions: wonder, fear, spiritual elation, the strong pull of life.—M. A. G.

BRAHMS: Concerto in D major for Violin and Orchestra, Opus 77. Joseph Szigeti, violin, with the Philadelphia orchestra conducted by Eugene Ormandy (Columbia Set M-MM-603).

The Brahms violin concerto, like his piano concertos, may be regarded as a symphony with a part for solo instrument. Brahms lovers will be particularly pleased with the brilliant performance of this concerto by Joseph Szigeti and Eugene Ormandy. Theirs is a beautiful and intelligent interpretation of one of the most famous works in all musical literature.—M. F. C.

This Clipping From
NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.
GAZETTE
JUN 9 - 1946

Julian Orbon, 20-year-old Cuban composer, has been awarded a scholarship for study this summer with Aaron Copland at the Berkshire Music Center conducted by Serge Kousevitzky of the Boston Symphony. The scholarship, which is competitive, is provided by the American Steel corporation of Cuba and the American Tropical Products corporation of Cuba, under the auspices of the Cuban-American Music Group.

Artur Toscannini's third pair of concerts at La Scala, in Milan, Italy will start on June 25 instead of June 24, as originally scheduled. The change has been made to coincide with the 60th anniversary of Toscannini's debut as a conductor in Rio de Janeiro. On that occasion he stepped into the conductor's box from his desk as 'cellist in the orchestra and conducted without score or rehearsal.

After the June concerts, Toscanini will return to the United States to resume direction of the NBC Symphony Orchestra.

Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will leave for South America by air on June 17 to direct a series of concerts in Latin-American countries, starting with six in Rio de Janeiro. Ormandy has just finished a transcontinental tour with the Philadelphia Orchestra during which he conducted 37 concerts in 30 cities of the United States and Canada.

Two young musicians will be picked for concert careers at a "stairway to stardom" talent concert sponsored by the Margaret Walter Talent Registry division at Town Hall, New York, on June 11, 12 and 13. Seventy-five members of the registry will compete, with each allowed six minutes to show what they can do. One winner will be picked by a committee of well-known musicians and the other by audience ballot. Each will receive a $500 award and assistance toward a career.

This Clipping From
NATION
NEW YORK, N.Y.
JUN 8 - 1946

Any new recorded performances of Bach's "Brandenburg" Concertos have to meet the test of comparison with the ones that Adolf Busch's Chamber Players recorded in Europe a number of years ago; and I am sorry to have to report that the performances of Nos. 3 and 4 by part of the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky (Set 1050, $4.85) do not stand the comparison well. The Busch performance of the first movement of No. 3 has the lightness, clarity, and subtle inflection of playing by a small chamber group, and these qualities are preserved by recording which defines the sound clearly in live quiet; the Boston Symphony performance has the more massive and less flexible sound of a considerably larger group of strings in a reverberant empty auditorium. And to this difference there is added, in the last movement, a difference in pace that makes the Boston Symphony performance stodgy as compared with the brilliantly light-footed Busch. The first movement of No. 4 the Boston Symphony plays very beautifully—with lightness and delicacy and the exquisite sound of Laurent's flute; but Busch himself plays the violin part far better than Burgin, and the Busch group as a whole achieves a more integrated ensemble performance. And in the last movement there are again differences in sonority and pace which make the Boston Symphony performance opaque and stodgy where the Busch is clear and buoyant. The concertos take seven sides of the Victor set; and on the eighth is Pick-Mangiagalli's monstrous transcription for full orchestra of the great Prelude of Bach's E major Sonata for unaccompanied violin.

the second-act ballet and the Jules Munshin burlesque of Maurice Evans—one of the best musical shows of recent years. But "Annie Get Your Gun" has nothing but a few good lyrics that provide Ethel Merman with material for her very efficient technique of being very funny.

This Clipping From
PUBLISHER'S WEEKLY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUN 8 - 1946

► THE READERS' PRESS has several announcements about some of its forthcoming books. The titles of two books have been changed. The book edited by Thurston Macauley, editor of the firm (PW, June 1) will be called "The Horse Omnibus" instead of "The Great Horse Omnibus." Mr. Macauley tells us the press is now hard at work on the production, arranging 32 pages of illustrations, which will include Franz Marc's famous picture "Golden Horses" as frontispiece and color illustration for the jacket, and photos by Bert Clark Thayer, well known as a photographer of horses. The other title to be changed will be that of Jerome Davis's book, to be called "Behind Soviet Power—Stalin and the Russians," instead of "Behind the Iron Curtain."

Readers' Press also announces it has signed a contract with April Taylor to bring out her book "Love Is A Four-Letter Word," which, according to Mr. Macauley, "should cause some eyebrows to be raised." "Koussevitsky" by Moses Smith has just gone to press.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
JUN 9 - 1946

Berkshire Festival's Programs Announced

Programs and soloists have been announced for the Summer's Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., during July and August. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will [illegible] the music shed at Tanglewood.

Soloists will include Eugene List and Claudio Arrau, pianists; Carol Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists. Composers represented will be Beethoven, Rachmaninoff, Moussorgsky, Wagner, Mendelssohn, Aaron Copland, Prokofieff, Schumann, Richard Strauss, Bohuslav Martinu, Tchaikovsy, Randall Thompson and Brahms. The programs of the second of the three weeks will be devoted entirely to the works of Brahms.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS
JUN 8 - 1946

Disc Data

THE melodic New World Symphony by Dvorak gets excellent treatment from Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra in a new Columbia album. Ormandy's interpretation should find favor with music lovers. Another Columbia album which will be well received is Beethoven's Sonata No. 7 in C-Minor for violin and piano by Isaac Stern and Alexander Zakin. Both albums offer real music well played.

* * *

Victor includes two outstanding albums in its June releases. Some of the mightiest and most majestic moments in music will be found in the recording of Brahms Symphony No. 1 in C-Minor by the Hollywood Bowl Symphony Orchestra directed by Leopold Stokowski. Issued in nonbreakable plastic platters, there seems to be a third dimension lacking in other records. The other highlight is offered by the Boston Symphony, Serge Koussevitsky Conducting, in the Brandenburg Concertos 3 and 4 by Bach. A most satisfying performance is the result.

* * *

Two timely salutes dedicated to great figures in the popular field have just been released. Two 12-inch platters have been waxed by Russ Case and his orchestra and chorus (Victor) in honor of the late Vincent Youmans and they contain hits from Great Day, No No Nanette and Hit the Deck. We've heard better arrangements of these numbers, but i't a nice gesture. The Modernaires with Paula Kelly (Columbia) honor the memory of Glenn Miller with four numbers—Moonlight Serenade, Elmer's Tune, Don't Sit Under the Apple Tree and Chattanooga Choo Choo—in grand fashion.

* * *

Two swell platters have been waxed for Majestic by George Olsen and his orchestra. One features "Surrender" while the other has the popular "Pin Marin." Lovers of "Cement Mixer" will like the way Jimmy Lunceford's orchestra does it. Another Majestic offers Eddy Howard's orchestra in a pleasing arrangement of "Cynthia's in Love." You're sure to like Frankie Carle's orchestra in "One More Tomorrow" and the danceable "It Couldn't Be True" as waxed for Columbia by Les Brown and his band. Freddy Martin and his musicians are clever in their disc of "Doin' What Comes Natur'lly." Johnny Desmond has a sure fire hit in his smooth waxing of "In Love in Vain." The latter two are Victors.

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER
JUN 9 - 1946

positions.

* * *

The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala preview style at Tanglewood in the hills of western Massachusetts. Nine concerts extending over three week ends will be given in a bucolic setting.

* * *

allet and the Jules Mun-of Maurice Evans—one cal shows of recent years, t Your Gun" has noth-good lyrics that provide with material for her chnique of being very

This Clipping From
UFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

8 - 1946

Disc Data

lodic New World Symby Dvorak gets excel-ment from Eugene Ord the Philadelphia Ora new Columbia album.
interpretation should with music lovers. An-umbia album which will received is Beethoven's
. 7 in C-Minor for vio-
ano by Isaac Stern and Zakin. Both albums of-usic well played.

* * *

ncludes two outstanding its June releases. Some htiest and most majestic music will be found in ing of Brahms Symphony
-Minor by the Hollywood phony Orchestra directed d Stokowski. Issued in ble plastic platters, there e a third dimension lack-her records. The other is offered by the Boston
, Serge Koussevitsky
g, in the Brandenburg
3 and 4 by Bach. A most performance is the result.

* * *

nely salutes dedicated to res in the popular field been released. Two 12-ers have been waxed by and his orchestra and ictor) in honor of the ent Youmans and they ts from Great Day, No
tte and Hit the Deck.
ard better arrangements numbers, but it's a nice
The Modernaires with ly (Columbia) honor the f Glenn Miller with four Moonlight Serenade, Ele, Don't Sit Under the e and Chattanooga Choo grand fashion.

* * *

vell platters have been Majestic by George Ols orchestra. One features r" while the other has ar "Pin Marin." Lovers nt Mixer" will like the ny Lunceford's orchestra
Another Majestic offers ward's orchestra in a rrangement of "Cynthia's
You're sure to like Carle's orchestra in "One orrow" and the dance-Couldn't Be True" as Columbia by Les Brown and. Freddy Martin and ians are clever in the
Doin' What Comes Na
Johnny Desmond has hit in his smooth waxin ve in Vain." The latte Victors.

Clipping From
VELAND, OHIO
LAIN DEALER

UN 9 - 1946

* * *

oston Symphony Orchestr
's annual Berkshire musi
July 25 in gala prewa
Tanglewood in the hill
ern Massachusetts. Nin extending over thre ds will be given in a bu
ting.

RECORDS: BACH ALBUM

New York Times

By MARK A. SCHUBART

IN the releases issued during recent months, the music of Bach has fared unusually well. There have not been a great number of them, but those that have appeared, in terms both of performance and recording, have done full justice to the master's works.

No exception to this agreeable trend is an album devoted to the Brandenburg Concerti Nos. 3 and 4 as performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky (Victor album DM-1050, four twelve-inch records). Dr. Koussevitzky's Bach has, on occasion, been questioned by other writers. I have always found it clear, vigorous, elegant and stylistically convincing. It is free of heavy-handed pedantry, and, if it at times stresses the elegances of the period, that is surely leaning in the right direction.

On these records, the musicianly virtuosity of this incomparable orchestra is plainly heard. Without benefit of the razzle-dazzle orchestral effects of later composers, the music sounds fresh and alive. The Fourth Concerto, which is scored for solo violin and two solo flutes receives an unusually eloquent reading, and the entire album is admirably recorded.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

JUN 9 - 19

On the Records

The mighty first symphony of Johannes Brahms has a recording to match its majestic sweep on Victor's new plastic discs. The non-breakable platters, which made an auspicious debut with the Boston Symphony's performance of the tuneful but light Till Eulenspiegel and Toscanini's collection of Rossini overtures, really come of age in this latest album.

The interpretation of the Brahms work is in the hands of Leopold Stokowski, who, as might be expected, gives it everything. The Hollywood Bowl Symphony, one of the newest of the major orchestras, acquits itself with distinction, while the sound engineering is of the best.

There are five 12-inch records.

Stokowski also pilots the Hollywood Orchestra in a lilting version of the ever-popular Barcarolle from Tales of Hoffman on a 12-inch single. The coupling is the conductor's own symphonic transcription of Schubert's Moment Musical.

Beside Brahms, the other members of the three Bs have important places in the new waxings.

From Tanglewood, the scene of the Berkshire Music Festivals where Dr. Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony give Summer performances of great music by the masters, comes a recording by Victor of Bach's Brandenburg Concertos No. 3 and 4. The music center's wooden concert hall provides a perfect accoustical setting for the fine performance by the orchestra. There are four 12-inch discs.

Beethoven is ably represented by Columbia's album of his Sonata No. 7 in C Minor for violin and piano. The artists are Isaac Stern, youthful and brilliant violin virtuoso, with Alexander Zakin at the keyboard.

The sonata occupies seven 12-inch sides. The eighth side offers the Allegro from Handel's Sonata in D Major.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUN 9 - 1946

Starts Next Symphony Series

The opening concert of the 1946-1947 Bushnell Symphony Series will be played by the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Artur Rodzinski (above). This course of six orchestral concerts, scheduled from November to April, includes also the Boston, Cleveland, National and Philadelphia Orchestras. The Boston will play here twice, once under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky and once under the celebrated guest conductor, Bruno Walter. Prominent piano soloists will appear with the Cleveland and National orchestras.

This Clipping From CANTON, OHIO REPOSITORY

JUN 9 - 1946

oin In Recital Here Wednesday

Edith Gordon

Sonya Monosoff

WEDNESDAY evening at 8:30, Miss Edith Gordon and Miss Sonya Monosoff will appear in a joint recital in Canton Woman's Club with Bessie Sharff Levin as accompanist. They also will appear in a recital June 16 at 2:30 in Cleveland Art Museum.

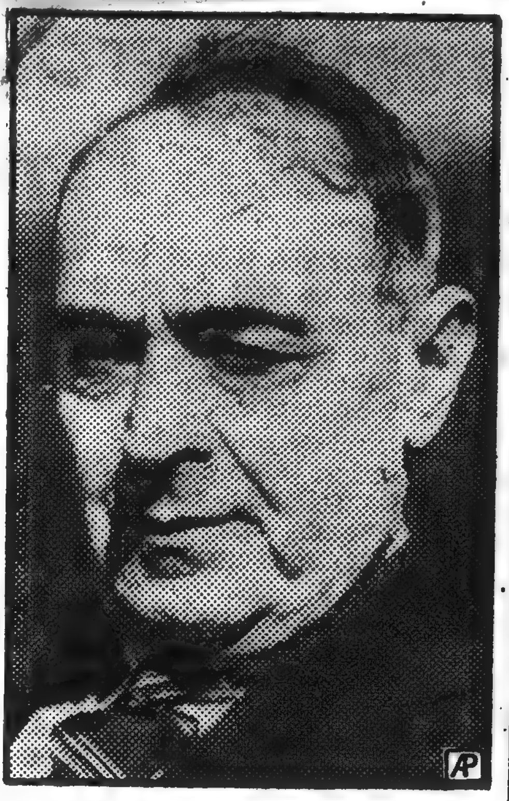
Miss Gordon, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Gordon of 1310 16th st NW, was graduated from Lehman High School and received her diploma from Juilliard School of Music in May. A soprano, she has appeared locally in "The Firefly" and "Naughty Marietta" and was heard in a series of broadcasts over WHBC.

She is now taking postgraduate work at the Juilliard school with Lucia Dunham as her instructor. She has given recitals in New York and has sung over WOR-Mutual.

Miss Monosoff of Cleveland Heights, holder of a renewed fellowship for study of violin at the Juilliard school, also has received a summer scholarship to Berkshire Music Center Tanglewood, Mass., under direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony.

This Clipping From
DURHAM, N. C.
HERALD

JUN 9 - 1946



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

MARIAN ANDERSON

New Records In Review

By JOHN V. BLALOCK

Victor has a particularly interesting list of new releases for the classical fan. Besides a couple albums of symphonic music, there are some singles devoted to operatic arias and Schumann "lieder."

Schubert's "Unfinished"

Serge Koussevitzky leads the Boston Symphony Orchestra in albums of Schubert and Bach. Dr. Koussevitzky's earlier recording of Schubert's Symphony No. 8 in B minor (the "Unfinished") has enjoyed a wide and appreciative audience because of his close and yet slightly individualistic reading of the score. Now he conducts the Boston Symphony in a new recording of the "Unfinished" (Album M or DM 1039; three 12-inch records). It benefits from a fresh approach and mechanical improvements. The solo instruments are not as clearly evident as they should be, but on the whole this new recording is especially worthy as a replacement of older ones. One could not hope for better Schubert.

Brandenburg Concertos

Another much-admired Koussevitzky-Boston Symphony performance is of the J. S. Bach "Brandenburg Concertos No. 3 and 4." These were put on records in the Tanglewood Concert Hall, which has been acclaimed for its high acoustical properties, and now appear in a new album (D or DM 1050, four 12-inch records). Whatever was responsible, excellent acoustics or expert mechanics, or both, this album contains one of the finest performances of two of Bach's finest compositions ever to appear on wax. Dr. Koussevitzky uses a fuller orchestra than the score calls for, and the result is a richly flavored, long-lingering Bach.

This Clipping From
ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES

JUN 9 - 1946

DR. ROY HARRIS, noted American composer and conductor, will make the first of two consecutive appearances as guest conductor of the American Broadcasting Symphony orchestra, when he presides over "Saturday Concert" on Saturday over ABC-WSLS.

Elizabeth Wysor, American contralto, and Johana Harris, native pianist, will be soloists on the program which also includes the first network performance of "Prisoner of War Rhapsody," a work by Byron Schiffman of New York, written while he was interned in a prison camp in Germany after he was shot down over Munich. Mrs. Harris will play the work and also will be soloist in Mozart's D minor concerto. Miss Wysor will be heard in Bach's cantata, "Strike, Thou Hour So Long Expected" for contralto and string orchestra.

The program also will include the second movement from Harris' Symphony No. 5 which had its first performance over ABC with Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston symphony.

"Saturday Concert" is heard from 4:00-5:55 p. m. over WSLS.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

JUN 9 - 1946

Good Word for Music

That constructive critic Olin Downes acquainted his readers last week with the plan of George Szell, newly-called director of the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra, to establish as his assistants two apprentice conductors. They will work with orchestra as "master students." They will attend all the rehearsals and concerts, including those of Dr. Rudolph Ringwall, the orchestra's associate conductor, and of Mr. Szell and his guest conductors of next season—Bruno Walter, Georges Enesco and Igor Stravinsky.

They must be good pianists and will play this instrument, or some other in which they may be skilled, as part of the orchestra personnel. They must be under 25 years of age and must be citizens of the United States or Canada. The Kulas Foundation of Cleveland makes this experience in conducting possible. Only the Berkshire Music Center has given such training under Dr. Koussevitzky. Virgil Thomson pointed out recently that there are no fully-equipped young conductors and names only Bruno Walter, Toscanini, Koussevitzky and two or three other great names who are truly well-rounded musicians.

* * *

Recalls Interview

Earle D. Wilson's account of stars who visited the Olympia Theater here included a reminiscence of Lou Tellegen. We were sent from The Mercury to interview Sara Bernhardt's onetime leading juvenile and were delicate about bringing up mention of Geraldine Farrar, who then was separated from the tall, handsome actor.

As the matter stood, the short play this actor had written was of little worth. We were uncomfortable over his unsuccessful appearance and filled up the conversation reminiscing about how we had followed him through Mason Street in Boston and how Bernhardt had lost consciousness on the stage in the supper scene in "Camille" and had fallen gracefully into his arms—all plausible until a doctor was summoned from the audience.

"She was like a mother to me," we elicited by this chat. We thought we did well not to mention Farrar.

[148]

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

JUN 9 1946

THE WEEK IN ART

Underwood Gets 'Best Print' Honor for Seventh Year; Eastman Summer School

AND MUSIC

By NORMAN NAIRN

seven years in a row, Arthur M. Underwood, APSA, ias won the honor for the best print of the year at the ester Camera Club Show, which opens to the public to- at Memorial Art Gallery. Last night's informal viewing for the 30 club members who have a total of 63 prints exhibition. The show continues through July 7.

When the judges last week again selected his work as tops, Underwood, feeling he should not "hog" the award, demanded a "recount." The judges, Clifford M. Ulp of RIT, Dr. E. P. Wightman of Eastman Kodak, and Frederick Brehm of RIT, did it all again, and came to the same decision.

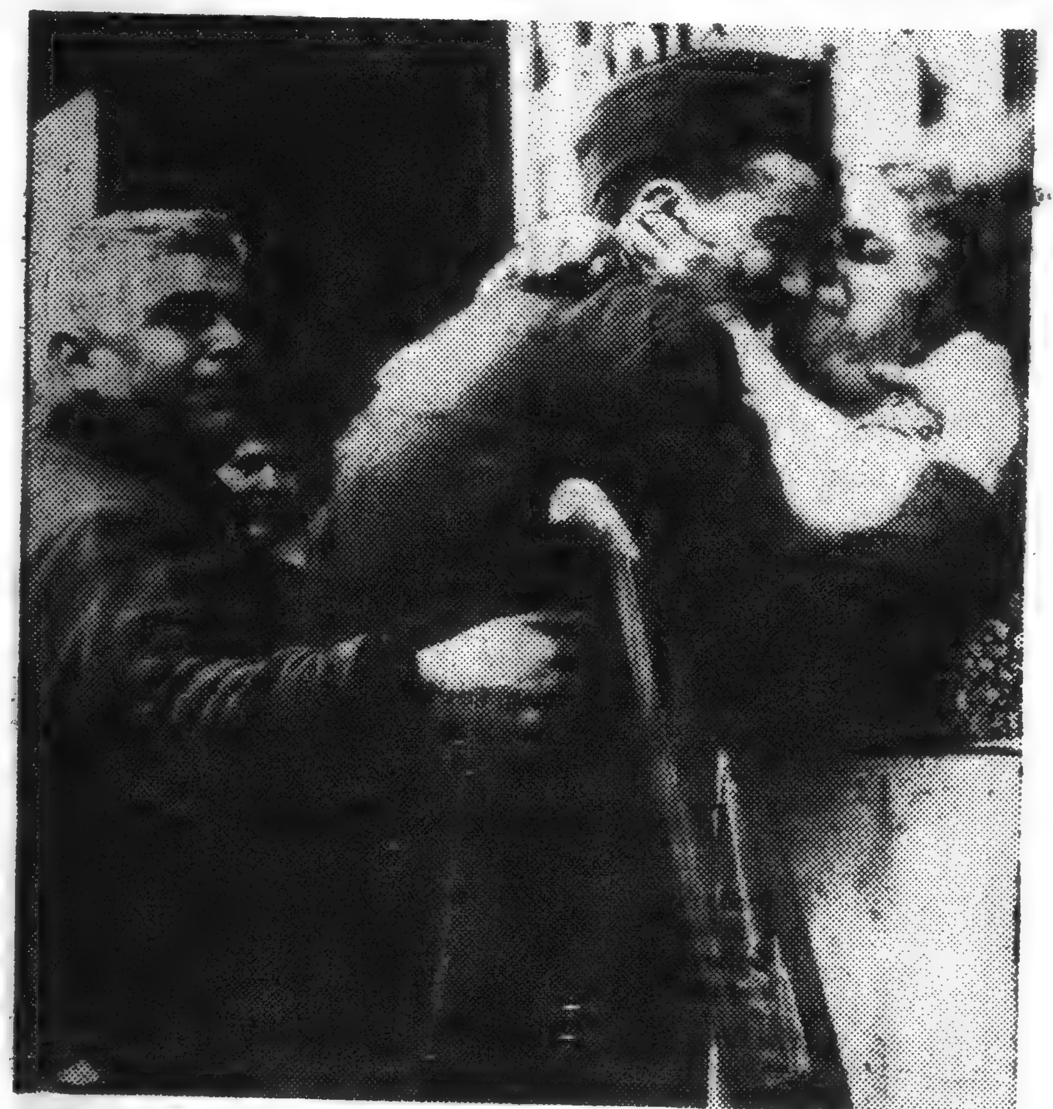
Other awards were: Pictorial excellence, advanced group, Leon C. Forgie; open competition, Thomas C. Gordon; pictorial excellence, beginners group, William Richardson. The retiring slate of officers, responsible for arrangements for the current varied show, are: President, Leon C. Forgie; vicepresident-secretary-treasurer, Gordon M. Berns; print director, Thomas C. Gordon; chairman of show, Douglas Kalbfleisch; educational director, Arthur M. Underwood.

Coincident with the Camera Club show, Memorial Art Gallery has its permanent collection on view.

* * *

RUNDEL GALLERY of the Public Library, continuing through this week, has a photographic exhibit of different character. 150 prize winners chosen for the Sixth Annual National High School Salon of Photography. The salon, which began as a spare-time hobby for students, now is of national importance.

Sponsored by Stuyvesant High School, New York; Young America and Popular Photography, here is found a variety of subject matter, approached with photographic originality and technical skill.



"Back Home," winner of first prize in National High School Salon of Photography now at Rundel Gallery. The photo, by Morris Neufeld, New York student, won $100 in war bonds and was named "Picture of the Year" by the New York Sun. The salon ends on Saturday.

Campbell-Whittlesey House, 124 S. Fitzhugh St.: Exhibition of locally owned Lowestoft china, sponsored by the Society for the Preservation of Western New York Landmarks. It will continue through June, hours 10 to 12 a. m. and 2 to 5 p. m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays, and 2 to 5 p. m. on Sundays.

Bevier: Exhibition of work by students of RIT applied arts school. Lulu Scott Backus is teaching an evening class in ceramics at RIT on Mondays and Wednesdays, and in July will have a day class in the same art.

Rochester Museum: Bridal costumes from 1847 to 1946.

* * *

Extra Courses for Six-Week Session

SUMMER session of the Eastman School, under direction of Raymond Wilson, will open June 24 and close Aug. 2. During the six-week period all departments will offer courses coinciding with those of the regular school year.

In addition to the regular courses in theory, composition, historical survey, music literature, musicology and music education, there will be special courses in choral conducting, instrumental ensemble, piano sight-reading, organ repertoire and church service playing. Pedagogy courses will be offered in elementary and collegiate theory, piano, organ, voice, violin and cello.

Practically all members of the regular faculty will be on the summer session staff. In addition, Max Landow, instructor emeritus, will teach piano, and Lilias Mackinnon, guest instructor last summer, will teach piano and give four lectures on "Pianistic Interpretation." Herman Genhart will direct the summer chorus and Karl D. Van Hoesen the summer orchestra.

* * *

Berkshire Festival to Be Resumed

PLANS for the 1946 Berkshire Festival, one of the country's most important musical events, July 25-Aug. 11, inclusive, consists of nine concerts in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. Concerts are on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons. Soloists for the festival, which draws quite a representative attendance from Rochester, include Claudio Arrau and Eugene List, pianists; Carol Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist; Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists.

Program for the first week: July 25, Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius Symphony No. 2. July 27, Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony, Rachmaninoff's Concerto No. 2 (Eugene List), Moussorgsky's Prelude to "Khovanstchina," Wagner's Prelude to "The Mastersingers"; July 28, Mendelssohn's "Italian Symphony, Copland's Suite "Appalachian Spring," Shostakovich's Symphony No. 5.

Second week, music of Brahms: Aug. 1, Tragic Overture, Piano Concerto No. 1 (Claudio Arrau), Symphony No. 4; Aug. 3, Symphony No. 3, Rhapsody with Contralto and Male Chorus (Carol Brice), Symphony No. 2; Aug. 4, Haydn Variations, Double Concerto (Morini and Piatigorsky), Symphony No. 1.

Third week: Aug. 6, Prokofeff's Symphony No. 5, Schumann's Cello Concerto (Piatogorsky), Wagner's Prelude to "Lohengrin," Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel;" Aug. 10, Schuman's American Festival Overture, Martinu's Violin Concerto (Elman), Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 5; Aug. 11, Randall Thompson's "The Testament of Freedom," Beethoven's Symphony No. 9, with Festival chorus and soloists.

Preceding the festival by the full orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky will direct a chamber orchestra composed of members of the Boston Symphony, in two programs (each repeated) devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart. These concerts, in the Theater-Concert Hall, come July 13, 14, 20 and 21, and preserve a custom established in the last two summers at Tanglewood when the Festival was suspended by the war.

This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

JUN 9 - 1946

Programs and soloists have been announced for this summer's Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., during July and August. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will give nine concerts in the music shed at Tanglewood.

Soloists will include Eugene List and Claudio Arrau, pianists; Carol Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists. Composers represented will be Beethoven, Rachmaninoff, Moussorgsky, Wagner, Mendelssohn, Aaron Copland, Prokofieff, Schumann, Richard Strauss, Bohuslav Martinu, Tchaikovsky, Randall Thompson and Brahms. The programs of the second of the three weeks will be devoted entirely to the works of Brahms. 8-20

This Clipping From
ST. PAUL, MINN.
PIONEER PRESS

JUN 9 - 1946

Vic[illegible] unters with the third and fourth Brandenburg concertos of Bach done by Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra.

THE MOZART CONCERTO, ONE OF THAT COMPOSER'S MOST POPULAR, IS GIVEN A FINE INTERPRETATION BY BUSCH AND HIS MEN, NEVER FLASHY BUT THOROUGHLY SATISFYING. OF THE MANY "NEW WORLD" RECORDINGS AVAILABLE, THE NEW ORMANDY JOB RANKS NEXT TO THE SUPERLATIVE OLDER VICTOR RECORDING BY GEORGE SZELL AND THE CZECH PHILHARMONIC. THE NEW ISSUE IS TONALLY MORE OPULENT, HOWEVER.

Harvey

* * *

THE "LOHENGRIN" excerpt, one of the greatest lyric bits in Wagnerian literature, is competently done by all hands and well recorded.

The new album of the Brandenburg concertos is the finest job available in the form in which the concertgoer usually hears them—that is, with a full string orchestra. The older recordings by the Busch Chamber Players for Columbia still get my vote.

Columbia has done itself proud this time, too, with a release of Beethoven's Sonata No. 7 in C minor for violin and piano by Isaac Stern and Alexander Zakin. Stern's fine, ripening violin artistry is beautifully displayed.

This Clipping From
GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.
HERALD

JUN 9 - 1946

Review of the Records

Of unusual interest to record collectors are two recent albums of music by Bach. The first of these contains the famous "Goldberg Variations" as originally composed for harpsichord, played by Wanda Lardowska.

✦ ✦ ✦

THE SECOND album contains the Brandenburg Concertos No. 3 and 4, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. These are examples of the concerto grosso, wherein the solo line is carried by a group of instruments rather than by a single performer.

Both albums are fine examples of absolute music played as the composer intended, replete with brilliant counterpoint and the almost mathmatical precision which characterizes Bach's work.

This Clipping From
SAN DIEGO, CAL.
UNION

JUN 9 1946

DISK DATA

By CONSTANCE HERRESHOFF

"Appalachian Spring," an orchestral suite from the ballet composed by Aaron Copland for Martha Graham, has been well recorded for Victor by the Boston Symphony under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky. This music won the 1945 Pulitzer prize, also the award of the Music Critics Circle of New York. "Appalachian Spring" has been performed this season by the orchestras of New York, Boston, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Rochester, Indianapolis, Pittsburgh, San Francisco and Los Angeles, thereby establishing something of a record for a contemporary American work.

This Copland music has purpose, energy, and at times, much gayety. The music is much less solemn than the dance creation composed for it by Martha Graham. This Victor album contains a lecture on "Appalachian Spring" and photographs of the stage performance.

This Clipping From
PASADENA, CAL.
STAR-NEWS & POST

JUN 9 1946

RECORD NOTES

Bach's Brandenburg Concertos Nos. 3 and 4 are given a new recording this month by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony, heading the current list of RCA-Victor discs. The album was made at the acoustic-perfect Tanglewood, of Nathaniel Hawthorne fame, now the scene of the Berkshire Music Festival. On the eighth side Koussevitzky presents Bach's Prelude in E. arranged by Pick-Mangiagalli.

This Clipping From
WHEELING, W. VA.
NEWS REGISTER

JUN 9 - 1946

* * *

Julian Orbon, 20-year-old Cuban composer, has been awarded a scholarship for study this summer with Aaron Copland at the Berkshire Music Center conducted by Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony. The scholarship, which is competitive, is provided by the American Steel Corp. of Cuba and the American Tropical Products Corp. of Cuba, under the auspices of the Cuban-American Music Group.

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH

JUN - 9 1946

Bach, Mozart Recordings Top New Lot

By Samuel T. Wilson

FROM the standpoints both of distinguished performance and mechanical excellence two recent albums from Victor and Columbia, respectively, are outstanding. Recorded at Tanglewood were the Bach Brandenburg concertos Nos. 3 and 4 played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. Orchestra and conductor were in top form and Victor's technicians succeeded admirably in capturing on discs all the sumptuous beauty of tone of the orchestra's disclosure of the Bach music.

Columbia's prime offering of the moment is the Mozart Concerto No. 5 in A major, for violin and orchestra played by Adolf Busch and the Busch Chamber Players. Connoisseurs will need no urging to add this album to their libraries. Those uninformed regarding Busch's way with Mozart have here golden opportunity to gain that knowledge in the most satisfactory way imaginable.

Another Columbia publication of unusual merit is the Isaac Stern-Alexander Zakin recording of Beethoven's Sonata No. 7 in C minor, for violin and piano. Stern gets well into the heart of the sonata and Mr. Zakin's work at the piano is of arresting technical brilliance and interpretative eloquence.

This Clipping From
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD

JUN 9 - 1946

Americana by Copland

Another bit of Americana is sponsored by Victor on its recent list—Aaron Copland's Appalachian Spring. The album is by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony. Copland needs no introduction as one of this country's most brilliant and widely played younger composers. The "Appalachian" music, originally written for the ballet of that name about the pioneer Pennsylvania countryside 100 years ago, was introduced a couple of seasons ago by Martha Graham. It is an attractive, atmospheric score, admirably orchestrated and, on the whole, another plume in Mr. Copland's well-feathered bonnet.

Maestro Koussevitzky and the Bostonians give it a superb performance. The album is beautifully illustrated with pictures from the ballet and several pages of interesting commentary. Better drop into your dealer's and see and hear it ($4).

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN 9 - 1946

RECORDS:

By MARK

the releases issued during cent months, the music
Bach has fared unusually w
There have not been a gr ber of them, but those t appeared, in terms both formance and recording, ha full justice to the maste ks.

o exception to this agreea d is an album devoted to ndenburg Concerti Nos. 3 a performed by the Bost phony Orchestra under the ion of Serge Koussevitz ctor, album DM-1050, fo ve-inch records). Dr. Kous ky's Bach has, on occasio questioned by other write ve always found it clear, v s, elegant and stylistica rincing. It is free of heav ded pedantry, and, if it at tim ses the elegances of od, that is surely leaning right direction.

n these records, the musicia uosity of this incomparable tra is plainly heard. Witho efit of the razzle-dazzle orch effects of later composers, ic sounds fresh and alive.
rth Concerto, which is sco solo violin and two solo flu ives an unusually eloqu ding, and the entire album nirably recorded.

OTHER REVIEWS

rahms: Symphony No. 1 or. Leopold Stokowski dire
the Hollywood Bowl Symph hestra (Victor, album DV twelve-inch records). A hi emotional performance and ior, I think, to the earlier ding by Toscanini and the N mphony. This album is recor plastic and is free of surf
e. There is, however, a distu echo which is particularly able after loud staccato ch

This Clipping From
CINCINNATI, OHIO
POST

JUN 1 0 1946

Stravinsky's Waxed by

Eugene Goossens and hestra plays Igor Stra gale" on six 12-inch si
ased by Victor.

It is an excellent pe uction job. But let t usic is unmistakably S

The album notes describe elightful fantasy," but of co all depends on what it delight some people.
riter, upon hearing the re g for the first time, felt was being dragged off other world in a half-dru ndition.

First started in 1909 by nsky as an opera, the com n has since been handled mphonic suite, a symp em and as a ballet. Wha u call it, it's still Stravi
d you've got to learn to li

* * *

J. S. BACH. The name
many casual listeners.
's too heavy. . . . His mu the professional musicia
's too difficult for most understand.

Better hear Victor's ne
rding of "Brandenburg tos, Nos. 3 and 4" befor to thinking that way.
ncertos are on eight, 1
es. The orchestra is the Symphony under the le p of Serge Koussevitzky.
After three or four pl
u'll begin to feel as thoug ch fellow wasn't so er all. Parts of the Br rg Concertos are beau lodious and dancey, but y that's difficult to desc
The reproduction work is e performance is superb, me Bach purists may obj
e use of many more instr n the composer origina
ded.

Harvey
CH AND HIS SATISFYING.
NGS AVAIL-EXT TO THE RDING BY LHARMONIC.
LENT, HOW-

Clipping From
UMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH

N - 9 1946

, Mozart
rdings
New Lot

T. Wilson

e standpoints both of nguished performance mechanical excellence albums from Victor bia, respectively, are . Recorded at Tangle-
the Bach Brandenburg
Nos. 3 and 4 played by Symphony Orchestra,
vitzky conducting.
and conductor were in nd Victor's technicians admirably in capturing the sumptuous beauty
f the orchestra's dis-the Bach music.
a's prime offering of the
the Mozart Concerto major, for violin and played by Adolf Busch usch Chamber Players.
rs will need no urging his album to their
Those uninformed reusch's way with Mozart golden opportunity to knowledge in the most
y way imaginable.
Columbia publication
l merit is the Isaac ander Zakin recording en's Sonata No. 7 in C violin and piano. Stern into the heart of the d Mr. Zakin's work at is of arresting technical and interpretative elo-

are given a new re-he Boston Symphony,
e album was made at awthorne fame, now
e eighth side Kousse-
Pick-Mangiagalli.

Clipping From
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD

JUN 9 - 1946

by Copland bit of Americana is by Victor on its re-
—Aaron Copland's Ap-
Spring. The album is Koussevitzky and the ymphony. Copland needs duction as one of this most brilliant and wided younger composers. palachian" music, orig-itten for the ballet of ne about the pioneer
ania countryside 100
, was introduced a coueasons ago by Martha
It is an attractive, at-score, admirably ord and, on the whole, an-me in Mr. Copland's ered bonnet.
Koussevitzky and the
give it a superb per-
. The album is beautistrated with pictures ballet and several pages ting commentary. Bet-into your dealer's and hear it ($4).

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN 9 - 1946

RECORDS: BACH ALBUM

By MARK A. SCHUBART

In the releases issued during recent months, the music of Bach has fared unusually well. There have not been a great many of them, but those that have appeared, in terms both of performance and recording, have done justice to the master's works.

No exception to this agreeable trend is an album devoted to the Brandenburg Concerti Nos. 3 and 4 as performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky (Victor, album DM-1050, four twelve-inch records). Dr. Koussevitzky's Bach has, on occasion, been questioned by other writers. I have always found it clear, vigorous, elegant and stylistically convincing. It is free of heavy-handed pedantry, and, if it at times stresses the elegances of the period, that is surely leaning in the right direction.

On these records the musicianly virtuosity of this incomparable orchestra is plainly heard. Without benefit of the razzle-dazzle orchestral effects of later composers, the music sounds fresh and alive. The Fourth Concerto, which is scored for solo violin and two solo flutes receives an unusually eloquent reading, and the entire album is admirably recorded.

OTHER REVIEWS

Brahms: Symphony No. 1 in C Minor. Leopold Stokowski directing the Hollywood Bowl Symphony Orchestra (Victor, album DV-4, five twelve-inch records). A highly emotional performance and inferior, I think, to the earlier recording by Toscanini and the NBC Symphony. This album is recorded on plastic and is free of surface noise. There is, however, a disturbing echo which is particularly noticeable after loud staccato chords and which blurs the music in some places.

Mozart: Concerto No. 5 in A Major (K. 219). Adolf Busch, violinist, with the Busch Chamber Players (Columbia, album M-MM 609, four twelve-inch records). Unreliable intonation and occasionally insecure technique despoil Mr. Busch's playing of much of its genuine musical value. The Air from the Busch-Tartini Sonata No. 12 in G, Op. 2, occupies an extra side.

Prokofieff: "Romeo and Juliet" Suite No. 2, Op. 64. The composer conducting the Moscow State Philharmonic Orchestra; recorded in the Soviet Union (Disc, album 754, six twelve-inch records). Disc renders a valuable service in importing this recording from Russia, and despite a recording technique manifestly inferior to this country's, Prokofieff's highly expressive music sounds convincing. Particularly effective is the section depicting the parting of Romeo and Juliet, which is one of the composer's most intense pieces.

Ibert: "Escales." Artur Rodzinski conducting the New York Philharmonica-Symphony (Columbia, album X-MX 263, two twelve-inch records). Handsome music handsomely performed. Excellent recording.

Recommended singles:

Offenbach: "Barcarolle" and Schubert's "Moment Musical." Leopold Stokowski and the Hollywood Bowl Symphony Orchestra (Victor, 11-9174, twelve-inch single).

Weber: Overture to "Der Freischuetz." Arturo Toscanini directing the NBC Symphony (Victor, 11-9172, twelve-inch single).

Schumann: "Der Nussbaum" and "Stille Traenen." Marian Anderson, contralto, accompanied by Franz Rupp (Victor, 11-9173, twelve-inch single).

This Clipping From
CINCINNATI, OHIO
POST

JUN 10 1946

Stravinsky's Nightingale Waxed by Our Orchestra

Eugene Goossens and the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra plays Igor Stravinsky's "The Song of the Nightingale" on six 12-inch sides of a record album newly released by Victor.

It is an excellent performance and a flawless reproduction job. But let the listener understand that the music is unmistakably Stravinsky's.

The album notes describe it as "delightful fantasy," but of course it all depends on what it takes to delight some people. This writer, upon hearing the recording for the first time, felt that he was being dragged off into another world in a half-drunken condition.

First started in 1909 by Stravinsky as an opera, the composition has since been handled as a symphonic suite, a symphonic poem and as a ballet. Whatever you call it, it's still Stravinsky and you've got to learn to like it.

* * *

J. S. BACH. The name frightens many casual listeners. . . . He's too heavy. . . . His music is for the professional musician. . . . He's too difficult for most of us to understand.

Better hear Victor's new recording of "Brandenburg Concertos, Nos. 3 and 4" before you get to thinking that way. The concertos are on eight, 12-inch sides. The orchestra is the Boston Symphony under the leadership of Serge Koussevitzky.

After three or four playings you'll begin to feel as though that Bach fellow wasn't so starchy after all. Parts of the Brandenburg Concertos are beautifully melodious and dancey, but in a way that's difficult to describe.

The reproduction work is tops. The performance is superb, though some Bach purists may object to the use of many more instruments than the composer originally intended.

SCARSDALE, N.Y
INQUIRER
5/10/46

Sing with Boston Pops As Wellesley Choristers

Miss Mary Lattin, daughter of Doctor and Mrs. Burton Lattin of 3 Bretton Road, and Miss Mary Snelling, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stuart P. Snelling of 42 Crane Road, were the only two Westchester girls in the Wellesley College choir to be chosen recently as members of a group which sang with the Boston Symphony in their Pops concerts on May 5. Miss Lattin is a member of the junior class at Wellesley, while Miss Snelling is a sophomore, and song leader for her class.

Miss Marian Ord, also a sophomore at the college and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Ord of Greenacres Avenue, wrote a group of songs which her class sang for a recent May Day celebration.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

JUN 9 - 1946

Berkshire Festival Items

The Bostom Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky will give nine concerts in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, with such outstanding soloists as Claudio Arrau, the Chilean pianist, and the young keyboard artist, Eugene List, who won wide acclaim through his Potsdam appearance. The Cellist Piatigorsky and Violinists Morini and Elman also will play at Tanglewood.

This Clipping From
EAST ST. LOUIS, ILL.
JOURNAL

JUN 9 - 1946

Music Festival To Open July 25 In Berkshires

By EVELYN BROWN
Of The United Press Staff.

LENOX, MASS. — The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala prewar style at Tanglewood, in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate—are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However, conductor Serge Koussevitzky has included the works of modern composers, among them are Rachmaninoff, Copland, Shostakovitch and Martinu.

Pre-Festival Series

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts composed solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Longtime favorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Sympathy, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales," was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

School to Reopen

Nearly a month before the opening of the festival the Berkshire music center opens for six weeks beginning July 1. Unique in purpose, the school gives young musicians a chance to polish their performance before entering the professional fields.

The faculty of the school is composed of the nation's big names in music, including composer Leonard Bernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Aaron Copland and opera expert Boris Goldovsky.

The school was closed during the war, but now has accepted more than 300 students in various departments such as composition, instrumentation, conducting, and opera. The opera department plans a performance of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes", a piece that was composed for Tanglewood and produced in England last summer.

This Clipping From
BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

JUN 9 - 1946

. . . Copland's delightful "Appalachian Suite" with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Koussevitzky giving a performance that is a wonder of delicacy and finish and imagination. . . . And the Boston "Pops" under Fiedler in a group of six sparkling Strauss numbers, "Tik Tak Polka," from "Die Fledermaus"; "Sans Souci Polka," "Pizzixato Polka," "Bahn Frei-Palka," "Annen Polka" by the three Strauss brothers, Johann, Jr., Josef and Eduard . . . to the beautiful lyric tenor voice of James Melton in "Soliloquy" from "Carousel" with the Victor Symphony under David Brokeman, and to William Primrose, one of the great violists of all time in a memorable performance of Schubert's "Litany" and the viola version of the sixth of Bach's "Komm' susser Tod"; all Victor musts for your musical library.

* * *

ALABAMA CHAPTER, American Guild of Organists, and the Young Musicians Group, will present Frank Johnson, formerly organist of McCoy Memorial Church, in an organ recital June 16 at 4 p.m. at the Independent Presbyterian Church. Recently chaplain's assistant, CSP Navy, Washington, D. C., Mr. Johnson studied piano and organ at the Birmingham Conservatory of Music with Minnie McNeill Carr; attended the American Conservatory in Chicago and coached with Theodore Schaefer in Washington. He taught piano and organ in Birmingham until entering the Navy in 1942; was stationed in Bainbridge, Md., later in Bermuda, then in Washington until his release a few days ago. He gave an organ recital at the Convenant First Presbyterian in Washington on Palm Sunday, and will play there again in July and August. In September, he will enter Union Seminary, New York, to continue organ lessons under Hugh Porter and music course in the ministry of music. The recital program is made up of pre-Bach compositions. Buxthude, Bach, Franck, Widor and modern numbers.

* * *

BIRMINGHAM COLLEGE OF MUSIC presented Elizabeth Crawford, pupil of Mrs. J. M. Murray, in a piano recital Thursday afternoon. Frances Goss and Francine McElvey, piano pupils of Mrs. J. M. Murray, were heard in a joint recital at Birmingham College of Music Friday evening.

The following pupils of Florence Patton Keith were presented in piano recital at Birmingham College of Music Saturday evening: Jackie Spinks, Danny Moates, Miranda Ruffner, Charles David Morrow, Charlcie Cross, Ann Aldrich, Claudia Schilleci, Mona Earl Allen, Tommy Jones, Ellen Buchanon, Dayle Caldwell, Joanne Jones, Sara Lee Jones, Betty Jean Gwin, Dorothy Camp, Martha Bell Ratliff, Jo Ann Barnett and Bonnie Ruth Taylor.

Jean Clifton, pupil of Mrs J. M. Murray, will be presented in piano recital at Birmingham College of Music this afternoon at 4 o'clock. Miss Clifton is a candidate for preparatory certificate.

Birmingham College of Music announced a piano recital by pupils of Florence Patton Keith at 8 p.m. Monday. The following students will play: Carolyn Pitts, Ann Lacey, Frances Johnson, Mallidean Holliday, Edna Stinnett, Marlene Pilgreen, Charlcie Cross, Gail Langner, Martha Jean Waldrop, Mary Joyce Wallace, Juanita Ragland, Evelyn Wilks, Estelle Ragland, Ruby Nell Stinnett, Ethel Lois Jones, Betty Jean Spearman, Frances Price, Douglas Williams, Martha Bell Ratliff and Alta Moore.

A piano recital by the following pupils of Mrs. J. M. Murray was heard at Birmingham College of Music Friday afternoon: Jean Clifton, Ann Pace, Frances Goss, Francine McElvey, Elizabeth Crawford, Judy Parker, Ann Hare, Jerre King, Edith Lande, Betty Randman, Nissam Mesch, Doris Ogletree, Sandra Jones, Grant Dawson, Iralene Hathorn, Margaret Schmitt, Elaine Holle, Nellie Mautner, Marilyn and Kay Newman.

* * *

THE BIRMINGHAM CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC presented pupils of Miss Reba Tolhurst in piano recital May 17, at 8:15. The following pupils played: Carolyn Orr Franklin Blackford, Rodney Dilbeck, Mosely Meer, Susan Lineberry, W. C. Dilbeck, Evangeline Grammas, Marilyn Scofield, Louis Herzberg, Edith Abernathy, Lillian Goodner, Harriet Burns, Tasia Isariotis, Barbara Jones, Tasia Koutrolakis, Joanne Whetstone, Merrilyn Williams, Barbara Bundy, Dotty Ann Holcomb, Betty Lee Krueger, Cecile Tatum and Jean Morris.

* * *

MRS. MARY MARGARET GATES presented the following pupils in piano recital Monday evening at the Little Concert Hall: Mary Ann Prince, Joan Sams, Judy Dobbs, Janet Powers, William Edgar Powers, Betty Jean McKinney, Charlotte Reed, Margaret Lovett, Gail Hankins, Jimmy Bates, Doris Bradford, Norma Jean Raper, Betty Faye Dobbs, Carolyn Sapp, Rose Ann Hanby, Barbara Jones and Eleanor Brightwell.

* * *

MRS. VINCENT A. SCALCO presented piano and accordion pupils of her senior and intermediate classes in a recital on Friday evening. The following pupils took part: Bobby Haley, Peggy Shannon, Zannah Mae Littlejohn, Elsie Faye King, Zelda Ruth Morgan, Marie Wunderlich, Larry Warren, Dorothy Ann Hazel, Tommie Jean Grafton, Ruth Copeland, Melba Bridges, Bettye Ray Walker, Allen Anderson, Rosemarie Portera, Marian Veazey, Mary Helen Adkins and Geraldine Heath.

This Clipping From
SHELBYVILLE, ILL.
UNION

JUN 10 1946

MUSIC FESTIVAL TO OPEN JULY 25 IN BERKSHIRES

By EVELYN BROWN
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

Lenox, Mass.—(UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala prewar style at Tanglewood, in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate—are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However, conductor Serge Koussevitzky has included the work of modern composers, among whom are Rachmaniioff, Copland, Shastakovitch and Martinu.

Pre-Festival Series

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Longtime favorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales", was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

School to Reopen

Nearly a month before the opening of the festival the Berkshire music center opens for six weeks beginning July 1. Unique in purpose, the school gives young musicians a chance to polish their performance before entering the professional fields.

The faculty of the school is composed of the nation's big names in music, including composer Leonard Bernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Aaron Copland and opera expert Boris Goldovsky.

The school was closed during the war, but now has accepted more than 300 students in various departments such as composition, instrumentation, conducting, and opera. The opera department plans a performance of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," a piece that was composed for Tanglewood and produced in England last summer.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN 9 - 1946

RECORDS: BACH ALBUM

By MARK A. SCHUBART

IN the releases issued during recent months, the music of Bach has fared unusually well. There have not been a great number of them, but those that have appeared, in terms both of performance and recording, have done full justice to the master's works.

No exception to this agreeable trend is an album devoted to the Brandenburg Concerti Nos. 3 and 4 as performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky (Victor, album DM-1050, four twelve-inch records). Dr. Koussevitzky's Bach has, on occasion, been questioned by other writers. I have always found it clear, vigorous, elegant and stylistically convincing. It is free of heavy-handed pedantry, and, if it at times stresses the elegances of the period, that is surely leaning in the right direction.

On these records, the musicianly virtuosity of this incomparable orchestra is plainly heard. Without benefit of the razzle-dazzle orchestral effects of later composers, the music sounds fresh and alive. The Fourth Concerto, which is scored for solo violin and two solo flutes receives an unusually eloquent reading, and the entire album is admirably recorded.

OTHER REVIEWS

Brahms: Symphony No. 1 in C Minor. Leopold Stokowski directing the Hollywood Bowl Symphony Orchestra (Victor, album DV-4, five twelve-inch records). A highly emotional performance and inferior, I think, to the earlier recording by Toscanini and the NBC Symphony. This album is recorded on plastic and is free of surface noise. There is, however, a disturbing echo which is particularly noticeable after loud staccato chords and which blurs the music in some places.

Mozart: Concerto No. 5 in A Major (K. 219). Adolf Busch, violinist, with the Busch Chamber Players (Columbia, album M-MM 609, four twelve-inch records). Unreliable intonation and occasionally insecure technique despoil Mr. Busch's playing of much of its genuine musical value. The Air from the Busch-Tartini Sonata No. 12 in G, Op. 2, occupies an extra side.

Prokofieff: "Romeo and Juliet" Suite No. 2, Op. 64. The composer conducting the Moscow State Philharmonic Orchestra; recorded in the Soviet Union (Disc, album 754, six twelve-inch records). Disc renders a valuable service in importing this recording from Russia, and despite a recording technique manifestly inferior to this country's, Prokofieff's highly expressive music sounds convincing. Particularly effective is the section depicting the parting of Romeo and Juliet, which is one of the composer's most intense pieces.

Ibert: "Escales." Artur Rodzinski conducting the New York Philharmonica-Symphony (Columbia, album X-MX 263, two twelve-inch records). Handsome music handsomely performed. Excellent recording.

Recommended singles:

Offenbach: "Barcarolle" and Schubert's "Moment Musical." Leopold Stokowski and the Hollywood Bowl Symphony Orchestra (Victor, 11-9174, twelve-inch single).

Weber: Overture to "Der Freischuetz." Arturo Toscanini directing the NBC Symphony (Victor, 11-9172, twelve-inch single).

Schumann: "Der Nussbaum" and "Stille Traenen." Marian Anderson, contralto, accompanied by Franz Rupp (Victor, 11-9173, twelve-inch single).

This Clipping From
CINCINNATI, OHIO
POST

JUN 1 0 1946

Stravinsky's Nightingale Waxed by Our Orchestra

Eugene Goossens and the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra plays Igor Stravinsky's "The Song of the Nightingale" on six 12-inch sides of a record album newly released by Victor.

It is an excellent performance and a flawless reproduction job. But let the listener understand that the music is unmistakably Stravinsky's.

The album notes describe it as "delightful fantasy," but of course it all depends on what it takes to delight some people. This writer, upon hearing the recording for the first time, felt that he was being dragged off into another world in a half-drunken condition.

First started in 1909 by Stravinsky as an opera, the composition has since been handled as a symphonic suite, a symphonic poem and as a ballet. Whatever you call it, it's still Stravinsky and you've got to learn to like it.

* * *

J. S. BACH. The name frightens many casual listeners. . . . He's too heavy. . . . His music is for the professional musician. . . . He's too difficult for most of us to understand.

Better hear Victor's new recording of "Brandenburg Concertos, Nos. 3 and 4" before you get to thinking that way. The concertos are on eight, 12-inch sides. The orchestra is the Boston Symphony under the leadership of Serge Koussevitzky.

After three or four playings you'll begin to feel as though that Bach fellow wasn't so starchy after all. Parts of the Brandenburg Concertos are beautifully melodious and dancey, but in a way that's difficult to describe.

The reproduction work is tops. The performance is superb, though some Bach purists may object to the use of many more instruments than the composer originally intended.

SCARSDALE, N.Y
INQUIRER
5/10/46

Sing with Boston Pops As Wellesley Choristers

Miss Mary Lattin, daughter of Doctor and Mrs. Burton Lattin of 3 Bretton Road, and Miss Mary Snelling, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stuart P. Snelling of 42 Crane Road, were the only two Westchester girls in the Wellesley College choir to be chosen recently as members of a group which sang with the Boston Symphony in their Pops concerts on May 5. Miss Lattin is a member of the junior class at Wellesley, while Miss Snelling is a sophomore, and song leader for her class.

Miss Marian Ord, also a sophomore at the college and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Ord of Greenacres Avenue, wrote a group of songs which her class sang for a recent May Day celebration.

COURIER-[illegible]

JUN 9 - 1946

Berkshire Festival Items

The Bostom Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky will give nine concerts in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, with such outstanding soloists as Claudio Arrau, the Chilean pianist, and the young keyboard artist, Eugene List, who won wide acclaim through his Potsdam appearance. The Cellist Piatigorsky and Violinists Morini and Elman also will play at Tanglewood.

This Clipping From
EAST ST. LOUIS, ILL.
JOURNAL

JUN 9 - 1946

Music Festival To Open July 25 In Berkshires

By EVELYN BROWN
Of The United Press Staff.

LENOX, MASS. — The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala prewar style at Tanglewood, in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate—are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However, conductor Serge Koussevitzky has included the works of modern composers, among them are Rachmaninoff, Copland, Shostakovitch and Martinu.

Pre-Festival Series

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts composed solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Longtime favorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Sympathy, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales," was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

School to Reopen

Nearly a month before the opening of the festival the Berkshire music center opens for six weeks beginning July 1. Unique in purpose, the school gives young musicians a chance to polish their performance before entering the professional fields.

The faculty of the school is composed of the nation's big names in music, including composer Leonard Bernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Aaron Copland and opera expert Boris Goldovsky.

The school was closed during the war, but now has accepted more than 300 students in various departments such as composition, instrumentation, conducting, and opera. The opera department plans a performance of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes", a piece that was composed for Tanglewood and produced in England last summer.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

JUN 9 - 1946

. . . Copland's delightful "Appalachian Suite" with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Koussevitzky giving a performance that is a wonder of delicacy and finish and imagination. . . . And the Boston "Pops" under Fiedler in a group of six sparkling Strauss numbers, "Tik Tak Polka," from "Die Fledermaus"; "Sans Souci Polka," "Pizzixato Polka," "Bahn Frei-Palka," "Annen Polka" by the three Strauss brothers, Johann, Jr., Josef and Eduard . . . to the beautiful lyric tenor voice of James Melton in "Soliloquy" from "Carousel" with the Victor Symphony under David Brokeman, and to William Primrose, one of the great violists of all time in a memorable performance of Schubert's "Litany" and the viola version of the sixth of Bach's "Komm' susser Tod"; all Victor musts for your musical library.

* * *

ALABAMA CHAPTER, American Guild of Organists, and the Young Musicians Group, will present Frank Johnson, formerly organist of McCoy Memorial Church, in an organ recital June 16 at 4 p.m. at the Independent Presbyterian Church. Recently chaplain's assistant, CSP Navy, Washington, D. C., Mr. Johnson studied piano and organ at the Birmingham Conservatory of Music with Minnie McNeill Carr; attended the American Conservatory in Chicago and coached with Theodore Schaefer in Washington. He taught piano and organ in Birmingham until entering the Navy in 1942; was stationed in Bainbridge, Md., later in Bermuda, then in Washington until his release a few days ago. He gave an organ recital at the Convenant First Presbyterian in Washington on Palm Sunday, and will play there again in July and August. In September, he will enter Union Seminary, New York, to continue organ lessons under Hugh Porter and music course in the ministry of music. The recital program is made up of pre-Bach compositions, Buxthude, Bach, Franck, Widor and modern numbers.

* * *

BIRMINGHAM COLLEGE OF MUSIC presented Elizabeth Crawford, pupil of Mrs. J. M. Murray, in a piano recital Thursday afternoon. Frances Goss and Francine McElvey, piano pupils of Mrs. J. M. Murray, were heard in a joint recital at Birmingham College of Music Friday evening.

The following pupils of Florence Patton Keith were presented in piano recital at Birmingham College of Music Saturday evening: Jackie Spinks, Danny Moates, Miranda Ruffner, Charles David Morrow, Charlcie Cross, Ann Aldrich, Claudia Schilleci, Mona Earl Allen, Tommy Jones, Ellen Buchanon, Dayle Caldwell, Joanne Jones, Sara Lee Jones, Betty Jean Gwin, Dorothy Camp, Martha Bell Ratliff, Jo Ann Barnett and Bonnie Ruth Taylor.

Jean Clifton, pupil of Mrs J. M. Murray, will be presented in piano recital at Birmingham College of Music this afternoon at 4 o'clock. Miss Clifton is a candidate for preparatory certificate.

Birmingham College of Music announced a piano recital by pupils of Florence Patton Keith at 8 p.m. Monday. The following students will play: Carolyn Pitts, Ann Lacey, Frances Johnson, Mallidean Holliday, Edna Stinnett, Marlene Pilgreen, Charlcie Cross, Gail Langner, Martha Jean Waldrop, Mary Joyce Wallace, Juanita Ragland, Evelyn Wilks, Estelle Ragland, Ruby Nell Stinnett, Ethel Lois Jones, Betty Jean Spearman, Frances Price, Douglas Williams, Martha Bell Ratliff and Alta Moore.

A piano recital by the following pupils of Mrs. J. M. Murray was heard at Birmingham College of Music Friday afternoon: Jean Clifton, Ann Pace, Frances Goss, Francine McElvey, Elizabeth Crawford, Judy Parker, Ann Hare, Jerre King, Edith Lande, Betty Randman, Nissam Mesch, Doris Ogletree, Sandra Jones, Grant Dawson, Iralene Hathorn, Margaret Schmitt, Elaine Holle, Nellie Mautner, Marilyn and Kay Newman.

* * *

THE BIRMINGHAM CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC presented pupils of Miss Reba Tolhurst in piano recital May 17, at 8:15. The following pupils played: Carolyn Orr, Franklin Blackford, Rodney Dilbeck, Mosely Meer, Susan Lineberry, W. C. Dilbeck, Evangeline Grammas, Marilyn Scofield, Louis Herzberg, Edith Abernathy, Lillian Goodner, Harriet Burns, Tasia Isariotis, Barbara Jones, Tasia Koutrolakis, Joanne Whetstone, Merrilyn Williams, Barbara Bundy, Dotty Ann Holcomb, Betty Lee Krueger, Cecile Tatum and Jean Morris.

* * *

MRS. MARY MARGARET GATES presented the following pupils in piano recital Monday evening at the Little Concert Hall: Mary Ann Prince, Joan Sams, Judy Dobbs, Janet Powers, William Edgar Powers, Betty Jean McKinney, Charlotte Reed, Margaret Lovett, Gail Hankins, Jimmy Bates, Doris Bradford, Norma Jean Raper, Betty Faye Dobbs, Carolyn Sapp, Rose Ann Hanby, Barbara Jones and Eleanor Brightwell.

* * *

MRS. VINCENT A. SCALCO presented piano and accordion pupils of her senior and intermediate classes in a recital on Friday evening. The following pupils took part: Bobby Haley, Peggy Shannon, Zannah Mae Littlejohn, Elsie Faye King, Zelda Ruth Morgan, Marie Wunderlich, Larry Warren, Dorothy Ann Hazel, Tommie Jean Grafton, Ruth Copeland, Melba Bridges, Bettye Ray Walker, Allen Anderson, Rosemarie Portera, Marian Veazey, Mary Helen Adkins and Geraldine Heath.

This Clipping From
SHELBYVILLE, ILL.
UNION

JUN 10 1946

MUSIC FESTIVAL TO OPEN JULY 25 IN BERKSHIRES

By EVELYN BROWN
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

Lenox, Mass.—(UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala prewar style at Tanglewood, in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate—are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However, conductor Serge Koussevitzky has included the work of modern composers, among whom are Rachmaninoff, Copland, Shastakovitch and Martinu.

Pre-Festival Series

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Longtime favorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales" was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

School to Reopen

Nearly a month before the opening of the festival the Berkshire music center opens for six weeks beginning July 1. Unique in purpose, the school gives young musicians a chance to polish their performance before entering the professional fields.

The faculty of the school is composed of the nation's big names in music, including composer Leonard Bernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Aaron Copland and opera expert Boris Goldovsky.

The school was closed during the war, but now has accepted more than 300 students in various departments such as composition, instrumentation, conducting, and opera. The opera department plans a performance of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," a piece that was composed for Tanglewood and produced in England last summer.

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER

JUN 9 - 1946

Music Notes

Sonya Monosoff, winner of the Koussevitzky violin scholarship at Berkshire Music Center, will appear in recital with Edith Gordon, Canton soprano, next Sunday afternoon at 2:30 at the Cleveland Museum of Art . . . The Baldwin-Wallace Band and Orchestra Clinic, under the direction of Cecil W. Munk, will be held at Baldwin-Wallace Conservatory, Berea, June 17 to 30. The clinic faculty will include Munk, George Poinar, Dall Fields of Chicago and Frederick Ebbs of Hobart, Ind. . . . Students of the Oberlin Conservatory of Music will present a recital of chamber music tonight at 8:30 in Warner Concert Hall, Oberlin. The Oberlin Concert Band, under Arthur L. Williams, will present an outdoor concert in connection with an all-college sing this evening at 7:15 at the Oberlin Reservoir . . . The third in a series of recitals presented by the Burton Congregational Church over its public address system at Burton, O., will be given this afternoon at 2. Samuel P. Reinke, baritone, pastor of the church, will be the artist . . . Reginald F. Merrill, organist at the Halle Bros. Co., will play a dedicatory recital at Lake Avenue Methodist Church, Ashtabula, O., this afternoon at 4 . . . Ruth E. Oliver, organist at Shore Haven Lutheran Church, Euclid, O., will present a dedicatory organ recital this evening at 8. She will be assisted by the church choir, Eleanor Liebe Kreinheder, contralto, and James H. Nebe, baritone . . . Pupils of the Rocky River School of Music will be heard in recital Friday evening at 8 at Kensington School, on West Lake Road . . . Maude E. Crill will present her piano pupils in recital Saturday evening at 7:30 at the East Cleveland Women's Club, 1747 Lakefront Avenue.

In This Week's Concerts

JOSEPHINE ANTOINE

EUNICE PODIS

BERNARD GOLDBERG

HYMAN SCHANDLER

This Clipping From
NORRISTOWN, PA.
TIMES-HERALD

JUN 10 1946

Julian Orbon, 20-year-old Cuban composer, has been awarded a scholarship for study this Summer with Aaron Copland at the Berkshire Music Center conducted by Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony. The scholarship, which is competitive, is provided by the American Steel Corp. of Cuba and the American Tropical Products Corp. of Cuba, under the auspices of the Cuban-American Music Group.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN 14 1946

Robert Shaw has open vocal chorale scholarships for the Berkshire Festival this summer. He will hold auditions tomorrow from 11 A. M. to 4 P. M. at the Juilliard School of Music, Room 405. Appointments should be made by calling Circle 5-7229.

This Clipping From
ALLENTOWN, PA.
CHRONICLE

JUN 13 1946

On the RECORD

Bach: Brandenburg Concertos No. 3 & 4 Prelude in E
(Arr. by Pick Mangiagalli)
Boston Symphony Orchestra—Serge Koussevitzky, Conductor.

RCA Victor has released an album of Johann Sebastian Bach's Brandenburg Concertos, Nos. 3 and 4. They are a music lover's delight, seven sides with the odd side carrying the Prelude in E from the Violin Sonata No. 6.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the superb baton of Serge Koussevitzky, has given a beautiful performance for you to enjoy over and over in your own home.

These works bordering between Chamber and orchestral music represent Bach's polyphonic style in its purest form. They were composed during two of the six years that Bach spent at Anhalt-Cothen in the service of Prince Leopold. An admirable addition to any musical library, the Brandenburg Concertos as recorded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN 14 1946

Books Published Today

All for the Best, by Bentz Plagemann (Simon & Schuster, $2.50). A novel.

American Legend: A Treasury of Our Country's Yesterdays, selected by Robert and Dorothy Van Gelder (Appleton-Century, $3.75). Reviewed today.

The Course of German History, by A. J. P. Taylor (Putnam, $3). German national development from the French Revolution to the present time.

Dud Dean and His Country, by Arthur R. Macdougall Jr. (Coward-McCann, $3). Tales of fishing and hunting.

The Prolongation of Life, by Dr. Alexander A. Bogomolets, translated by Peter V. Karpovich and Sonia Bleeker (Essential Books: Duell, Sloan & Pearce, $1.50). An account of years of study.

Shoot if You Must, by Richard Powell (Simon & Schuster, $2). An Inner Sanctum detective story.

The Tale of Tanglewood: Scene of the Berkshire Music Festivals, by M. A. De Wolfe Howe with an introduction by Serge Koussevitzky (Vanguard, $2).

Time and the Hour, by Edith Austin Holton (Putnam, $2.75). A novel about five generations of New Englanders.

The Velvet Well, by John Gearon (Duell, Sloan & Pearce, $2.50). A detective story.

Vital Problems of Air Commerce, edited by Lucien Zacharoff (Duell, Sloan & Pearce, $3). International air transportation and its role in world affairs.

RADFORD, VIRGINIA
NEWS
JUN 10 1946

Music Festival To Open July 25 In Berkshires

MUSIC FESTVAL 1-24 ....

By EVELYN BROWN

LENOX, Mass. (UP).—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala prewar style at Tanglewood, in the hills of western Massachusetts .

A series of nine concerts extending over three week ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate—are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However, conductor Serge Koussevitzky has included the works of modern composers, among whom are Rachmaninoff, Coplan, Shostakovitch and Martinu.

Pre-Festival Series

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Longtime favorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales," was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

School to Reopen

Nearly a month before the opening of the festival the Berkshire music center opens for six weeks beginning July 1, Unique in purpose, the school gives young musicians a chance to polish their performance before entering the professional fields.

The faculty of the school is composed of the nation's big names in music, including composer Leonard Bernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Aaron Copland and opera expert Boris Goldovsky.

The school was closed during the war, but now has accepted more than 300 students in various departments such as composition, instrumentation, conducting, and opera. The opera department plans a performance of Benjamin Briten's opera, "Peter Grimes," a piece that was composed for Tanglewood and produced in England last summer.

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

JUN 13 1946

The War Investigating Committee will report this story of American production: In July of 1941, only one heavy bomber was produced in this country during the entire month. In May, 1944, less than three years later, a production-peak of 1,576 bombers were made during the month....Claudio Arrau, the pianist, now is touring South America. He will return here next month for only six days, during which he'll perform at the Robin Hood Dell, the Berkshire Music Festival and the Stadium concert in N. Y. Then he'll fly back to South America and continue his concert-tour....The March of Time is doing a reel on French luxury-exports. ..Charles Trenet, the French singer now at the Embassy Club, was to have appeared in the film last night. When Trenet insisted that a full orchestra be hired for this shot the producers substituted La Martinique's Roger Dannes, another French singer, who agreed to work with only a piano accompaniment

---

This Clipping From
WHEELING, W. VA.
NEWS REGISTER

JUN 10 1946

Music Festival Opens July 25 In Berkshires

Lenox, Mass. (U.P.)—The Boston Symphony orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala prewar style at Tanglewood, in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate—are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However, conductor Serge Koussevitsky has included the works of modern composers, among whom are Rachmaninoff, Copland, Shostakovitch and Martinu.

Pre-Festival Series

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitsky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Longtime favorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales," was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

School to Reopen

Nearly a month before the opening of the festival the Berkshire music center opens for six weeks beginning July 1. Unique in purpose, the school gives young musicians a chance to polish their performance before entering the professional fields.

The faculty of the school is composed of the nation's big names in music, including composer Leonard Bernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Aaron Copland and opera expert Boris Goldovsky.

The school was closed during the war, but now has accepted more than 300 students in various departments such as composition, instrumentation, conducting, and opera. The opera department plans a performance of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," a piece that was composed for Tanglewood and produced in England last summer.

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS

JUN 13 1946

Big Band Backs Banana

—News-Acme

When Chiquita Banana gave out with her famous warning against refrigerating bananas, in Boston Symphony Hall, she sang with 97 musicians—the largest group ever to play the accompaniment for a commercial lyric. All were members of the distinguished Boston Pops Orchestra. Here, Director Arthur Fiedler and Chiquita are rehearsing.

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS

JUN : 1946

Pianist Graduated

Julius Katchen, pianist, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ira J. Katchen formerly of Newark and now at Long Branch, was graduated this week from Haverford College with the degree of bachelor of arts. He was also awarded cum laude in philosophy and elected to Phi Beta Kappa.

Katchen has appeared as soloist with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra and the Philadelphia Orchestra and in recitals at Carnegie Hall in New York and elsewhere.

He has been appointed pianist for the orchestra at the Boston Symphony's Berkshire Festival this Summer, under Serge Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From
BURBANK CALIF
REVIEW

JUN 12 1946

Julian Orbon, 20-year-old Cuban composer, has been awarded a scholarship for study this summer with Aaron Copland at the Berkshire Music Center coducted by Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony. The scholarship, which is competitive, is provided by the American Steel Corp. of Cuba and the American Tropical Products Corp. of Cuba under the auspices of the Cuban American Music Group.

This Clipping From
WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS

JUN

BERSHIRES MUSIC FESTIVAL IN JULY

Boston Symphony to Present Series of Nine Concerts In Hills of Massachusetts

LENOX, Mass., (U.P) — The Boston publicans held the majority in the Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala prewar style at Tanglewood in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate—are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However conductor Serge Koussevitzky has included the works of modern composers, among whom are Rachmaninoff, Copeland, Shostakovitch and Martinu.

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Longtime favorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they draw a bigger crowd, The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Talts," was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

Nearly a month before the opening of the festival the Berkshire music center opens for six weeks beginning July 1. Unique in purpose, the school gives young musicians a chance to polish their performance before entering the profesisonal fields.

The faculty of the school is composed of the nation's big names in music, including Composer Leonard Bernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Aaron Copland and opera expert Boris Goldovsky.

The school was closed during the war, but now has accepted more than 300 students in various departments such as composition, instrumentation, conducting, and opera. The opera department plans a performance of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," a piece that was composed for Tanglewood and produced in Engalnd last summer.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN 16 1946

MUSIC GIFT FOR RUSSIANS

Corwin to Present Recordings From U. S. to Composers

Norman Corwin, radio writer and director, will present a special gift from the recently formed American-Soviet Music Society to the Union of Soviet Composers on the world tour which he has just begun. He will arrive in Russia next month as the guest of the Society for Cultural Relations With Foreign Countries.

The society is sending two recordings by members—Aaron Copland's "Appalachian Spring," recorded by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra for Victor, and Elie Siegmeister's "Ozark Suite," recorded by Dmitri Mitropoulos and the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra for Columbia. Messages were inscribed in these albums to Dmitri Shostakovich, Mikolai Miaskovski, Serge Prokofieff and Reinhold Glière, four of the leading officers of the Union of Soviet Composers, from Dr. Koussevitzky, Mr. Copland and Mr. Siegmeister.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

JUN 14 1946

Records

Brahms Offered by Stokowski

By ROBERT BAGAR.

Brahms was a simple man. His music, reflecting his character, is simple, too, in a manner of speaking. Of course, if a man is dedicated to a career of architecture in music, as Brahms was, his work, by its own nature, is quite complicated work, but in that very frame simplicity still is possible, a simplicity that scorns affectation, overburdening of the main ideas, ravishing sound for the sake of ravishing sound, and the like. And because Brahms was the one to hold such things in scorn, he was a simple man in his music.

Some of his contemporaries, surfeited, perhaps, with the plush and passionately purple noises made by their own compositions, called him a colorless orchestrator. Maybe that he was, in the light of vogues of his time. There are some of us who feel, however, that Brahms orchestrated just the way he wanted to, for the specific effects he wanted, and not, like the luscious little boys of the sharps and flats, for show.

Arturo Toscanini gave a Brahms cycle, one year, during the last part of his Philharmonic-Symphony days. And the late Pitts Sanborn remarked, with a typical trenchancy, "Well, at last we've heard a whole catalog of Brahms the universal thinker, not Brahms the Viennese balladeer. And thank heaven he could resist the temptation to be a Wagnerian Tschaikowsky."

All this leads—or should lead—to a particularly lush and pillowy delivery of the composer's First Symphony, as turned in by Leopold Stokowsky and the Hollywood Symphony Orchestra. The five 12-inch records comprising Victor V or DV 4, are of vinyl, which means that the recording is as high fidelity as you can get it today. In a way, it's a pity, for Brahms here emerges as a writer of throbbing phrases, each more opulent and correspondingly less Brahmin than the other.

* * *

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony are Bach-conscious, this trip, with performances of the Third and Fourth 'Brandenburg" Concertos, plus the Prelude in E from a Violin Sonata. The Third Concerto is amplified with a middle section, the Sinfonia from the church cantata "Christ Lag in Todesbanden." It's solidly played Bach, clear and precise, for the most part, even if the beat is a bit too pronounced. These pieces may be had in Victor album M or DM 1050.

* * *

Columbia presents Adolf Busch and the Busch Chamber Players in the Mozart Violin Concerto in A major, No. 5 (K 219). The set —M or MM 609—also offers an Air from the Tartini Sonata in G major, Op. 2, as transcribed by Mr. Busch. There may not be enough warmth in the soloist's rendering, but little is wrong with the musical quality of the interpretation.

* * *

Other likable results may be found in Artur Rodzinski's fine account of the Ibert "Escales," in Columbia album X or XM 263, where the redoubtable Philharmonic-Symphony visits Palermo, Tunis-Nefta and Valencia, according to the script, and communicates its impressions, via composer Ibert, quite convincingly.

* * *

In Victor the single disc department, Arturo Toscanini and the NBC Symphony show us how to perform the Overture to Weber's "Der Freischuetz." Marian Anderson gives Schumann a just appreciation in his "Der Nussbaum" and "Stille Tranen," with Franz Rupp supplying sympathetic piano accompaniments. Also, Licia Albanese and Robert Merrill sing the duet "Dite alla giovine" from "La Traviata," in most agreeable fashion. The orchestra is the Victor Symphony, with Frieder Weissman conducting.

* * *

The Columbia singles include an enkindling version of Richard Rodgers' waltz from the music to "Carousel," done by Fritz Reiner and the Pittsburgh Symphony. Helen Traubel continues on her Wagnerian with "Elsa's Dream" from "Lohengrin," in which she is nobly assisted by Artur Rodzinski and the Philharmonic-Symphony.

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

JUN 14 1946

Boston Orchestra's Bach Concertos Are Choice Item

SOME of the finest recordings of the year have been devoted to Bach, and the new impression of the Brandenburg concertos No. 3 and 4 by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky belong near the top of the list. It is the choice item of Victor's June release.

Mr. Koussevitzky gives special attention to music written for an orchestra smaller than a full scale symphony, such as these concertos, at the celebrated Berkshire festival, held each summer at Tanglewood, Mass.—already famous in literature for Hawthorne's "Tanglewood Tales." This recording was made there, evidently under ideal conditions.

The Concerto No. 3 displays the finespun virtuosity of the Boston strings to splendid advantage. The graceful warbling of the two solo flutes in the fourth concerto is a sheer delight. There is nothing dry or academic about Mr. Koussevitzky's treatment of this lovely music. He plays it with elegance and verve, with a clear understanding that it represents something a great deal more than a fragile antique in the repertoire of the day. And his orchestra gives him a superlative performance. An orchestral arrangement of the Prelude in E is presented on the odd side of the four-disc set. The surfaces are entirely satisfactory. This album is warmly recommended.

This Clipping From
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER

JUN 14 1946

Forum's New Season

For its twenty-sixth season at the Academy of Music the Philadelphia Forum will present the Boston Symphony; Randolph Churchill, M. P.; the First Piano Quartet; the Jooss Ballet; Maryla Jonas, pianist; the Monte Carlo Ballet Russe; Drew Pearson; Egon Petri, in an all-Chopin recital; the Philadelphia Award, with the Philadelphia Orchestra; Paul Robeson; Trudi Schoop and her Comic Ballet; Gladys Swarthout; Alec Templeton; "Il Trovatore," with Philadelphia's own Florence Kirk; Efrem Zimbalist, and other events to be announced.

This Clipping From
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER

JUN 14 1946

Recorded Music ✠ Classical and Popular

Bach's Brandenburg Concertos No. 3 in G, and No. 4 in G, enter Victor's catalogue in recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor (four 12-inch records). Made at Tanglewood, Mass., it is a first-rate performance, notable for clarity of structure and detail. Between the two Allegro movements in the third concerto Koussevitzky has placed for contrast the Sinfonia from the Cantata, "Christ Lay in Death's Embrace." The extra side of the album contains the well-known Prelude in E from the Third Partita for violin alone.

The Busch Chamber Players have recorded all six Brandenburg Concertos for Columbia in two volumes (1-4 and 5-6).

BRAHMS FIRST AGAIN

The Hollywood Bowl Symphony sounds like a Grade A ensemble as Leopold Stokowski conducts the Brahms Symphony No. 1 in C minor (Victor, five 12-inch plastic records). It is excellent both technically and interpretively; Stokowski's reading is warm and emotional and is straightforward in tempo and structural design.

It has been previously recorded for Victor by Stokowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra, Toscanini and the NBC Symphony, Bruno Walter and the Vienna Philharmonic (Victor); and Weingartner and the London Symphony (Columbia).

MUSIC HALL PROGRAM

A Radio City Music Hall Souvenir Album presents the R.C.M.H. Symphony Orchestra, soloists and chorus in a typical program of orchestral, ballet and vocal numbers, conducted by the late Erno Rapee (Decca, five 10-inch records).

The attractive selections include Ponchielli's "Dance of the Hours," Offenbach's lively "Orpheus in Hades" Overture, Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Song of India" and "Hymn to the Sun," Jessel's "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers," and three other orchestral items. Kenneth Schon is baritone soloist in the famous Handel Largo, and the chorus is also heard in "Play Gypsies, Dance Gypsies."

BING SINGS FOSTER

That American institution, Bing Crosby, sings eight Stephen Foster songs (Decca, four 10-inch records), five being accompanied by John Scott Trotter and his orchestra.

The best-known Foster songs are here, of course, plus "Nell and I" and "Sweetly She Sleeps, My Alice Fair." The King's Men, with Victor Young and his orchestra, join in "My Old Kentucky Home" and "De Camptown Races."

'LUTE SONG' CHARMING

One of the most distinctive Broadway musicals, "Lute Song," is now on disks with its star, Mary Martin, and the "Lute Song" orchestra conducted by the composer, Raymond Scott (Decca, three 10-inch records). The music has a quaint charm and is oriental in atmosphere rather than melodically.

Miss Martin sings five songs, including "Mountain High, Valley Low" and the piquant "See the Monkey." The orchestra plays "'Imperial March" and "Dirge."

'SING OUT, SWEET LAND'

Also off the beaten path is the musical score of "Sing Out, Sweet Land" (Decca, six ten-inch records), recorded by the Broadway cast headed by Alfred Drake and Burl Ives. There are 17 songs, most of them American folk tunes arranged by Elie Siegmeister.

It is an exceptional cross-section of America's heritage of folk music. Among the best were Juanita Hall's singing of "Watermelon Cry," Ive's "Blue Tail Fly" and Drake's "As I Was Going Along."

As lively and toe-tickling a group of square dances as you're likely to hear is played by Carson Robison and his Pleasant Valley Boys, with Lawrence V. Loy as caller (Victor, four 10-inch records).

The album, which contains chart and text directions, includes such good old tunes as "Jingle Bells" "Irish Washerwoman," "Solomon Levi" and "Turkey in the Straw."

HOT JAZZ ALBUM

Esquire's 1946 Award Winners are all together in a Hot Jazz album issued by Victor (two 12-inch records), supervised and directed by Leonard Feather, who wrote three of the selections: "Snafu," "Long, Long Journey" and "The One That Got Away." The fourth number is "Gone With the Wind." A dozen top stars take turns at solo wook.

SAMUEL L. SINGER

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUN 14 1946

Books Out Today

"American Legend: A Treasury of Our Country's Yesterdays," by Robert van Gelder and Dorothy van Gelder (Appleton-Century, $3.75). The American part in selections from Esther Forbes, Eudora Welty, Mark Twain, Bret Harte, Melville, Thurber and others.

"The Tale of Tanglewood: Scene of the Berkshire Music Festivals," by M. A. DeWolfe Howe, with an introduction by Serge Koussevitzky (Vanguard, $2). From the days of Hawthorne.

"Dud Dean and His Country," by Arthur R. Macdougall jr. (Coward-McCann, $3). Tales of hunting and fishing, by a Down East clergyman and fly-rod expert, first published in "Field and Stream."

"Selected Poems of Maxwell Bodenheim, 1914-1944" (Ackerman, $3.50). From previous volumes and magazines.

"The Prolongation of Life," by Dr. Alexander A. Bogomolets (Essential Books (Duell, Sloane & Pearce, $1.50). By the director of the Kiev Institute of Experimental Biology and Pathology.

NEW FICTION: "All for the Best," by Bentz Plagemann (Simon & Schuster, $2.50); "Time and the Hour," by Edith Austin Holton (Putnam, $2.75). Mysteries: "Shoot If You Must," by Richard Powell (Simon & Schuster, $2); "The Velvet Well," by John Gearon (Duell, Sloan & Pearce, $2.50).

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUN 15 1946

To Admit Public To 42 Performances

Six-Week Schedule Planned at Music Center

TANGLEWOOD

Activities, Far Exceeding Those of Any Pre-War Season, Will Commence July 1.

Forty-two performances to which the public will be admitted are on the six-week schedule of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, starting July 1, it was announced today by Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony orchestra and of the orchestra's school at Tanglewood.

The schedule, far exceeding that of any pre-war season to mark the full resumption of Tanglewood activities, includes the nine Berkshire Music Festival performances by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction, four Bach-Mozart concerts by the orchestra, 22 performances, concert and operatic, by Berkshire Music Center school groups, four Coolidge chamber music concerts by Boston Symphony and guest artists under the auspices of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation, and three Saturday morning Festival rehearsals.

The nine Festival concerts and the four Bach-Mozart concerts, all by the full orchestra, will be open to the general public by paid admissions, and three Saturday morning rehearsals of the full orchestra for the Festival concerts will be open to the public at a minimum charge for the orchestra's pension fund. The 22 performances by the Berkshire Music Center school groups will be open by invitation to friends of the Center who enroll in the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center by making voluntary contributions to it. Among these will be three performances, Aug. 6, 7 and 9, of "Peter Grimes," Benjamin Britten's opera composed on commission for Tanglewood and performed successfully abroad. This will be the American premier. Other Center attractions include two evenings of opera scenes by the opera workshop under the direction of Boris Goldovsky, six orchestra concerts under the direction of Stanley Chapple, Leonard Bernstein and Richard Bergen, six chorus concerts under the direction of Richard Shaw, and five chamber music concerts under the supervision of Gregor Piatigorsky. The students of the school who comprise the orchestras, chorus and chamber groups, will number 300, selected from outstanding students in the foremost American and European schools of music.

Tanglewood is being made ready for the season. A new ticket office and reception center has been built at the entrance, the theater-concert hall and the music shed are being renovated and in the parking field, drainage, hard surfacing and roadways are being installed.

This Clipping From
CHARLESTON, W. VA.
MAIL

JUN 16 1946

The compositions recorded this month by the Boston Symphony are the Brandenburg Concertos Nos. 3 and 4, both in the key of G. The third concerto was written for strings alone; the fourth for violin, two flutes and strings. Both are ideal models of the concerto grosso form which reached a pinnacle of perfection during Bach's lifetime.

The Boston Symphony always has been noted for the satiny sheer of its string section. Now under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction, the orchestra plays with such beauty and majestic sonority that you will be delighted to add this album to your collection of best-loved music.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

JUN 15 1946

Glee Club's First Appearance to Be Thursday

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS

The first public performance by the Little Seminary Choir-Glee Club will take place Thursday evening at 8 o'clock in Our Lady of Lourdes Auditorium. The Rev. Henry Kawalec will direct, and Victor Valente, pianist, will be guest soloist.

The program follows:

Cantate Domino	Handel-Praglia
Veni Sancte Spiritus, Sequence for Pentecost	Gregorian Chant
Media Vita, Ancient Responsory for Septuagesima	Gregorian Chant
Benedictus-Canticle	Fauxbourdon
Tantum Ergo	Palestrina
Jesu Rex Admirabilis	Palestrina
O Bone Jesu	Palestrina
Chorus
Prelude in G Minor	Rachmaninoff
Preludes in E Minor, C Sharp Minor, G Minor	Chopin
Theme and Variations	Victor Valente
Popular American Melodies	Medley
Victor Valente, pianist
Panis Angelicus	Franck
Tenor soloist and chorus
The Glory of God in Nature	Beethoven
Ave Maris Stella-O Sanctissima,	Traditonal
Chorus
Come to Sorrento	de Curtis
Tenor soloist
Winter Song	Bullard
Climb Up, Chillun	Negro Spiritual
Stouthearted Men	Romberg
Ave Maria	Arcadelt
Chorus

Program for Choral Group

The program for the concert by the Negro Chorus, "Wings Over Jordan," in Kleinhans Music Hall tomorrow evening is announced, with the name of the soloist in each spiritual, by the local chairman, Sylvester Turpin, as follows:

Ezekiel Saw the Wheel—Cecil Dandy
We Shall Walk Through the Valley in Peace
Esther Overstreet
Great Day—Rhoda Chatman
When Life Is Over—Mr. Dandy
You Know, Lord
I'm Going to Die With the Staff in My Hand
Dorothy Clark
Sometimes I Feel Like a Motherless Child
Thomas Roberts
Room Enough
Ride On, King Jesus—Elizabeth Dearon
The Old Ark's a'Movering
When I've Done the Best I Can—Miss Clark
Just a Closer Walk With Thee
John Carpenter and Miss Clark
Precious Memories
Ezekiel Dearon and Mr. Dandy
Rock'a My Soul—Mr. Dearon
I Will Trust in the Lord—Miss Overstreet
When I Fall on My Knees
Mr. Roberts and Hazel Morris

Charles King is conductor of the chorus and the Rev. Glynn T. Settle founder and director.

600 Buy Season Tickets

More than 600 season subscriptions—50 more than last year—have already been received for the 1946-47 series sponsored by the Buffalo Chamber Music Society, Mary Gail Clark, manager, announced today. A limited number of tickets are left for the series, Miss Clark said.

Four of the five chamber-music ensembles to be heard next season have been selected. They are the Guilet, Budapest, Griller and Stuyvesant Quartets.

The organization will sponsor again a special chamber music cycle during next season.

Berkshire Season Heavier

Forty-two performances within the six-weeks term of the Berkshire Music Center (July 1-Aug. 10) will make the 1946 Berkshire season far heavier than any prewar season. Sixteen performances will be open to the public by paid admission—the nine concerts of the Berkshire Festival and the four Bach-Mozart concerts, all by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Twenty-two performances by the Berkshire Music Center, concert and operatic, will be open to those interested in the school. Persons, who by a voluntary contribution to the Center become members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will be invited guests at the Center's performance and also at four chamber music concerts to be given on the four Tuesday evenings in July under the sponsorship of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation of the Library of Congress.

The first American presentation of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," so successfully received in England, will be given by the Center on Aug. 6, 7 and 9.

Middlebury Adds Course

Middlebury College is adding a Composers' Conference and Chamber Music Center this Summer to its regular summer schedule. Alan Carter, founder and director of the Vermont State Symphony Orchestra, the Cremona String Quartet, and members of the music faculty of the College, will direct the conference. Aim of the conference is to "provide experienced criticism of scores and a program of discussion, instruction and performance. It is designed not only for those interested in composing professionally, but also for persons desiring a better understanding of how serious composing is accomplished."

Two Join Fraternity

Two Ithaca College students from Buffalo were recently taken into Epsilon Chapter of Sigma Alpha Iota, national music fraternity for women. They are Lena Panicali, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Angelo Panicali, 273 Eagle St., and Corinne Marino, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sebastian Marino, 316 Busti Ave. Both are freshmen in the music department.

Recital Notes

Marian Beardsley Albee will present her piano pupils in recitals this evening and tomorrow evening in 52 Winston Rd.

Donna Fazakas-Potter (Pauline Vegh Balaton) will present her voice and piano pupils in the Ontario Methodist Church, Ontario and Tonawanda Sts., tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock.

Laura Kelsey announces that Edman Gordnier will give the last in a series of six piano recitals by her pupils this Spring. Mr. Gordnier's recital will take place Monday evening in the Rehearsal Room of Kleinhans Music Hall.

Lorraine E. Landel, a student at the Juilliard School of Music in New York City, will sing at the Amherst Quota Club's dinner meeting on Thursday evening. Miss Landel will join the Chautauqua Opera Company this Summer.

A piano recital by pupils of Olive Frost will be given at 8 o'clock Friday evening in the Parish House of the First Pilgrim Congregational Church, Elmwood Ave. and Bryant St.

Doris Brumbergh and Elizabeth Morris, sopranos, who were soloists at the third annual spring concert by the Twin City Choristers of the Tonawandas, will appear with the First Methodist Church Choir of North Tonawanda on Friday evening.

Piano pupils of Marjorie Wetter Ralls will be heard in recital Friday evening at 8:15 o'clock in the rehearsal room of Kleinhans Music Hall.

Ten summer "Pop" concerts, with local conductors and featuring Buffalo vocalists and instrumentalists, will be given by the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra, beginning the evening of July 2.

Among the soloists already engaged for the series are Robert Schulz, pianist; Oakley Yale, accordionist; the Vic D'Anna Trio; Raymond Fiutak, clarinetist; Joel Spiegelman, pianist; the Frohsinn Singing Society; Gertrude Lutzi, soprano; Ardis Molitor, soprano, and William McGrath, tenor.

The "Pop" concert dances will be extended this year to 12:30 A. M.

The Lutheran Motet Singers of Buffalo, directed by Clara Mueller Pankow, will give a recital Monday evening of sacred music, jointly with Healey Willan, noted Toronto organist, in the Knox Presbyterian Church of Dunnville, Ont.

Patricia Boyle, pianist, will give a recital tomorrow evening in the Chestnut Hill home of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Palmer in East Aurora.

A song recital by pupils of Marie Louise Mohr will be held in the Lafayette Community House Monday evening. A second recital by pupils of Miss Mohr will be held June 27.

Frances Engel Messersmith presented her pupils in recital Friday evening in 830 Auburn Ave.

Piano pupils of Emilie Yoder Davis will be heard in recital in the Lafayette Community House on Friday evening at 8 o'clock.

Harriett W. Spire will present her junior class in a program in 24 Colonial Circle next Saturday, June 22.

The third annual competition for the Ernest Bloch Award for the best new work for women's chorus based on a text taken from or related to, the Old Testament has been announced. Information on the contest may be obtained from the United Temple Chorus, Box 736, Woodmere. Former Buffalonian Herbert Fromm won the 1944 award.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN 16 1946

42 CONCERTS SET FOR TANGLEWOOD

Performances at the Berkshire Center Will Open July 1—Chamber Music on List

Forty-two performances will be open to audiences at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., in the six weeks of its activities from July 1 to Aug. 10, according to announcement made by Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's school there.

Of these, sixteen will be open to the public by paid admission, including the nine concerts of the Berkshire Festival and the four Bach-Mozart concerts, all by the Boston Symphony, led by Dr. Koussevitzky. Three Saturday morning Festival rehearsals will be open to the public at a minimum charge for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund.

Twenty-two concert and operatic performances by the Berkshire Music Center will be open to those interested in the school. A Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center has been formed, because the Center depends partly on its well wishers. Membership is obtained by a voluntary contribution to the Berkshire Music Center. The twenty-two performances and the four Coolidge Chamber concerts will be open by invitation to those enrolled as Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Four Chamber Music concerts on the first four Tuesday evenings in July will be presented by players from the Boston Symphony and guest artists under the auspices of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. The Center will give three performances, on Aug. 6, 7 and 8, of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," composed on commission for Tanglewood and performed with outstanding success in European countries, and here to have its first American presentation. The opera will be given by the Opera Department under the direction of Herbert Graf, with Leonard Bernstein conducting.

The Opera Workshop, under the direction of Boris Goldovsky, will offer two evenings of opera scenes.

Six concerts will be given by the orchestras of the Berkshire Music Center with Stanley Chapple, Leonard Bernstein and Richard Burgin as conductors. The Chorus, under the direction of Robert Shaw, also will give six concerts. Chamber groups, supervised by Gregor Piatigorsky, will give five concerts.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUN 16 1946

EXTENSIVE PROGRAM AT BERKSHIRE CENTER

Plans Include 42 Performances—Special Events for Friends of Center

Announcing a schedule at the Berkshire Music center far exceeding that of any prewar season, Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony orchestra's school at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, lists 42 performances.

In the six-week term, opening July 1, will be included 16 performances—the nine concerts of the Berkshire festival, four Bach-Mozart concerts and three Saturday morning festival rehearsals—to which the public will pay admission and 22 concert and operatic performances, with four chamber music concerts given to the center by Mrs Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge that will be open by invitation to those enroled as Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Because the center, supported in part by tuition fees and festival receipts, depends also upon its well-wishers, a Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center has been formed. Membership is open to those sending a voluntary contribution to the center at Tanglewood, Lenox.

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y
HERALD
6/14/46

Music Festival Will Commence July 25 In Berkshire Hills

The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala prewar style at Tanglewood, near Lenox, in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the Nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate—are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However, conductor Serge Koussevitzky has included the works of modern composers, among whom are Rachmaninoff, Copland, Shostakovitch and Martinu.

Pre-Festival Series

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Longtime fafavorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1943. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales," was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for a series of concerts in 1941.

School to Reopen

Nearly a month before the opening of the festival the Berkshire music center opens for six weeks beginning July 1. Unique in purpose, the school gives young musicians a chance to polish their performance before entering the professional fields.

The faculty of the school is composed of the nation's big names in music, including composer Leonard Bernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Aaron Copland and opera expert Boris Goldovsky.

The school was closed during the war, but now has accepted more than 300 students in various departments such as composition, instrumentation, conducting, and opera. The opera department plans a performance of Benjamin Brit-

[153]

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUN 15 1946

To Admit Public To 42 Performances

Six-Week Schedule Planned at Music Center

TANGLEWOOD

Activities, Far Exceeding Those of Any Pre-War Season, Will Commence July 1.

Forty-two performances to which the public will be admitted are on the six-week schedule of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, starting July 1, it was announced today by Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony orchestra and of the orchestra's school at Tanglewood.

The schedule, far exceeding that of any pre-war season to mark the full resumption of Tanglewood activities, includes the nine Berkshire Music Festival performances by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction, four Bach-Mozart concerts by the orchestra, 22 performances, concert and operatic, by Berkshire Music Center school groups, four Coolidge chamber music concerts by Boston Symphony and guest artists under the auspices of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation, and three Saturday morning Festival rehearsals.

The nine Festival concerts and the four Bach-Mozart concerts, all by the full orchestra, will be open to the general public by paid admissions, and three Saturday morning rehearsals of the full orchestra for the Festival concerts will be open to the public at a minimum charge for the orchestra's pension fund. The 22 performances by the Berkshire Music Center school groups will be open by invitation to friends of the Center who enroll in the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center by making voluntary contributions to it. Among these will be three performances, Aug. 6, 7 and 9, of "Peter Grimes," Benjamin Britten's opera composed on commission for Tanglewood and performed successfully abroad. This will be the American premier. Other Center attractions include two evenings of opera scenes by the opera workshop under the direction of Boris Goldovsky, six orchestra concerts under the direction of Stanley Chapple, Leonard Bernstein and Richard Bergen, six chorus concerts under the direction of Richard Shaw, and five chamber music concerts under the supervision of Gregor Piatigorsky. The students of the school who comprise the orchestras, chorus and chamber groups, will number 300, selected from outstanding students in the foremost American and European schools of music.

Tanglewood is being made ready for the season. A new ticket office and reception center has been built at the entrance, the theater-concert hall and the music shed are being renovated and in the parking field, drainage, hard surfacing and roadways are being installed.

CHARLESTON, W. VA.
MAIL
JUN 16 1946

The compositions recorded this month by the Boston Symphony are the Brandenburg Concertos Nos. 3 and 4, both in the key of G. The third concerto was written for strings alone; the fourth for violin, two flutes and strings. Both are ideal models of the concerto grosso form which reached a pinnacle of perfection during Bach's lifetime.

The Boston Symphony always has been noted for the satiny sheer of its string section. Now under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction, the orchestra plays with such beauty and majestic sonority that you will be delighted to add this album to your collection of best-loved music.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS
JUN 15 1946

Glee Club's First Appearance to Be Thursday

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS

The first public performance by the Little Seminary Choir-Glee Club will take place Thursday evening at 8 o'clock in Our Lady of Lourdes Auditorium. The Rev. Henry Kawalec will direct, and Victor Valente, pianist, will be guest soloist.

The program follows:

Cantate Domino	Handel-Praglia
Veni Sancte Spiritus, Sequence for Pentecost	Gregorian Chant
Media Vita, Ancient Responsory for Septuagesima	Gregorian Chant
Benedictus-Canticle	Fauxbourdon
Tantum Ergo	Palestrina
Jesu Rex Admirabilis	Palestrina
O Bone Jesu	Palestrina
Chorus
Prelude in G Minor	Rachmaninoff
Preludes in E Minor, C Sharp Minor, G Minor	Chopin
Theme and Variations	Victor Valente
Popular American Melodies	Medley
Victor Valente, pianist
Panis Angelicus	Franck
Tenor soloist and chorus
The Glory of God in Nature	Beethoven
Ave Maris Stella-O Sanctissima, Traditonal
Chorus
Come to Sorrento	de Curtis
Tenor soloist
Winter Song	Bullard
Climb Up, Chillun	Negro Spiritual
Stouthearted Men	Romberg
Ave Maria	Arcadelt
Chorus

Program for Choral Group

The program for the concert by the Negro Chorus, "Wings Over Jordan," in Kleinhans Music Hall tomorrow evening is announced, with the name of the soloist in each spiritual, by the local chairman, Sylvester Turpin, as follows:

Ezekiel Saw the Wheel—Cecil Dandy
We Shall Walk Through the Valley in Peace
Esther Overstreet
Great Day—Rhoda Chatman
When Life Is Over—Mr. Dandy
You Know, Lord
I'm Going to Die With the Staff in My Hand
Dorothy Clark
Sometimes I Feel Like a Motherless Child
Thomas Roberts
Room Enough
Ride On, King Jesus—Elizabeth Dearon
The Old Ark's a'Movering
When I've Done the Best I Can—Miss Clark
Just a Closer Walk With Thee
John Carpenter and Miss Clark
Precious Memories
Ezekiel Dearon and Mr. Dandy
Rock'a My Soul—Mr. Dearon
I Will Trust in the Lord—Miss Overstreet
When I Fall on My Knees
Mr. Roberts and Hazel Morris

Charles King is conductor of the chorus and the Rev. Glynn T. Settle founder and director.

600 Buy Season Tickets

More than 600 season subscriptions—50 more than last year—have already been received for the 1946-47 series sponsored by the Buffalo Chamber Music Society, Mary Gail Clark, manager, announced today. A limited number of tickets are left for the series, Miss Clark said.

Four of the five chamber-music ensembles to be heard next season have been selected. They are the Guilet, Budapest, Griller and Stuyvesant Quartets.

The organization will sponsor again a special chamber music cycle during next season.

Berkshire Season Heavier

Forty-two performances within the six-weeks term of the Berkshire Music Center (July 1-Aug. 10) will make the 1946 Berkshire season far heavier than any pre-war season. Sixteen performances will be open to the public by paid admission—the nine concerts of the Berkshire Festival and the four Bach-Mozart concerts, all by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Twenty-two performances by the Berkshire Music Center, concert and operatic, will be open to those interested in the school. Persons, who by a voluntary contribution to the Center become members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will be invited guests at the Center's performance and also at four chamber music concerts to be given on the four Tuesday evenings in July under the sponsorship of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation of the Library of Congress.

The first American presentation of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," so successfully received in England, will be given by the Center on Aug. 6, 7 and 9.

Middlebury Adds Course

Middlebury College is adding a Composers' Conference and Chamber Music Center this Summer to its regular summer schedule. Alan Carter, founder and director of the Vermont State Symphony Orchestra, the Cremona String Quartet, and members of the music faculty of the College, will direct the conference. Aim of the conference is to "provide experienced criticism of scores and a program of discussion, instruction and performance. It is designed not only for those interested in composing professionally, but also for persons desiring a better understanding of how serious composing is accomplished."

Two Join Fraternity

Two Ithaca College students from Buffalo were recently taken into Epsilon Chapter of Sigma Alpha Iota, national music fraternity for women. They are Lena Panicali, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Angelo Panicali, 273 Eagle St., and Corinne Marino, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sebastian Marino, 316 Busti Ave. Both are freshmen in the music department.

Recital Notes

Marian Beardsley Albee will present her piano pupils in recitals this evening and tomorrow evening in 52 Winston Rd.

Donna Fazakas-Potter (Pauline Vegh Balaton) will present her voice and piano pupils in the Ontario Methodist Church, Ontario and Tonawanda Sts., tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock.

Laura Kelsey announces that Edman Gordnier will give the last in a series of six piano recitals by her pupils this Spring. Mr. Gordnier's recital will take place Monday evening in the Rehearsal Room of Kleinhans Music Hall.

Lorraine E. Landel, a student at the Juilliard School of Music in New York City, will sing at the Amherst Quota Club's dinner meeting on Thursday evening. Miss Landel will join the Chautauqua Opera Company this Summer.

A piano recital by pupils of Olive Frost will be given at 8 o'clock Friday evening in the Parish House of the First Pilgrim Congregational Church, Elmwood Ave. and Bryant St.

Doris Brumbergh and Elizabeth Morris, sopranos, who were soloists at the third annual spring concert by the Twin City Choristers of the Tonawandas, will appear with the First Methodist Church Choir of North Tonawanda on Friday evening.

Piano pupils of Marjorie Wetter Ralls will be heard in recital Friday evening at 8:15 o'clock in the rehearsal room of Kleinhans Music Hall.

Ten summer "Pop" concerts, with local conductors and featuring Buffalo vocalists and instrumentalists, will be given by the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra, beginning the evening of July 2.

Among the soloists already engaged for the series are Robert Schulz, pianist; Oakley Yale, accordionist; the Vic D'Anna Trio; Raymond Flutak, clarinetist; Joel Spiegelman, pianist; the Frohsinn Singing Society; Gertrude Lutzi, soprano; Ardis Molitor, soprano, and William McGrath, tenor.

The "Pop" concert dances will be extended this year to 12:30 A. M.

The Lutheran Motet Singers of Buffalo, directed by Clara Mueller Pankow, will give a recital Monday evening of sacred music, jointly with Healey Willan, noted Toronto organist, in the Knox Presbyterian Church of Dunnville, Ont.

Patricia Boyle, pianist, will give a recital tomorrow evening in the Chestnut Hill home of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Palmer in East Aurora.

A song recital by pupils of Marie Louise Mohr will be held in the Lafayette Community House Monday evening. A second recital by pupils of Miss Mohr will be held June 27.

Frances Engel Messersmith presented her pupils in recital Friday evening in 830 Auburn Ave.

Piano pupils of Emilie Yoder Davis will be heard in recital in the Lafayette Community House on Friday evening at 8 o'clock.

Harriett W. Spire will present her junior class in a program in 24 Colonial Circle next Saturday, June 22.

The third annual competition for the Ernest Bloch Award for the best new work for women's chorus based on a text taken from or related to, the Old Testament has been announced. Information on the contest may be obtained from the United Temple Chorus, Box 736, Woodmere. Former Buffalonian Herbert Fromm won the 1944 award.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUN 15 1946

42 CONCERTS SET FOR TANGLEWOOD

Performances at the Berkshire Center Will Open July 1—Chamber Music on List

Forty-two performances will be open to audiences at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., in the six weeks of its activities from July 1 to Aug. 10, according to announcement made by Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's school there.

Of these, sixteen will be open to the public by paid admission, including the nine concerts of the Berkshire Festival and the four Bach-Mozart concerts, all by the Boston Symphony, led by Dr. Koussevitzky. Three Saturday morning Festival rehearsals will be open to the public at a minimum charge for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund.

Twenty-two concert and operatic performances by the Berkshire Music Center will be open to those interested in the school. A Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center has been formed, because the Center depends partly on its well wishers. Membership is obtained by a voluntary contribution to the Berkshire Music Center. The twenty-two performances and the four Coolidge Chamber concerts will be open by invitation to those enrolled as Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Four Chamber Music concerts on the first four Tuesday evenings in July will be presented by players from the Boston Symphony and guest artists under the auspices of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. The Center will give three performances, on Aug. 6, 7 and 8, of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," composed on commission for Tanglewood and performed with outstanding success in European countries, and here to have its first American presentation. The opera will be given by the Opera Department under the direction of Herbert Graf, with Leonard Bernstein conducting.

The Opera Workshop, under the direction of Boris Goldovsky, will offer two evenings of opera scenes.

Six concerts will be given by the orchestras of the Berkshire Music Center with Stanley Chapple, Leonard Bernstein and Richard Burgin as conductors. The Chorus, under the direction of Robert Shaw, also will give six concerts. Chamber groups, supervised by Gregor Piatigorsky, will give five concerts.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
JUN 16 1946

EXTENSIVE PROGRAM AT BERKSHIRE CENTER

Plans Include 42 Performances—Special Events for Friends of Center

Announcing a schedule at the Berkshire Music center far exceeding that of any prewar season, Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony orchestra's school at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, lists 42 performances.

In the six-week term, opening July 1, will be included 16 performances—the nine concerts of the Berkshire festival, four Bach-Mozart concerts and three Saturday morning festival rehearsals—to which the public will pay admission and 22 concert and operatic performances, with four chamber music concerts given to the center by Mrs Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge that will be open by invitation to those enroled as Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Because the center, supported in part by tuition fees and festival receipts, depends also upon its well-wishers, a Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center has been formed. Membership is open to those sending a voluntary contribution to the center at Tanglewood, Lenox.

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y
HERALD
6/14/46

Music Festival Will Commence July 25 In Berkshire Hills

The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala prewar style at Tanglewood, near Lenox, in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the Nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate—are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However, conductor Serge Koussevitzky has included the works of modern composers, among whom are Rachmaninoff, Copland, Shostakovitch and Martinu.

Pre-Festival Series

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Longtime fafavorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1943. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales," was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for a series of concerts in 1941.

School to Reopen

Nearly a month before the opening of the festival the Berkshire music center opens for six weeks beginning July 1. Unique in purpose, the school gives young musicians a chance to polish their performance before entering the professional fields.

The faculty of the school is composed of the nation's big names in music, including composer Leonard Bernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Aaron Copland and opera expert Boris Goldovsky.

The school was closed during the war, but now has accepted more than 300 students in various departments such as composition, instrumentation, conducting, and opera. The opera department plans a performance of Benjamin Brit-

[153]

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUN 16 1946

Hub Symphony Records Two Well-Liked Works

Adolf Busch Plays Mozart Concerto, Tartini Sonata—Paul Robeson Makes New Set of Spirituals—Indianapolis Orchestra Offers Siegmeister Composition

By VICTOR PRAHL

Those who attended the Bach-Mozart festival at Tanglewood last season and sensed that they were hearing rare performances, will be pleased to learn that some of them were recorded at the time. RCA Victor has just released two Brandenburg Concertos, Nos. 3 and 4, by Bach, played by members of the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky (Victor album M or DM 1050, four 12-inch records). As No. 3 consists of but two movements in the allegro form, Dr Koussevitzky has interpolated the sublimely beautiful and expressive short Sinfonia from the same master's cantata No. 4 "Christ Lay in Death's Dark Prison," the minor key and mood lending the needed contract. In No. 4 one admires anew the subtle velvety tone and virtuosity of the concertmaster, Richard Burgin, in the solo passages for violin, as well as the pure, refined tone of the two flutists, George Laurent and George Madsen. The final side is the "Prelude in E" from Bach's sixth sonata. Approaching perfection both as a performance on the part of the orchestra, and as a recording, this album is a highly welcome addition to the recently released series of compositions by Bach.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

JUN 16 1946

Music

A schedule of activities at the Berkshire Music Center far exceeding that of any pre-war season is announced by Serge Koussevitsky, the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's school at Tanglewood in the Berkshire Hills.

Audiences will be admitted to 42 performances within the six week's term of the Center (July 1—August 10), an average of one a day. Of these, 16 will be open to the public by paid admission—the nine concerts of the Berkshire Festival and the four Bach-Mozart concerts, all by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Koussevitsky's direction. Three Saturday morning Festival rehearsals will be open to the public at a minimum charge for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund.

Twenty-two performances by the Berkshire Music Center, concert and operatic, will be open to those who are interested in the school. The Center, supported in part by tuition fees and Festival receipts, depends also upon its well wisheds. A Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center has therefore been formed. Membership is effected by a voluntary contribution to the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The 22 performances, and the four Coolidge chamber concerts will be open by invitation to those enrolled as Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Four chamber music concerts on the first four Tuesday evenings in July will be performed by Boston Symphony and guest artists under the auspices of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. The Center will give three performances (August 6, 7, 9) of "Peter Grimes," Benjamin Britten's opera composed on commission for Tanglewood, performed with outstanding success in England.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUN 15 1946

TANGLEWOOD WILL OFFER 42 CONCERTS

Berkshire Music Center Schedules Busiest Season Under Koussevitzky Direction

Lenox, June 15—A schedule of activities at the Berkshire Music center far exceeding that of any prewar season is announced by Serge Koussevitzky, the director of the Boston Symphony orchestra's school at Tanglewood in the Berkshire hills. Audiences will be admitted to 42 performances within the six weeks' term of the Center (July 1-August 10) an average of one a day, of these 16 will be open to the public by paid admission—the nine concerts of the Berkshire Festival and the four Bach-Mozart concerts, all by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr Koussevitzky's direction. Three Saturday morning Festival rehearsals will be open to the public at a minimum charge for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension fund.

Twenty-two performances by the Berkshire Music center, concert and operatic, will be open to those who are interested in the school. The Center, supported in part by tuition fees and Festival receipts, depends also upon its well wishers. A Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music center has therefore been formed. Membership is effected by a voluntary contribution to the Berkshire Music center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts. The 22 performances, and the four Coolidge chamber concerts will be open by invitation to those enrolled as friends of the Berkshire Music center.

Four Chamber music concerts on the first four Tuesday evenings in July will be performed by Boston Symphony and guest artists under the auspices of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge foundation in the Library of Congress. The Center will give three performances (August 6, 7, 9) of "Peter Grimes," Benjamin Britten's opera composed on commission for Tanglewood, performed with outstanding success in England and other European countries, and here to have its first American presentation. "Peter Grimes" will be produced by the opera department, under the direction of Dr Herbert Graf, Richard Rychtarik designing the settings and Leonard Bernstein conducting each performance. The chorus will be prepared by Hugh Ross. There will be two evenings of opera scenes by the opera workshop, under the direction of Boris Goldovsky.

The Berkshire Music Center orchestras, under the direction of Stanley Chapple, Leonard Bernstein, and Richard Burgin, will give six concerts. The chorus, under the direction of Robert Shaw, will give six concerts. Chamber groups, under the supervision of Gregor Piatigorsky, will give five concerts. The students of the school will number 300, selectively drawn from the United States and abroad, and representing our foremost schools of music.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

JUN 16 1946

New England's Charms Are Again At Your Doorstep

Tucked away in the northeasternmost corner of the country is the six-State vacationland of New England, whose rich store of Summer pleasures will unfold with all its pristine charm for the first season in five years. Hotels and Summer theaters closed by the war, natural scenic wonders inaccessible in time of gas rationing, native curiosities like the Cog Railway on Mount Washington—now, in 1946, these pleasures and many more are yours for the asking.

New England resort operators have been engaged these past months in enlarging, improving and redecorating their establishments, and in expanding their recreational facilities.

Summer theaters are re-opening, with the promise of Broadway stars and productions brought within leisurely strolling or driving distance of your cottage or hotel.

If a good old-fashioned country fair appeals to your fancy, there will be ample opportunity to indulge it at a score or more of New England's famous rural get-togethers. The exhibitions of livestock and food are made merrier by a carnival spirit and that prince among ancient sports, harness-racing. Skowhegan, Me., will be holding its renowned fair this Summer, as will Brockton, Mass., and New London, Conn.; Tunbridge, Vt., and Keene, N. H.

No account of New England's Summer pleasures can neglect mention of the world-renowned Berkshire Music Festival, a three-week paean of the greatest in classical music by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under its honored conductor, Serge Koussevitsky.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUN 16 1946

42 Berkshire Music Events On Program

Average of One Daily Tops Prewar; Operas Will be Presented

Audiences will be admitted to 42 performances during the six weeks term of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., from July 1 to August 10, it is announced by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of its school there.

This average of one performance a day far exceeds any prewar season. Sixteen performances will be open to the public by paid admission. These include the nine concerts of the Berkshire Festival and the four Bach-Mozart concerts, all by the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction, and the three Saturday morning Festival rehearsals for which a minimum charge for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund will be assessed.

Twenty - two performances by the Berkshire Music Center, concert and operatic, will be open to those who are interested in the school. The center, supported in part by tuition fees and festival receipts, depends also on its well-wishers. A Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center has therefore been formed. Membership is effected by a voluntary contribution to the center. The 22 performances and the four Coolidge chamber concerts will be open by invitation to those enrolled as friends of the center. The chamber music concerts, on the first four Tuesdays in July, will be performed by Boston Symphony and guest artists under auspices of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation.

On August 6, 7 and 9, the center will give three performances of Benjamin Britten's opera "Peter Grimes" composed on commission for Tanglewood. It has already been produced in England and other European countries. Here it will be done by the center opera department, under direction of Dr. Herbert Graf. Leonard Bernstein will conduct and Richard Rychtarik has designed the settings. The chorus will be rehearsed by Hugh Ross.

In addition there will be two evenings of opera scenes by the opera workshop, under direction of Boris Goldovsky. The Berkshire Music Center orchestras, under direction of Stanley Chapple, Leonard Bernstein and Richard Burgin, will give six concerts. The chorus, directed by Robert Shaw, will also give six concerts, and chamber groups, under supervision of Gregor Piatigorsky, will give five programs.

Students at the school are expected to number about 300, selected from the United States and abroad, and representing leading schools of music.

JUNE 15, 1946
HE NEW YORK TIMES,

42 CONCERTS SET FOR TANGLEWOOD

Performances at the Berkshire Center Will Open July 1—Chamber Music on List

Forty-two performances will be open to audiences at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., in the six weeks of its activities from July 1 to Aug. 10, according to announcement made by Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's school there.

Of these, sixteen will be open to the public by paid admission, including the nine concerts of the Berkshire Festival and the four Bach-Mozart concerts, all by the Boston Symphony, led by Dr. Koussevitzky. Three Saturday morning Festival rehearsals will be open to the public at a minimum charge for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund.

Twenty-two concert and operatic performances by the Berkshire Music Center will be open to those interested in the school. A Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center has been formed, because the Center depends partly on its well wishers. Membership is obtained by a voluntary contribution to the Berkshire Music Center. The twenty-two performances and the four Coolidge Chamber concerts will be open by invitation to those enrolled as Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Four Chamber Music concerts on the first four Tuesday evenings in July will be presented by players from the Boston Symphony and guest artists under the auspices of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. The Center will give three performances, on Aug. 6, 7 and 8, of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," composed on commission for Tanglewood and performed with outstanding success in European countries, and here to have its first American presentation. The opera will be given by the Opera Department under the direction of Herbert Graf, with Leonard Bernstein conducting.

The Opera Workshop, under the direction of Boris Goldovsky, will offer two evenings of opera scenes.

Six concerts will be given by the orchestras of the Berkshire Music Center with Stanley Chapple, Leonard Bernstein and Richard Burgin as conductors. The Chorus, under the direction of Robert Shaw, also will give six concerts. Chamber groups, supervised by Gregor Piatigorsky, will give five concerts.

The school will have 300 students, drawn from leading schools of music in this country and abroad.

This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
NEWS

JUN 16 1946

Koussevitzky Sees Festival Paving Way For U. S. Opera

BY BETTY A. DIETZ
Dayton News Music Editor

IN JUST TWO WEEKS, the Berkshire Festivals, unique in American musical events, will be resumed. And there in the Berkshire hills Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Boston symphony conductor and founder of the festivals, will attempt to open the way for the opera of the future, for American opera, in the fullest sense of the words.

Opera in America, Koussevitzky explained recently, has not received the attention it deserves. The handful of resident companies—New York's Metropolitan, the Chicago Civic Opera, San Francisco, Cincinnati's summer opera at the Zoo—even with the aid of radio and a few slender touring groups, cannot possibly fill the gap.

"We have a great number of excellent voices in this country, but we lack an opera," the conductor declared. "By this I mean an ensemble in which the singer is only part of the entire effort and in which all the singers are integrated into an ensemble. We still

---

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

JUN 16 1946

★ ★ ★

BACH: Brandenburg Concertos Nos. 3 and 4.

Bach is not Serge Koussevitzky's dish. These performances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are shrouded in silken tones to such an extent that the anatomy never manages to show through. The two movements of the Concerto No. 3 are separated by a performance of the Sinfonia from the cantata "Christ lag in Totesbanden" (Victor, four records).

★ ★ ★

WAGNER: Bridal Chamber Scene from "Lohengrin."

It is perhaps a sign of a declining interest in Wagner that one prefers "Lohengrin" to "Gotterdammerung." This reviewer makes the confession and bares his breast to the consequences. The quite obvious metrical divisions of the Bridal Chamber music does not prevent it from having a soaring lyricism and a steady march to a striking dramatic climax. What more can you ask? Helen Traubel sings heroically and in character. She seems a little troubled in the upper reaches of her voice but at other times her vocal quality is clear, rounded and brilliant. Kurt Baum sings the name part with robust assertiveness tempered by an elasticity derived from his long experience in Italian opera. Orchestra support is supplied handsomely by Rodzinski and the New York Philharmonic Symphony. The recording is good (Columbia, two records).

DVORAK: New World Symphony.

The blend of American color and Bohemian nostalgia which characterizes this familiar symphony is honestly handled by Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra. It is a good straightaway performance, with everything in place. The orchestra sounds with the usual brilliance and the recording is first rate. (Columbia, five records.)

MOZART: Concerto in A Major for Violin and Orchestra.

Mozart's lucidity and tenderness are suggested but never realized in the performance of the A Major Concerto given by Adolf Busch and the Busch Chamber players. Aside from a general insensitiveness, Mr. Busch is guilty of bad intonation and unsteady pacing. One feels nevertheless that the music has been thoroughly studied and is being presented with purity of intention. This, it seems is not enough. (Columbia, fou records.)

★ ★ ★

LISZT: Piano Music.

Gyorgy Sandor, a highly co petent technician plays seve compositions by the acrobatic ab quite as well as they need played. The album of four reco takes in the Sonata quasi F tasia, the Concert Etude No. Funerailles, Liebestraum and Hungarian Rhapsody No. 15. lumbia, four records.)

[154]

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUN 16 1946

The Two Tanglewoods

THE TALE OF TANGLEWOOD. Scene of the Berkshire Musical Festival. By M. A. DeWolfe Howe. Introduction by Serge Koussevitsky. . . . 101 pp. . . . New York: The Vanguard Press. . . . $2.

Reviewed by
HARRIET WHICHER

NOW that our children are educated as much by the radio and phonograph as by books, it is possible that the present generation will respond more intelligently to a tale of Tanglewood, home of the Berkshire Music Festival, than they do to Hawthorne's Tanglewood tales of classic myths. "Peter and the Wolf" they know. Did not the Boston Symphony present it on the grounds of the old Tappan estate one warm Sunday afternoon in August, 1939, while they lolled on the grass outside the Music Shed, untroubled by dim rumors of wars to come? But Theseus and the Minotaur are shadowy figures. Their story was told nearly a hundred years ago to children gathered in the same place within sight of the same hills; and now that fable of slaughter and sacrifice seems pale and insignificant.

Mr. Howe has had the happy idea of combining in one book our two associations with the word Tanglewood—a name coined by Hawthorne for the corner of the Berkshires where he lived from June, 1850, to November, 1851. One is the story of Hawthorne's sojourn in the little Red Cottage, which to his wife appeared a "bower of classic beauty" and to him a "most wretched and inconvenient little hovel"; of his charming relations with his adoring family and his shyness with friends and acquaintances; of the beginning of his lifelong friendship with Herman Melville, and of the writing of "The House of Seven Gables" and "The Wonder Book." The other is the story of the phenomenal growth of the Berkshire Music Festivals during the seven years before the war. The two parts have a mere thread of connection. Hawthorne's little Red Cottage burned to the ground about 1890, and only scholars remember that it was once called by a reverent visitor a "temple of art and the Muses"; the great Music Shed, presided over by Dr. Koussevitsky, seems more fully to deserve the orotund phrase. The Tappan family passed gradually from the patronage of letters to the patronage of music, and two descendants of Hawthorne's landlord finally presented their country place, Tanglewood, in Stockbridge to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A more dramatic coincidence is the importance of Berkshire thunderstorms in the two tales. It was a thunderstorm in August, 1850, which drove Hawthorne and Melville to the same cave for shelter and thus began their friendship; it was a thunderstorm in August, 1937, which drowned out the brasses in an all-Wagner program, inundated the musicians and drove a drenched audience to start on the spot subscriptions for an $80,000 building to house the music festivals.

If the opening sentences of this review have seemed to put the accent on youth, that is because Mr. Howe speaks so contagiously of the exuberant, youthful enthusiasm which has animated every one concerned with the festivals and made possible their extraordinary development. For this Dr. Koussevitsky is largely responsible. In 1934 about [illegible] thousand people attended the three concerts conducted by Henry Hadley in the horse-show ring of the Dan Hanna farm. Seven years later nearly 95,000 people came from all over the country to hear the nine concerts of the season. In addition to the concerts a Music Center had been established, combining an institute for musicians "capable of profiting by the best professional training for careers in music," and an academy for "students, teachers, and others imbued with the amateur spirit and seeking, through a summer of living and working in music, to enrich their capacities of lifelong enjoyment." The Center has been made possible by the generosity and devotion of the friends of the festival. Now that the war is over the symphonic festivals and the Center will probably resume their old importance after the necessary curtailment of the last four years. Mr. Howe speaks appreciatively, too, of the wonderful work of Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge in the earlier Berkshire festivals of chamber music on South Mountain.

The book forms a necessary sequel to Mr. Howe's earlier history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The late Stuart Sherman once remarked that Mr. Howe, in spite of his devotion to Harvard and Boston, had achieved a "certain blessed detachment from the traditional Boston outlook — or should not one rather say, the traditional Boston inlook." In his "Tale of Tanglewood" he has passed from the heated atmosphere of Symphony Hall to the open air of the Berkshires; from Boston to something international concerned with the festivals and and democratic in its scope. And yet—it is good for us to pause in the blaze of the summer sun, and through the sounding brasses to hear the still small voice of Hawthorne's dark masterpiece composed in the little red cottage.

Opera 'Peter Grimes' In American Premiere

NEW YORK HERALD TRIB.

Britten Work at Tanglewood Aug. 6, 7 and 9

Benjamin Britten's opera "Peter Grimes" will have its first American performances at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday nights, Aug. 6, 7 and 9. It will be produced by the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center on Dr. Herbert Graf's direction, with Leonard Bernstein conducting and settings designed by Richard Rychtarik.

In all, forty-two performances will be given at Tanglewood during the Center's session between July 1 and Aug. 10. Those open to the public by paid admission are the Boston Symphony's nine festival concerts (Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons, July 25, 27, 28, Aug. 1, 3, 4, 8, 10 and 11), and three Saturday morning rehearsals (July 27, Aug. 3 and 10) and four Bach-Mozart concerts on Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons, July 13, 14, 20 and 21.

Twenty-six performances will be open to contributing members of the recently organized Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. These include the performances of "Peter Grimes," four chamber music programs on Tuesday evenings, July 2, 9, 16 and 23, given under the auspices of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation; two programs of opera scenes, six concerts by the Center's orchestras under Stanley Chapple, Mr. Bernstein and Richard Burgin, two concerts by the Center's chorus under Robert Shaw and five concerts by chamber music groups.

TANGLEWOOD (Lenox, Mass.)
BACH-MOZART
Concerts, Directed by
Serge Koussevitzky
Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra
1st Program—Sat. Eve., July 13; Sun. Aft., July 14
2nd Program—Sat. Eve., July 20; Sun. Aft., July 21
Tickets for each concert at $4.80 and $3.60 (tax incl.). Mail orders to Boston Symphony Orchestra, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

JUN [illegible]

Music and Music Makers

Off the Records

By
Thomas B. Sherman

JOSEPH SZIGETI'S recording of the Brahms Violin Concerto, which he made recently with the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy (Columbia, five records), suffers only by comparison with his former recording of the same piece, in which he was associated with the Halle Orchestra of Manchester, England. It is a superior performance and the recording is up to the best prevailing standards of reproduction. Unlike the Manchester version, however, it shows an occasional laxness of emotional control. Otherwise the two are the same—poised, spacious and noble. The orchestra under Ormandy does a skilful job of laying down the structure and keeping the proper pace.

★ ★ ★

AARON COPLAND—Appalachian Spring

Music written for the ballet usually needs the ballet to complete certain gestures that arise n the orchestra. The recording of Copland's ballet suite, custom-made for Martha Graham, is immensely satisfying for all of that. The music is fresh, rhythmically ctive and rich in native harmonic oloring. The final close stresses he leading tone instead of the onic, leaving the listener in a tate of suspense. The ballet, erhaps, would make the reason or this quite evident. The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Koussevitzky gives it a rich and rnate performance

★ ★ ★

BEETHOVEN: Sonata in C Minor or violin and piano.

This recording is the first by saac Stern to be released. It reeals his already familiar virtues. irmness of tone, sureness of itch, intelligible phrasing and an ncompassing authority of address. Mr. Stern is assisted by the xcellent pianist, Alexander Zakin, who is perhaps a little too discreet t times. The recording is firstate in tone reproduction. (Columbia, four records.)

★ ★ ★

BERT—Escales.

Jacques Ibert's descriptive vignettes of certain Mediterranean ports of call are pretty and pleasant and are saturated with local atmosphere. The spirited performance by the New York Philharmonic Orchestra under Artur Rodzinski suggests that Mr. Rodzinski is more interested in contemporary scores than in the nineteenth century symphonies. The recording is excellent (Columbia, two records).

This Clipping From
DALLAS, TEX.
TIMES HERALD

JUN 16 1946

On the RECORD

Serge Koussevitsky's recording of the Brandenburg Concertos (No.'s 3 and 4, Victor M-DM 1050—four 12" records) may upset the purists in one respect. He employs four times as many musicians as Bach used. But Koussevitsky's performance and the excellence of the recording will win the admiration of the most exacting music lover. The concertos were recorded at Tanglewood, Mass., the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The strings sing clearly and melodiously and there is perfect balance among the various sections of the orchestra. The third concerto is scored for stringed instruments alone; the Fourth for violin and two flutes as the concertino with strings as tutti.

Koussevitsky's enlarged personnel keeps the spirit of the work. His energetic and decisive reading gives Bach's lovely music all its buoyancy and vigor, its tenderness and poignancy.

On the extra eighth side of the set is the Pick-Mangiagalli arrangement of the Prelude to Bach's Violin Sonata No. 6 well-presented by the Koussevitsky organization.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JUN 16 1946

Annual Music Fete Will Open July 25 in Berkshire Center

BY EVELYN BROWN

Lenox, Mass. June 15.—(UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala prewar style at Tanglewood, in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawn of the rambling 200-acre estate— are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However, conductor Serge Koussevitzky has included the works of modern composers, among whom are Rachmaninoff, Copland, Shostakovitch and Martinu.

Pre-Festival Series

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Longtime favorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales" was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

School to Reopen

Nearly a month before the opening of the festival the Berkshire music center opens for six weeks beginning July 1. Unique in purpose, the school gives young musicians a chance to polish their performance before entering the professionals fields.

The faculty of the school is composed of the nation's big names in music, including composer Leonard Bernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Aaron Copland and opera expert Boris Goldovsky.

The school was closed during the war, but now has accepted more than 300 students in various departments such as composition, instrumentation, conducting and opera. The opera department plans a performance of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," a piece that was composed for Tanglewood and produced in England last summer.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUN 16 1946

Tanglewood Events

A schedule of activities at the Berkshire Music Center far exceeding that of any pre-war season is announced by Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchesta's school at Tanglewood in the Berkshire Hills.

Audiences will be admitted to 42 performances within the six weeks' term of the Center (July 1-August 10), an average of one a day. Of these, 16 will be open to the public by paid admission—the nine concerts of the Berkshire Festival and the four Bach-Mozart concerts, all by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction. Three Saturday morning festival rehearsals will be open to the public at a minimum charge for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund.

Twenty-two performances by the Berkshire Music Center, concert and operatic, will be open to those who are interested in the school. A Society of Friends of the Berkhire Music Center has been ormed. Membership is by volunary contribution to the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The 22 performances, and the our Coolidge chamber concerts will e open by invitation to those enolled as Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Four Chamber Music concerts on he first four Tuesday evenings in uly will be performed by Boston Symphony and guest artists under he auspices of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in he Library of Congress. The Center will give three performances, August 6, 7, and 9, of "Peter Grimes" Benjamin Britten's opera composed on commission for Tanglewood, performed with outstanding success abroad, and here to have its first American presentation. "Peter Grimes" will be produced by the opera department, under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf, Richard Rychtarik deigning the settings and Leonard Bernstein conducting.

The chorus will be prepared by Hugh Ross. There will be two evenings of opera scenes by the opera workshop, under the direction of Boris Goldovsky.

The Berkshire Music Center orchestras, under the direction of Stanley Chapple, Leonard Bernstein, and Richard Burgin, will give six concerts. The chorus, under the direction of Robert Shaw, will give six concerts. Chamber groups, under the supervision of Gregor Piatigorsky, will give five concerts.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUN 16 1946

The opera workshop will present two evenings of opera scenes, under the direction of Boris Goldovsky and the center orchestras will give six concerts under the direction of Stanley Chapple, Leonard Bernstein and Richard Burgin. The chorus, under the direction of Robert Shaw, will give six concerts and chamber groups, under Gregor Piatigorsky five concerts.

Three hundred students, representing foremost schools of music in the United States and abroad, will attend the school, the realization of a plan long cherished by Dr Koussevitzky aiming to develop the more talented of our young generation of musicians by the experience of actual performance.

A new ticket office and reception center have been built at the entrance to Tanglewood, the 200-acre summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra. The theater-concert hall and music shed are being renovated and drainage, hard surfacing and roadways installed at the parking field. The students will be housed at the Lenox school, the Morgan-Bonsal estate, renamed Tracy hall, also at Lenox, and at the Barrington school at Great Barrington.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE ✓

JUN 16 1946

The Two Tanglewoods

THE TALE OF TANGLEWOOD. Scene of the Berkshire Musical Festival. By M. A. DeWolfe Howe. Introduction by Serge Koussevitsky. . . . 101 pp. . . . New York: The Vanguard Press. . . . $2.

Reviewed by
HARRIET WHICHER

NOW that our children are educated as much by the radio and phonograph as by books, it is possible that the present generation will respond more intelligently to a tale of Tanglewood, home of the Berkshire Music Festival, than they do to Hawthorne's Tanglewood tales of classic myths. "Peter and the Wolf" they know. Did not the Boston Symphony present it on the grounds of the old Tappan estate one warm Sunday afternoon in August, 1939, while they lolled on the grass outside the Music Shed, untroubled by dim rumors of wars to come? But Theseus and the Minotaur are shadowy figures. Their story was told nearly a hundred years ago to children gathered in the same place within sight of the same hills; and now that fable of slaughter and sacrifice seems pale and insignificant.

Mr. Howe has had the happy idea of combining in one book our two associations with the word Tanglewood—a name coined by Hawthorne for the corner of the Berkshires where he lived from June, 1850, to November, 1851. One is the story of Hawthorne's sojourn in the little Red Cottage, which to his wife appeared a "bower of classic beauty" and to him a "most wretched and inconvenient little hovel"; of his charming relations with his adoring family and his shyness with friends and acquaintances; of the beginning of his lifelong friendship with Herman Melville, and of the writing of "The House of Seven Gables" and "The Wonder Book." The other is the story of the phenomenal growth of the Berkshire Music Festivals during the seven years before the war. The two parts have a mere thread of connection. Hawthorne's little Red Cottage burned to the ground about 1890, and only scholars remember that it was once called by a reverent visitor a "temple of art and the Muses"; the great Music Shed, presided over by Dr. Koussevitsky, seems more fully to deserve the orotund phrase. The Tappan family passed gradually from the patronage of letters to the patronage of music, and two descendants of Hawthorne's landlord finally presented their country place, Tanglewood, in Stockbridge to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A more dramatic coincidence is the importance of Berkshire thunderstorms in the two tales. It was a thunderstorm in August, 1850, which drove Hawthorne and Melville to the same cave for shelter and thus began their friendship; it was a thunderstorm in August, 1937, which drowned out the brasses in an all-Wagner program, inundated the musicians and drove a drenched audience to start on the spot subscriptions for an $80,000 building to house the music festivals.

If the opening sentences of this review have seemed to put the accent on youth, that is because Mr. Howe speaks so contagiously of the exuberant, youthful enthusiasm which has animated every one concerned with the festivals and made possible their extraordinary development. For this Dr. Koussevitsky is largely responsible. In 1934 about [illegible] thousand people attended the three concerts conducted by Henry Hadley in the horse-show ring of the Dan Hanna farm. Seven years later nearly 95,000 people came from all over the country to hear the nine concerts of the season. In addition to the concerts a Music Center had been established, combining an institute for musicians "capable of profiting by the best professional training for careers in music," and an academy for "students, teachers, and others imbued with the amateur spirit and seeking, through a summer of living and working in music, to enrich their capacities of lifelong enjoyment." The Center has been made possible by the generosity and devotion of the friends of the festival. Now that the war is over the symphonic festivals and the Center will probably resume their old importance after the necessary curtailment of the last four years. Mr. Howe speaks appreciatively, too, of the wonderful work of Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge in the earlier Berkshire festivals of chamber music on South Mountain.

The book forms a necessary sequel to Mr. Howe's earlier history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The late Stuart Sherman once remarked that Mr. Howe, in spite of his devotion to Harvard and Boston, had achieved a "certain blessed detachment from the traditional Boston outlook — or should not one rather say, the traditional Boston inlook." In his "Tale of Tanglewood" he has passed from the heated atmosphere of Symphony Hall to the open air of the Berkshires; from Boston to something international concerned with the festivals and and democratic in its scope. And yet—it is good for us to pause in the blaze of the summer sun, and through the sounding brasses to hear the still small voice of Hawthorne's dark masterpiece composed in the little red cottage.

Opera 'Peter Grimes' In American Premiere

NEW YORK HERALD TRIB.

Britten Work at Tanglewood Aug. 6, 7 and 9

Benjamin Britten's opera "Peter Grimes" will have its first American performances at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday nights, Aug. 6, 7 and 9. It will be produced by the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center on Dr. Herbert Graf's direction, with Leonard Bernstein conducting and settings designed by Richard Rychtarik.

In all, forty-two performances will be given at Tanglewood during the Center's session between July 1 and Aug. 10. Those open to the public by paid admission are the Boston Symphony's nine festival concerts (Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons, July 25, 27, 28, Aug. 1, 3, 4, 8, 10 and 11), and three Saturday morning rehearsals (July 27, Aug. 3 and 10) and four Bach-Mozart concerts on Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons, July 13, 14, 20 and 21.

Twenty-six performances will be open to contributing members of the recently organized Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. These include the performances of "Peter Grimes," four chamber music programs on Tuesday evenings, July 2, 9, 16 and 23, given under the auspices of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation; two programs of opera scenes, six concerts by the Center's orchestras under Stanley Chapple, Mr. Bernstein and Richard Burgin, two concerts by the Center's chorus under Robert Shaw and five concerts by chamber music groups.

TANGLEWOOD (Lenox, Mass.)
BACH-MOZART
Concerts, Directed by
Serge Koussevitzky
Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra
1st Program—Sat. Eve., July 13; Sun. Aft., July 14
2nd Program—Sat. Eve., July 20; Sun. Aft., July 21
Tickets for each concert at $4.80 and $3.60 (tax incl.). Mail orders to Boston Symphony Orchestra, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

JUN 16 1946

Music and Music Makers

Off the Records

By
Thomas B. Sherman

JOSEPH SZIGETI'S recording of the Brahms Violin Concerto, which he made recently with the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy (Columbia, five records), suffers only by comparison with his former recording of the same piece, in which he was associated with the Halle Orchestra of Manchester, England. It is a superior performance and the recording is up to the best prevailing standards of reproduction. Unlike the Manchester version, however, it shows an occasional laxness of emotional control. Otherwise the two are the same—poised, spacious and noble. The orchestra under Ormandy does a skillful job of laying down the structure and keeping the proper pace.

* * *

AARON COPLAND—Appalachian Spring

Music written for the ballet usually needs the ballet to complete certain gestures that arise in the orchestra. The recording of Copland's ballet suite, custom-made for Martha Graham, is immensely satisfying for all of that. The music is fresh, rhythmically active and rich in native harmonic coloring. The final close stresses the leading tone instead of the tonic, leaving the listener in a state of suspense. The ballet, perhaps, would make the reason for this quite evident. The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Koussevitzky gives it a rich and ornate performance.

* * *

BEETHOVEN: Sonata in C Minor for violin and piano.

This recording is the first by Isaac Stern to be released. It reveals his already familiar virtues, firmness of tone, sureness of pitch, intelligible phrasing and an encompassing authority of address. Mr. Stern is assisted by the excellent pianist, Alexander Zakin, who is perhaps a little too discreet at times. The recording is first-rate in tone reproduction. (Columbia, four records.)

* * *

IBERT—Escales.

Jacques Ibert's descriptive vignettes of certain Mediterranean ports of call are pretty and pleasant and are saturated with local atmosphere. The spirited performance by the New York Philharmonic Orchestra under Artur Rodzinski suggests that Mr. Rodzinski is more interested in contemporary scores than in the nineteenth century symphonies. The recording is excellent (Columbia, two records).

This Clipping From
DALLAS, TEX.
TIMES HERALD

JUN 16 1946

On the RECORD

Serge Koussevitsky's recording of the Brandenburg Concertos (No.'s 3 and 4, Victor M-DM 1050—four 12" records) may upset the purists in one respect. He employs four times as many musicians as Bach used. But Koussevitsky's performance and the excellence of the recording will win the admiration of the most exacting music lover. The concertos were recorded at Tanglewood, Mass., the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The strings sing clearly and melodiously and there is perfect balance among the various sections of the orchestra. The third concerto is scored for stringed instruments alone; the Fourth for violin and two flutes as the concertino with strings as tutti.

Koussevitsky's enlarged personnel keeps the spirit of the work. His energetic and decisive reading gives Bach's lovely music all its buoyancy and vigor, its tenderness and poignancy.

On the extra eighth side of the set is the Pick-Mangiagalli arrangement of the Prelude to Bach's Violin Sonata No. 6 well-presented by the Koussevitsky organization.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUN 16 1946

Tanglewood Events

A schedule of activities at the Berkshire Music Center far exceeding that of any pre-war season is announced by Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchesta's school at Tanglewood in the Berkshire Hills.

Audiences will be admitted to 42 performances within the six weeks' term of the Center (July 1-August 10), an average of one a day. Of these, 16 will be open to the public by paid admission—the nine concerts of the Berkshire Festival and the four Bach-Mozart concerts, all by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction. Three Saturday morning festival rehearsals will be open to the public at a minimum charge for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund.

Twenty-two performances by the Berkshire Music Center, concert and operatic, will be open to those who are interested in the school. A Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center has been formed. Membership is by voluntary contribution to the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The 22 performances, and the four Coolidge chamber concerts will be open by invitation to those enrolled as Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Four Chamber Music concerts on the first four Tuesday evenings in July will be performed by Boston Symphony and guest artists under the auspices of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. The Center will give three performances, August 6, 7, and 9, of "Peter Grimes" Benjamin Britten's opera composed on commission for Tanglewood, performed with outstanding success abroad, and here to have its first American presentation. "Peter Grimes" will be produced by the opera department, under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf, Richard Rychtarik deigning the settings and Leonard Bernstein conducting.

The chorus will be prepared by Hugh Ross. There will be two evenings of opera scenes by the opera workshop, under the direction of Boris Goldovsky.

The Berkshire Music Center orchestras, under the direction of Stanley Chapple, Leonard Bernstein, and Richard Burgin, will give six concerts. The chorus, under the direction of Robert Shaw, will give six concerts. Chamber groups, under the supervision of Gregor Piatigorsky, will give five concerts.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JUN 16 1946

Annual Music Fete Will Open July 25 in Berkshire Center

BY EVELYN BROWN

LENOX, Mass. June 15.—(UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala prewar style at Tanglewood, in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawn of the rambling 200-acre estate— are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However, conductor Serge Koussevitzky has included the works of modern composers, among whom are Rachmaninoff, Copland, Shostakovitch and Martinu.

Pre-Festival Series

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Longtime favorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales" was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

School to Reopen

Nearly a month before the opening of the festival the Berkshire music center opens for six weeks beginning July 1. Unique in purpose, the school gives young musicians a chance to polish their performance before entering the professionals fields.

The faculty of the school is composed of the nation's big names in music, including composer Leonard Bernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Aaron Copland and opera expert Boris Goldovsky.

The school was closed during the war, but now has accepted more than 300 students in various departments such as composition, instrumentation, conducting and opera. The opera department plans a performance of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," a piece that was composed for Tanglewood and produced in England last summer.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUN 16 1946

The opera workshop will present two evenings of opera scenes, under the direction of Boris Goldovsky and the center orchestras will give six concerts under the direction of Stanley Chapple, Leonard Bernstein and Richard Burgin. The chorus, under the direction of Robert Shaw, will give six concerts and chamber groups, under Gregor Piatigorsky five concerts.

Three hundred students, representing foremost schools of music in the United States and abroad, will attend the school, the realization of a plan long cherished by Dr Koussevitzky aiming to develop the more talented of our young generation of musicians by the experience of actual performance.

A new ticket office and reception center have been built at the entrance to Tanglewood, the 200-acre summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra. The theater-concert hall and music shed are being renovated and drainage, hard surfacing and roadways installed at the parking field. The students will be housed at the Lenox school, the Morgan-Bonsal estate, renamed Tracy hall, also at Lenox, and at the Barrington school at Great Barrington.

…UIS, MO.
DISPATCH

1 6 1946

…usic
…l Music
…akers
…e Records

By
B. Sherman

…ZIGETI'S recording
…hms Violin Concerto,
…made recently with
…hia Orchestra under
…andy (Columbia, five
…fers only by com-
…his former recording
…piece, in which he
…d with the Halle Or-
…anchester, England.
…ior performance and
…is up to the best
…andards of reproduc-
…e the Manchester
…ver, it shows an oc-
…ess of emotional con-
…ise the two are the
…spacious and noble.
…ra under Ormandy
…l job of laying down
…and keeping the

★ ★

…PLAND—Appalachian

…ten for the ballet
…the ballet to com-
…gestures that arise
…ra. The recording of
…allet suite, custom-
…rtha Graham, is im-
…fying for all of that.
…fresh, rhythmically
…h in native harmonic
…final close stresses
…tone instead of the
…the listener in a
…pense. The ballet,
…ld make the reason
…evident. The Bos-
…ny Orchestra under
…gives it a rich and
…mance.

★ ★

…N: Sonata in C Minor
…d piano.
…ding is the first by
…o be released. It re-
…ady familiar virtues.
…tone, sureness of
…ible phrasing and an
…authority of ad-
…ern is assisted by the
…ist, Alexander Zakin,
…s a little too discreet
…e recording is first-
…reproduction. (Colum-
…ords.)

★ ★

…ales.
…ert's descriptive vig-
…rtain Mediterranean
…are pretty and pleas-
…saturated with local
…The spirited perform-
…New York Philhar-
…estra under Artur
…ggests that Mr. Rod-
…re interested in con-
…scores than in the
…century symphonies.
…ng is excellent (Co-
…records).

Tanglewood Lists 42 Musical Events

A schedule of activities at the Berkshire Music Center far exceeding that of any pre-war season is announced by Serge Koussevitzky, the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's school at Tanglewood in the Berkshire Hills.

Audiences will be admitted to 42 performances within the six weeks' term of the Center (July 1-August 10), an average of one a day. Of these, 16 will be open to the public by paid admission—the 9 concerts of the Berkshire Festival and the 4 Bach-Mozart concerts, all by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction. Three Saturday morning Festival rehearsals will be open to the public at a minimum charge for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund.

Twenty-two performances by the Berkshire Music Center, concert and operatic, will be open to those who are interested in the school. The Center, supported in part by tuition fees and Festival receipts, depends also upon its well wishers. A Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center has therefore been formed. Membership is effected by a voluntary contribution to the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts. The 22 performances, and the four Coolidge chamber concerts will be open by invitation to those enrolled as Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

MALCOLM HOLMES, dean of the New England Conservatory of Music, who will be one of the guest conductors at Conservatory Night at the Pops tonight at Symphony Hall.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

Bruno Walter Wins Musicians' Acclaim On 50th Anniversary

More than any other musician of his day Bruno Walter has been honored by his contemporaries in the field of music. Walter, who directs one of the two Boston Symphony concerts in the coming season's Bushnell Symphony Series, was only 67 years old when, two years ago he celebrated the 50th anniversary of his debut as a conductor.

On this occasion he received gifts and testimonials from the Board of Directors of the New York Philharmonic - Symphony Society and from his colleagues all over the music world.

Among other things he was presented by Artur Rodzinski, the Philharmonic's Musical Director, with a hand-lettered and illuminated testimonial from Mr. Walter's colleagues. Among the dozens of signatures were those of Arturo Toscanini, Serge Koussevitzky, Leopold Stokowski, Walter Damrosch, Eugene Ormandy, Sir Thomas Beecham, George Szell, Fritz Reiner, Dimitri Mitropoulos, Eugene Goossens, Vladimir Golschmann, and others.

Walter expressed his gratitude adding: "My life—with all its hardships — has been happy, blessed and made happy by music, by the uplifting power of music, by the spirial message of music. And this musical happiness has helped me to carry the burden of my heavy responsibilities . . . In this way I have learned to believe in the immense moral force of music. It is beautiful to think how music with its uplifting influence on the human soul has grown to highest importance in the cultural life of America . . ."

The complete Bushnell Symphony series includes concerts by the Boston Symphony (two); Philadelphia, Cleveland, National and New York Philharmonic-Symphony orchestras. Piano soloists will appear with the National and Cleveland orchestras.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUN 16 1946

Music

MUSIC CRITICS JOB NO 'BED OF ROSES'

By RAYMOND MORIN

In the current Musical America annual issue article, under the debatable title, "Are Music Critics People?" Francis D. Perkins of the New York Herald Tribune reveals just enough about the trials of a metropolitan critic to cause his out-of-town colleagues to sigh with relief.

The story is accompanied by a cartoon well worth describing. At a critic's desk sits the culprit himself, as Machiavellian a looking creature as ever you will see. Approaching him with expressions of violent protestation are an embittered violinist, and an operatic character dressed in suit of armor, threateningly pointing a spear at his literary executioner.

These are followed by two prima donnas with clenched fists, an extravagantly mustachioed conductor armed with a spiked club, and an indignant papa disgustedly leading the youthful family prodigy in the presence of the villain for oral retraction, while little sister gleefully looks on.

According to Mr. Perkins (whom I have had the pleasure of meeting several times at Tanglewood and who does not in the least resemble the journalistic Satan just described) New York's musical gentlemen of the press cover from three or four concerts each week to "almost anything."

One of the "almost anything" days which Mr. Perkins tells about was a fabulous Sunday in 1939. First there was a Paderewski broadcast to review, then at 3 o'clock the Town Hall debut of an English pianist. At 5.15 he attended a Carnegie Hall concert which ended around 7. Later that evening there were two more recitals to cover. The reviews were spasmodically dashed off "between rounds."

Over a midnight dinner, the critic reflected that if Beethoven himself had returned to earth on that particular evening to conduct the premier of his tenth symphony, Mr. Perkins would have merely raised a weary eyebrow and said, "Oh, yeah?"

Chopsticks, Streamlined

There seems to be an irresistible urge to glamorize the most inauspicious of musical themes to a "believe it or not" degree. Edward Ballantine of Harvard University, no less, gave the "Mary Had a Little Lamb" tune injections of Mozart, Wagner, Lszt, and others.

Then there was Gracie Allen who weaned the C scale (with its intruding C sharp) into what she modestly called a "concerto." Morton Gould took Hanon's first exercise to task in his "Child Prodigy."

But you ain't heard nothin yet . . . "Chopsticks" has grown into eight pages of variations in Music-Box, Tango, Jazz, Lament, and other moods. The renovators of this best known of all piano tormentors are John Lee Burton and Irwin Heilner.

So it is that any melody in Public Domain is in danger of losing its demureness . . . so help it!

Cherchez Les Femmes

After directing male choruses for several years, Phil Spitalny made a tour of all 48 states, auditioned 1500 damsels, spent $40,000 and the results have been nationally heard for the past 10 years.

His brother, H. Leopold Spitalny, manager of Toscanini and in charge of "la musique serieuse" at NBC, thought he ought to take Phil to a psychiatrist.

SPITALNY

Unlike most of his fellow bandmasters, Spitalny had little trouble during the war because of depletions in the ranks, although two of his girls did join the WAC.

Most of the girls in his orchestra are conservatory graduates and play two or more instruments. They are chosen on the basis of their musical ability on a particular instrument, their singing ability, and their appearance, charm and background.

No wonder he had to audition 1500 of them in 48 states!

Bach-Mozart Concerts

The forthcoming Berkshire Festival is to be preceded by two additional weekends of concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart.

Like the last two Summers they will be played by the depleted orchestra required for this music. The same program will be played on Saturday evening, July 13, and the following afternoon. Another program will be given Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon, July 20 and 21.

The programs will include the Brandenburg Concerti Nos. 2, 3, 5, by Bach, Mozart's "Jupiter" and B-flat Symphonies, among other works.

This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE

JUN 1 6 1946

Harpist at Tanglewood

Lorraine King, well known Minneapolis harpist, will leave Saturday for Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., to study harp and to play with the Boston Symphony orchestra in its summer series of concerts. She will return in mid-August.

MADISON, GA
MADISONIAN
5/17/46

Carol Brice To Sing At Tobias Testimonial Dinner

NEW YORK — Carol Brice, Negro soprano, recently praised as another Dorothy Maynor by Conductor Serge Koussevitsky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will sing at a testimonial dinner for Dr. Channing H. Tobias which the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, New York Committee is sponsoring at the Hotel Roosevelt, April 18, 1946, dinner committee chairman Louis S. Weiss announced today.

Speakers at the dinner will be Dr. Frank Graham, honorary president of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., Dr. J. Raymond Walsh, radio commentator, and Dr. Tobias, newly apointed director of the Phelips-Stokes Fund.

Miss Brice will sing: "United Nations on the March" by Shostakovitich; "Divinites du Styx" from the opera Alcheste, by Gluck; and "Preach Me Not Your Musty Rules" by Arne.

"Our Boston Symphony discovered Dorothy Maynor," Dr. Koussevitsky told Friends of the Boston Symphony at a special concert last month. "Today we discover another great singer, Carol Brice. I hope very soon this artist will be as great as Dorothy Maynor... her voice is like a cello."

Miss Brice, a New Yorker, winner of the Naumberg Foundation competition in 1944, made her debut at Town Hall in March 1945. She has been highly praised by Dr. Fritz Reiner, conductor of the Pittsburg Symphony Orchestra, as well as by Dr. Koussevitsky.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUN 17 1946

"Carnegie Hall," scheduled to be the first production by William Le Baron and Boris Morros for Federal Films, will be made entirely in New York and will be directed by Edgar Ulmer for United Artists release. The picture will feature the New York Philharmonic Orchestra with Bruno Walter conducting, the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky conducting, and Lily Pons, Walter Damrosch and Frank McHugh in important parts.

This Clipping From
NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.
HOME NEWS

JUN 18 1946

Center Accepts N.J.C. Teacher

Miss Phyllis W. Glass Will Become Auditor at Tanglewood

Miss Phyllis W. Glass, instructor in music at New Jersey College for Women and organizer-conductor of the N. J. C. Little Symphony group, has been accepted as an auditor this summer in the orchestral conducting class at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Mass., of which Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is director. The class is under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky assisted by Leonard Bernstein, Stanley Chapple and Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony.

Lectures and sessions of the class are devoted to score analyses, individual instruction in the technique of conducting and attendance at rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Miss Glass has been selected as a member of the viola section of the advanced orchestra of students attending the Berkshire Music Center. Members are chosen by audition in various centers throughout the country. She also will have an opportunity to play in chamber music groups under the direction of Gregor Piatigorsky.

Before joining the faculty last fall, she taught music and supervised orchestras and bands in public schools in Wisconsin and in the State Teachers College in Superior, Wis. She has played in the Duluth, Minn., Symphony Orchestra as first violinist, and while at Northwestern University she played in the university orchestra.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUN 17 1946

Lenox Concerts Will Number 42

LENOX, June 17.—Forty-two performances will be open to audiences at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, in the six weeks of its activities from July 1 to Aug. 10, according to announcement made by Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's school.

Of these, sixteen will be open to the public by paid admission, including the nine concerts of the Berkshire Festival and the four Bach-Mozart concerts, all by the Boston Symphony, led by Dr. Koussevitzky. Three Saturday morning Festival rehearsals will be open to the public at a minimum charge for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund.

Twenty-two concert and operatic performances by the Berkshire Music Center will be open to those interested in the school. A Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center has been formed, because the Center depends partly on its well wishers. Membership is obtained by a voluntary contribution to the Berkshire Music Center. The twenty-two performances and the four Coolidge Chamber concerts will be open by invitation to those enrolled as Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Four chamber music concerts on the first four Tuesday evenings in July will be presented by players from the Boston Symphony and guest artists under the auspices of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. The Center will give three performances, Aug. 6, 7 and 8, of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," composed on commission for Tanglewood and performed with outstanding success in European countries, and here to have its first American presentation. The opera will be given by the Opera Department under the direction of Herbert Graf, with Leonard Bernstein conducting.

The Opera Workshop, under the direction of Boris Goldovsky, will offer two evenings of opera scenes.

Six concerts will be given by the orchestras of the Berkshire Music Center with Stanley Chapple, Leonard Bernstein and Richard Burgin as conductors. The Chorus, under the direction of Robert Shaw, also will give six concerts. Chamber groups, supervised by Gregor Piatigorsky, will give five concerts.

The school will have 300 students, drawn from leading schools of music in this country and abroad.

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
NEWS

JUN 17 1946

Ballet Music Are Feature

BY MARJORY M. FISHER
The News Music Editor

Aaron Copland's "Appalachian Spring," written for Martha Graham ballet use and heard here last season both as a symphony program number and in conjunction with Miss Graham's choreography, did not begin to sound so impressive on those occasions as in its Victor album. Either that, or it becomes increasingly impressive with repeated hearings. For while this reviewer was not enthusiastic over this Copland work when it was heard in our Opera House, Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony play it (with the aid of Victor) in a manner that is altogether enchanting.

The album contains pictures of Martha Graham and her associates; also a synopsis of the ballet plot.

FOLK DANCES

A different type of dance is reflected in the collection of Strauss Polkas played by Arthur Fiedler and his Boston "Pop" Orchestra for Victor. And if you can listen to these six polkas without doing a bit of dancing yourself, or wishing to, you're not quite human.

Those recorded are the "Tik Tak," "Sans Souci," "Pizzicato," "Leichtes Blut," "Annen" and "Bahn Frei"—all gay and toe-tickling, and quite as irresistible yet far less hackneyed than the same Johann Strauss waltzes.

This Clipping From
MOUNT VERNON, N. Y.
ARGUS

JUN 18 1946

New York TO-NIGHT

ONE of America's great symphony orchestras has been assembled in Hollywood by Dimitri Tiomkin to record the score of David O. Selznick's "Duel in the Sun," it was disclosed today as the names of the leading musicians in the ninety-piece orchestra will begin a fifteen day recording of the score were announced by United Artists. The musicians have been brought from all sections of the United States including New York, Washington, Pittsburgh, Boston, Indianapolis and San Francisco. They include Mark Levant, concert master Metropolitan Opera House, New York; David Frisina, concert master of the Los Angeles Philharmonic; John Pennington, leader of the London String Quartette; Milton Thomas, Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra; Merrill Remington, San Francisco Symphony Orchestra; James Stagliano, Boston Symphony Orchestra; Jack Kirk Smith, National Symphony Orchestra, Washington; Morris Boltuch, New York Philharmonic; Cecil Bonvalet, London String Quartette; Boris Blinder, San Francisco Symphony Orchestra; Leonard Possella, Los Angeles Philharmonic; Leon Ziporkin, Hollywood Bowl Symphony; Emanuel Bey, concert pianist accompanist to Jascha Heifetz and Max Rabinovich, world famous concert pianist.

"Duel in the Sun," which will have its premiere in Texas in the Fall, stars Jennifer Jones, Joseph Cotten, Gregory Peck, Lionel Barrymore, Herbert Marshall, Lillian Gish, Walter Huston, Charles Bickford, Otto Kruger, Harry Carey, Scott McKay and introduces Joan Tetzel.

* * *

Miriam Lavelle, exciting acrobatic dancer featured in the stars-in-person show at the Capitol Theatre, went through no long and monotonous process of auditioning when she broke into show business.

Instead of the rigorous routine of arranging for a rehearsal hall, getting musicians, etc., Miriam would march the booker down to Times Square and point up to the huge neon sign where an acrobatic dancer was going through her gyrations. "There I am," Miriam would say. "How do you like me?" The neon sign has long since faded, and Miriam has crowded three motion pictures, several musical comedies and vaudeville tours into her short but thrilling career.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUN 18 1946

Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony orchestra's school at Tanglewood, has announced that audiences will be admitted to 42 performances within the six weeks' term of the center (July 1 through Aug. 10) or to an average of one a day.

Of these, 16 will be open to the public by paid admission—the nine concerts of the Berkshire festival and the four Bach-Mozart concerts. Three of the Saturday morning festival rehearsals will be open to the public at a minimum charge for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund.

The 22 performances by the Berkshire Music center, both concert and operatic, will be open to those who are interested in the school. These performances and the four Coolidge chamber concerts will be open by invitation to those enrolled as friends of the Berkshire Music center. The chamber concerts will be held on the first four Tuesday evenings in July and will be performed by Boston Symphony and guest artists under the auspices of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge foundation of the Library of Congress.

"Peter Grimes," the Benjamin Britten opera composed on commission from Tanglewood will be given three performances on Aug. 6, 7 and 9. It will have its first American presentation under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf and will be produced by the opera department. Richard Rychtarik will design the settings and Leonard Bernstein will conduct each performance. The chorus will be prepared by Hugh Ross.

There will be two evenings of opera scenes by the opera workshop under the direction of Boris Goldovsky. The Berkshire Music center orchestras, under the direction of Stanley Chapple, Leonard Bernstein and Richard Burgin will give six concerts. The chorus, under the direction of Robert Shaw, will give six concerts. Chamber groups, under the supervision of Gregory Piatigorsky, will give five concerts. Students of the school will number 300.

Students of the center will be housed at the Lenox school, the Morgan-Bonsal estate, renamed Tracy Hall in Lenox and the Barrington school in Great Barrington.

At Tanglewood a new ticket office and reception center has been built at the entrance. The Theater-Concert hall and the Music shed are being renovated. In the parking field drainage, hard surfacing and roadways are being installed.

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
PATHFINDER

JUN 19 1946

Recorded Music

Something of a shovelful of Liszt comes from Columbia, with Gyorgy Sandor, pianist, playing such old and often-hackneyed items as the Hungarian Rhapsody No. 15, Liebestraum No. 3, the Sonata Quasi Fantasia, the Concert Etude in F Minor, and the Funerailles.

Appalachian Spring by Aaron Copland, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. Copland's symphonic suite from his ballet music written for Martha Graham and her dancers has had eight performances in major cities in six months and now it adds a good recorded version by RCA Victor.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER

JUN 19 1946

Norman Corwin to Meet Composers in Moscow

Radio writer and director Norman Corwin, first recipient of the Wendell Willkie One-World Award, has left on a world tour during which he will visit the Soviet Union in July as the guest of VOKS (Society for Cultural Relations with Foreign Countries).

With him, he is carrying a special presentation from the American Soviet Music Society to the Union of Soviet Composers. The Society is sending two recent recordings by some of its leading members—Aaron Copland's Appalachian Spring recorded by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra for Victor and Elie Siegmeister's Ozark Suite recorded by Dmitri Mitropoulos and the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra for Columbia.

Special messages were inscribed in these albums to Dmitri Shostakovich, Nikolai Miaskovski, Serge Prokofieff and Reinhold Gliere, four of the leading officers of the Union of Soviet Composers from Dr. Koussevitzky, Mr. Copland and Mr. Siegmeister, who are respectively chairman and vice-chairmen of the American Soviet Music Society.

Mr. Corwin will meet with the Union of Soviet Composers in Moscow where he will present these albums. On his world tour, he is taking with him specially constructed equipment with which he will record material to be used in CBS broadcasts upon his return. During this visit, Mr. Corwin will also take greetings from other artists in the field of theatre and radio.

The American Soviet Music Society and the creative artists of this country send through Norman Corwin greetings to their colleagues in the USSR.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUN 20 1946

RUSSIAN SYMPHONY

LENOX, June 20 (AP) — The "First Western Hemisphere Performance" of the ninth symphony of the Russian composer, Dmitri Shostakovitch, will be given at the opening of the Berkshire Music Festival Thursday, July 25. Conductor Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will direct the orchestra, said "it is notable for its brevity and cheerfulness."

This Clipping From
PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

JUN 19 1946

Musical Festival To Open July 25

Boston Symphony Will Play Nine Concerts In Berkshires

LENOX, Mass. (UP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its [illegible] Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala prewar style at Tanglewood, in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week-ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate—are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However, Conductor Serge Koussevitzky has included the works of modern composers, among whom are Rachmaninoff, Copeland, Shostakovitch and Martinu.

PRE-FESTIVAL SERIES

Before the opening of the festival the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Long-time favorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held anually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales," was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

SCHOOL TO REOPEN

Nearly a month before the opening of the festival the Berkshire music center opens for six weeks beginning July 1. Unique in purpose, the school gives young musicians a chance to polish their performance before entering the professional fields.

The faculty of the school is composed of the nation's big names in music, including Composer Leonard Bernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Aaron Copland and opera expert Boris Goldovsky.

The school was closed during the war but now has accepted more than 300 students in various departments, such as composition, instrumentation, conducting and opera. The opera department plans a performance of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," a piece that was composed for Tanglewood and produced in England last summer.

~~June 20 Times~~

Tanglewood to Offer Shostakovitch 9th

LENOX, June 20—The new "Ninth Symphony" of Dmitri Shostakovitch, famed Russian composer, will be given its first performance in the western hemisphere by the Boston Symphony orchestra, July 25, at the opening concert of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood here.

Announcement that the new opus of the 39-year-old Shostakovitch is to be presented was made here today by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony.

According to reports from Russia, the new symphony is notable for brevity and cheerfulness. Its performance requires only 23 minutes, about one-third the duration of the Russian composer's two previous symphonies, composed during the war and manifestly influenced by it.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

JUN 19 1946

Boston to Commemorate El Alamein Again on Air

For the second time this season the battle of El Alamein, as commemorated in music, will be featured on a program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra over WJZ. On June 29 Arthur Fiedler, in the last Boston Pops Orchestra concert of the season, will conduct the "El Alamein Concerto" by Albert Arlen, formerly of the Royal Air Force. Leo Litwin, pianist, will be soloist. It is dedicated to "the men who fought and died at El Alamein," and its performance will be its radio premiere in this country.

On Jan. 19, when Sir Adrian Boult, former musical director of the British Broadcasting Corporation, conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra, he gave the first radio performance in this country of "Threnody of a Soldier Killed in Action." This was arranged by Anthony Collins, English composer, from fragments of a score found on the body of Michael Heming who was killed at El Alamein.

This Clipping From
NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.
STANDARD STAR

JUN 18 1946

New York TO-NIGHT

ONE of America's great symphony orchestras has been assembled in Hollywood by Dimitri Tiomkin to record the score of David O. Selznick's "Duel in the Sun," it was disclosed today as the names of the leading musicians in the ninety-piece orchestra will begin a fifteen day recording of the score were announced by United Artists. The musicians have been brought from all sections of the United States including New York, Washington, Pittsburgh, Boston, Indianapolis and San Francisco. They include Mark Levant, concert master Metropolitan Opera House, New York; David Frisina, concert master of the Los Angeles Philharmonic; John Pennington, leader of the London String Quartette; Milton Thomas, Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra; Merrill Remington, San Francisco Symphony Orchestra; James Stagliano, Boston Symphony Orchestra; Jack Kirk Smith, National Symphony Orchestra, Washington; Morris Boltuch, New York Philharmonic; Cecil Bonvalet, London String Quartette; Boris Blinder, San Francisco Symphony Orchestra; Leonard Possella, Los Angeles Philharmonic; Leon Ziporkin, Hollywood Bowl Symphony; Emanuel Bey, concert pianist accompanist to Jascha Heifetz and Max Rabinovich, world famous concert pianist.

"Duel in the Sun," which will have its premiere in Texas in the Fall, stars Jennifer Jones, Joseph Cotten, Gregory Peck, Lionel Barrymore, Herbert Marshall, Lillian Gish, Walter Huston, Charles Bickford, Otto Kruger, Harry Carey, Scott McKay and introduces Joan Tetzel.

Miriam Lavelle, exciting acrobatic dancer featured in the stars-in-person show at the Capitol Theatre, went through no long and monotonous process of auditioning when she broke into show business.

Instead of the rigorous routine of arranging for a rehearsal hall, getting musicians, etc., Miriam would march the booker down to Times Square and point up to the huge neon sign where an acrobatic dancer was going through her gyrations. "There I am," Miriam would say. "How do you like me?" The neon sign has long since faded, and Miriam has crowded three motion pictures, several musical comedies and vaudeville tours into her short but thrilling career.

Meet scow win, first recipient has left on a world Union in July as is world tour, he is him specially con-ment with which he aterial to be used in te upon his return.

isit, Mr. Corwin will tings from other ar-field of theatre and an Soviet Music So-creative artists of this through Norman Corto their colleagues in been assembled d the score of isclosed today, as y-piece orchestra re announced by t from all sec-

kford, Otto Kru-
ey, Scott McKay
Joan Tetzel.

e, exciting acroured in the stars-at the Capitol through no long process of audibroke into show rigorous routine

a rehearsal hall, s, etc., Miriam booker down to nd point up to sign, where an r was going ations. "There I ould say. "How
" The neon sign
ded, and Miriam ree motion pic-usical comedies tours into her career.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUN 20 1946

Tanglewood Books Shostakovich Opus

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the Ninth Symphony by Dmitri Shostakovich its first performance in the Western Hemisphere at the opening of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood July 25.

Announcing today the arrival of the score of the Symphony in E flat minor, Opus 70, which the 36-year-old composer desired to be performed for the first time in America by Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Orchestra, the conductor described the symphony as "absolutely different from the others—short and very light and gay in mood."

Written last August at Shostakovich's country house near Ivanovo, Russia, it was first played in Moscow, where critics called it a "scherzo symphony." It is in five movements, the last three to be played without interval. It is said to be in sharp contrast to the recent scores of the composer, especially the tragic Eighth Symphony. It plays for 25 minutes.

In 1942 Dr. Koussevitzky conducted the pupil orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in the first American concert performance of Shostakovichs' Seventh Symphony, written during the Siege of Leningrad.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUN 20 1946

SHOSTAKOVICH 9TH SYMPHONY AT TANGLEWOOD

Koussevitzky Leads Hub Orchestra in Western Hemisphere Premiere

Lenox, June 20—Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra will give the Ninth symphony by Dmitri Shostakovich its first performance in the western hemisphere at the opening of the Berkshire festival at Tanglewood July 25.

Announcing the arrival of the score of the symphony in E Flat Minor, Opus 70, which the 36-year-old composer desired to be performed for the first time in America by Dr Koussevitzky and the Boston orchestra, the conductor described the symphony as "absolutely different from the others—short and very light and gay in mood."

Written last August at Shostakovich's country house near Ivanovo, Russia, it was first played in Moscow, where critics called it a "scherzo symphony." It is in five movements, the last three to be played without interval. It is said to be in sharp contrast to the recent scores of the composer, especially the tragic Eighth symphony. It plays for 25 minutes.

In 1942 Dr Koussevitzky conducted the pupil orchestra of the Berkshire Music center in the first American concert performance of Shostakovich's Seventh symphony, written during the siege of Leningrad.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JUN 20 1946

Tanglewood to Hear Shostakovitch 9th

LENOX, June 20 (AP)—The "first Western Hemisphere performance" of the ninth symphony of the Russian composer, Dmitri Shostakovitch, will be given at the opening of the Berkshire Music Festival Thursday, July 25. Conductor Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will conduct the new work, said "it is notable for its brevity and cheerfulness."

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JUN 20 1946

NEW SYMPHONY TO BE PLAYED

Opening Event at Berkshire Festival

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the Ninth Symphony by Dmitri Shostakovich its first performance in the western hemisphere at the opening of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood July 25.

Announcing today the arrival of the score of the Symphony in E Flat Minor, Opus 70, which the 36-year old composer desired to be performed for the first time in America by Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Orchestra, the conductor described the symphony as "absolutely different from the others—short and very light and gay in mood".

Written last August at Shostakovich's country house near Ivanovo, Russia, it was first played in Moscow, where critics called it a "scherzo symphony, It is in five movements, the last three to be played without interval. It is said to be in sharp contrast to the recent scores of the composer, especially the tragic Eighth Symphony. It plays for 25 minutes.

In 1942 Dr. Koussevitzky conducted the pupil orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in the first American concert performance of Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony, written during the Siege of Leningrad.

This Clipping From
PIQUA, O.
CALL

JUN 20 1946

MUSIC FESTIVAL TO OPEN JULY 25 IN BERKSHIRES

Lenox, Mass. (U.P.) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala prewar style at Tanglewood, in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate—are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However, conductor Serge Koussevitzky has included the works of modern composers, among whom are Rachmaninoff, Copland, Shostakovitch and Martinu.

Pre-Festival Series

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Longtime favorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales," was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and heraunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

School to Reopen

Nearly a month before the opening of the festival the Berkshire music center opens for six weeks beginning July 1. Unique in purpose, the school gives young musicians a chance to polish their performances before entering the professional fields.

The faculty of the school is composed of the nation's big names in music, including composer Leonard Bernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Aaron Copland and opera expert Boris Goldovsky.

The school was closed during the war, but now has accepted more than 300 students in various departments such as composition, instrumentation, conducting, and opera. The opera department plans a performance of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," a piece that was composed for Tanglewood and produced in England last summer.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUN 21 1946

New Symphony To Be Played

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the Ninth Symphony by Dmitri Shostakovich its first performance in the western hemisphere at the opening of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood July 25.

Announcing the arrival of the score of the Symphony in E Flat Minor, Opus 70, which the 36-year old composer desired to be performed for the first time in America by Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Orchestra, the conductor described the symphony as "absolutely different from the others—short and very light and gay in mood".

Written last August at Shostakovich's country house near Ivanovo, Russia, it was first played in Moscow, where critics called it a "scherzo symphony." It is in five movements, the last three to be played without interval. It is said to be in sharp contrast to the recent scores of the composer, especially the tragic Eighth Symphony. It plays for 25 minutes.

In 1942 Dr. Koussevitzky conducted the pupil orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in the first American concert performance of Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony, written during the Siege of Leningrad.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JUN 20 1946

Leslie to Lead Boston Symphony

Alexander Leslie, conductor of Springfield Symphony, has been invited to conduct the first section of the Boston "Pops" program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall, Boston Thursday, June 27.

Leslie is one of very few conductors to be invited to participate in these famous concerts established by Arthur Fiedler. It is a distinct honor and significant of the impression which Springfield Symphony has made on the musical life of the Commonwealth.

ALEXANDER LESLIE

Leslie will open the program with a march, "Semper Fidelis." It is traditional to open a "Pops" with a march. He expects to play the second movement from the Brahms second symphony and will include the Cailliet variations on "Pop Goes the Weasel," concluding the first section of the program with the march from "Coq D'Or.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

JUN 21 1946

Recorded Music

News and Reviews

By CLIF BRADT

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is about to come into Albany's front yard for the Tanglewood season and recordings by this organiaztion naturally gain interest, particularly when it enters this field:

BACH'S BRANDENBURG CONCERTOS, Nos. 3 and 4 in G; Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra; 12-inch, 8 sides. (Victor).

Adolf Busch and his Chamber Players and the Ecole Normale of Paris have had pretty much a monopoly on the Brandenburg recordings. The argument against heavy orchestration of Bach works notwithstanding, the quality of these new records in the Koussevitzky reading and general musicianship is high, for the compositions lend themselves to modern orchestral treatment.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN 20 1946

TO INTRODUCE SYMPHONY

Tanglewood Fete Will Feature Shostakovich's Ninth

The Western Hemisphere première of Shostakovich's Ninth symphony will be given at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., on Thursday, July 25, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, according to an announcement by the Leeds Music Corporation.

The score of the symphony, which was completed last December, was received this week by the Leeds company, which is the distributor and publisher of Soviet music in the Americas. Dr. Koussevitzky immediately changed his opening program of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival to include the Shostakovich Ninth.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUN 20 1946

To Play Shostakovitch's Ninth

Dmitri Shostakovitch's Ninth Symphony will have its first American performance on Thursday night, July 25, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, in the opening program of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., according to an announcement yesterday by the Leeds Music Corporation. This firm has just received the microfilm score of the work, which was completed last December and has been praised by Russian critics

---

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

JUN 20 1946

Shostakovich's 9th To Be Heard At Lenox

LENOX (U.P.) — The first performance in the Western hemisphere of Dmitri Shostakovich's new ninth symphony will be given July 25 by the Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky at the opening of the Berkshire Festival, it was announced today.

Koussevitzky said the score of the symphony had arrived from Moscow where it first was played. He said the work, written in E flat minor, is unlike Shostakovich's previous two symphonies in that it is "short and very light and gay in mood."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
PM

JUN 21 1946

New Shostakovich Work To Open Berkshire Festival

LENOX, Mass., June 21.—The first performance in the Western Hemisphere of Dmitri Shostakovich's new Ninth Symphony will be given July 25 by the Boston Symphony conducted by Serge Koussevitzky at the opening of the Berkshire Festival, it was announced yesterday.

This Clipping From
NEWBURGH, N. Y.
NEWS

JUN 20 1946

Music Festival Opens July 25 In Berkshires

LENOX, MASS. — (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala prewar style at Tanglewood, in the hills of western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three weekends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200 - acre estate — are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However, conductor Serge Koussevitzky has included the works of modern composers, among whom are Rachmaninoff, Copland, Shostakovitch and Martinu.

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Longtime favorites, including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales," was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

Nearly a month before the opening of the festival the Berkshire music center opens for six weeks beginning July 1. Unique in purpose, the school gives young musicians a chance to polish their performance before entering the professional fields.

The faculty of the school is composed of the nation's big names in music, including composer Leonard Bernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Aaron Copland and opera expert Boris Goldovsky.

The school was closed during the war, but now has accepted more than 300 students in various departments such as composition, instrumentation, conducting, and opera. The opera department plans a performance of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," a piece that was composed for Tanglewood and produced in England last summer.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUN 21 1946

LESLIE TO LEAD BOSTON SYMPHONY

Alexander Leslie, conductor of Springfield Symphony, has been invited to conduct the first section of the Boston "Pops" program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall, Boston Thursday, June 27.

Leslie is one of very few conductors to be invited to participate in these famous concerts established by Arthur Fiedler. It is a distinct honor and significant of the impression which Springfield Symphony has made on the musical life of the Commonwealth.

Leslie will open the program with a march, "Semper Fidelis." It is traditional to open a "Pops" with a march. He expects to play the second movement from the Brahms second symphon, and will include the Cailliet variations on "Pop Goes the Weasel," concluding the first section of the program with the march from "Coq D'Or.

MILLERTON, N.Y
NEWS
6/20/46

Serge Koussevitzky Announces Schedule For Tanglewood

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUN 23 1946

WESTERN PREMIERE OF NEW SYMPHONY

Shostakovich's 'Ninth' to Be Played at Berkshire Festival July 25

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Sym[illegible] will give the "Ninth Symphony" by Dmitri Shostakovich its first performance in the western hemisphere at the opening of the Berkshire festival at Tanglewood July 25.

Announcing the arrival of the score of the "Symphony in E Flat Minor, Opus 70," which the 36-year-old composer desired to be performed for the first time in America by Dr Koussevitzky and the Boston orchestra, the conductor described the symphony as "absolutely different from the others —short and very light and gay in mood."

Written last August at Shostakovich's country house near Ivanovo, Russia, it was first played at Moscow, where critics called it a "scherzo symphony." It is in five movements, the last three to be played without interval. It is said to be in sharp contrast to the recent scores of the composer, especially the tragic "Ninth Symphony." It plays for 25 minutes.

In 1942, Dr Koussevitzky conducted the pupil orchestra of the Berkshire Music center in the first American concert performance of Shostakovich's "Seventh Symphony," written during the siege of Leningrad.

Music Shed Activities For Season Listed

Sixteen Performances Open To The Public By Paid Admission

42 PERFORMANCES

School Draws 300 Students From United States And Abroad

A schedule of activities at the Berkshire Music Center far exceeding that of any pre-war season is announced by Serge Koussevitzky, the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's School at Tanglewood in the Berkshire Hills.

Audiences will be admitted to 42 performances within the six weeks' term of the Center (July 1- August 10), an average of one a day. Of these, 16 will be open to the public by paid admission — the 9 concerts of the Berkshire Festival and the 4 Bach-Mozart concerts, all by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction. Three Saturday morning Festival rehearsals will be open to the public at a minimum charge for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund.

Twenty-two performances by the Berkshire Music Center, concert and operatic, will be open to those who are interested in the school. The Center, supported in part by tuition fees and Festival fees and Festival receipts, depends also upon its well wishers. A Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center has therefore been formed. Membership is effected by a voluntary contribution to the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts. The 22 performances, and the four Coolidge chamber concerts will be open by invitation to those enrolled as Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Four Chamber Music concerts on the first four Tuesday evenings in July will be performed by Boston Symphony and guest artists under the auspices of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. The Center will give three performances (August 6, 7, 9) of "Peter Grimes," Benjamin Britten's opera composed on commission for Tanglewood, performed with outstanding success in England and other European countries, and here to have its first American presentation. "Peter Grimes" will be produced by the Opera Department, under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf, Richard Rychtarik designing the settings and Leonard Bernstein conducting each performance. The chorus will be prepared by Hugh Ross. There will be two evenings of opera scenes by the opera workshop, under the direction of Boris Goldovsky.

The Berkshire Music Center orchestras, under the direction of Stanley Chapple, Leonard Bernstein, and Richard Burgin, will give six concerts. The Chorus, under the direction of Robert Shaw, will give six concerts. Chamber groups, under the supervision of Gregor Piatigorsky, will give five concerts. The students of the school will number 300, selectively drawn from the United States and abroad, and representing our foremost schools of music.

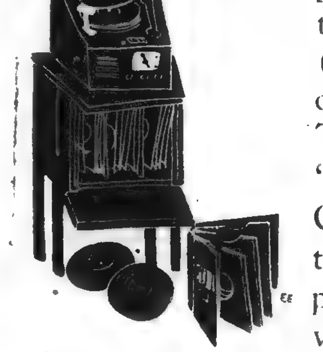
The Berkshire Music Center, the realization of a plan long cherished by Dr. Koussevitzky, aims to develop the more talented of our younger generation of musicians by the experience of actual performance. Tanglewood, the 200-acre summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is now being prepared for the summer session. A new ticket office and reception center has been built at the entrance. The Theatre-Concert Hall and the Music Shed are being renovated. In the parking field, drainage, hard surfacing and roadways are being installed. The students of the Berkshire Music Center will be housed at the Lenox School and the Morgan-Bonsal estate, re-named Tracy Hall, in Lenox, and the Barrington School in Great Barrington.

This Clipping From
NEW YORKER
NEW YORK CITY

JUN 22 1946

MUSICAL EVENTS

Concert Records



AMONG the Victor releases for June, the best of the lot is the album (M- or DM-1050) containing Bach's Third and Fourth "Brandenburg" Concertos, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting. The same album also presents Bach's Prelude in E, from one of his violin sonatas, in an arrangement by Pick-Mangiagalli. As you may know, the Third Concerto consists only of two allegro movements, and frequently a slow middle section is interpolated for the sake of contrast. In this case, Mr. Koussevitzky has chosen the Sinfonia from the Church Cantata No. 4, "Christ Lag in Todesbanden." The Third Concerto is scored for strings and cembalo, and in the Fourth (sometimes considered a violin concerto) a concertino trio of violin and two flutes acts as a solo group against the orchestral strings and cembalo. The concertos, as directed by Mr. Koussevitzky, are consistently Bach in spirit, but their basic rhythm is occasionally heavy. Of the two, I prefer his treatment of the Fourth Concerto which has a certain freedom in spite of this heaviness. The Prelude in E seems to have been somewhat glamorized in both arrangement and performance.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JUN 23 1946

Music Lovers Can Almost Tell When Favorites Will Be Played

MUSIC lovers listening to a series of symphony concerts could by studying past programs probably predict just how many times a favorite composer will be repeated or how often new compositions will be introduced during a season. A symphony conductor in selecting programe follows a more or less set pattern, although he may not be aware of it.

The leader of a dance band or band concert also gets a pleasing balance between new and familiar pieces by somewhat the same formula, states Dr. George Kingsley Zipf of Harvard University.

Being "subconsciously" influenced by applause—its length, amount and intensity—and by remarks of music critics, a symphony conductor tends to have a "run" on one composer and then another, as vogues come and go.

If selections are to be repeated at all, they are likely to reappear on the program soon after an ovation rather than following an interval of several years, Dr. Zipf states in the Journal of Abnormal and Social Psychology.

To discover what a popular contemporary conductor considers the right balance in a program, he studied the frequency with which a number of different pieces were played and how often the same composers appeared on the program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky over a 10-year period.

Of the 541 different selections, 362 pieces were played but once, and 8 twice, while three were played as often as eight times and one appeared on the program almost every season.

While some composers were scheduled but once and others repeated a single time, almost half of the composers whose pieces were played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra during these 240 concerts averaged at least twice each season. Beethoven was played 59 times and Brahms 49 times during the 10 years.

(Copyright, 1946, Science Service)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY WORKER

JUN 22 1946

WESTERN HEMISPHERE PREMIERE OF SHOSTAKOVICH'S NINTH JULY 25

Shostakovich's much - heralded Ninth Symphony will have its Western Hemisphere premiere on July 25 at Tanglewood under the baton of Serge Koussevitsky, according to an announcement by Leeds Music Corporation. Although completed by Shastakovich in December of last year, the score was received on microfilm only this week by Leeds Music, sole distributors and publishers of Soviet-Russian muic in the Western Hemisphere.

On receiving word of the score's arrival, Dr. Koussevitsky, whose Tanglewood programs had already been released, immediately changed his opening performance to include the Shostakovich Ninth.

When news was first received in this country of the Symphony, it was understood that Shostakovich was planning the Ninth as the concluding "Victory" part of the symphonic triology that began with the Seventh. However, when the work was auditioned by Shastakovich last December, the Ninth was characterized by critics as the bridge linking the tragic Eighth and a forthcoming Victory Symphony.

In comparison with the Seventh and the Eighth, the Shostakovich Ninth is a comparatiyely short work. It will take 25 minutes in playing time. Soviet critics have spoken of the Symphony as the gayest, the simplest, and the most melodious work Shostakovich has written. Seevral critics have suggested that the Symphony consciously evokes classical associations, particularly of the music of Haydn.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN 22 1946

Goldman to Offer New Work

Arnold Schoenberg's "Theme and Variations for Wind Band," Op. 43a, will be performed by the Goldman Band, for which it was written, on Thursday in Prospect Park, Brooklyn, and July 28 in Central Park, under the direction of Edwin Franko Goldman. Although the work has been presented in its later orchestral version by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Philharmonic - Symphony Orchestra, it has never been played before in its original version for band.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

IT HAPPENS IN MUSIC

THE microfilm with the score of Shostakovich's Ninth Symphony has arrived at the office of the Leeds Music Company in New York, which means that the first performance in this country of the work will not be far off. Serge Koussevitzky has hastily made changes in his opening Berkshire Symphonic Festival program on July 25 to schedule its American premiere.

The symphony has been done in the Soviet Union, of course, and it was performed last fall in Prague.

In Boston an interesting experiment is in the cards for next season. A new organization called the New England Opera Theatre has been formed under the leadership of Boris Goldovsky, who has handled the opera school at the New England Conservatory and has worked in the medium at the Berkshire Music Centre. The group will start with modest presentations at Jordan Hall.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

JUN 23 1946

MUSIC'S OVERTONES

Summer Music Booms in the Berkshires While Cincinnati Notes Anniversary

By MILES KASTENDIECK

More and more Summer music is to be heard this year. Of local interest, of course, are the Stadium Concerts and those of the Goldman Band. Outside the city there are various undertakings of which two should attract many music lovers who are ready to go afield. The 1946 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood marks the peacetime resumption of a musical event which had already established itself before the war. With the activity of the Berkshire Music Center in full swing, Massachusetts will have a mecca for music lovers from all over the land. Out in Cincinnati, the "Zoo" Opera is observing its 25th anniversary. As "the only Summer season of grand opera in the United States," it will undoubtedly have a banner year.

The Berkshire Festival will stage its regular three orchestral weekends with the Boston Symphony and Serge Koussevitzky. Word has just come that on the opening night of the Festival, July 25, Shostakovich's Ninth Symphony will be given its Western Hemisphere premiere. Although completed last December, the score has only this week been received in this country. Whether it will replace the Russian composer's Fifth, originally scheduled, has not yet been determined. The programs otherwise have a traditional aspect, with a Brahms weekend beginning August 1 and Beethoven's Ninth scheduled the weekend of August 8. The Berkshire Center activities include two Bach-Mozart programs in July and the first American presentation of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," the first week in August. This is the most ambitious program yet arranged in the Berkshires.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

JUN 22 1946

MUSIC NOTES

The Ninth Symphony of Shostakovich will have its American premiere at Tanglewood in the Berkshires on July 25 at one of the festival concerts of the Boston Symphony under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. The score arrived earlier this week on microfilm, and upon receiving word of this Koussevitzky revised his program to include it. The Ninth Symphony lasts only twenty-five minutes, in contrast to its two lengthy predecessors.

NEW YORK
HERALD TR

JUN 23 19

RECENT

By JEROM

VICTOR'S latest recording on is that of Brahms's First S wood Bowl Symphony Orche As heard here the sound of th has never heard in actuality, is orchestras. How much of this tributed to superlative engineerin well known ability to obtain a sen in established or hastily assembled out hearing this aggregation of mu

The interpretation is an eloquent one, freer than most of Mr. Stokowski's conceptions of recent years from arbitrary procedure in matters of pacing. However, it is disturbing to find that he follows the custom of most present-day conductors in slowing down the tempo of the chorale in the closing pages of the final movement despite Brahms's indications to the contrary. In addition to the luxuriousness of this recording as mere sound, the surfaces as in first of the vinyl recordings are almost noiseless.

Other Victor Sets

Bach's Third and Fourth Brandenburg Concertos and an arrangement of the violin solo Prelude in E by Pick-Mangiagalli are set forth by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction. The conductor, evidently not believing that Bach knew his own mind when he failed to pen a slow movement between the two fast movements which constitute the Third Brandenburg Concerto, has inserted the Sinfonia from Bach's Cantata, "Christ lag in Todesbanden" to supply what he felt was a necessary contrast in tempo and mood. Unhappily this brief slow movement is less well recorded than the Concerto itself.

The performance is straightforward and energetic, although the dynamic gamut employed, even as considered within the circumscribed limits stylistically permissible, is restricted too much to the loudest levels.

Victor Single Twelve-Inch Disks

The N. B. C. Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Arturo Toscanini, performs Weber's "Freischuetz" Overture. This is a characteristically flawless interpretation, irresistible in its dramatic impact. The recording itself is less impressive, the sound of the horns at the beginning of the overture being opaque and the general tonal texture achieved not being comparable with that obtained in the Hollywood Bowl Orchestra's recording of the Brahms C minor Symphony.

Marian Anderson sings two Schumann lieder: "Der Nussbaum" and "Stille Thraenen." In the first and vocally far less exacting o

---

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

JUN 23 1946

On the

By Clau

One of the most attractive of newer record albums, a pictorial well as musical companion to L dowska's Goldberg Variations, is Victor set holding Bach's Brand burg Concertos, Nos. 3 and 4, b in G major, played by the Bos orchestra under the direction Serge Koussevitzky [M-1050; four inch records]. When it comes sturdy authenticity in Brandenbu vein it is hard to beat the ear recordings made by Adolf Bu and his chamber orchestra, but sheer beauty of tone and glow warmth of color the Boston formance is superb. As a slow m ment for the concerto for str Mr. Koussevitzky has inserted sinfonia, "Christ lag in Todes den," a compassionate and effec choice, and the pattern of solo lin and two flutes posed ag the strings of the fourth conc is made sensitively articulate by playing of Richard Burgin, Geo Laurent, and George Madsen. arating the two concertos is a ceptionally beautiful perform the Prelude in E from the Sonata for solo violin, arran Pick-Mangiagalli. The rec done at Tanglewood and ton's Symphony hall, is brilliant.

MILLERTON, N.Y
NEWS
6/20/46

Serge Koussevitzky Announces Schedule For Tanglewood

Music Shed Activities For Season Listed

Sixteen Performances Open To The Public By Paid Admission

42 PERFORMANCES

School Draws 300 Students From United States And Abroad

A schedule of activities at the Berkshire Music Center far exceeding that of any pre-war season is announced by Serge Koussevitzky, the director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's School at Tanglewood in the Berkshire Hills.

Audiences will be admitted to 42 performances within the six weeks' term of the Center (July 1- August 10), an average of one a day. Of these, 16 will be open to the public by paid admission — the 9 concerts of the Berkshire Festival and the 4 Bach-Mozart concerts, all by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction. Three Saturday morning Festival rehearsals will be open to the public at a minimum charge for the benefit of the Orchestra's Pension Fund.

Twenty-two performances by the Berkshire Music Center, concert and operatic, will be open to those who are interested in the school. The Center, supported in part by tuition fees and Festival fees and Festival receipts, depends also upon its well wishers. A Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center has therefore been formed. Membership is effected by a voluntary contribution to the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts. The 22 performances, and the four Coolidge chamber concerts will be open by invitation to those enrolled as Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Four Chamber Music concerts on the first four Tuesday evenings in July will be performed by Boston Symphony and guest artists under the auspices of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. The Center will give three performances (August 6, 7, 9) of "Peter Grimes," Benjamin Britten's opera composed on commission for Tanglewood, performed with outstanding success in England and other European countries, and here to have its first American presentation. "Peter Grimes" will be produced by the Opera Department, under the direction of Dr. Herbert Graf, Richard Rychtarik designing the settings and Leonard Bernstein conducting each performance. The chorus will be prepared by Hugh Ross. There will be two evenings of opera scenes by the opera workshop, under the direction of Boris Goldovsky.

The Berkshire Music Center orchestras, under the direction of Stanley Chapple, Leonard Bernstein and Richard Burgin, will give six concerts. The Chorus, under the direction of Robert Shaw, will give six concerts. Chamber groups, under the supervision of Gregor Piatigorsky, will give five concerts. The students of the school will number 300, selectively drawn from the United States and abroad, and representing our foremost schools of music.

The Berkshire Music Center, the realization of a plan long cherished by Dr. Koussevitzky, aims to develop the more talented of our younger generation of musicians by the experience of actual performance. Tanglewood, the 200-acre summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is now being prepared for the summer session. A new ticket office and reception center has been built at the entrance. The Theatre-Concert Hall and the Music Shed are being renovated. In the parking field, drainage, hard surfacing and roadways are being installed. The students of the Berkshire Music Center will be housed at the Lenox School and the Morgan-Bonsal estate, re-named Tracy Hall, in Lenox, and the Barrington School in Great Barrington.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUN 23 1946

WESTERN PREMIERE OF NEW SYMPHONY

Shostakovich's 'Ninth' to Be Played at Berkshire Festival July 25

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Sym[illegible] will give the "Ninth Symphony" by Dmitri Shostakovich its first performance in the western hemisphere at the opening of the Berkshire festival at Tanglewood July 25.

Announcing the arrival of the score of the "Symphony in E Flat Minor, Opus 70," which the 36-year-old composer desired to be performed for the first time in America by Dr Koussevitzky and the Boston orchestra, the conductor described the symphony as "absolutely different from the others —short and very light and gay in mood."

Written last August at Shostakovich's country house near Ivanovo, Russia, it was first played at Moscow, where critics called it a "scherzo symphony." It is in five movements, the last three to be played without interval. It is said to be in sharp contrast to the recent scores of the composer, especially the tragic "Ninth Symphony." It plays for 25 minutes.

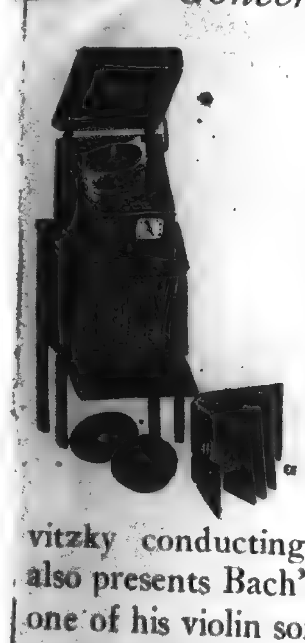
In 1942, Dr Koussevitzky conducted the pupil orchestra of the Berkshire Music center in the first American concert performance of Shostakovich's "Seventh Symphony," written during the siege of Leningrad.

This Clipping From
NEW YORKER
NEW YORK CITY

JUN 22 1946

MUSICAL EVENTS

Concert Records



AMONG the Victor releases for June, the best of the lot is the album (M- or DM-1050) containing Bach's Third and Fourth "Brandenburg" Concertos, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting. The same album also presents Bach's Prelude in E, from one of his violin sonatas, in an arrangement by Pick-Mangiagalli. As you may know, the Third Concerto consists only of two allegro movements, and frequently a slow middle section is interpolated for the sake of contrast. In this case, Mr. Koussevitzky has chosen the Sinfonia from the Church Cantata No. 4, "Christ Lag in Todesbanden." The Third Concerto is scored for strings and cembalo, and in the Fourth (sometimes considered a violin concerto) a concertino trio of violin and two flutes acts as a solo group against the orchestral strings and cembalo. The concertos, as directed by Mr. Koussevitzky, are consistently Bach in spirit, but their basic rhythm is occasionally heavy. Of the two, I prefer his treatment of the Fourth Concerto, which has a certain freedom in spite of this heaviness. The Prelude in E seems to have been somewhat glamorized in both arrangement and performance.

PROVIDENCE, R.I.
JOURNAL

JUN 23 1946

Music Lovers Can Almost Tell When Favorites Will Be Played

MUSIC lovers listening to a series of symphony concerts could by studying past programs probably predict just how many times a favorite composer will be repeated or how often new compositions will be introduced during a season. A symphony conductor in selecting programe follows a more or less set pattern, although he may not be aware of it.

The leader of a dance band or band concert also gets a pleasing balance between new and familiar pieces by somewhat the same formula, states Dr. George Kingsley Zipf of Harvard University.

Being "subconsciously" influenced by applause—its length, amount and intensity—and by remarks of music critics, a symphony conductor tends to have a "run" on one composer and then another, as vogues come and go.

If selections are to be repeated at all, they are likely to reappear on the program soon after an ovation rather than following an interval of several years, Dr. Zipf states in the Journal of Abnormal and Social Psychology.

To discover what a popular contemporary conductor considers the right balance in a program, he studied the frequency with which a number of different pieces were played and how often the same composers appeared on the program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky over a 10-year period.

Of the 541 different selections, 362 pieces were played but once, and 8 twice, while three were played as often as eight times and one appeared on the program almost every season.

While some composers were scheduled but once and others repeated a single time, almost half of the composers whose pieces were played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra during these 240 concerts averaged at least twice each season. Beethoven was played 59 times and Brahms 49 times during the 10 years.

(Copyright, 1946, Science Service)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY WORKER

JUN 22 1946

WESTERN HEMISPHERE PREMIERE OF SHOSTAKOVICH'S NINTH JULY 25

Shostakovich's much - heralded Ninth Symphony will have its Western Hemisphere premiere on July 25 at Tanglewood under the baton of Serge Koussevitsky according to [illegible] announcement by Leeds Music Corporation. Although completed by Shastakovich in December of last year, the score was received on microfilm only this week by Leeds Music, sole distributors and publishers of Soviet-Russian muic in the Western Hemisphere.

On receiving word of the score's arrival, Dr. Koussevitsky, whose Tanglewood programs had already been released, immediately changed his opening performance to include the Shostakovich Ninth.

When news was first received in this country of the Symphony, it was understood that Shostakovich was planning the Ninth as the concluding "Victory" part of the symphonic triology that began with the Seventh. However, when the work was auditioned by Shastakovich last December, the Ninth was characterized by critics as the bridge linking the tragic Eighth and a forthcoming Victory Symphony.

In comparison with the Seventh and the Eighth, the Shostakovich Ninth is a comparatively short work. It will take 25 minutes in playing time. Soviet critics have spoken of the Symphony as the gayest, the simplest, and the most melodious work Shostakovich has written. Seevral critics have suggested that the Symphony consciously evokes classical associations, particularly of the music of Haydn.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUN 23 1946

IT HAPPENS IN MUSIC

THE microfilm with the score of Shostakovich's Ninth Symphony has arrived at the office of the Leeds Music Company in New York, which means that the first performance in this country of the work will not be far off. Serge Koussevitzky has hastily made changes in his opening Berkshire Symphonic Festival program on July 25 to schedule its American première.

The symphony has been done in the Soviet Union, of course, and it was performed last fall in Prague.

In Boston an interesting experiment is in the cards for next season. A new organization called the New England Opera Theatre has been formed under the leadership of Boris Goldovsky, who has handled the opera school at the New England Conservatory and has worked in the medium at the Berkshire Music Centre. The group will start with modest presentations at Jordan Hall.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

JUN 22 1946

Goldman to Offer New Work

Arnold Schoenberg's "Theme and Variations for Wind Band," Op. 43a, will be performed by the Goldman Band, for which it was written, on Thursday in Prospect Park, Brooklyn, and July 28 in Central Park, under the direction of Edwin Franko Goldman. Although the work has been presented in its later orchestral version by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Philharmonic - Symphony Orchestra, it has never been played before in its original version for band.

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N.Y.
EAGLE

JUN 23 1946

MUSIC'S OVERTONES

Summer Music Booms in the Berkshires While Cincinnati Notes Anniversary

By MILES KASTENDIECK

More and more Summer music is to be heard this year. Of local interest, of course, are the Stadium Concerts and those of the Goldman Band. Outside the city there are various undertakings of which two should attract many music lovers who are ready to go afield. The 1946 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood marks the peacetime resumption of a musical event which had already established itself before the war. With the activity of the Berkshire Music Center in full swing, Massachusetts will have a mecca for music lovers from all over the land. Out in Cincinnati, the "Zoo" Opera is observing its 25th anniversary. As "the only Summer season of grand opera in the United States," it will undoubtedly have a banner year.

The Berkshire Festival will stage its regular three orchestral weekends with the Boston Symphony and Serge Kou[illegible]. Word has just come that on the opening night of the Festival, July 25, Shostakovich's Ninth Symphony will be given its Western Hemisphere premiere. Although completed last December, the score has only this week been received in this country. Whether it will replace the Russian composer's Fifth, originally scheduled, has not yet been determined. The programs otherwise have a traditional aspect, with a Brahms weekend beginning August 1 and Beethoven's Ninth scheduled the weekend of August 8. The Berkshire Center activities include two Bach-Mozart programs in July and the first American presentation of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," the first week in August. This is the most ambitious program yet arranged

---

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

JUN 22 1946

MUSIC NOTES

The Ninth Symphony of Shostakovich will have its American premiere at Tanglewood in the Berkshires on July 25 at one of the festival concerts of the Boston Symphony under the direction of Serge Kou[illegible]. The score arrived earlier this week on microfilm, and upon receiving word of this Koussevitzky revised his program to include it. The Ninth Symphony lasts only twenty-five minutes, in contrast to its two lengthy predecessors.

ch season, Beethoven
9 times and Brahms 49
the 10 years.
1946, Science Service)

IERE
JULY 25

itioned by Shastakovich last er, the Ninth was character-critics as the bridge linking gic Eighth and a forthcom-tory Symphony.
mparison with the Seventh Eighth, the Shostakovich
a comparatively short work.
take 25 minutes in playing oviet critics have spoken of nphony as the gayest, the
, and the most melodious
Shostakovich has written.
critics have suggested that nphony consciously evokes associations, particularly of c of Haydn.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN 23 1946

IT HAPPENS IN MUSIC

HE microfilm with the score of Shostakovich's Ninth Symphony has arrived at the office of the Leeds Music pany in New York, which ns that the first performance his country of the work will be far off. Serge Koussevitzky hastily made changes in his ing Berkshire Symphonic Fes-program on July 25 to sched-its American première.
e symphony has been done in Soviet Union, of course, and was performed last fall in gue.

Boston an interesting experit is in the cards for next sea
A new organization calle
New England Opera Theatr been formed under the leader of Boris Goldovsky, who ha dled the opera school at th
England Conservatory and ha ked in the medium at th kshire Music Centre. The grou start with modest presenta s at Jordan Hall.

RTONES

Berkshires versary

eard this year. Of local and those of the Goldundertakings of which are ready to go afield.
marks the peacetime ready established itself kshire Music Center in for music lovers from oo" Opera is observing season of grand opera ave a banner year.
egular three orchestral ge Koussevitzky. Word
the Festival, July 25, en its Western Hemi-cember, the score has
. Whether it will rescheduled, has not yet
a traditional aspect,
Beethoven's Ninth
re Center activitie
the first America Grimes," the fir
ram yet arrange

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JU[illegible]

RECENT RECORDS

By JEROME D. BOHM

VICTOR'S latest recording on the breakage-resistant plastic vinyl [illegible] that of Brahms's First Symphony, performed by the Hollywood Bowl Symphony Orchestra, directed by Leopold Stokowski. [illegible] here the sound of this organization—which this writer [illegible] heard in actuality, is not inferior to that of our finest [illegible]. How much of this tonal sumptuousness must be attributed to [illegible] engineering, how much to Mr. Stokowski's [illegible] to obtain a sensuous tone from his players, either [illegible] hastily assembled orchestras cannot be judged with[illegible] the aggregation of musicians perform in the concert hall.

[illegible] interpretation is an eloquent [illegible] than most of Mr. Stokowski's [illegible] of recent [illegible] from arbitrary procedure in [illegible] of pace. However, it is [illegible] to find that he follows the custom of most present-day [illegible] in slowing down the tempo of the chorale in the closing pages of the final movement despite Brahms's indications to the contrary. In addition to the luxuriousness of this recording as mere sound, the surfaces as in first [illegible] vinyl recordings are almost noiseless.

Other Victor Sets

Bach's Third and Fourth Brandenburg Concertos and an arrangement of the violin solo Prelude in E by Pick-Mangiagalli are set forth by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction. The conductor, evidently not believing that Bach knew his own mind when he failed to pen a slow movement between the two fast movements which constitute the Third Brandenburg Concerto, has inserted the Sinfonia from Bach's Cantata, "Christ lag in Todesbanden" to supply what he felt was a necessary contrast in tempo and mood. Unhappily this brief slow movement is less well recorded than the Concerto itself.

The performance is straightforward and energetic, although the dynamic gamut employed, even as considered within the circumscribed limits stylistically permissible, is restricted too much to the loudest levels.

Victor Single Twelve-Inch Disks

The N. B. C. Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Arturo Toscanini, performs Weber's "Freischuetz" Overture. This is a characteristically flawless interpretation, irresistible in its dramatic impact. The recording itself is less impressive, the sound of the horns at the beginning of the overture being opaque and the general tonal texture achieved not being comparable with that obtained in the Hollywood Bowl Orchestra's recording of the Brahms C minor Symphony.

Marian Anderson sings two Schumann lieder: "Der Nussbaum" and "Stille Thraenen." In the first and vocally far less exacting of these songs, the contralto's voice falls caressingly on the ear and she suggests the intimately poetic mood with the poised assurance of the mature artist. But while her innate musicality is no less in evidence in her conveyance of "Stille Thraenen," her tones here are unfortunately so unsteady that her interpretation is seriously marred. Franz Rupp provides sensitive accompaniments and the recording is good.

Violetta and Germont's Duet from the second act of Verdi's "Traviata" is sung by Licia Albanese and Robert Merrill. The Italian soprano's vocalism is often disaffecting because of her use of the glottis stroke for emotional purposes and this reviewer finds little satisfaction in listening to Mr. Merrill's monochromatic, commonplace barytone voice, and the self-satisfaction with which it is exploited. The Victor Orchestra, Frieder Weissmann conducting, supplies the adequate accompaniment. Smooth recording.

Columbia June Albums

Mozart's Fifth Violin Concerto in A major is set forth by Adolf Busch and the Busch Chamber Players. Mr. Busch's discourse of the solo part is in his customary academic vein and invested with a tone which is seldom anything but dry and wiry. The accompaniment is carefully adjusted and the recording as such is admirable.

Elie Siegmeister's "Ozark Set," which is well played by the Minneapolis Orchestra under Dimitri Mitropulos's leadership, is much like the rest of the music being written by the American composers who are turning to indigenous sources for their musical material. Mr. Siegmeister's tunes are good ones and his treatment of them, including their orchestration, is tasteful and effective. But there is nothing that is distinctive or original in this suite from any point of view. It has been admirably recorded.

Ibert's "Escales," an epigonous score securely treading the paths first pursued by Debussy and Ravel, is effectively traversed by the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Artur Rodzinski. Excellent recording.

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

JUN [illegible] 3

On the Record

By Claudia Cassidy

One of the most attractive of the newer record albums, a pictorial as well as musical companion to Landowska's Goldberg Variations, is the Victor set holding Bach's Brandenburg Concertos, Nos. 3 and 4, both in G major, played by the Boston orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky [M-1050; four 12 inch records]. When it comes to sturdy authenticity in Brandenburg vein it is hard to beat the earlier recordings made by Adolf Busch and his chamber orchestra, but for sheer beauty of tone and glowing warmth of color the Boston performance is superb. As a slow movement for the concerto for strings Mr. Koussevitzky has inserted the sinfonia, "Christ lag in Todesbanden," a compassionate and effective choice and the pattern of solo violin and two flutes posed against the strings of the fourth concerto is made sensitively articulate by the playing of Richard Burgin, Georges Laurent, and George Madseh. Separating the two concertos is an exceptionally beautiful performance of the Prelude in E from the Sixth Sonata for solo violin, arranged by Pick-Mangiagalli. The recording, done at Tanglewood and at Boston's Symphony hall, is clear and brilliant.

her in the lyricism of the one, the dramatic tension of the other.

• • •

Joseph Szigeti

When, for all its careful packing, a record set arrives cracked from stem to stern, it is difficult to do it reviewing justice. Yet I am convinced, even with due consideration of cracks, that all is not well with Brahms' Violin Concerto as recorded by Joseph Szigeti and the Philadelphia orchestra, under the direction of Eugene Ormandy [Columbia M-603; five 12 inch records]. Altho much of Mr. Szigeti's playing is admirable, notably in the cadenza of the first movement and when the violin picks up the song of the adagio from the stellar oboe, it has a basic thinness, sometimes almost a shrillness, incompatible both with Brahms and with the lush bloom of the Philadelphia tone. The full, cumulative impact of the concerto's drama simply doesn't come off. More completely authoritative is the violinist's playing [illegible]

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

JUN 23 1946

Records In Review

By NORMAN NAIRN

AARON COPLAND: APPALACHIAN SPRING. Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. This album is an absolute must for those minded toward contemporary music. The score was commissioned in 1944 by Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, for a ballet for Martha Graham. It was first heard in Rochester when Martha Graham appeared at the Eastman, and played by a particularly inept traveling orchestra, the music sounded pretty flat. But further acquaintance with it in revised form reveals a refreshing score, vigorous, imaginative, orchestrated brilliantly.

Dr. Koussevitzky gives a really inspired interpretation, lavishing upon the music the same care that has made performances by the Boston orchestra so gratifying to hear. The orchestra sounds sumptuous, and the recording is unusually clear. Added interest is provided by seven illustrated and annotated pages concerning the ballet, Martha Graham, the music and Copland, with photographs of the Graham production. Records lovers might be reminded that Dr. Howard Hanson, conducting the Eastman-Rochester Symphony Orchestra, recorded Copland's "Music for the Theater" some time ago. (Victor, three 12-inch records)

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
EXAMINER

JUN 23 1946

Concertos in Bach Album

Two G major "Brandenburg" Concertos of Bach—the No. 3 and 4—fill a choice new record album (Victor).

Koussevitzky conducts the Boston Symphony in characteristically rich, fine performances. Yet the full mass of strings is really too bulky for the Concerto No. 3. The ensemble should be more intimate.

The Concerto No. 4 is better balanced because it sets off the full strings against the charming contrast of a "concertino" of one violin and two flutes. An extra side presents the Boston strings brilliantly in a lively E major "Prelude" transcribed from Bach's unaccompanied Violin Sonata No. 6.

On solo Victor discs—

The veteran pianist, Harold Bauer, is heard agreeably in a Grieg "Berceuse" and "Album blatt."

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUN 23 1946

Music Center Described By M. A. DeWolfe Howe

Much of Interest to Music Lovers in Brief Volume — Tribute Paid to Those Who Made Famous Festival Possible

By VICTOR PRAHL

Music lovers who visit the Tanglewood festival, and have read Nathaniel Hawthorne's "Tanglewood Tales," are often curious and ask about the famous author's association with the estate. The answer to this, with much additional information of interest is told with brevity and charm in an attractive little volume "The Tale of Tanglewood" by M. A. DeWolfe Howe (Vanguard Press, $2).

Hawthorne with his wife and two children lived at Tanglewood from the early summer of 1850 to November of 1851, not in the rather unattractive house which now occupies the center of the estate but in a nearby "Red Cottage" which curiously enough was not in Lenox but just over the line in Stockbridge. During their residence a third child, Rose, was born, as well as two brain children, "The House of Seven Gables" and "A Wonder Book for Girls and Boys." Later came "Tanglewood Tales," and it was not until after the publication of these books, so closely associated with the locale, that the place was named Tanglewood. The Red Cottage burned to the ground some 40 years after Hawthorne left it, and since 1929 its site has been commemorated simply by a bronze tablet. Recently the National Federation of Music Clubs has graciously offered the Boston Symphony orchestra to reconstruct an exact reproduction of the Red Cottage.

There are sympathetic paragraphs about the warm friendship which existed between Herman Melville of Lenox and Hawthorne. "I shall leave the world, I feel," wrote Melville, "with more satisfaction for having come to know you. Knowing you persuades me more than the Bible of our immortality," and his "Moby-Dick bears the dedication, "In token of my admiration for his genius, this book is inscribed to Nathaniel Hawthorne."

Music entered the literary precinct when Ellen Tappan, the elder daughter of Caroline Tappan, the chatelaine of the estate, married Richard E. Dixey, a concert pianist, in 1875. It was none other than Mr Dixey who gave Boston its first taste of Wagner's "Lohengrin" in 1872 through a piano rendition of this work. And his presence at Tanglewood served as an excuse for adding a large music room to the house.

In a chapter, "Berkshire Festivals," Mrs Howe pays tribute to Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, whose concerts of chamber music at South mountain at Pittsfield antedated the musical activities of Tanglewood by some 20 years, and to Henry Hadley who, during a visit to Stockbridge, expressed the desire to conduct a symphony orchestra out of doors, "under a sky full of stars, in the shadow of the great hills," a dream which came true the following year, with the active and enthusiastic aid of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mrs Owen Johnson and Mrs William Fulton Barrett. This first Berkshire Symphonic festival took place in 1934 in the horse show ring of the Dan Hanna farm at Interlaken near Stockbridge. The book is of value in that it not only gives the three programs of this first festival in detail but those of the subsequent festivals, including as well those of the coming season.

Admirable indeed is one who his courage to carry out an unselfish impulse. Such admiration is due Mrs Andrew H. Hepburn (born Rosamund Dixey), who in a talk with a friend after a symphony in Boston said, "As I sat listening to the symphony concert this afternoon I began to think about the festival, and suddenly an idea came into my head, 'Why shouldn't I give Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony'." In the autumn of 1936 Mrs Hepburn with her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, carried out this inspiration, which has resulted in musical history well known to most music lovers. Here in the intervening years, the visionary Serge Koussevitsky has realized a youthful dream he once hoped to see come true in his own native Russia, that of establishing a great music and art center. Already achieved in a material way is the magnificent large shed for the major symphony concerts erected in 1939 by the Berkshire Symphonic festival at the cost of $80,000. Erected on land owned by the orchestra, it is good news to learn that last October the board of the festival voted the most generous gift of this structure to the orchestra. A smaller shed for operas and concerts as well as a hall for chamber music are also already in existence.

The far-reaching influence of the artistic side of the enterprise is, of course, immeasurable. After stating his ideals for such a music and art center, Dr Koussevitsky writes in his introduction, "A free cooperation of such an elite will certainly result in a creation of new and great values of art; in the radiation of the beams of culture over a nation and over the whole world, and finally in the education and training of a new generation of American artists."

Bound in a colorful format, containing 15 well-chosen illustrations, Mr Howe's volume fills a real need, and will serve as a welcome souvenir for Tanglewood visitors during the coming years.

This Clipping From
SCRANTON, PA.
SCRANTONIAN

JUN 23 1946

Music Festival Opens July 25 In Berkshires

LENOX, Mass. (U.P.)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its annual Berkshire music festival July 25 in gala prewar style at Tanglewood, in the hills of Western Massachusetts.

A series of nine concerts extending over three week-ends will be given in a bucolic setting. Thousands of music lovers from every corner of the nation are expected to attend. Some will have seats in the music shed. The others sprawl helter-skelter on the lawns of the rambling 200-acre estate—are out of luck if it rains.

The program begins and ends with Beethoven symphonies. However, Conductor Serge Koussevitzky has included the works of modern composers, among whom are Rachmaninoff, Copland, Shostakovitch and Martinu.

PRE-FESTIVAL SERIES

Before the opening of the festival, the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will give a series of four chamber music concerts comprised solely of the music of Bach and Mozart. Long time favorites including Bach's Brandenburg Concerto and Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, are on the program.

The festivals have been held annually since their inauguration in 1934. Each time they draw a bigger crowd. The Tanglewood estate, where once Nathanial Hawthorne lived and wrote "Tanglewood Tales," was presented to the symphony orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andres Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary A. Tappan. The shed was built in 1938. A crowd of 95,000 persons gathered for the series of concerts in 1941.

SCHOOL TO REOPEN

Nearly a month before the opening of the festival the Berkshire music center opens for six weeks begining July 1. Unique in purpose, the school gives young musicians a chance to polish their performance before entering the professional fields.

The faculty of the school is composed of the nation's big names in music, including composer Leonard Bernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Aaron Copland and opera expert Boris Goldovsky.

The school was closed during the war, but now has accepted more than 300 students in various departments such as composition, instrumentation, conducting, and opera. The opera department plans a performance of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," a piece that was composed for Tanglewood and produced in England last Summer.

This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

JUN 23 1946

Programs and soloists have been announced for this Summer's Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., during July and August. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will give nine concerts in the music shed at Tanglewood.

Soloists will include Eugene List and Claudio Arrau, pianists; Carol Brice, contralto; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Mischa Elman and Erica Morini, violinists. Composers represented will be Beethoven, Rachmaninoff, Moussorgsky, Wagner, Mendelssohn, Aaron Copland, Prokofieff, Schumann, Richard Strauss, Bohuslav Martinu, Tchaikovsky, Randall Thompson and Brahms. The programs of the second of the three weeks will be devoted entirely to the works of Brahms.

PUBLISHER'S WEEKLY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUN 22 1946

Howe, Mark Anthony DeWolfe Mus

The tale of Tanglewood, scene of the Berkshire Music Festivals; introd. by Serge Koussevitzky. 101p. il. O [c.'43,'46] N.Y., Vanguard bds., 2.00

Tanglewood's stature as a music center today and a literary center in the days of Hawthorne and Melville; a history of the place and its mus

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN

23 1946

Berkshire Music Festival History

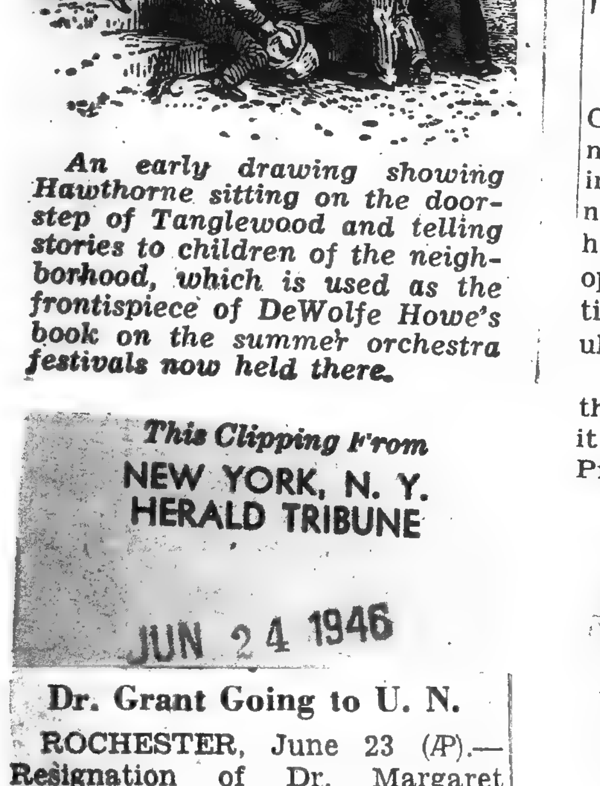
THE TALE OF TANGLEWOOD. By M. A. DeWolfe Howe Vanguard. 101 pp. $2.

Reviewed by
FELIX BOROWSKI

THIS work is concerned primarily with the Berkshire Music Festivals, ~~founded by Serge~~ Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mark A. DeWolfe Howe had published a history of the Boston organization more than 30 years ago, and his admiration for it, and for its leader, warranted him in extending his account to include the building up of the important music-makings now given each summer at Tanglewood.

The last 23 pages of the book list all the programs presented there, beginning with the first concerts given in 1934 by Henry Hadley and the Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra at Hanna Farm, Stockbridge, Mass., continuing through Koussevitzky's leadership in 1936 to the present time.

It should be added that the author also discussed the connection of Tanglewood with Nathaniel Hawthorne, and the book—provided with a preface by Koussevitzky—contains a number of illustrations.



An early drawing showing Hawthorne sitting on the doorstep of Tanglewood and telling stories to children of the neighborhood, which is used as the frontispiece of DeWolfe Howe's book on the summer orchestra festivals now held there.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUN 24 1946

Dr. Grant Going to U. N.

ROCHESTER, June 23 (AP).—Resignation of Dr. Margaret Grant, dean of students and assistant to the director of the Eastman School of Music, was announced today by the University of Rochester. Dr. Grant, formerly executive assistant to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at the Berkshire Music Center, has been named to the staff of the economic affairs department of the United Nations.

This Clipping From
~~GREENWICH, CONN.~~
TIME

JUN 24 1946

Berkshire Music Festival Will Be Open To Public

A schedule of activities at the Berkshire Music Center far ex~~ceeding that of any pre-war~~ season is announced by Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's school at Tanglewood in the Berkshire Hills.

Audiences will be admitted to 42 performances within the six-weeks term of the Center, July 1 to Aug. 10, an average of one a day. Of these, 16 will be open to the public by paid admission, the nine concerts of the Berkshire Festival and the four Bach-Mozart concerts, all by the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction.

PATERSON, N.J
EXAMINER
5/23/46

Records On Review

Copland: Appalachian Spring Suite. Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. Three 12-inch records in M or DM 1046, Victor.

"The music is simple and full of feeling", wrote Olin Downes, New York Times music critic, of a recent performance of Aaron Copland's "Appalachian Spring" by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. "It is admirably orchestrated," Downes continued, "with fine taste and a sure hand . . . it is a charming and sincere score by a composer whose craftsmanship develops and acquires fresh distinction as he advances. The performance was a wonder of delicacy, finish and imagination." To the two major Copland compositions already in RCA Victor's catalogue of "The Music America Loves Best"—"El Salon Mexico" played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky, and "Music For the Theatre", played by the Eastman-Rochester Symphony Orchestra under Howard Hanson—the Camden company now presents a third.

NEW YORK TIMES
SUNDAY, JUNE 23, 19

IT HAPPENS IN MUSIC

THE microfilm with the score of Shostakovich's Ninth Symphony has arrived at the office of the Leeds Music Company in New York, which means that the first performance in this country of the work will not be far off. Serge Koussevitzky has hastily made changes in his opening Berkshire Symphonic Festival program on July 25 to schedule its American première.

The symphony has been done in the Soviet Union, of course, and it was performed last fall in Prague.

This Clipping From
CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL

JUN 25 1946

Tanglewood To Offer Symphony's Premiere

The Ninth Symphony of Shostakovich will have its American premiere at Tanglewood in the Berkshires on July 25 at one of the festival concerts of the Boston Symphony under the direction of ~~Serge Koussevitzky~~. The score arrived last week on microfilm, and Koussevitzky revised his program to include it. The Ninth Symphony lasts only 25 minutes, in contrast to its two lengthy predecessors.

This Clipping From
ADVERTISING AGE
CHICAGO, ILL.

JUN 24 1946

40

Allis-Chalmers Likely to Drop Boston Symphony

Milwaukee, June 19.—Reports that the general machinery division of Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Company has dropped sponsorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra over ~~ABC~~ were denied this week by A. R. Tofte, advertising manager. He admitted, however, that due to labor conditions there is a "strong possibility" that the hour-long program will be dropped at the end of its season in early August. No decision will be announced until mid-July, Mr. Tofte declared.

If Allis-Chalmers' sponsorship of the Boston orchestra is ended, Mr. Tofte said, there is an equally strong possibility that the general machinery division will remain off the air for almost a year. The general machinery division account is handled by Compton Advertising, New York.

ABC officials in Chicago were reported to have two prospective sponsors on the line if Allis-Chalmers withdraws. The symphony will be retained on a sustaining basis, it was said, if a sponsor is not signed.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUN 24 1946

TANGLEWOOD'S PERFORMANCES ARE ANNOUNCED

Boston Orchestra and Smaller Groups Plan 17 Concerts Under Koussevitzky

Lenox, June 24—The programs are now announced for the 17 concerts to be given this summer at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky and by chamber ~~groups~~.

The Berkshire ~~Festival proper, con~~sisting of nine concerts to be given in the Music shed under Dr Koussevitzky's direction between July 25 and August 11 has already been announced and will include the new Ninth symphony of Shostakovitch, which Dr Koussevitzky has just received from Russia and which will have its first American performance at the Festival's opening.

Two Bach-Mozart programs, each repeated, will be given by members of the orchestra under Dr Koussevitzky in the Theater-Concert hall, July 13-14 and July 20-21. The first program will consist of Mozart's Symphony in B-flat, No. 33, the Adagio from the String Quintet in G minor, the Third and Fifth Brandenburg Concertos by Bach, and Mozart's Wind Serenade in B-flat, K. 261. The second program will consist of Bach's Second Brandenburg Concerto and Fourth Suite, Mozart's Violin Concerto in A major, with William Kroll as soloist, and the same composer's "Jupiter" Symphony.

Coolidge Boon

Four chamber music concerts will be given on four Tuesday evenings in the same auditorium under the auspices of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge foundation. At the first, on July 2, the Berkshire Wood Wind ensemble will present Quintets by Beethoven and Hindemith, Trios by Randall Thompson and Shapero, a Quartet Sonata by Rieti, and a Trio by Poulenc.

On July 9, the Boston society of Ancient Instruments, Alfred Zighera, director, will give a program for viols and harpsichord, with music by Telemann, Bach, Gibbons, D. Scarlatti, Rameau, Handel and Couperin. On July 16, the Kroll Quartet will present Beethoven's Quartet in F minor, Op. 95. Prokofieff's Second Quartet, Op. 92, and Haydn's Quartet in D major, Op. 64, No. 5.

"Grimes" Premiere

Only July 23, the Berkshire Chamber orchestra, under the direction of Louis Speyer, will present a Cantata, "The Birth of Beauty," by Lourie in its first American performance, and the first performance of Malipiero's "Seven Delights of Love." Both pieces are for voices with chamber orchestra. Valentina Vishnevska will appear as soloist. The program will also include Copland's Sextet and Ibert's "Divertissement."

Through the six weeks' session of the Berkshire Music center. Serge Koussevitzky, director (July 1-August 11), student groups will give many chamber, orchestra and choral concerts and the first American presentation of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes." All school performances, as well as the Tuesday chamber concerts, will be open by invitation to the friends of the Berkshire Music center.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN 25 1946

17 EXTRA CONCERTS SET FOR BERKSHIRE

Programs Exclusive of Those on Regular Festival, With Koussevitzky Conductor

Programs for seventeen concerts, exclusive of nine already scheduled for the Berkshire Festival, to be given in July and August at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky were announced yesterday.

Two Bach-Mozart programs, each to be repeated, will be given by Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra in the Theatre-Concert Hall on July 13 and 14 and July 20 and 21. The first program will include the Mozart Symphony in B flat, No. 33; the Adagio from the String Quintet in G minor; the Third and Fifth Brandenburg Concertos of Bach; and Mozart's Wind Serenade in B flat, Koechel 361. The second program will consist of Bach's Second Brandenburg Concerto and Fourth Suite; Mozart's Violin Concerto in A major, with William Kroll as assisting artist, and the "Jupiter" Symphony.

Chamber music concerts will be given on four Tuesday nights in the same auditorium under the auspices of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation. The first, on July 2, will present the Berkshire Wood Wind Ensemble, playing quintets by Beethoven and Hindemith, trios by Randall Thompson and Shapero, a quartet sonata by Rietl and a trio by Poulenc.

On July 9 the Boston Society of Ancient Instruments, Alfred Ziggera director, will present a program for viols and harpsichord, with music by Telemann, Bach, Gibbons, Scarlatti, Rameau, Handel and Couperin. On July 16 the Kroll Quartet will play Beethoven's Quartet in F minor, Opus 95; Prokofieff's Second Quartet, Opus 92, and Haydn's Quartet in D major, Opus 64, No. 5.

The Berkshire Chamber Orchestra, under Louis Speyer, will present on July 23 a cantata, "The Birth of Beauty," by Lourié, in its first American performance, and the first performance of Malipiero's "Seven Delights of Love." Both pieces are for voices with chamber orchestra. Valentina Vishnevska will appear as soloist. This program also will include Aaron Copland's Sextet and Ibert's "Divertissement."

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUN 25 1946

Of · Music

Picking and choosing concerts to hear is somewhat like making the fateful decisions as to which dress to buy (when your budget is definitely limited). And when the calendar of the Berkshire Music Center—which opens on June 30 or this Sunday afternoon—arrived this week it left the poor music columnist in a complete dither.

There is so much and of course there is a limit to the amount of time that even a music columnist is allowed to take. The four chamber music concerts on July 2, 9, 16 and 23 will be given respectively by the Berkshire Wood Wind Ensemble, the Boston Society of Ancient Instruments, the Krooll Quartet and the Berkshire Chamber orchestra. Tickets for these are by invitation only—and invitations are only to "those who join the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. A voluntary contribution constitutes membership."

Then there are the Bach-Mozart concerts on July 13 and 14 and July 30 and 31 in the Theater-Concert hall wtih a picked group of members of the Boston Symphony orchestra performing under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Also the nine festival concerts and three rehearsals to be given in the Music Shed from July 25 through Aug. 11 by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky.

The program for the first concert has been changed to allow for the first American performance of the Ninth symphony of Shostakovitch, which has just been received from Russia. That program will also include the first movement of the Shostakovitch Sixth symphony and the Beethoven "Eroica."

There will be two performances of "Peter Grimes" by invitation. The first program on Aug. 11 wil include Thompson's "The Testament of Freedom" for men's voices and orchestra and the Beethoven Symphony number 9.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUN 26 1946

NEW SYMPHONY AT TANGLEWOOD

Programs Announced for 17 Concerts This Summer

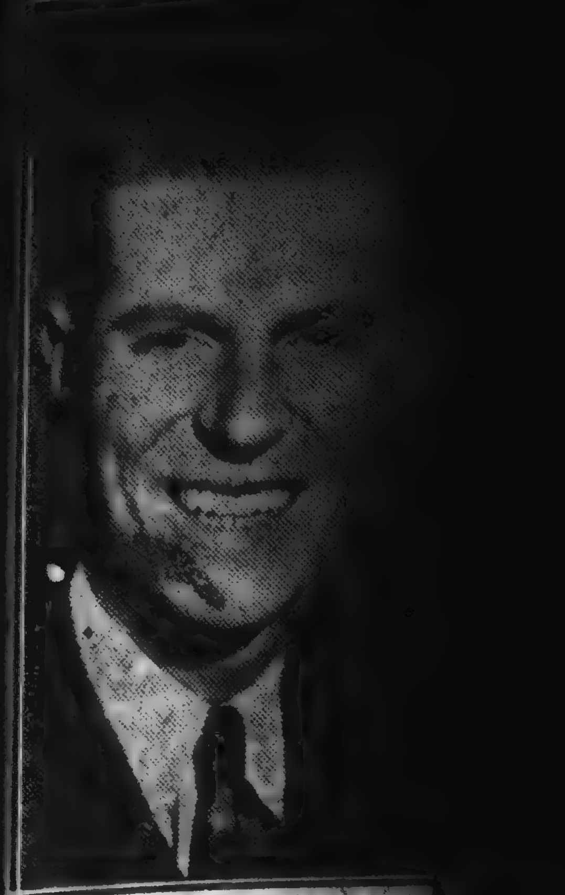
The programs are now announced for the 17 concerts to be given this summer at Tanglewood in Lenox by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky and by chamber groups. The Berkshire Festival proper, consisting of nine concerts to be given in the music shed under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction between July 25 and Aug. 11 has already been announced and will include the new Ninth Symphony of Shostakovitch, which Dr. Koussevitzky has just received from Russia and which will have its first American performance at the Festival's opening.

Two Bach-Mozart programs, each repeated, will be given by members of the orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky in the Theater-Concert Hall July 13-14 and July 20-21. The first program will consist of Mozart's Symphony in B-flat, No. 33, the Adagio from the String Quintet in G minor, the Third and Fifth Brandenburg Concertos by Bach, and Mozart's Wind Serenade in B-flat, K. 361. The second program will consist of Bach's Second Brandenburg Concerto and Fourth Suite, Mozart's Violin Concerto in A major, with William Kroll as soloist, and the same composer's "Jupiter" Symphony.

Four chamber music concerts will be given on four Tuesday evenings in the same auditorium under the auspices of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation. At the first on July 2, the Berkshire Wood Wind Ensemble will present Quintets by Beethoven and Hindemith, Trios by Randall Thompson and Shapero, a Quartet Sonata by Rieti, and a Trio by Poulenc. On July 9 the Boston Society of Ancient Instruments, Alfred Zighera, director, will give a program for viols and harpsichord with music by Telemann, Bach, Gibbons, D. Scarlatti, Rameau, Handel and Couperin.

On July 16 the Kroll Quartet will present Beethoven's Quartet in F minor, Op. 95, Prokofieff's Second Quartet, Op. 92, and Haydn's Quartet in D major, Op. 64, No. 5. On July 23 the Berkshire Chamber Orchestra under the direction of Louis Speyer, will present a cantata, "The Birth of Beauty," by Lourie in its first American performance, and the first performance of Malipiero's "Seven Delights of Love." Both pieces are for voices with chamber orchestra. Valentina Vishnevska will appear as soloist. The program will also include Copland's Sextet and Ibert's "Divertissement."

Through the six weeks' session of the Berkshire Music Center, Serge ~~Koussevitzky~~, director, student groups will give many chamber, orchestra and choral concerts and the first American presentation of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes." All school performances, as well as the Tuesday chamber concerts, will be open by invitation to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.



Eugene List

Eugene List To Be Hear At Tanglewoo

Young Pianist Play For Truman, Stalin And Churchill

When Truman, Churchill Stalin were assembled a year for their Potsdam conferenc young American pianist gave t a thrill. Truman turned the pa of the score. Tonight that a pianist, Eugene List, will be h as soloist with the Boston S phony Orchestra at the sec concert of the Berkshire Fest at Tanglewood. He will play Rachmaninoff piano concerto 2 in C minor.

There was a turnout of 300 the rehearsal this morning for benefit of the orchestra's pen fund.

Tonight's program will with Beethoven's Symphony N "Pastoral." Then will come List performance followed Ravel's "Daphne et Chloe," b orchestral excerpts, second

Played Premier at 16

List is a native of Philadel but grew up in California. A he won a competitive schola to study with Olga Samarof the Philadelphia Conserva Three years later he won a offered by the Philadelphia chestra and was invited by kowsky to play the Ame premier of the Shostakovitch concerto. He made his New debut in 1935. In March of he volunteered for the Army while in the service appeared a number of orchestras and t overseas to play for United S troops. In May he appeared a Prague Festival. He is marri Carol Glenn, young Ame violinist who is with him at glewood.

Members of the Societ Friends of the Berkshire Center may attend the ch music concert tomorrow mo at 10.30 given by students a rected by Gregor Piatigorsky. program will include Beeth Quartet in G major, opus 18 2; Nicolai Berezewsky's suit seven brass instruments, op Faure's piano concerto No. 2 minor, Opus 45.

With all seats in the She out, but with ground adm available, the audience toni expected to exceed the 800 attended the opening of the val Thursday.

The program tomorrow a PM under the direction o Serge Koussevitzky will be:

Symphony No. 4 in A major, Italia
Men
Suite from Appalachian Spring
Symphony No. 5 in E minor, Opus
Tch

DAVENPORT, DEMOCRA

JUN

TWO BACH-MOZA

. . . programs, each to be r will be given by Dr. Kous and the orchestra on July 14 and July 20 and 21. program will include m Mozart and the third a Bach Brandenburg conce second program will cons Second Brandenburg co Bach and his fourth suite as Mozart's Violin Conce Major, played by Willi and the "Jupiter"

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN

23 1946

Berkshire Music Festival History

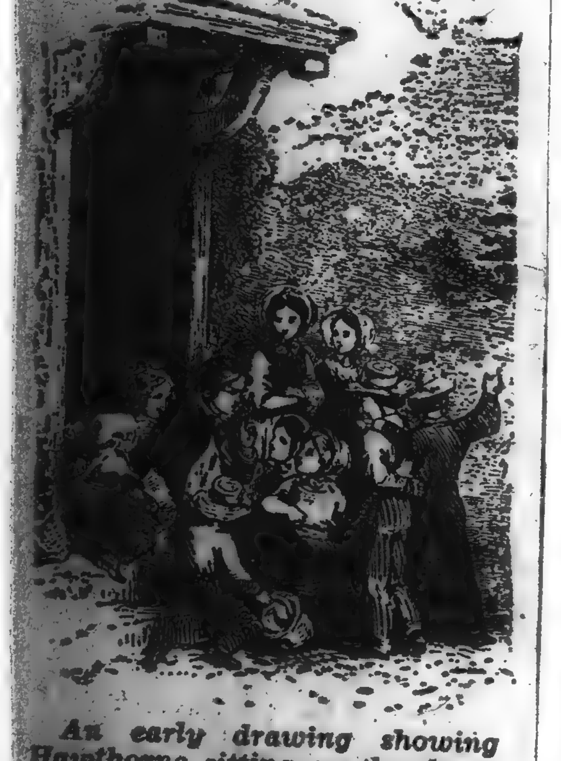
THE TALE OF TANGLEWOOD. By M. A. DeWolfe Howe Vanguard. 101 pp. $2.

Reviewed by
FELIX BOROWSKI

THIS work is concerned primarily with the Berkshire Music Festivals founded by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mark A. DeWolfe Howe had published a history of the Boston organization more than 30 years ago, and his admiration for it, and for its leader, warranted him in extending his account to include the building up of the important music-makings now given each summer at Tanglewood.

The last 23 pages of the book list all the programs presented there, beginning with the first concerts given in 1934 by Henry Hadley and the Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra at Hanna Farm, Stockbridge, Mass., continuing through Koussevitzky's leadership in 1936 to the present time.

It should be added that the author also discussed the connection of Tanglewood with Nathaniel Hawthorne, and the book—provided with a preface by Koussevitzky—contains a number of illustrations.



An early drawing showing Hawthorne sitting on the doorstep of Tanglewood and telling stories to children of the neighborhood, which is used as the frontispiece of DeWolfe Howe's book on the summer orchestra festivals now held there.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUN 24 1946

Dr. Grant Going to U. N.

ROCHESTER, June 23 (AP).—Resignation of Dr. Margaret Grant, dean of students and assistant to the director of the Eastman School of Music, was announced today by the University of Rochester. Dr. Grant, formerly executive assistant to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at the Berkshire Music Center, has been named to the staff of the economic affairs department of the United Nations.

This Clipping From
GREENWICH, CONN.
TIME

JUN 24 1946

Berkshire Music Festival Will Be Open To Public

A schedule of activities at the Berkshire Music Center far ex[illegible] of any prewar season is announced by Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's school at Tanglewood in the Berkshire Hills.

Audiences will be admitted to 42 performances within the six-weeks term of the Center, July 1 to Aug. 10, an average of one a day. Of these, 13 will be open to the public by paid admission, the nine concerts of the Berkshire Festival and the four Bach-Mozart concerts, all by the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction.

PATERSON, N.J
EXAMINER
5/23/46

Records On Review

Copland: Appalachian Spring Suite. Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. Three 12-inch records in M or DM 1046, Victor.

"The music is simple and full of feeling", wrote Olin Downes, New York Times music critic, of a recent performance of Aaron Copland's "Appalachian Spring" by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. "It is admirably orchestrated," Downes continued, "with fine taste and a sure hand . . . it is a charming and sincere score by a composer whose craftsmanship develops and acquires fresh distinction as he advances. The performance was a wonder of delicacy, finish and imagination." To the two major Copland compositions already in RCA Victor's catalogue of "The Music America Loves Best"—"El Salon Mexico" played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky, and "Music For the Theatre", played by the Eastman-Rochester Symphony Orchestra under Howard Hanson—the Camden company now presents a third.

NEW YORK TIMES
SUNDAY, JUNE 23, 19

IT HAPPENS IN MUSIC

THE microfilm with the score of Shostakovich's Ninth Symphony has arrived at the office of the Leeds Music Company in New York, which means that the first performance in this country of the work will not be far off. Serge Koussevitzky has hastily made changes in his opening Berkshire Symphonic Festival program on July 25 to schedule its American première.

The symphony has been done in the Soviet Union, of course, and it was performed last fall in Prague.

This Clipping From
CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL

JUN 25 1946

Tanglewood To Offer Symphony's Premiere

The Ninth Symphony of Shostakovich will have its American premiere at Tanglewood in the Berkshires on July 25 at one of the festival concerts of the Boston Symphony under the direction of ~~Serge Koussevitzky~~. The score arrived last week on microfilm, and Koussevitzky revised his program to include it. The Ninth Symphony lasts only 25 minutes, in contrast to its two lengthy predecessors.

This Clipping From
ADVERTISING AGE
CHICAGO, ILL.

JUN 24 1946

40

Allis-Chalmers Likely to Drop Boston Symphony

Milwaukee, June 19.—Reports that the general machinery division of Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Company has dropped sponsorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra over[illegible] were denied this week by A. R. Tofte, advertising manager. He admitted, however, that "due to labor conditions there is a "strong possibility" that the hour-long program will be dropped at the end of its season in early August. No decision will be announced until mid-July, Mr. Tofte declared.

If Allis-Chalmers' sponsorship of the Boston orchestra is ended, Mr. Tofte said, there is an equally strong possibility that the general machinery division will remain off the air for almost a year. The general machinery division account is handled by Compton Advertising, New York.

ABC officials in Chicago were reported to have two prospective sponsors on the line if Allis-Chalmers withdraws. The symphony will be retained on a sustaining basis, it was said, if a sponsor is not signed.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUN 24 1946

TANGLEWOOD'S PERFORMANCES ARE ANNOUNCED

Boston Orchestra and Smaller Groups Plan 17 Concerts Under Koussevitzky

Lenox, June 24—The programs are now announced for the 17 concerts to be given this summer at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky and by chamber groups.

The Berkshire Festival proper, consisting of nine concerts to be given in the Music shed under Dr Koussevitzky's direction between July 25 and August 11 has already been announced and will include the new Ninth symphony of Shostakovitch, which Dr Koussevitzky has just received from Russia and which will have its first American performance at the Festival's opening.

Two Bach-Mozart programs, each repeated, will be given by members of the orchestra under Dr Koussevitzky in the Theater-Concert hall, July 13-14 and July 20-21. The first program will consist of Mozart's Symphony in B-flat, No. 33, the Adagio from the String Quintet in G minor, the Third and Fifth Brandenburg Concertos by Bach, and Mozart's Wind Serenade in B-flat, K. 261. The second program will consist of Bach's Second Brandenburg Concerto and Fourth Suite, Mozart's Violin Concerto in A major, with William Kroll as soloist, and the same composer's "Jupiter" Symphony.

Coolidge Boon

Four chamber music concerts will be given on four Tuesday evenings in the same auditorium under the auspices of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge foundation. At the first, on July 2, the Berkshire Wood Wind ensemble will present Quintets by Beethoven and Hindemith, Trios by Randall Thompson and Shapero, a Quartet Sonata by Rieti, and a Trio by Poulenc.

On July 9, the Boston society of Ancient Instruments, Alfred Zighera, director, will give a program for viols and harpsichord, with music by Telemann, Bach, Gibbons, D. Scarlatti, Rameau, Handel and Couperin. On July 16, the Kroll Quartet will present Beethoven's Quartet in F minor, Op. 95, Prokofieff's Second Quartet, Op. 92, and Haydn's Quartet in D major, Op. 64, No. 5.

"Grimes" Premiere

Only July 23, the Berkshire Chamber orchestra, under the direction of Louis Speyer, will present a Cantata "The Birth of Beauty," by Lourie in its first American performance, and the first performance of Malipiero's "Seven Delights of Love." Both pieces are for voices with chamber orchestra. Valentina Vishnevska will appear as soloist. The program will also include Copland's Sextet and Ibert's "Divertissement."

Through the six weeks' session of the Berkshire Music center, Serge Koussevitzky, director (July 1-August 11), student groups will give many chamber, orchestra and choral concerts and the first American presentation of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes." All school performances, as well as the Tuesday chamber concerts, will be open by invitation to the friends of the Berkshire Music center.

JUN 25 1946

17 EXTRA CONCERTS SET FOR BERKSHIRE

Programs Exclusive of Those on Regular Festival, With Koussevitzky Conductor

Programs for seventeen concerts, exclusive of nine already scheduled for the Berkshire Festival, to be given in July and August at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky were announced yesterday.

Two Bach-Mozart programs, each to be repeated, will be given by Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra in the Theatre-Concert Hall on July 13 and 14 and July 20 and 21. The first program will include the Mozart Symphony in B flat, No. 33; the Adagio from the String Quintet in G minor; the Third and Fifth Brandenburg Concertos of Bach, and Mozart's Wind Serenade in B flat, Koechel 361. The second program will consist of Bach's Second Brandenburg Concerto and Fourth Suite; Mozart's Violin Concerto in A major, with William Kroll as assisting artist, and the "Jupiter" Symphony.

Chamber music concerts will be given on four Tuesday nights in the same auditorium under the auspices of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation. The first, on July 2, will present the Berkshire Wood Wind Ensemble, playing quintets by Beethoven and Hindemith, trios by Randall Thompson and Shapero, a quartet sonata by Rietl and a trio by Poulenc.

On July 9 the Boston Society of Ancient Instruments, Alfred Zighera director, will present a program for viols and harpsichord, with music by Telemann, Bach, Gibbons, Scarlatti, Rameau, Handel and Couperin. On July 16 the Kroll Quartet will play Beethoven's Quartet in F minor, Opus 95; Prokofieff's Second Quartet, Opus 92, and Haydn's Quartet in D major, Opus 64, No. 5.

The Berkshire Chamber Orchestra, under Louis Speyer, will present on July 23 a cantata, "The Birth of Beauty," by Lourié, in its first American performance, and the first performance of Malipiero's "Seven Delights of Love." Both pieces are for voices with chamber orchestra. Valentina Vishnevska will appear as soloist. This program also will include Aaron Copland's Sextet and Ibert's "Divertissement."

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUN 25 1946

Of Music

Picking and choosing concerts to hear is somewhat like making the fateful decisions as to which dress to buy (when your budget is definitely limited). And when the calendar of the Berkshire Music Center—which opens on June 30 or this Sunday afternoon—arrived this week it left the poor music columnist in a complete dither.

There is so much and of course there is a limit to the amount of time that even a music columnist is allowed to take. The four chamber music concerts on July 2, 9, 16 and 23 will be given respectively by the Berkshire Wood Wind Ensemble, the Boston Society of Ancient Instruments, the Krooll Quartet and the Berkshire Chamber orchestra. Tickets for these are by invitation only—and invitations are only to "those who join the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. A voluntary contribution constitutes membership."

Then there are the Bach-Mozart concerts on July 13 and 14 and July 30 and 31 in the Theater-Concert hall wtih a picked group of members of the Boston Symphony orchestra performing under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Also the nine festival concerts and three rehearsals to be given in the Music Shed from July 25 through Aug. 11 by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky.

The program for the first concert has been changed to allow for the first American performance of the Ninth symphony of Shostakovitch, which has just been received from Russia. That program will also include the first movement of the Shostakovitch Sixth symphony and the Beethoven "Eroica."

There will be two performances of "Peter Grimes" by invitation. The first program on Aug. 11 wil include Thompson's "The Testament of Freedom" for men's voices and orchestra and the Beethoven Symphony number 9.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUN 26 1946

NEW SYMPHONY AT TANGLEWOOD

Programs Announced for 17 Concerts This Summer

The programs are now announced for the 17 concerts to be given this summer at Tanglewood in Lenox by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky and by chamber groups. The Berkshire Festival proper, consisting of nine concerts to be given in the music shed under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction between July 25 and Aug. 11 has already been announced and will include the new Ninth Symphony of Shostakovitch, which Dr. Koussevitzky has just received from Russia and which will have its first American performance at the Festival's opening.

Two Bach-Mozart programs, each repeated, will be given by members of the orchestra under Dr. Koussevitsky in the Theater-Concert Hall July 13-14 and July 20-21. The first program will consist of Mozart's Symphony in B-flat, No. 33, the Adagio from the String Quintet in G minor, the Third and Fifth Brandenburg Concertos by Bach, and Mozart's Wind Serenade in B-flat, K. 361. The second program will consist of Bach's Second Brandenburg Concerto and Fourth Suite, Mozart's Violin Concerto in A major, with William Kroll as soloist, and the same composer's "Jupiter" Symphony.

Four chamber music concerts will be given on four Tuesday evenings in the same auditorium under the auspices of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation. At the first, on July 2, the Berkshire Wood Wind Ensemble will present Quintets by Beethoven and Hindemith, Trios by Randall Thompson and Shapero, a Quartet Sonata by Rieti, and a Trio by Poulenc. On July 9 the Boston Society of Ancient Instruments, Alfred Zighera, director, will give a program for viols and harpsichord, with music by Telemann, Bach, Gibbons, D. Scarlatti, Rameau, Handel and Couperin.

On July 16 the Kroll Quartet will present Beethoven's Quartet in F minor, Op. 95, Prokofieff's Second Quartet, Op. 92, and Haydn's Quartet in D major, Op. 64, No. 5. On July 23 the Berkshire Chamber Orchestra, under the direction of Louis Speyer, will present a cantata, "The Birth of Beauty," by Lourie in its first American performance, and the first performance of Malipiero's "Seven Delights of Love." Both pieces are for voices with chamber orchestra. Valentina Vishnevska will appear as soloist. The program will also include Copland's Sextet and Ibert's "Divertissement."

Through the six weeks' session of the Berkshire Music Center, Serge Koussevitzky, director, student groups will give many chamber, orchestra and choral concerts and the first American presentation of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes." All school performances, as well as the Tuesday chamber concerts, will be open by invitation to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

[161]

Eugene List

Eugene List To Be Heard At Tanglewood

Young Pianist Played For Truman, Stalin And Churchill

When Truman, Churchill and Stalin were assembled a year ago for their Potsdam conference, a young American pianist gave them a thrill. Truman turned the pages of the score. Tonight that same pianist, Eugene List, will be heard as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the second concert of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. He will play the Rachmaninoff piano concerto No. 2 in C minor.

There was a turnout of 3000 at the rehearsal this morning for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund.

Tonight's program will open with Beethoven's Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral." Then will come the List performance followed by Ravel's "Daphne et Chloe," ballet, orchestral excerpts, second suite.

Played Premier at 16

List is a native of Philadelphia but grew up in California. At 13 he won a competitive scholarship to study with Olga Samaroff at the Philadelphia Conservatory. Three years later he won a prize offered by the Philadelphia Orchestra and was invited by Stokowsky to play the American premier of the Shostakovitch piano concerto. He made his New York debut in 1935. In March of 1942 he volunteered for the Army and while in the service appeared with a number of orchestras and toured overseas to play for United States troops. In May he appeared at the Prague Festival. He is married to Carol Glenn, young American violinist who is with him at Tanglewood.

Members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center may attend the chamber music concert tomorrow morning at 10.30 given by students and directed by Gregor Piatigorsky. The program will include Beethoven's Quartet in G major, open 18, No. 2; Nicolai Berezewsky's suite for seven brass instruments, opus 24; Faure's piano concerto No. 2 in G minor, Opus 45.

With all seats in the Shed sold out, but with ground admissions available, the audience tonight is expected to exceed the 8000 who attended the opening of the Festival Thursday.

The program tomorrow at 3.30 PM under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be:

Symphony No. 4 in A major, Italian, Mendelssohn
Suite from Appalachian Spring .. Copland
Symphony No. 5 in E minor, Opus 64, Tchaikovsky

This Clipping From
DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT

JUN [illegible]

TWO BACH-MOZART

. . . programs, each to be repeated, will be given by Dr. Koussevitsky and the orchestra on July 13 and 14 and July 20 and 21. The first program will include music by Mozart and the third and fifth Bach Brandenburg concertos. The second program will consist of the Second Brandenburg concerto by Bach and his fourth suite as well as Mozart's Violin Concerto in A Major, played by William Kroll and the "Jupiter" symphony.

MUSIC VENTURE POSSESSES AIR OF LITERARY ROMANCE

Tanglewood Related to Hawthorne's Tales and to Melville, Author of 'Moby-Dick'

By SARA LANE

It's nice to be one of the 500 persons receiving a copy of a lovely illustrated book published by the Vanguard Press for the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Though the volume is primarily a history of the orchestra's music festivals in the Berkshires, there's as much romance as history in "The Tale of Tanglewood."

It's romantic not only because of the sylvan beauty of the spot chosen for the festivals, but also on account of a special relationship Tanglewood has to American literature.

For the mountain scene of the distinguished Summer musicales is the same as that which served Hawthorne in the creation of his "Tanglewood Tales."

M. A. DeWolfe Howe, the author of the books, tells of the meeting of Hawthorne and Herman Melville, another important writer of the time, who was creating "Moby-Dick" and other stories, while Hawthorne was writing some of his early fiction.

The meeting was brought about by a thunder storm on Monument Mountain. The two writers became close friends and were closely associated while Hawthorne and his family lived in Lenox and Melville on a farm not far away.

Cottage Becomes 'Temple of Muse'

Correspondence between Mrs. Hawthorne and Mrs. Tappan had resulted in the Hawthorne occupancy of a little red cottage on the great Tappan estate, later called "the Temple of the Muse," at the time in 1850, when the two writers met.

So you can see, the place chosen for the Summer concerts of the famous Boston symphonists has given them a background of literature for their delectable wooing of the muse of music. It's a place where glen and mountain rival each other as a charm for the nature lover, where the birds exchange their twittering for the whispering of woodland breezes and a brook provides songful interludes between the symphonic movements.

Numerous notable names besprinkle the lists of people attending the Berkshire festivals. Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, lives there.

A music shed has now been built for the orchestra which, though it had to lessen somewhat, the size of the undertakings, during the war, did not discontinue its concerts.

Now, that there's more freedom of motor travel, the management expects that the events Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons will be largely attended as they were in former Summers.

Certainly there would seem to be no more fitting place for the presentation of this high form of music, than in a lovely natural setting.

With art and nature doing their best to co-operate, it wouldn't seem that there could be a better result than that which they achieve. Beethoven, Bach, Tschaikowsky, Wagner and the other immortal composers could scarcely have chosen a better way for their creations to win a response from a crowd of people.

Mr. Howe, the writer of "The Tale of Tanglewood," is a Pulitzer prize winner and in other ways, has gained high distinction as a man of letters.

He was born 82 years ago in Bristol, R. I. He has long been a close observer of the festival and has been intimately associated with its conductor.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

JUN 21 1946

Boston to Play Shostakovich Ninth Symphony July 25

Shostakovich's long-awaited Ninth Symphony will be heard for the first time in America on July 25, when Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra perform it at the opening concert of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Mass.

The score was received on microfilm this week by Leeds Music of New York, sole distributors and publishers of Soviet music in the Western Hemisphere.

On receiving word of the score's arrival, Dr. Koussevitzky immediately changed his opening program, which had already been announced, to include the new Shostakovich symphony.

Dr. Koussevitzky revealed that the work, which is in E-flat minor, is unlike Shostakovich's previous two symphonies. "It is short and very light and gay in mood," he said.

The score takes 25 minutes to play. Shostakovich wrote it last August at his country house near Ivanovo, Russia.

Soviet critics have noted some classical features in the score unusual for Shostakovich, even patterns and moods suggestive of Haydn's period.

JEWISH REVIEW
NEW YORK CITY
4/25/46

Zilberts Choral Group To Feature Famed Soloist

Rose Dirman, who will be the guest soloist of the Zilberts Choral Society concert at Town Hall on May 5th, is one of the most popular recitalists on the concert stage today. She possesses a lyric soprano of great beauty, flexibility, and charm. In addition to an extensive operatic repetoire, she is a recognized authority in singing Bach, Handel, Mozart and the other great masters. She has been featured on all radio networks, and in appearance as soloist with orchestra. She has sung with Serge ~~Koussevitsky~~, Sir Thomas Beecham and other renowned conductors. For her appearance with Zilberts Choral Society Miss Dirman has prepared an interesting program, consisting of operatic arias and songs among which will be Mr. Zilbert's Hallelujah.

Rose Dirman

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JUN 26 1946

NEW SYMPHONY AT TANGLEWOOD

Programs Announced for 17 Concerts This Summer

The programs are now announced for the 17 concerts to be given this summer at Tanglewood in Lenox by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge ~~Koussevitzky and by~~ chamber groups. The Berkshire Festival proper, consisting of nine concerts to be given in the music shed under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction between July 25 and Aug. 11 has already been announced and will include the new Ninth Symphony of Shostakovitch, which Dr. Koussevitzky has just received from Russia and which will have its first American performance at the Festival's opening

---

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
PM

JUN 26 1946

Music in America:

Extra Events At Tanglewood

In addition to the nine already scheduled concerts of the Berkshire Festival, to be given by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., between July 25 and Aug. 11, a number of other events, including two Bach-Mozart programs and a series of chamber music concerts, have been announced for Tanglewood's Theater-Concert Hall during July and August.

The two Bach-Mozart programs, each repeated, will be given by members of the orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky. The first program, Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon, July 13-14, will include Mozart's Symphony in B-flat, No. 33, the Adagio from the String Quartet in G minor, the Third and Fifth Brandenburg Concertos by Bach, and Mozart's Wind Serenade in B-flat (K. 361). The second program, Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon, July 20-21, will consist of Bach's Second Brandenburg Concerto and Fourth Suite (D major), Mozart's Violin Concerto in A major, with William Kroll as soloist, and the same composer's Jupiter Symphony.

Four chamber music concerts are scheduled for consecutive Tuesday evenings beginning July 2. At the first, the Berkshire Wood Wind Ensemble will be heard in works by Beethoven, Randall Thompson, Hindemith, Poulenc, Shapero and Rieti. On July 9, the Boston Society of Ancient Instruments, under the direction of Alfred Zighera, will give a program of music for viols and harpsichord by Telemann, Bach, Gibbons, Scarlatti, Rameau, Handel and Couperin. On July 16, the Kroll Quartet will present String Quartets by Beethoven (Op. 95), Prokofieff (Op. 92) and Haydn (Op. 64, No. 5). The fourth program, on July 23, enlisting the services of the Berkshire Chamber Orchestra, under Louis Speyer, and Valentina Vishnevska, soprano, will feature first performances of Lourie's The Birth of Beauty and Malipiero's Seven Delights of Love, and also include Copland's Sextet for Piano, Two Violins, Viola, Cello and Clarinet and Ibert's Divertissement for 15 instruments.

During the six-week session of the Berkshire Music Center, from July 1 to Aug. 11, a total of 22 performances will be given by student groups. These will include chamber, orchestral and vocal concerts and the first American presentations, on Aug. 6, 7 and 9, of Benjamin Britten's opera Peter Grimes. The opera will be directed by Herbert Graf, designed by Richard Rychtarik and conducted by Leonard Bernstein.

Tickets for the Bach-Mozart concerts, at $4.80 and $3.60 for each concert, are on sale at Tanglewood (address: Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.; phone Lenox 530; checks payable to Boston Symphony Orchestra). Admission to the four Tuesday chamber music concerts and the 22 student performances is by invitation only. Those who join the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are entitled to invitations so far as space permits. A voluntary contribution constitutes membership; a calendar of school events will be sent on request (address: Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.).

CAMDEN, N. J.
COURIER

JUN 25 1946

JEFFERSON HONORED BY NEW VICTOR SET

Musical Testament to Freedom Policies Are Recorded

Composed in honor of the 200th anniversary of Thomas Jefferson's birth, "The Testament of Freedom: A setting of Four Passages from the Writings of Thomas Jefferson," is a work in four movements for men's chorus and orchestra by Randall Thompson, America's foremost composer of choral music.

It was first performed in 1943 at the University of Virginia—which Jefferson founded, and at which Thompson now teaches music—by the University Glee Club. The patriotic paen was broadcast over a national network, recorded by the OWI and shortwaved to our armed forces overseas during the war. Some idea of the text may be gathered from the titles of its four movements: "The God Who Gave Us Life Gave Us Liberty," "We Have Counted the Cost of This Contest," "We Fight Not for Glory or for Conquest" and "I Shall Not Die without a Hope That Light and Liberty Are on Steady Advance."

When "The Testament of Freedom" was added to the repertoire of the Harvard Glee Club, conducted by Wallace Woodworth, it came to the attention of a conductor who has long been a pioneer in performing the music by native American composers: Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, Boston Symphony Orchestra maestro. It is the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Koussovitzky and the Harvard Glee Club who have recorded for RCA Victor "The Testament of Freedom"—a composition notable for its simplicity, sincerity and musical directness.

As soon as the curtain sweeps up on that most famous of all American folk operas, the late George Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess," orchestra and cast present to the audience one of the loveliest melodies Gershwin ever penned—the lilting "Summertime," a lullaby in praise of the langorous charms of Catfish row in Charleston. S. C.

MILLERTON, N.Y.
REPUBLICAN
6/27/46

Koussevitzky Will Direct New Symphony

Shostakovitch Ninth Symphony To Have First American Performance

The programs are now announced for the 17 concerts to be given this summer at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky and by chambergroups. The Berkshire Festival proper, consisting of 9 concerts to be given in the Music Shed under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction between July 25 and August 11 has already been announced and will include the new Ninth Symphony of Shostakovitch, which Dr. Koussevitzky has just received from Russia and which will have its first American performance at the Festival's opening.

Two Bach-Mozart programs, each repeated, will be given by members of the Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky in the Theatre-Concert Hall, July 13-14 and July 20-21. The first program will consist of Mozart's Symphony in B-flat, No. 33, the Adagio from the String Quintet in G minor, the Third and Fifth Brandenburg Concertos by Bach, and Mozart's Wind Serenade in B-flat, K. 361. The second program will consist of Bach's Second Brandenburg Concerto and Fourth Suite, Mozart's Violin Concerto in A major, with William Kroll as soloist, and the same composer's "Jupiter" Symphony.

Four chamber music concerts will be given on four Tuesday evenings in the same auditorium under the auspices of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation. At the first, on July 2, the Berkshire Wood Wind Ensemble will present Quintets by Beethoven and Hindemith, Trios by Randall Thompson and Shapero, a Quartet Sonata by Rieti, and a Trio by Poulenc. On July 9 the Boston Society of Ancient Instruments, Alfred Zighera, Director, will give a program for violas and harpsichord, with music by Telemann, Bach, Gibbons, D. Scarlatti, Rameau, Handel and Couperin. On July 16, the Kroll Quartet will present Beethoven's Quartet in F minor, Op. 95, Prokofieff's Second Quartet, Op. 92, and Haydn's Quartet in D major, Op. 64, No. 5. On July 23, the Berkshire Chamber Orchestra, under the direction of Louis Speyer, will present a Cantata, "The Birth of Beauty," by Lourie in its first American performance, and the first performance of Malipiero's "Seven Delights of Love." Both pieces are for voices with chamber orchestra. Valentina Vishnevska will appear as soloist. The program will also include Copland's Sextet and Ibert's "Divertissement."

Through the six weeks' session of the Berkshire Music Center, Serge Koussevitzky, Director (July 1 - August 11), student groups will give many chamber, orchestra and choral concerts and the first American presentation of Benjamin Britten's Opera, "Peter Grimes." All school performances, as well as the Tuesday chamber concerts, will be open by invitation to the friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

JEWISH WEEKLY TIMES JUNE 27, 1946

MUSIC:

Moses Smith

Music is going to sound at Tanglewood in the Berkshires this summer even more insistently and with greater variety than in 1941, when the last full-scale Berkshire Symphonic Festival was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. The dynamic Boston conductor has reconverted rather more rapidly than most captains of industry; and his program has expanded rather than contracted.

SMITH

In addition to the nine concerts of the Berkshire Festival proper, as in the last seasons before the war, Koussevitzky and members of the Orchestra will give a Bach-Mozart series of two programs and four concerts (each program being repeated). This series, a sort of contiuation of similar affairs to which the conductor had to limit himself during the past two summers, and which will be presented in the theater-opera house, will prelude the larger Barkshire Festival, which, of course, will take place under the big Shed. The students at the Berkshire Music Center have an extended program of public performances, the most spectacular of which will be the first American presentation of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes."

For full measure, there will be four chamber music concerts, with excellent programs and distinguished performers, presented under the auspices of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation.

There will be another 1st American performance: Shostakovitch's Ninth Symphony on the opening program of the Berkshire Festival on Thursday evening, July 25. It recalls the lively competition in the summer of 1942 for the honor of first presenting the same composer's Seventh Symphony in this country. The honor was finally divided, it will be recalled, between Toscanini and Koussevitzky, the former getting the radio premiere, the latter the first performance in concert.

An hour of the Saturday evening concerts (9.30 to 10.30) is to be broadcast by ABC under the same sponsorship which has been serving the Boston Orchestra these past several years. It is tempting to speculate on why the Shostakovitch premiere, dear to Koussevitzky's heart, was not saved for a Saturday evening broadcast. One plausible explanation is that he wanted to provide it with the glamor of the Festival reopening. Another is that the first American performance rights have been divided, as with the Seventh Symphony, and that it will eventually turn up on a broadcast by another conductor and orchestra. A third, which would do nobody any credit, is that it is a phase of the not very subtle censorship of contemporary music which, by report, the sponsors of the Boston Orchestra have inflicted on their programs during the past years.

In any event, Koussevitzky is going to have a busy time of it this summer between the festivals and his direction of the Music Center.

He is going to love it, though, if he follows the pattern he has set in the past. He is chronologically an old man—he will celebrate his 72nd birthday on July 26th—but I have no doubt that he is going to be the most active man at busy Tanglewood during the next six weeks.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUN 28 1946

THE MUSIC BOX

By JOHN D. DONOGHUE

With an effect such as mint juleps are reputed to have south of the Mason-Dixon line, a slim little book called "The Tale of Tanglewood" arrived this week in the office. It set us immediately to reminiscing about the good old days of the Berkshire Music Festivals and looking ahead to the traditional summer enjoyment and hospitality for which our friends to the west are famous.

Written by the Boston author and former Pulitzer prize winner, M. A. DeWolfe Howe, "The Tale of Tanglewood" is published by Vanguard Press ($2.00) and the copy we received is one of 500 copies especially bound for the Boston Symphony orchestra.

We also have an invitation from the trustees of the orchestra to attend the opening exercises of the fourth season of the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood this coming Sunday afternoon at 3.30. Even though it's going to be rough commuting to all the attractions that Dr Koussevitzky and his associates have planned, we're going to try to hear as much Berkshire music as we can, and to report on it for our readers.

* * *

Of one thing we are certain, the printed word, neither by Mr Howe or Mr Music Boxer can begin to equal the thrill of hearing the Boston orchestra in the Berkshire setting, within or without the famous music shed. For those who cannot make the evening trip and get back in time to get 40 winks, the Sunday afternoon programs—often of a lighter character—are recommended, but we get a special kick out of moonlight shimmering on the white birches outside a concert hall where the shimmer of music inside is perfect, musically and acoustically.

* * *

The "Tale of Tanglewood" is in reality two tales. One is that of the Tanglewood of Dr Koussevitzky and those far-sighted musical pioneers who saw the virtues of an "American Salzburg." The other is the Tanglewood of Hawthorne who named the estate which now houses the festival, the Tanglewood where Hawthorne and Herman Melville were thrown together in the summer of 1850 by one of those "now you see them, now you don't" thunderstorms for which the hills are fabled. Mr Howe uses that thunderstorm to begin the story of the productive friendship the two authors enjoyed after their tempestuous meeting. He also uses, in apposition, a 1937 thunderstorm which out-Wagnerized Wagner AND the Bostonians, and led to the decision to replace the canvas tent with a permanent shed. He does not underestimate either the fury of the gale that night nor the power and farsightedness of those who decided that Dr Koussevitzky's dream should not thus be so rudely interrupted—even by customary Berkshire visitors. The Howe parallel is good writing and we can recommend it for easy summer reading or for lasting reference by those who would look back over that area and its fruitful history.

* * *

The introduction by Koussevitzky is as charming as the man himself and the prolog by the author is further evidence of the indestructibility of music. Perhaps the most useful section to a music editor is the compilation of programs which have been presented at Tanglewood since that 1934 day when the late Henry Hadley directed a group from the New York Philharmonic orchestra at the then farm of the late Dan Hanna in Stockbridge.

* * *

The program for the August 7 performance in the Fifth Berkshire festival in 1938 lists the final selection as the Respighi "Pines of Rome."

Not only the writer but a crowd of nearly 6000 can attest to that oversight. The reason for our certainty is that one of our fellow reviewers, anxious to meet his deadline, left before the final selection. While those of us who had evening deadlines to meet could wait and enjoy, our a. m. colleague not only missed the Second "Daphnis and Chloe" suite by Ravel, he appended to his review of the first half, his industriously prepared program notes on the Respighi. He noted—and that's how we can't forget the work—that Respighi used a recording to capture the song of the bird which is needed in the score, and certainly such an innovation was worthy of comment. If only Dr Koussevitzky could have foreseen the work that went into the scribe's research! Let it be said to the writer's credit that no one enjoyed the joke on himself more than he. That was part of the humanity that so endeared that fine old gentleman to so many of us.

* * *

Finale: And so just as he had to leave us, so George M. Doyle, our editor, this week met his final deadline with the courage and serenity that had made so many friends for himself and for The Daily News. It was our good and bad fortune to have followed him as courthouse reporter. No one could quite fill those tireless shoes. But aside from that association, there was a friendship of a decade with a man whose generosity toward amateurs was as great as his detestation of faking professionals. There were wonderful moments when the Pepper Box and The Daily News office sparkled with his quotations from Gilbert and Sullivan and his apt parodies, gently satirizing current figures and situations that he found just as humorous. It was good knowing George Doyle. May he rest in peace.

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

JUN 27 1946

5 Albany Music Students Due at Tanglewood Studio

Five music students from Albany and another from Slingerlands will attend the school Serge Koussevitzky planned for "living and working in music" when the Berkshire Music Center opens Sunday at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

They are David Hamilton Bailey, 657 Washington; Leo J. D'Alessandro, 255 Second Ave.; Thomas G. Kenny Jr., 303 Madison; Miss Eleanor M. Lauterborn, 32 Van Schoick; Leo Mahigian, 25 Kent, and Miss Jean Bowen, 8 Carroll Pl., Slingerlands.

Students and teachers at Tanglewood come from all parts of North, Central and South America, many being musicians of estabilshed reputation, such as Leonard Bernstein and Lukas Foss, who were studying conducting there when the war interrupted sessions. Aaron Copland, the composer, is Dr. Koussevitzky's assistant director and he, together with Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston orchestra, will speak at the opening, 3:30 p. m. Sunday.

The public music festival of nine major concerts will begin July 25.

[163]

---

17 EXTRA CONCERTS SET FOR BERKSHIRE

Programs Exclusive of Those on Regular Festival, With Koussevitzky Conductor

Programs for seventeen concerts, exclusive of nine already scheduled for the Berkshire Festival, to be given in July and August at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzy were announced yesterday.

Two Bach-Mozart programs, each to be repeated, will be given by Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra in the Theatre-Concert Hall on July 13 and 14 and July 20 and 21. The first program will include the Mozart Symphony in B flat, No. 33; the Adagio from the String Quintet in G minor; the Third and Fifth Brandenburg Concertos of Bach, and Mozart's Wind Serenade in B flat, Koechel 361. The second program will consist of Bach's Second Brandenburg Concerto and Fourth Suite; Mozart's Violin Concerto in A major, with William Kroll as assisting artist, and the "Jupiter" Symphony.

Chamber music concerts will be given on four Tuesday nights in the same auditorium under the auspices of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation. The first, on July 2, will present the Berkshire Wood Wind Ensemble, playing quintets by Beethoven and Hindewith, trios by Randall Thompson and Shapero, a quartet sonata by Rietl and a trio by Poulenc.

On July 9 the Boston Society of Ancient Instruments, Alfred Zighera director, will present a program for viols and harpsichord, with music by Telemann, Bach, Gibbons, Scarlatti, Rameau, Handel and Couperin. On July 16 the Kroll Quartet will play Beethoven's Quartet in F minor, Opus 95; Prokofieff's Second Quartet, Opus 92, and Haydn's Quartet in D major, Opus 64, No. 5.

The Berkshire Chamber Orchestra, under Louis Speyer, will present on July 23 a cantata, "The Birth of Beauty," by Lourié, in its first American performance, and the first performance of Malipiero's "Seven Delights of Love." Both pieces are for voices with chamber orchestra. Valentina Vishnevska will appear as soloist. This program also will include Aaron Copland's Sextet and Ibert's "Divertissement."

All school performances and the Tuesday chamber concerts will be open by invitation to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Esplanade Concert Marks Up New High of 35,000 Persons

Attendance at the Esplanade concerts hit a new high last night, when a throng estimated by Metropolitan District Commission police at 35,000 packed the broad expanse of grass in front of Hatch Shell from the Charles River to the street, extending back in a solid mass to almost 15 minutes' walking distance from the concert platform.

Concert officials and the Metropolitan police were both caught by surprise by the "extra" 15,000 persons who appeared to come from out of nowhere. All previous records of the 18-year concert series were shattered.

Never has the popularity of the outdoor "go as you please" concerts been more evident than this year. The average attendance has been about 20,000 for each night. Bad weather made it dip twice—but never below 15,000. And the crowds, as ever, have been made up of all ages and all income groups.

Fame Has Spread

These musical evenings on the east bank of the Charles River, at the foot of Boston's Beacon Hill, do much to bolster Boston's civic pride. But their fame has long since spread beyond Boston city limits.

Inquiries have come from widely scattered sections of the United States to ask, "How does Boston do it?" Three cities, in particular, have investigated with unusual interest. They are New Haven, Conn., Kansas City, Mo., and New Orleans, La.

Almost every mail brings a stack of letters from out-of-town visitors impressed with the outdoor concerts where all one has to do to attend is step off any part of the bordering sidewalk, rent a chair for a dime, and relax for two hours.

It isn't even necessary to rent a chair. Some people bring their own. Others carry along a blanket and spread it on the grass. Still others prefer listening to the light classical and symphonic programs from sailboats and motor cruisers drifting or at anchor in the adjacent Charles River.

The combination of informality, beauty and high quality is the feature that has captivated the uninitiated. The 18-year record of the concerts proves that they have won a devoted public.

No 'Magic' Formula

The staff of 10 persons who manage the outdoor programs presented by musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra offer no "magic" formula for the success of outdoor concerts.

After 18 years of learning the hard—and only—way, they have become well aware that a combination of favorable circumstances is needed.

Essential to such a project, of course, is enthusiasm and a genuine conviction on the part of its officials that music should be enjoyed by the masses, not just by the few. In Arthur Fiedler, founder and conductor of the concerts, Boston has such an impetus. And he is backed by equally inspired supporters.

Who Pays the Bill?

Many persons listening to the majestic strains of Beethoven drifting out from the teak-lined masonry shell, have wondered who pays the bills. This angle has been the topic of many out-of-town letters.

Although presented on State property, the concerts are supported entirely by an annual fund-raising letter, free-will contributions dropped in coin slots at program booths, a share of the chair rentals and, if necesasry, help from the treasury of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Some 25,000 persons receive the annual letter. Approximately one out of 25 responds with a contribution. Checks range from $1 to $25. Some go up as high as $100. But most are in the lower brackets.

Last year 180,000 free programs, complete with notes on works and composers, were distributed. Mr. Fiedler is frank in his enjoyment of reports that he has "converted" literally thousands of lovers of "popular" music to the more classical

---

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
POST-STANDARD
JUL 1 1946

July to Bring Resumption Of Festival

The Boston ~~Symphony~~ orchestra announces the resumption next July of the Berkshire Music Center. Serge Koussevitsky, director, at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. Aaron Copland has been appointed assistant director.

The school, which had long been a cherished plan of Dr. Koussevitsky, was instituted in 1940 for those who wished to profit by the experience of "an opportunity for a summer of living and working in music." It has been suspended for two years on account of the war, and will be resumed on the original plan, with the principals of the orchestra and other notable musicians as faculty.

One section of the school will be for qualified music students, and will consist of an orchestra, an opera department, a class in conducting classes in musical composition and a department of chamber music. The other section will, as before, consists of students with less specific qualifications who wish to increase their acquaintaince with music and its interpretation. This department will include a chorus preparing for Festival concerts and a second orchestra. All students will have access to concerts, lectures and other activities as well as the festival itself.

The term will consist of six weeks (July 1-Aug. 10), the last three coinciding with the Berkshire Festival, which also will be reinstated next summer.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
JUL 1 - 1946

Opera's Premiere At Tanglewood

PITTSFIELD, July 1—~~Serge Kous~~sevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the reopening of the Berkshire music center at Tanglewood yesterday for its fourth season, announced that the opera "Peter Grimes," to receive its first American performance by the school Aug. 6, will be directed by Eric Crozier, stage director of its world premiere in London, and that the composer, who was commissioned to write it for the center, will be present. The opera was chosen to reopen the Sadler Wells opera house after the war.

Dr. Koussevitzky also declared that "art needs the support of the state, and demands a department of fine arts. None of the democratic governments are concerned with the subsidy of arts—especially musical art," he said. "Is it not time for this government, leading among democracies, to give a permanent support to the fine arts?" He said that "the course of history reveals that art and culture were instrumental in attaining perfect, or near perfect, forms of government, as in ancient Greece or Rome." and described the American constitution as "a document created by the noblest, the most cultivated and universal minds of our age."

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
JUL 1 - 1946

Four students from Springfield and one each from Longmeadow, Chicopee and Holyoke will attend the Berkshire Music center, which opened at Tanglewood yesterday, summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra. With ~~a registration of near~~ly 400, the school will be under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Included in the student body from Springfield are Barbara M. LaCouline, Adrianna D. LaZazzera, Rose H. Pizzitola and Catherine Van der Steen; from Longmeadow, Margaret Hanford; from Chicopee, Glady Kuchta, and from Holyoke, Helen Wakelin.

PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS
JUL 1 - 1946

only.

Youthful Leonard Bernstein, who has been in Europe for the Prague Festival and other concerts, will pause in London this week, en route home for a summer in the Berkshires with ~~Dr. Koussevitzky~~, to conduct the first London performance of the ballet Fancy Free, of which Jerome Robbins was choreographer and of which he wrote the score.

LOUISVILLE COURIER-JOURNAL.

MUSIC: Berkshire Center

By DWIGHT ANDERS
Courier-Journa

THE Berkshire Music Center, after having been suspended for three seasons, will reopen during the coming summer. Four of the five departments (conducting, composing, orchestral playing and opera) are for advanced students. The fifth department, which includes choral singing, chamber music and orchestral playing, offers an opportunity for less advanced students. Headed by Serge Koussevitzky, the faculty will include Robert Shaw, Hugh Ross, Stanley Chapple, Leonard Bernstein, Herbert Graf, Boris Goldowsky, Gregor Piatigorsky, Bohuslav Martinu and Aaron Copland.

As was true in the past, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present a series of nine concerts under the direction of Koussevitzky. Given in the Festival Shed at Tanglewood, Lennox, Mass., the programs will be presented on Thursday evenings, Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons for three consecutive weeks, beginning July 25. During the second week (August 1, 3 and 4) the orchestra will play the four Brahms Symphonies, and also to be heard on those days are the Piano Concerto in D Minor, the Double Concerto, the Hayden Variations, and the Alto Rhapsody, all by Brahms. The festival will conclude on August 11 with a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Most interesting is the fact that the Berkshire Center is an approved place for education under Public Law 346, the so-called G.I. Bill of Rights. Ex-service men and women may apply for Government finanical aid. Applications should be addressed to Thomas D. Perry, Jr., Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass. Subscription inquiries for the concerts should also be addressed to Symphony Hall.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 1 1946

Local Musicians Enrolled for Course At Tanglewood

Five students from Hartford and West Hartford are attending the Berkshire Music Center that opened Sunday at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at ~~Lenox, Mass~~ With ~~a re~~gistration of nearly 400, the school, as before it was curtailed by war conditions, is under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, who planned it "for living and working in music."

Local students are Sarah G Beckwith of 1049 Prospect Ave.; John Berkman of 35 Beverly Rd., West Hartford; Paul O. Cianci of 235 Front St.; Bettinna Roulier of 153 Buena Vista Rd., West Hartford, and Marion Ziemba of 714 Prospect Ave. Other Connecticut people are: Betty Burnett of Putnam; Clara E. Chittenden, Naugatuck; Gilbert G. Darr, Middletown; Louis J. Pellettieri, Wethersfield; Madelyn Robb of Waterbury; Etzel Willhoit, New Britain, and from New Haven, Eleanor J. Diamond, Samuel Kaletsky and Morris Kirshbaum.

The student body includes pupils and teachers of music from all parts of the United States and from Canada, with six from South and Central America. Many are musicians of established reputation.

Dr. Koussevitzky, Aaron Copland ~~the~~ composer, who is assistant director, and Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Orchestra, will speak at the opening exercises Sunday at 3:30. The school will sing Randall Thompson's "Allelujah," written for its inauguration in 1940, and members of the faculty will play. The Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center is invited to the opening and to 22 concerts and other musical events that will begin Tuesday with the first of four chamber music concerts under the auspices of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 1 - 1946

Koussevitzky Urges State Aid for Music

Calls for Subsidization of Arts at Opening of Berkshire Music Center —800 Present—"Peter Grimes" Premier Aug. 6.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of ~~the Boston Symphony~~ orchestra, addressing the opening of the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood, Lenox, yesterday, called for subsidization of the arts, especially music, by the United States government.

Approximately 800 persons attended the ceremonies which marked the beginning of the first full program of Tanglewood activities since pre-war days, ushering in a six weeks' program which will include full-scale operation of the Berkshire Music Center school with about 400 students enrolled, nine Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, four Bach-Mozart concerts by the orchestra, and four Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation chamber music concerts. One of the latter tomorrow evening will be the first formal musical events of the season.

"We artists are the living pulse of art," Koussevitzky said, "the state is the ground upon which art finds stability and security. Art needs the support of the state and demands a department of the fine arts. The state needs art for the purpose of fortifying and completing its present structure. In ignoring the arts the state will inevitably lose the sustaining interest and influence of the foremost minds and the creative spiritual forces of the nation."

Addressing the 400 students enrolled Dr. Koussevitzky said: "We shall again seek new answers to arising questions, a wider access to inexhaustible treasures of musical art, a higher vision of music as a profession, as a vocation and as a creative cultural force. In the progress of life the question of the creative vocation of man is also the question of a new consciousness."

